

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY
LIBRARY SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

COVERING CASES REPORTED IN

PACIFIC REPORTER SECOND SERIES

1 P.2d — 2 P.2d

---

TO BE CITED BY VOLUME AND PAGE OF THE
PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
SAN DIEGO

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.

1941

NON CIRCULATING

COPYRIGHT, 1931, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Second Series, Vol. 1, Nos. 1-3;
Vol. 2, Nos. 1-5.

COPYRIGHT, 1941, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

NON CIRCULATING

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                                     | Vol.   | Page |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Abbott; City of Los Angeles v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 538  |
| Abbott; City of Los Angeles v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 541  |
| Abbott; City of Los Angeles v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 542  |
| Aceves; Harvey v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 1043 |
| Acosta; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 43   |
| Adams; Anderson v., App. - - - - -                                                                  | 2 P.2d | 569  |
| Advance Rumely Thresher Co. v. McCoy, Sup. - - - - -                                                | 2 P.2d | 157  |
| A. F. Gilmore Co.; Washburn v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 506  |
| Ahern v. Tulare Lake Canal Co., App. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 490  |
| Albertson v. Brooks, Sup. - - - - -                                                                 | 1 P.2d | 982  |
| A. L. Boyden Co.; Reno v., App. - - - - -                                                           | 2 P.2d | 214  |
| A. L. Jameson & Co. v. Redfield, App. - - - - -                                                     | 2 P.2d | 53   |
| Allen; Clough v., App. - - - - -                                                                    | 1 P.2d | 545  |
| Allen v. Young, App. - - - - -                                                                      | 1 P.2d | 523  |
| Almstead v. Tanger, App. - - - - -                                                                  | 1 P.2d | 521  |
| A. L. Young Machinery Co. v. Cupps, Sup. - - - - -                                                  | 2 P.2d | 321  |
| American Bldg. Material Service Co. v. Wallin, App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 1007 |
| American Concrete Units Co. v. National Stone-Tile Corporation, App. - - - - -                      | 1 P.2d | 1084 |
| American Exchange Nat. Bank v. Soffel, App. - - - - -                                               | 2 P.2d | 533  |
| American Milling & Industrial Co.; San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v., App. - - - - -                | 1 P.2d | 1008 |
| Anderson v. Adams, App. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 569  |
| Anderson v. Market St. R. Co., App. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 529  |
| Anderson; People v., Super. - - - - -                                                               | 1 P.2d | 64   |
| Anderson v. Trotter, two cases, Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 373  |
| Andrews; Sauer v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 997  |
| Argue v. Monte Regio Corporation, App. - - - - -                                                    | 2 P.2d | 54   |
| Armentrout; People v., Super. - - - - -                                                             | 1 P.2d | 556  |
| Associated Indemnity Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, App. - - - - -                  | 2 P.2d | 51   |
| Associated Indemnity Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, two cases, App. - - - - -       | 2 P.2d | 52   |
| Astorian, The, App. - - - - -                                                                       | 2 P.2d | 1004 |
| Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co.; Hoogbruin v., Sup. - - - - -                                           | 2 P.2d | 992  |
| Atkeson v. Mecchi, App. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 452  |
| Aungst v. Central California Traction Co., App. - - - - -                                           | 1 P.2d | 56   |
| Babcock v. C. W. Clarke Co., Sup. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 155  |
| Bailes; Los Angeles Board of Adjusters v., App. - - - - -                                           | 2 P.2d | 557  |
| Baird v. Olsheski, App. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 493  |
| Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Superior Court in and for Kern County, App. - - - - - | 1 P.2d | 1081 |
| Bank of America of California v. Granger, App. - - - - -                                            | 1 P.2d | 479  |
| Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n; Holland v., App. - - - - -                                | 1 P.2d | 1031 |
| Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Spicer, App. - - - - -                                  | 2 P.2d | 42   |
| Bank of Yolo; Pacific Finance Corporation v., App. - - - - -                                        | 1 P.2d | 465  |
| Barbee v. State Bar of California, Sup. - - - - -                                                   | 2 P.2d | 353  |
| Barber v. Boatright, App. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 398  |
| Barbour; Lindenbaum v., Sup. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 161  |
| Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen, Sup. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 353  |
| Barnes; Reser v., App. - - - - -                                                                    | 2 P.2d | 435  |
| Barrett v. Harman, App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 458  |
| Bartles; Rogaff v., App. - - - - -                                                                  | 1 P.2d | 517  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                                        | Vol.   | Page |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Barton v. State Bar of California, Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 149  |
| Rates v. Campbell, Sup. - - - - -                                                                      | 2 P.2d | 383  |
| Baumsteiger; Corvello v., App. - - - - -                                                               | 1 P.2d | 484  |
| Baylis Estate Co. v. Trotter, Sup. - - - - -                                                           | 2 P.2d | 373  |
| Beach; Yankelewitch v., App. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 498  |
| Beck; First Mortg. Corporation v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 534  |
| Becker v. Stineman, App. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 444  |
| Beilby; General Petroleum Corporation of California v., Sup. - - - - -                                 | 2 P.2d | 797  |
| Bell; Devany v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 516  |
| Bell; Maggart v., App. - - - - -                                                                       | 2 P.2d | 516  |
| Bennett; Blake v., App. - - - - -                                                                      | 1 P.2d | 513  |
| Bennett v. Central California Traction Co., App. - - - - -                                             | 1 P.2d | 47   |
| Bennett; Yost-Linn Lumber & Finance Co. v., App. - - - - -                                             | 2 P.2d | 488  |
| Berendsen; Mertens v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                  | 1 P.2d | 440  |
| Bergeron v. Employers' Fire Ins. Co., App. - - - - -                                                   | 2 P.2d | 453  |
| Bernhard v. Waring, Sup. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 32   |
| Bernstein v. Sirota, Sup. - - - - -                                                                    | 1 P.2d | 8    |
| Bettencourt; Dougery v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                | 2 P.2d | 765  |
| Bettencourt; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                 | 1 P.2d | 494  |
| Big Sisters Hospital; Stonaker v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 520  |
| Blackburn v. Blackburn, App. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 191  |
| Blackburn's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 191  |
| Blackmore Inv. Co. v. Johnson, Sup. - - - - -                                                          | 1 P.2d | 978  |
| Blake v. Bennett, App. - - - - -                                                                       | 1 P.2d | 513  |
| Bloom's Estate, In re, Sup. - - - - -                                                                  | 2 P.2d | 753  |
| Board of Dental Examiners of State of California; Parker v., App. - - - - -                            | 1 P.2d | 501  |
| Board of Trustees; Wallace v., App. - - - - -                                                          | 2 P.2d | 426  |
| Board of Trustees of Lugo Elementary School Dist. in Los Angeles County; Greenamyre v., App. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 848  |
| Boas; Cockrill v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                      | 2 P.2d | 774  |
| Boatright; Barber v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 398  |
| Bollinger; Sexton v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 189  |
| Bowers; Clark v., App. - - - - -                                                                       | 2 P.2d | 486  |
| Bowler v. Roos, Sup. - - - - -                                                                         | 2 P.2d | 817  |
| Boxwell v. Sylvia, App. - - - - -                                                                      | 2 P.2d | 577  |
| Boyce v. San Diego Union High School Dist. of San Diego County, App. - - - - -                         | 1 P.2d | 1037 |
| Brandes v. Freitas, App. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 830  |
| Brehm's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                                  | 2 P.2d | 402  |
| Brooks; Albertson v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 982  |
| Brooks; Eckstrom v., App. - - - - -                                                                    | 2 P.2d | 207  |
| Brown; Guild v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 1 P.2d | 528  |
| Brown v. Southern California Edison Co., App. - - - - -                                                | 1 P.2d | 1073 |
| Bruggemeyer v. Zimmerman, App. - - - - -                                                               | 2 P.2d | 534  |
| Bruggemeyer's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 534  |
| Bruns v. State Bar of California, Sup. - - - - -                                                       | 1 P.2d | 989  |
| Burns v. Renaker Co., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 408  |
| Burns' Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 995  |
| Busby; Conte v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 458  |
| Bush; Transport Oil Co. v., App. - - - - -                                                             | 1 P.2d | 1060 |
| Bushnell v. Yoshika Tashiro, App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 550  |
| Busing v. Moore, App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 841  |
| Byers v. Spicer, App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 479  |
| Byers; Thompson v., App. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 496  |
| California Building-Loan Ass'n; Peters v., App. - - - - -                                              | 2 P.2d | 439  |
| California Cab Co.; Ullman v., App. - - - - -                                                          | 2 P.2d | 494  |
| California Highway Indemnity Exchange; Dinsmore v., Sup. - - - - -                                     | 1 P.2d | 431  |
| California Nat. Bank of Sacramento v. El Dorado Lime & Minerals Co., Sup. - - - - -                    | 2 P.2d | 785  |
| California Savings & Commercial Bank v. McIntosh, App. - - - - -                                       | 1 P.2d | 1080 |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                          | Vol.   | Page |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Campbell; Bates v., Sup. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 383  |
| Carl v. Thomas, App. - - - - -                                           | 2 P.2d | 872  |
| Carlson v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup. - - - - -                | 2 P.2d | 151  |
| Carlson v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup. - - - - -                | 2 P.2d | 154  |
| Carmichael's U-Drive Autos; Giambruno v., App. - - - - -                 | 1 P.2d | 513  |
| Carmichael's U-Drive Autos; Owens v., App. - - - - -                     | 2 P.2d | 580  |
| Carney; Liebelt v., Sup. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 144  |
| Carpenter, In re, Sup. - - - - -                                         | 1 P.2d | 983  |
| Carrier & Braddock v. S. W. Straus & Co., Sup. - - - - -                 | 2 P.2d | 811  |
| Carstensen v. Gottesburen, App. - - - - -                                | 2 P.2d | 879  |
| Casey v. Doherty, App. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 495  |
| Casey v. Nishihara, Sup. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 778  |
| Casperson; People v., App. - - - - -                                     | 2 P.2d | 459  |
| Cassetta v. Del Frate, App. - - - - -                                    | 2 P.2d | 533  |
| Cate v. Fresno Traction Co., Sup. - - - - -                              | 2 P.2d | 364  |
| Central California Traction Co.; Aungst v., App. - - - - -               | 1 P.2d | 56   |
| Central California Traction Co.; Bennett v., App. - - - - -              | 1 P.2d | 47   |
| Central California Traction Co.; Schilling v., App. - - - - -            | 1 P.2d | 53   |
| Chase; People v., Super. - - - - -                                       | 1 P.2d | 60   |
| Chevrolet Motor Co. of California; McIntire v., App. - - - - -           | 1 P.2d | 40   |
| Cisler v. Ray, Sup. - - - - -                                            | 2 P.2d | 987  |
| Citizens' Nat. Trust & Savings Bank; Mickley v., App. - - - - -          | 2 P.2d | 193  |
| City and County of San Francisco; Leis v., Sup. - - - - -                | 2 P.2d | 26   |
| City of Los Angeles v. Abbott, App. - - - - -                            | 1 P.2d | 538  |
| City of Los Angeles v. Abbott, two cases, App. - - - - -                 | 1 P.2d | 541  |
| City of Los Angeles v. Abbott, two cases, App. - - - - -                 | 1 P.2d | 542  |
| City of Los Angeles v. Grace S. S. Co., App. - - - - -                   | 2 P.2d | 401  |
| City of Los Angeles v. Southern California Edison Co., App. - - - - -    | 2 P.2d | 419  |
| City of Los Angeles; Vertson v., App. - - - - -                          | 2 P.2d | 411  |
| City of Lynwood; Pacific Finance Corporation v., App. - - - - -          | 1 P.2d | 520  |
| City of San Diego; Faust v., App. - - - - -                              | 1 P.2d | 543  |
| City of Santa Cruz; Hyde v., App. - - - - -                              | 2 P.2d | 560  |
| Clapper; People v., App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 186  |
| Clark v. Bowers, App. - - - - -                                          | 2 P.2d | 486  |
| Clark v. Wallman, App. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 562  |
| Clark-Parker Co.; Merchants' Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v., App. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 472  |
| Clay v. Martin, App. - - - - -                                           | 2 P.2d | 396  |
| Cline v. Industrial Accident Commission, App. - - - - -                  | 2 P.2d | 840  |
| Clough v. Allen, App. - - - - -                                          | 1 P.2d | 545  |
| Coast Amusements v. Stineman, App. - - - - -                             | 2 P.2d | 447  |
| Cochran; Kelley v., App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 434  |
| Cockrill v. Boas, Sup. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 774  |
| Coldwell; People v., App. - - - - -                                      | 1 P.2d | 1094 |
| Collier v. Merced Irr. Dist., Sup. - - - - -                             | 2 P.2d | 790  |
| Compton v. Northwest Engineering Co., App. - - - - -                     | 2 P.2d | 1014 |
| Conner v. Pacific Ready Cut Homes, App. - - - - -                        | 1 P.2d | 1027 |
| Conte v. Busby, App. - - - - -                                           | 2 P.2d | 458  |
| Cookson; Gardner v., Sup. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 370  |
| Coombes v. Franklin, Sup. - - - - -                                      | 1 P.2d | 992  |
| Cooper & Son v. William R. Davis & Bro., App. - - - - -                  | 2 P.2d | 823  |
| Corcoran v. Pacific Auto Stages, App. - - - - -                          | 2 P.2d | 225  |
| Corcoran v. Ward, App. - - - - -                                         | 1 P.2d | 455  |
| Corvello v. Baumsteiger, App. - - - - -                                  | 1 P.2d | 484  |
| Corvin v. Smead Inv. Co., App. - - - - -                                 | 1 P.2d | 507  |
| Country Club Park; Hess v., Sup. - - - - -                               | 2 P.2d | 782  |
| Cronkright v. Moss, App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 480  |
| Cullen; R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v., Sup. - - - - -                        | 2 P.2d | 353  |
| Cupps; A. L. Young Machinery Co. v., Sup. - - - - -                      | 2 P.2d | 321  |
| Cutting; Schlageter v., App. - - - - -                                   | 2 P.2d | 875  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                                   | Vol.   | Page |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| C. W. Clarke Co.; Babcock v., Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 155  |
| Dahl v. State Bar of California, Sup. - - - - -                                                   | 1 P.2d | 977  |
| Dahms v. General Elevator Co., App. - - - - -                                                     | 1 P.2d | 446  |
| Dalton v. Keers, Sup. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 355  |
| Davis; Richardson v., App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 860  |
| Day v. Laguna Land & Water Co., App. - - - - -                                                    | 1 P.2d | 448  |
| Dekoch; Koffman v., App. - - - - -                                                                | 1 P.2d | 1090 |
| Del Frate; Cassetta v., App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 533  |
| Del Valle; Mason v., Sup. - - - - -                                                               | 1 P.2d | 419  |
| De Mund v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, Sup. - - - - -                           | 2 P.2d | 985  |
| Devany v. Bell, App. - - - - -                                                                    | 2 P.2d | 516  |
| Dexter v. Pierson, Sup. - - - - -                                                                 | 1 P.2d | 435  |
| Diffendorf v. Pilcher, App. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 430  |
| Dinsmore v. California Highway Indemnity Exchange, Sup. - - - - -                                 | 1 P.2d | 431  |
| Dodwell & Co. v. Los Angeles Warehouse Co., App. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 181  |
| Doherty; Casey v., App. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 495  |
| Dougery v. Bettencourt, Sup. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 765  |
| Duntley; Steel v., App. - - - - -                                                                 | 1 P.2d | 999  |
| Dutton; Kennedy v., App. - - - - -                                                                | 2 P.2d | 856  |
| Dwyer v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, App. - - - - -                                              | 2 P.2d | 468  |
| Dyba; Penn v., App. - - - - -                                                                     | 1 P.2d | 461  |
| Ebbert v. Mercantile Trust Co. of California, Sup. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 776  |
| Eberhard v. Pacific Southwest Loan & Mortgage Corporation, Sup. - - - - -                         | 1 P.2d | 420  |
| Eckstrom v. Brooks, App. - - - - -                                                                | 2 P.2d | 207  |
| Edwards v. Gullick, Sup. - - - - -                                                                | 1 P.2d | 11   |
| Edwards v. Jenkins, App. - - - - -                                                                | 1 P.2d | 487  |
| Ehler v. Ehler, App. - - - - -                                                                    | 1 P.2d | 546  |
| Ehler's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                             | 1 P.2d | 546  |
| Ehle's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 398  |
| Ekstrom; Finch v., App. - - - - -                                                                 | 1 P.2d | 516  |
| El Dorado Lime & Minerals Co.; California Nat. Bank of Sacramento v.,Sup. - - - - -           | 2 P.2d | 785  |
| Employers' Fire Ins. Co; Bergeron v., App. - - - - -                                              | 2 P.2d | 453  |
| Enright v. Williams, App. - - - - -                                                               | 2 P.2d | 828  |
| E. T. Leiter & Son; Lidberg v., App. - - - - -                                                    | 2 P.2d | 526  |
| Ettling v. Silva, App. - - - - -                                                                  | 2 P.2d | 473  |
| Eudemiller; Yates v., Sup. - - - - -                                                              | 1 P.2d | 434  |
| Evans v. Robert Marsh & Co., App. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 882  |
| Everhardy v. Union Finance Co., App. - - - - -                                                    | 1 P.2d | 1024 |
| Fall v. Lincoln Mortg. Co., App. - - - - -                                                        | 2 P.2d | 58   |
| Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Imperial, In re, Sup. - - - - -                                     | 1 P.2d | 422  |
| Farrington; People v., Sup. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 814  |
| Faust v. City of San Diego, App. - - - - -                                                        | 1 P.2d | 543  |
| Feeny v. Smiley, App. - - - - -                                                                   | 2 P.2d | 220  |
| Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York; Preder v., App. - - - - -                                    | 2 P.2d | 223  |
| Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York; Yellen v., App. - - - - -                                    | 1 P.2d | 1019 |
| Finch v. Ekstrom, App. - - - - -                                                                  | 1 P.2d | 516  |
| First Mortg. Corporation v. Beck, App. - - - - -                                                  | 1 P.2d | 534  |
| First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego v. Industrial AccidentCommission, Sup. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 347  |
| Fisher v. Pennington, App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 518  |
| Fisher; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 564  |
| Fishman v. Silva, App. - - - - -                                                                  | 2 P.2d | 473  |
| Fitzgerald; Williamson v., App. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 201  |
| Fleishhacker; Shannon v., App. - - - - -                                                          | 2 P.2d | 835  |
| Foard v. Johnson, App. - - - - -                                                                  | 2 P.2d | 509  |
| Ford; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 475  |
| Ford Motor Co.; Moffitt v., App. - - - - -                                                        | 1 P.2d | 994  |
| Forrester; People v., App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 558  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                                          | Vol.   | Page |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Forrester v. Robbins, App. - - - - -                                                                     | 1 P.2d | 995  |
| Forth; Presbytery of Los Angeles v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 402  |
| Fortier v. Hogan, App. - - - - -                                                                         | 1 P.2d | 23   |
| Foster; Jones v., App. - - - - -                                                                         | 2 P.2d | 582  |
| Franklin; Coombes v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                     | 1 P.2d | 992  |
| Franklin; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                      | 1 P.2d | 514  |
| Frans Nelson & Sons; Smith v., App. - - - - -                                                            | 1 P.2d | 509  |
| Frasch v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co., Sup. - - - - -                                              | 2 P.2d | 147  |
| Frazer; Hicks v., Super. - - - - -                                                                       | 1 P.2d | 1096 |
| Frazier; Karlslust v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                    | 2 P.2d | 362  |
| Freitas; Brandes v., App. - - - - -                                                                      | 2 P.2d | 830  |
| Fresno Traction Co.; Cate v., Sup. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 364  |
| Freyer v. San Francisco Protestant Orphanage Soc., App. - - - - -                                        | 1 P.2d | 475  |
| Frost v. Majestic Furniture Co., App. - - - - -                                                          | 1 P.2d | 551  |
| Fugelsang v. Steiner, App. - - - - -                                                                     | 1 P.2d | 553  |
| Galloway v. Galloway, App. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 842  |
| Gardner v. Cookson, Sup. - - - - -                                                                       | 2 P.2d | 370  |
| General Elevator Co.; Dahms v., App. - - - - -                                                           | 1 P.2d | 446  |
| General Petroleum Corporation of California v. Beilby, Sup. - - - - -                                    | 2 P.2d | 797  |
| Giaconi; Harbor Supply Co. v., App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 1004 |
| Giambruno v. Carmichael's U-Drive Autos, App. - - - - -                                                  | 1 P.2d | 513  |
| Giddens v. Krogh, App. - - - - -                                                                         | 2 P.2d | 821  |
| Gier; Moe v., App. - - - - -                                                                             | 2 P.2d | 852  |
| Gildersleeve v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup. - - - - -                                           | 1 P.2d | 1    |
| Gilroy Exp.; Wulbern v., App. - - - - -                                                                  | 2 P.2d | 508  |
| Golden v. State Bar of California, Sup. - - - - -                                                        | 2 P.2d | 325  |
| Goltra; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 35   |
| Gottesburen; Carstensen v., App. - - - - -                                                               | 2 P.2d | 879  |
| Grace S. S. Co.; City of Los Angeles v., App. - - - - -                                                  | 2 P.2d | 401  |
| Grand Lodge, I. O. G. T. of State of California; O'Hara v., Sup. - - - - -                               | 2 P.2d | 21   |
| Granger; Bank of America of California v., App. - - - - -                                                | 1 P.2d | 479  |
| Grangers' Business Ass'n; Southern Pac. Co. v., App. - - - - -                                           | 1 P.2d | 477  |
| Great Western Motorways; Jordan v., Sup. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 786  |
| Green v. State Bar of California, Sup. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 340  |
| Greenamyer v. Board of Trustees of Lugo Elementary School Dist. inLos Angeles County, App. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 848  |
| Gripton; Wolpert v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                      | 2 P.2d | 767  |
| Gross v. Wright & Callender Bldg. Co., App. - - - - -                                                    | 2 P.2d | 857  |
| Guild v. Brown, App. - - - - -                                                                           | 1 P.2d | 528  |
| Gullick; Edwards v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                      | 1 P.2d | 11   |
| Harbor Supply Co. v. Giaconi, App. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 1004 |
| Harman; Barrett v., App. - - - - -                                                                       | 1 P.2d | 458  |
| Harmon v. Hopkins, App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 540  |
| Harvey v. Aceves, App. - - - - -                                                                         | 1 P.2d | 1043 |
| Heimburge v. State Guaranty Corporation, App. - - - - -                                                  | 2 P.2d | 998  |
| Heinze, Ex parte, App. - - - - -                                                                         | 2 P.2d | 561  |
| Helbing; Katz v., App. - - - - -                                                                         | 1 P.2d | 1076 |
| Heliman; Toms v., App. - - - - -                                                                         | 1 P.2d | 31   |
| Henderson v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., Sup. - - - - -                                               | 2 P.2d | 803  |
| Hernandez v. Southern California Gas Co., Sup. - - - - -                                                 | 2 P.2d | 360  |
| Herron v. Smith Bros., App. - - - - -                                                                    | 2 P.2d | 1012 |
| Hess v. Country Club Park, Sup. - - - - -                                                                | 2 P.2d | 782  |
| Hicks v. Frazer, Super. - - - - -                                                                        | 1 P.2d | 1096 |
| Hicks; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                         | 1 P.2d | 550  |
| H. K. McCann Co. v. Week, App. - - - - -                                                                 | 1 P.2d | 452  |
| Hoalton; Robinson v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 344  |
| Hockett; Wieck v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 476  |
| Hodges; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 174  |
| Hofstedt v. Southern Pac. Co., App. - - - - -                                                            | 1 P.2d | 470  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                                 | Vol.   | Page |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Hogan; Fortier v., App. - - - - -                                                               | 1 P.2d | 23   |
| Holland v. Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n, App. - - - - -                             | 1 P.2d | 1031 |
| Hollingsworth; Scott v., App. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 571  |
| Home Accident Ins. Co.; Hynding v., App. - - - - -                                              | 2 P.2d | 423  |
| Homer Laughlin Engineers Corporation v. J. W. Leavitt & Co., App. - - - - -                     | 2 P.2d | 511  |
| Hoogbruin v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., Sup. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 992  |
| Hopkins; Harmon v., App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 540  |
| Hopkins; Whiting Finance Co. v., App. - - - - -                                                 | 2 P.2d | 461  |
| Hornbuckle v. Jennings, Sup. - - - - -                                                          | 1 P.2d | 981  |
| Howard v. National Ice Cream Co., App. - - - - -                                                | 2 P.2d | 211  |
| Howland v. Scott, App. - - - - -                                                                | 2 P.2d | 416  |
| Howland v. Scott, two cases, App. - - - - -                                                     | 2 P.2d | 418  |
| Hyde v. City of Santa Cruz, App. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 560  |
| Hynding v. Home Accident Ins. Co., App. - - - - -                                               | 2 P.2d | 423  |
| Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America; Pacific Coast Adjustment Bureau v., App. - - - - -         | 2 P.2d | 218  |
| Independence Indemnity Co. v. McDougall, App. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 483  |
| Industrial Accident Commission; Associated Indemnity Corporation v., App. - - - - -             | 2 P.2d | 51   |
| Industrial Accident Commission; Associated Indemnity Corporation v., App. - - - - -             | 2 P.2d | 52   |
| Industrial Accident Commission; Carlson v., Sup. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 151  |
| Industrial Accident Commission; Carlson v., Sup. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 154  |
| Industrial Accident Commission; Cline v., App. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 840  |
| Industrial Accident Commission; First Nat. Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego v., Sup. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 347  |
| Industrial Accident Commission; Gildersleeve v., Sup. - - - - -                                 | 1 P.2d | 1    |
| Industrial Accident Commission; MacDonald v., Sup. - - - - -                                    | 1 P.2d | 979  |
| Industrial Accident Commission; New York Indemnity Co. v., Sup. - - - - -                       | 1 P.2d | 12   |
| Inoguchi; Nishi v., App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 864  |
| Interstate Oil Corporation; Jones v., App. - - - - -                                            | 1 P.2d | 1051 |
| Inyo Marble Co.; Padgham v., App. - - - - -                                                     | 2 P.2d | 531  |
| Irving v. State Bar of California, Sup. - - - - -                                               | 1 P.2d | 2    |
| Irwin v. Pickwick Stages System, two cases, App. - - - - -                                      | 1 P.2d | 1030 |
| Irwin v. Pickwick Stages System, two cases, App. - - - - -                                      | 1 P.2d | 1031 |
| Ito v. Watanabe, Sup. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 799  |
| Jameson & Co. v. Redfield, App. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 53   |
| Jardine v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, Sup. - - - - -                         | 2 P.2d | 756  |
| Jedlick; Rossi v., App. - - - - -                                                               | 1 P.2d | 1065 |
| Jenkins; Edwards v., App. - - - - -                                                             | 1 P.2d | 487  |
| Jenkinson's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                       | 1 P.2d | 551  |
| Jennerjohn; People v., App. - - - - -                                                           | 1 P.2d | 532  |
| Jennings; Hornbuckle v., Sup. - - - - -                                                         | 1 P.2d | 981  |
| Jennings v. Ward, App. - - - - -                                                                | 1 P.2d | 455  |
| Johannes, Ex parte, Sup. - - - - -                                                              | 1 P.2d | 984  |
| John P. Mills Organization v. Unger, App. - - - - -                                             | 2 P.2d | 556  |
| Johns v. Mecchi, App. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 452  |
| Johnson; Blackmore Inv. Co. v., Sup. - - - - -                                                  | 1 P.2d | 978  |
| Johnson; Foard v., App. - - - - -                                                               | 2 P.2d | 509  |
| Johnson; Meyer v., App. - - - - -                                                               | 2 P.2d | 456  |
| Johnson; People v., App. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 216  |
| Johnson; Read v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                | 2 P.2d | 377  |
| Johnston; Webber v., App. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 49   |
| Joint Pole Ass'n v. Steele, Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 335  |
| Jones v. Foster, App. - - - - -                                                                 | 2 P.2d | 582  |
| Jones v. Interstate Oil Corporation, App. - - - - -                                             | 1 P.2d | 1051 |
| Jones; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                | 2 P.2d | 818  |
| Jones' Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 483  |
| Jordan v. Great Western Motorways, Sup. - - - - -                                               | 2 P.2d | 786  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                    | Vol.   | Page |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| J. W. Leavitt & Co.; Homer Laughlin Engineers Corporation v., App. | 2 P.2d | 511  |
| Karlslyst v. Frazier, Sup.                                         | 2 P.2d | 362  |
| Katz v. Helbing, App.                                              | 1 P.2d | 1076 |
| Keers; Dalton v., Sup.                                             | 2 P.2d | 355  |
| Kelley v. Cochran, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 434  |
| Keltz; Washburn v., App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 45   |
| Kennedy v. Dutton, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 856  |
| Keough; Theisen v., App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 1015 |
| Kershaw v. Tilbury, App.                                           | 2 P.2d | 389  |
| Kimball Pump Co.; Kling v., App.                                   | 1 P.2d | 998  |
| King v. Moreland, App.                                             | 2 P.2d | 576  |
| King; People v., Sup.                                              | 1 P.2d | 15   |
| King v. Wilson, two cases, App.                                    | 2 P.2d | 833  |
| Kling v. Kimball Pump Co., App.                                    | 1 P.2d | 998  |
| Knapp; Zeller v., App.                                             | 1 P.2d | 1071 |
| Knott v. Medina No. 1, App.                                        | 1 P.2d | 995  |
| Koffman v. Dekoch, App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 1090 |
| Kohler v. Thomas, Sup.                                             | 2 P.2d | 339  |
| Krogh; Giddens v., App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 821  |
| Lacang; People v., Sup.                                            | 1 P.2d | 7    |
| Laguna Land & Water Co.; Day v., App.                              | 1 P.2d | 448  |
| Laher Auto Spring Co.; Sterling Adjustment Co. v., App.            | 2 P.2d | 408  |
| La Marr; People v., App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 27   |
| Lane v. McAlpine, App.                                             | 2 P.2d | 184  |
| Lanktree v. Spring Mountain Acres, Sup.                            | 2 P.2d | 338  |
| Laughlin Engineers Corporation v. J. W. Leavitt & Co., App.        | 2 P.2d | 511  |
| Lavine; People v., App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 496  |
| Lee; Shaw v., Sup.                                                 | 2 P.2d | 371  |
| Leis v. City and County of San Francisco, Sup.                     | 2 P.2d | 26   |
| Lewis v. Southern California Edison Co., App.                      | 2 P.2d | 419  |
| Lidberg v. E. T. Leiter & Son, App.                                | 2 P.2d | 526  |
| Liebelt v. Carney, Sup.                                            | 2 P.2d | 144  |
| Lincoln Mortg. Co.; Fall v., App.                                  | 2 P.2d | 58   |
| Lindenbaum v. Barbour, Sup.                                        | 2 P.2d | 161  |
| Lippman v. Subway Terminal Corporation, App.                       | 1 P.2d | 1056 |
| London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co.; Frasch v., Sup.                 | 2 P.2d | 147  |
| Loranger v. Nadeau, App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 1049 |
| Los Angeles Board of Adjusters v. Bailes, App.                     | 2 P.2d | 557  |
| Los Angeles, City of, v. Abbott, App.                              | 1 P.2d | 538  |
| Los Angeles, City of, v. Abbott, two cases, App.                   | 1 P.2d | 541  |
| Los Angeles, City of, v. Abbott, two cases, App.                   | 1 P.2d | 542  |
| Los Angeles, City of, v. Grace S. S. Co., App.                     | 2 P.2d | 401  |
| Los Angeles, City of, v. Southern California Edison Co., App.      | 2 P.2d | 419  |
| Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Wright, Sup.             | 2 P.2d | 168  |
| Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation; Thorpe v., App.            | 1 P.2d | 37   |
| Los Angeles Ry. Corporation; Dwyer v., App.                        | 2 P.2d | 468  |
| Los Angeles Ry. Corporation; Ring v., App.                         | 2 P.2d | 404  |
| Los Angeles Warehouse Co.; Dodwell & Co. v., App.                  | 2 P.2d | 181  |
| Los Verjels Land & Water Co.; McGillycuddy v., Sup.                | 2 P.2d | 19   |
| Luis; Martinelli v., Sup.                                          | 1 P.2d | 980  |
| Lusardi v. Prukop, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 876  |
| McAlpine; Lane v., App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 184  |
| McAlvay v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.      | 2 P.2d | 829  |
| McCann Co. v. Week, App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 452  |
| McCarthy; Reed v., App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 536  |
| McClain; People v., App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 1023 |
| McClain; People v., App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 1085 |
| McColgan v. Scoble, App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 36   |
| McCollum; People v., App.                                          | 2 P.2d | 432  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                         | Vol.   | Page |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| McCollum; People v., App. - - - - -                                     | 2 P.2d | 431  |
| McCoy; Advance Rumely Thresher Co. v., Sup. - - - - -                   | 2 P.2d | 157  |
| McCush; Ochoa v., Sup. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 357  |
| McCush; Stone v., Sup. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 357  |
| McDole's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                  | 2 P.2d | 435  |
| MacDonald v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup. - - - - -             | 1 P.2d | 979  |
| McDonald; Oregon-California Livestock Co. v., Sup. - - - - -            | 2 P.2d | 336  |
| McDonald; People v., App. - - - - -                                     | 1 P.2d | 36   |
| McDougall; Independence Indemnity Co. v., App. - - - - -                | 2 P.2d | 483  |
| McGillycuddy v. Los Verjels Land & Water Co., Sup. - - - - -            | 2 P.2d | 19   |
| McGuire; Washington Lumber & Millwork Co. v., Sup. - - - - -            | 1 P.2d | 437  |
| McIntire v. Chevrolet Motor Co. of California, App. - - - - -           | 1 P.2d | 40   |
| McIntire; People v., Sup. - - - - -                                     | 1 P.2d | 443  |
| McIntosh; California Savings & Commercial Bank v., App. - - - - -       | 1 P.2d | 1080 |
| Mack; People v., App. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 209  |
| McKenna, Ex parte, App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 429  |
| McLeran; Traxler v., App. - - - - -                                     | 2 P.2d | 553  |
| McPherson; Ware v., Sup. - - - - -                                      | 1 P.2d | 433  |
| Maggart v. Bell, App. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 516  |
| Majestic Furniture Co.; Frost v., App. - - - - -                        | 1 P.2d | 551  |
| Malmberg; Nordquist v., Sup. - - - - -                                  | 2 P.2d | 334  |
| Malone; People v., Sup. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 332  |
| Mann; Tufts v., App. - - - - -                                          | 2 P.2d | 500  |
| Market St. R. Co.; Anderson v., App. - - - - -                          | 2 P.2d | 529  |
| Market St. R. Co.; Salvo v., App. - - - - -                             | 2 P.2d | 585  |
| Martin; Clay v., App. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 396  |
| Martinelli v. Luis, Sup. - - - - -                                      | 1 P.2d | 980  |
| Martin Music Co. v. Robb, App. - - - - -                                | 1 P.2d | 1000 |
| Mason v. Del Valle, Sup. - - - - -                                      | 1 P.2d | 419  |
| Matson; Security Trust & Saving Bank of San Diego v., App. - - - - -    | 2 P.2d | 1001 |
| Maurice; Schatte v., App. - - - - -                                     | 2 P.2d | 489  |
| Mayo v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App. - - - - -    | 2 P.2d | 522  |
| Mecchi; Atkeson v., App. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 452  |
| Mecchi; Johns v., App. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 452  |
| Medina No. 1; Knott v., App. - - - - -                                  | 1 P.2d | 995  |
| Mercantile Trust Co. of California; Ebbert v., Sup. - - - - -           | 2 P.2d | 776  |
| Merced Irr. Dist.; Collier v., Sup. - - - - -                           | 2 P.2d | 790  |
| Merchants' Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Clark-Parker Co., App. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 472  |
| Mertens v. Berendsen, Sup. - - - - -                                    | 1 P.2d | 440  |
| Meyer v. Johnson, App. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 456  |
| Mickley v. Citizens' Nat. Trust & Savings Bank, App. - - - - -          | 2 P.2d | 193  |
| Mickley's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                 | 2 P.2d | 193  |
| Mills Organization v. Unger, App. - - - - -                             | 2 P.2d | 556  |
| Milton G. Cooper & Son v. William R. Davis & Bro., App. - - - - -       | 2 P.2d | 823  |
| Mitchell's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                | 1 P.2d | 536  |
| Modesto City School Dist.; Modesto Inv. Co. v., Sup. - - - - -          | 2 P.2d | 387  |
| Modesto Inv. Co. v. Modesto City School Dist., Sup. - - - - -           | 2 P.2d | 387  |
| Moe v. Gier, App. - - - - -                                             | 2 P.2d | 852  |
| Moffitt v. Ford Motor Co., App. - - - - -                               | 1 P.2d | 994  |
| Montague's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                | 2 P.2d | 555  |
| Monte Regio Corporation; Argue v., App. - - - - -                       | 2 P.2d | 54   |
| Moore; Busing v., App. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 841  |
| Moreland; King v., App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 576  |
| Moss; Cronkright v., App. - - - - -                                     | 2 P.2d | 480  |
| Moulton; People v., App. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 1009 |
| Munson; People v., App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 227  |
| Myers' Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                    | 1 P.2d | 1013 |
| Nadeau; Loranger v., App. - - - - -                                     | 1 P.2d | 1049 |
| National Ice Cream Co.; Howard v., App. - - - - -                       | 2 P.2d | 211  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                             | Vol.   | Page |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| National Stone-Tile Corporation; American Concrete Units Co. v., App. -                     | 1 P.2d | 1084 |
| Nelson; Sawyer v., App. - - - - -                                                           | 1 P.2d | 1068 |
| New York Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, Sup. - -                          | 1 P.2d | 12   |
| Nishi v. Inoguchi, App. - - - - -                                                           | 2 P.2d | 861  |
| Nishihara; Casey v., Sup. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 778  |
| Noles v. Prukop, App. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 870  |
| Nordgren's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -                                                    | 2 P.2d | 481  |
| Nordquist v. Malmberg, Sup. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 334  |
| Northwest Engineering Co.; Compton v., App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 1014 |
| Ochoa v. McCush, Sup. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 357  |
| O'Connell v. Union Drilling & Petroleum Co., App. - - - - -                                 | 2 P.2d | 464  |
| O'Hara v. Grand Lodge, I. O. G. T. of State of California, Sup. - -                         | 2 P.2d | 21   |
| Ohlandt; Wrin v., Sup. - - - - -                                                            | 1 P.2d | 991  |
| Oliver; People v., App. - - - - -                                                           | 2 P.2d | 450  |
| Oisheski; Baird v., App. - - - - -                                                          | 2 P.2d | 493  |
| Oregon-California Livestock Co. v. McDonald, Sup. - - - - -                                 | 2 P.2d | 336  |
| Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist.; Henderson v., Sup. - - - - -                                 | 2 P.2d | 803  |
| Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist.; Rutherford v., Sup. - - - - -                                | 2 P.2d | 803  |
| Our Lady of Mercy Convent v. Stone, App. - - - - -                                          | 2 P.2d | 481  |
| Owens v. Carmichael's U-Drive Autos, App. - - - - -                                         | 2 P.2d | 580  |
| Pacific Auto Stages; Corcoran v., App. - - - - -                                            | 2 P.2d | 225  |
| Pacific Auto Stages; Sanchez v., App. - - - - -                                             | 2 P.2d | 845  |
| Pacific Coast Adjustment Bureau v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North Amer-ica, App. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 218  |
| Pacific Finance Corporation v. Bank of Yolo, App. - - - - -                                 | 1 P.2d | 465  |
| Pacific Finance Corporation v. City of Lynwood, App. - - - - -                              | 1 P.2d | 520  |
| Pacific Land & Cattle Co.; Phillips v., App. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 566  |
| Pacific Ready Cut Homes; Conner v., App. - - - - -                                          | 1 P.2d | 1027 |
| Pacific Southwest Loan & Mortgage Corporation; Eberhard v., Sup. -                          | 1 P.2d | 420  |
| Pacific States Corporation v. Pan-American Bank of California, Sup. -                       | 1 P.2d | 4    |
| Pacific States Corporation v. Pan-American Bank, Sup. - - - - -                             | 1 P.2d | 981  |
| Padgham v. Inyo Marble Co., App. - - - - -                                                  | 2 P.2d | 531  |
| Paduveris v. Paris, Sup. - - - - -                                                          | 1 P.2d | 986  |
| Palmer v. Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co., Sup. - - - - -                                | 2 P.2d | 771  |
| Pan-American Bank of California; Pacific States Corporation v., Sup. -                      | 1 P.2d | 4    |
| Pan-American Bank; Pacific States Corporation v., Sup. - - - - -                            | 1 P.2d | 981  |
| Paris; Paduveris v., Sup. - - - - -                                                         | 1 P.2d | 986  |
| Parker v. Board of Dental Examiners of State of California, App. - -                        | 1 P.2d | 501  |
| Parrino v. Rallis, App. - - - - -                                                           | 2 P.2d | 515  |
| Parr Terminal Co.; Richmond Terminal Corporation v., App. - - -                             | 2 P.2d | 579  |
| Peek; Smart v., Sup. - - - - -                                                              | 2 P.2d | 380  |
| Penn v. Dyba, App. - - - - -                                                                | 1 P.2d | 461  |
| Pennington; Fisher v., App. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 518  |
| People v. Acosta, App. - - - - -                                                            | 1 P.2d | 43   |
| People v. Anderson, Super. - - - - -                                                        | 1 P.2d | 64   |
| People v. Armentrout, Super. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 556  |
| People v. Bettencourt, App. - - - - -                                                       | 1 P.2d | 494  |
| People v. Casperson, App. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 459  |
| People v. Chase, Super. - - - - -                                                           | 1 P.2d | 60   |
| People v. Clapper, App. - - - - -                                                           | 2 P.2d | 186  |
| People v. Coldwell, App. - - - - -                                                          | 1 P.2d | 1094 |
| People v. Farrington, Sup. - - - - -                                                        | 2 P.2d | 814  |
| People v. Fisher, App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 564  |
| People v. Ford, App. - - - - -                                                              | 1 P.2d | 475  |
| People v. Forrester, App. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 558  |
| People v. Franklin, App. - - - - -                                                          | 1 P.2d | 514  |
| People v. Goltra, App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 35   |
| People v. Hicks, App. - - - - -                                                             | 1 P.2d | 550  |
| People v. Hodges, App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 174  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                    | Vol.   | Page |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| People v. Jennerjohn, App.                                         | 1 P.2d | 532  |
| People v. Johnson, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 216  |
| People v. Jones, App.                                              | 2 P.2d | 818  |
| People v. King, Sup.                                               | 1 P.2d | 15   |
| People v. Lacang, Sup.                                             | 1 P.2d | 7    |
| People v. La Marr, App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 27   |
| People v. Lavine, App.                                             | 1 P.2d | 496  |
| People v. McClain, App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 1023 |
| People v. McClain, App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 1085 |
| People v. McCollum, App.                                           | 2 P.2d | 432  |
| People v. McCollum, App.                                           | 2 P.2d | 434  |
| People v. McDonald, App.                                           | 1 P.2d | 36   |
| People v. McIntire, Sup.                                           | 1 P.2d | 443  |
| People v. Mack, App.                                               | 2 P.2d | 209  |
| People v. Malone, Sup.                                             | 2 P.2d | 332  |
| People v. Moulton, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 1009 |
| People v. Munson, App.                                             | 2 P.2d | 227  |
| People v. Oliver, App.                                             | 2 P.2d | 450  |
| People v. Ranney, Sup.                                             | 1 P.2d | 423  |
| People v. Riley, App.                                              | 1 P.2d | 27   |
| People v. Roberts, App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 1088 |
| People v. Rosenbloom, Super.                                       | 2 P.2d | 228  |
| People v. Stewart, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 195  |
| People v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, App. | 2 P.2d | 843  |
| People v. Vincent, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 460  |
| People v. Willison, App.                                           | 2 P.2d | 543  |
| People v. Wolin, Super.                                            | 2 P.2d | 60   |
| People v. Wy Sing, App.                                            | 1 P.2d | 496  |
| People v. Yeoman, App.                                             | 1 P.2d | 933  |
| Peters v. California Building-Loan Ass'n, App.                     | 2 P.2d | 439  |
| Phillips v. Pacific Land & Cattle Co., App.                        | 2 P.2d | 566  |
| Phillips v. White, Super.                                          | 2 P.2d | 588  |
| Pickwick Stages System; Irwin v., App.                             | 1 P.2d | 1030 |
| Pickwick Stages System; Irwin v., App.                             | 1 P.2d | 1031 |
| Pickwick Stages System; Reynosa v., App.                           | 1 P.2d | 548  |
| Pierson; Dexter v., Sup.                                           | 1 P.2d | 435  |
| Pilcher; Diffendorf v., App.                                       | 2 P.2d | 430  |
| Preder v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, App.                | 2 P.2d | 223  |
| Presbytery of Los Angeles v. Forth, App.                           | 2 P.2d | 402  |
| Price; Thompson v., Sup.                                           | 2 P.2d | 160  |
| Progressive Finance Corporation v. Vining, App.                    | 1 P.2d | 1604 |
| Prukop; Lusardi v., App.                                           | 2 P.2d | 870  |
| Prukop; Noles v., App.                                             | 2 P.2d | 870  |
| Quitman, Ex parte, App.                                            | 2 P.2d | 41   |
| Rainbow Petroleum Co. v. Union Drilling & Petroleum Co., App.      | 1 P.2d | 489  |
| Rallis; Parrino v., App.                                           | 2 P.2d | 515  |
| Ranney; People v., Sup.                                            | 1 P.2d | 423  |
| Ratliff v. Ratliff, App.                                           | 2 P.2d | 222  |
| Ray; Cisler v., Sup.                                               | 2 P.2d | 987  |
| R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen, Sup.                             | 2 P.2d | 353  |
| Read v. Johnson, Sup.                                              | 2 P.2d | 377  |
| Reclamation Dist. No. 1004; White Mallard Outing Club v., Sup.     | 2 P.2d | 330  |
| Redfield; A. L. Jameson & Co. v., App.                             | 2 P.2d | 53   |
| Reed v. McCarthy, App.                                             | 1 P.2d | 536  |
| Reliance Rock Co.; Scrimsher v., App.                              | 2 P.2d | 862  |
| Renaker Co.; Burns v., App.                                        | 2 P.2d | 468  |
| Reno v. A. L. Boyden Co., App.                                     | 2 P.2d | 214  |
| Reser v. Barnes, App.                                              | 2 P.2d | 435  |
| Reynosa v. Pickwick Stages System, App.                            | 1 P.2d | 548  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                     | Vol.   | Page |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Rhea v. Thomson, App. - - - - -                                                     | 1 P.2d | 1091 |
| Rice; Security Co. v., App. - - - - -                                               | 1 P.2d | 1006 |
| Richardson v. Davis, App. - - - - -                                                 | 2 P.2d | 860  |
| Richmond Terminal Corporation v. Parr Terminal Co., App. - - - - -                  | 2 P.2d | 579  |
| Riley; People v., App. - - - - -                                                    | 1 P.2d | 27   |
| Ring v. Los Angeles Ry. Corporation, App. - - - - -                                 | 2 P.2d | 404  |
| Robb; Martin Music Co. v., App. - - - - -                                           | 1 P.2d | 1000 |
| Robbins; Forrester v., App. - - - - -                                               | 1 P.2d | 995  |
| Robert Marsh & Co.; Evans v., App. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 882  |
| Roberts; People v., App. - - - - -                                                  | 1 P.2d | 1088 |
| Robinson v. Hoalton, Sup. - - - - -                                                 | 2 P.2d | 344  |
| Rogaiff v. Bartles, App. - - - - -                                                  | 1 P.2d | 517  |
| Rollinson; State Bar of California v., Sup. - - - - -                               | 1 P.2d | 428  |
| Roos; Bowler v., Sup. - - - - -                                                     | 2 P.2d | 817  |
| Rosenbloom; People v., Super. - - - - -                                             | 2 P.2d | 228  |
| Rossi v. Jedlick, App. - - - - -                                                    | 1 P.2d | 1065 |
| Rutherford v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., Sup. - - - - -                         | 2 P.2d | 803  |
| Salvo v. Market St. R. Co., App. - - - - -                                          | 2 P.2d | 585  |
| Sanchez v. Pacific Auto Stages, App. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 845  |
| San Diego Union High School Dist. of San Diego County; Boyce v., App. - - - - -     | 1 P.2d | 1037 |
| San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling & Industrial Co., App. - - - - - | 1 P.2d | 1008 |
| San Francisco Protestant Orphanage Soc.; Freyer v., App. - - - - -                  | 1 P.2d | 475  |
| Santa Ana Sugar Co. v. Smith, two cases, App. - - - - -                             | 2 P.2d | 866  |
| Sarff; White v., App. - - - - -                                                     | 1 P.2d | 519  |
| Sauer v. Andrews, App. - - - - -                                                    | 1 P.2d | 997  |
| Sawyer v. Nelson, App. - - - - -                                                    | 1 P.2d | 1068 |
| Schatte v. Maurice, App. - - - - -                                                  | 2 P.2d | 489  |
| Schiller; Slaphey v., App. - - - - -                                                | 2 P.2d | 577  |
| Schilling v. Central California Traction Co., App. - - - - -                        | 1 P.2d | 53   |
| Schlageter v. Cutting, App. - - - - -                                               | 2 P.2d | 875  |
| Scoble; McColgan v., App. - - - - -                                                 | 1 P.2d | 36   |
| Scott v. Hollingsworth, App. - - - - -                                              | 2 P.2d | 571  |
| Scott; Howland v., App. - - - - -                                                   | 2 P.2d | 416  |
| Scott; Howland v., App. - - - - -                                                   | 2 P.2d | 418  |
| Scott v. Shaw, two cases, App. - - - - -                                            | 1 P.2d | 531  |
| Scrimsher v. Reliance Rock Co., App. - - - - -                                      | 2 P.2d | 862  |
| Security Co. v. Rice, App. - - - - -                                                | 1 P.2d | 1006 |
| Security Trust & Saving Bank of San Diego v. Matson, App. - - - - -                 | 2 P.2d | 1001 |
| Sexton v. Bollinger, App. - - - - -                                                 | 2 P.2d | 189  |
| Shannon v. Fleishhacker, App. - - - - -                                             | 2 P.2d | 835  |
| Shaw v. Lee, Sup. - - - - -                                                         | 2 P.2d | 371  |
| Shaw; Scott v., App. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 531  |
| Shell Oil Co. v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, Sup. - - - - -       | 2 P.2d | 801  |
| Silva, In re, Sup. - - - - -                                                        | 2 P.2d | 341  |
| Silva; Ettling v., App. - - - - -                                                   | 2 P.2d | 473  |
| Silva; Fishman v., App. - - - - -                                                   | 2 P.2d | 473  |
| Silverstein; Williams v., Sup. - - - - -                                            | 2 P.2d | 165  |
| Sirota; Bernstein v., Sup. - - - - -                                                | 1 P.2d | 8    |
| Slaphey v. Schiller, App. - - - - -                                                 | 2 P.2d | 577  |
| Slaughter v. Van Winkle, Sup. - - - - -                                             | 2 P.2d | 789  |
| Smart v. Peek, Sup. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 380  |
| Smead Inv. Co.; Corvin v., App. - - - - -                                           | 1 P.2d | 507  |
| Smiley; Feeny v., App. - - - - -                                                    | 2 P.2d | 220  |
| Smith v. Frans Nelson & Sons, App. - - - - -                                        | 1 P.2d | 509  |
| Smith; Santa Ana Sugar Co. v., App. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 866  |
| Smith v. Zana, App. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 224  |
| Smith Bros.; Herron v., App. - - - - -                                              | 2 P.2d | 1012 |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                                                         | Vol.   | Page |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Soffel; American Exchange Nat. Bank v., App. - - - - -                                                  | 2 P.2d | 533  |
| Soronow; Weintraub v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 28   |
| Southern California Edison Co.; Brown v., App. - - - - -                                                | 1 P.2d | 1073 |
| Southern California Edison Co.; City of Los Angeles v., App. - - - - -                                  | 2 P.2d | 419  |
| Southern California Edison Co.; Lewis v., App. - - - - -                                                | 2 P.2d | 419  |
| Southern California Gas Co.; Hernandez v., Sup. - - - - -                                               | 2 P.2d | 360  |
| Southern Pac. Co. v. Grangers' Business Ass'n, App. - - - - -                                           | 1 P.2d | 477  |
| Southern Pac. Co.; Hofstedt v., App. - - - - -                                                          | 1 P.2d | 470  |
| Southern Pac. Co.; Thomas v., App. - - - - -                                                            | 2 P.2d | 544  |
| Souza v. Underwriters' Fire Patrol of San Francisco, App. - - - - -                                     | 2 P.2d | 200  |
| Spicer; Bank of Italy Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n v., App. - - - - -                                     | 2 P.2d | 42   |
| Spicer; Byers v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 2 P.2d | 479  |
| Spring Mountain Acres; Lanktree v., Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 338  |
| State Bar of California; Barbee v., Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 353  |
| State Bar of California; Barton v., Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 149  |
| State Bar of California; Bruns v., Sup. - - - - -                                                       | 1 P.2d | 989  |
| State Bar of California; Dahl v., Sup. - - - - -                                                        | 1 P.2d | 977  |
| State Bar of California; Irving v., Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 1 P.2d | 2    |
| State Bar of California; Golden v., Sup. - - - - -                                                      | 2 P.2d | 325  |
| State Bar of California; Green v., Sup. - - - - -                                                       | 2 P.2d | 340  |
| State Bar of California v. Rollinson, Sup. - - - - -                                                    | 1 P.2d | 428  |
| State Guaranty Corporation; Heimburge v., App. - - - - -                                                | 2 P.2d | 998  |
| State Industrial Accident Commission; Winthrop v., Sup. - - - - -                                       | 2 P.2d | 142  |
| Steel v. Duntley, App. - - - - -                                                                        | 1 P.2d | 999  |
| Steele; Joint Pole Ass'n v., Sup. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 335  |
| Steiner; Fugelsang v., App. - - - - -                                                                   | 1 P.2d | 553  |
| Sterling Adjustment Co. v. Laher Auto Spring Co., App. - - - - -                                        | 2 P.2d | 408  |
| Stewart; People v., App. - - - - -                                                                      | 2 P.2d | 195  |
| Stineman; Becker v., App. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 444  |
| Stineman; Coast Amusements v., App. - - - - -                                                           | 2 P.2d | 447  |
| Stonaker v. Big Sisters Hospital, App. - - - - -                                                        | 2 P.2d | 520  |
| Stone v. McCush, Sup. - - - - -                                                                         | 2 P.2d | 357  |
| Stone; Our Lady of Mercy Convent v., App. - - - - -                                                     | 2 P.2d | 481  |
| Subway Terminal Corporation; Lippman v., App. - - - - -                                                 | 1 P.2d | 1056 |
| Superior Court in and for Kern County; Bank of America Nat. Trust& Savings Ass'n v., App. - - - - - | 1 P.2d | 1081 |
| Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; De Mund v., Sup. - - - - -                                | 2 P.2d | 985  |
| Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Jardine v., Sup. - - - - -                                | 2 P.2d | 756  |
| Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; McAlvay v., App. - - - - -                                | 2 P.2d | 829  |
| Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Mayo v., App. - - - - -                                   | 2 P.2d | 522  |
| Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Shell Oil Co., v.,Sup. - - - - -                      | 2 P.2d | 801  |
| Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; People v., App. - - - - -                           | 2 P.2d | 843  |
| Sutton v. Tanger, App. - - - - -                                                                        | 1 P.2d | 521  |
| S. W. Straus & Co.; Carrier & Braddock v., Sup. - - - - -                                               | 2 P.2d | 811  |
| Sylvia; Boxwell v., App. - - - - -                                                                      | 2 P.2d | 577  |
| Tanger; Almstead v., App. - - - - -                                                                     | 1 P.2d | 521  |
| Tanger; Sutton v., App. - - - - -                                                                       | 1 P.2d | 521  |
| Theisen v. Keough, App. - - - - -                                                                       | 1 P.2d | 1015 |
| Thomas; Carl v., App. - - - - -                                                                         | 2 P.2d | 872  |
| Thomas; Kohler v., Sup. - - - - -                                                                       | 2 P.2d | 339  |
| Thomas v. Southern Pac. Co., App. - - - - -                                                             | 2 P.2d | 544  |
| Thompson v. Byers, App. - - - - -                                                                       | 2 P.2d | 496  |
| Thompson v. Price, Sup. - - - - -                                                                       | 2 P.2d | 160  |
| Thomson; Rhea v., App. - - - - -                                                                        | 1 P.2d | 1091 |
| Thorpe v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation, App. - - - - -                                        | 1 P.2d | 37   |
| Thyle; Traders' Credit Corporation v., App. - - - - -                                                   | 2 P.2d | 568  |
| Tilbury; Kershaw v., App. - - - - -                                                                     | 2 P.2d | 389  |
| Toms v. Hellman, App. - - - - -                                                                         | 1 P.2d | 31   |

CASES REPORTED

|                                                                | Vol. | Page      |
|----------------------------------------------------------------|------|-----------|
| Traders' Credit Corporation v. Thyle, App.                     | 2    | P.2d 568  |
| Transport Oil Co. v. Bush, App.                                | 1    | P.2d 1060 |
| Traxler v. McLeran, App.                                       | 2    | P.2d 553  |
| Trotter; Anderson v., Sup.                                     | 2    | P.2d 373  |
| Trotter; Baylis Estate Co. v., Sup.                            | 2    | P.2d 373  |
| Tufts v. Mann, App.                                            | 2    | P.2d 500  |
| Tulare Lake Canal Co.; Ahern v., App.                          | 1    | P.2d 490  |
| Ullman v. California Cab Co., App.                             | 2    | P.2d 494  |
| Underwriters' Fire Patrol of San Francisco; Souza v., App.     | 2    | P.2d 200  |
| Unger; John P. Mills Organization v., App.                     | 2    | P.2d 556  |
| Union Drilling & Petroleum Co.; O'Connell v., App.             | 2    | P.2d 464  |
| Union Drilling & Petroleum Co.; Rainbow Petroleum Co. v., App. | 1    | P.2d 489  |
| Union Finance Co.; Everhardy v., App.                          | 1    | P.2d 1024 |
| Van Winkle; Slaughter v., Sup.                                 | 2    | P.2d 789  |
| Vertson v. City of Los Angeles, App.                           | 2    | P.2d 411  |
| Vincent; People v., App.                                       | 2    | P.2d 460  |
| Vining; Progressive Finance Corporation v., App.               | 1    | P.2d 1004 |
| Wallace v. Board of Trustees, App.                             | 2    | P.2d 426  |
| Wallin; American Bldg. Material Service Co. v., App.           | 2    | P.2d 1007 |
| Wallman; Clark v., App.                                        | 2    | P.2d 562  |
| Ward; Corcoran v., App.                                        | 1    | P.2d 455  |
| Ward; Jennings v., App.                                        | 1    | P.2d 455  |
| Ware v. McPherson, Sup.                                        | 1    | P.2d 433  |
| Waring; Bernhard v., Sup.                                      | 2    | P.2d 32   |
| Washburn v. A. F. Gilmore Co., App.                            | 2    | P.2d 506  |
| Washburn v. Keltz, App.                                        | 1    | P.2d 45   |
| Washington Lumber & Millwork Co. v. McGuire, Sup.              | 1    | P.2d 437  |
| Watanabe; Ito v., Sup.                                         | 2    | P.2d 799  |
| Webber v. Johnston, App.                                       | 2    | P.2d 49   |
| Week; H. K. McCann Co. v., App.                                | 1    | P.2d 452  |
| Weintraub v. Soronow, App.                                     | 1    | P.2d 28   |
| Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co.; Palmer v., Sup.            | 2    | P.2d 771  |
| White; Phillips v., Super.                                     | 2    | P.2d 588  |
| White v. Sarff, App.                                           | 1    | P.2d 519  |
| White Mallard Outing Club v. Reclamation Dist. No. 1004, Sup.  | 2    | P.2d 330  |
| Whiting Finance Co. v. Hopkins, App.                           | 2    | P.2d 461  |
| Wieck v. Hockett, App.                                         | 2    | P.2d 476  |
| William R. Davis & Bro.; Milton G. Cooper & Son v., App.       | 2    | P.2d 823  |
| Williams; Enright v., App.                                     | 2    | P.2d 828  |
| Williams v. Silverstein, Sup.                                  | 2    | P.2d 165  |
| Williamson v. Fitzgerald, App.                                 | 2    | P.2d 201  |
| Willison; People v., App.                                      | 2    | P.2d 543  |
| Wilson; King v., App.                                          | 2    | P.2d 833  |
| Winthrop v. State Industrial Accident Commission, Sup.         | 2    | P.2d 142  |
| Wolin; People v., Super.                                       | 2    | P.2d 60   |
| Wolpert v. Gripton, Sup.                                       | 2    | P.2d 767  |
| Wright; Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v., Sup.        | 2    | P.2d 168  |
| Wright & Callender Bldg. Co.; Gross v., App.                   | 2    | P.2d 857  |
| Wrin v. Ohlandt, Sup.                                          | 1    | P.2d 991  |
| Wulbern v. Gilroy Exp., App.                                   | 2    | P.2d 508  |
| Wy Sing; People v., App.                                       | 1    | P.2d 496  |
| Yankelewitch v. Beach, App.                                    | 2    | P.2d 498  |
| Yates v. Eudemiller, Sup.                                      | 1    | P.2d 434  |
| Yellen v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, App.            | 1    | P.2d 1019 |
| Yeoman; People v., App.                                        | 1    | P.2d 993  |
| Yoshika Tashiro; Bushnell v., App.                             | 2    | P.2d 550  |
| Yost-Linn Lumber & Finance Co. v. Bennett, App.                | 2    | P.2d 488  |
| Young; Allen v., App.                                          | 1    | P.2d 523  |
| Young Machinery Co. v. Cupps, Sup.                             | 2    | P.2d 321  |

CASES REPORTED

|                                           | Vol.   | Page |
|-------------------------------------------|--------|------|
| Young's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -     | 1 P.2d | 523  |
| Zana; Smith v., App. - - - - -            | 2 P.2d | 224  |
| Zeller v. Knapp, App. - - - - -           | 1 P.2d | 1071 |
| Zilke's Estate, In re, App. - - - - -     | 1 P.2d | 475  |
| Zimmerman; Bruggemeyer v., App. - - - - - | 2 P.2d | 534  |

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

IN VOLUME

1 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

212 Cal. 763

GILDERSLEEVE et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

S. F. 14055.

Supreme Court of California.

June 15, 1931.

1. Master and servant ⇨385(16).

Employer's tender of medical treatment to injured employee must be unequivocal and one which employee can accept when made (St. 1917, p. 834, § 9 (a), as amended by St. 1925, p. 640, § 1).

2. Master and servant ⇨385(16).

Employer's promise to make tender of medical treatment if and when Accident Commission decided in favor of injured employee held insufficient tender (St. 1917, p. 834, § 9 (a), as amended by St. 1925, p. 640, § 1).

In Bank.

On rehearing.

Award affirmed.

For former opinion, see 295 P. 1033.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner and Edward O. Allen, both of San Francisco, and Wallace Rutherford, of Napa, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

In this case a rehearing was granted to give further consideration to the question whether there had been a valid tender of medical aid to the employee. We are, however, satisfied with our former conclusion, and we adopt and quote from the opinion, 295 P. 1033, originally rendered, as follows:

"This is a petition by an employer and his insurance carrier to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission.

"The respondent O'Neill was employed by petitioner Gildersleeve as a laborer, and while so employed suffered a fractured spine. He received some medical treatment at the camp where he worked, and later was removed by his relatives to Napa. He placed his case in the hands of chiropractors, and received chiropractic treatment at the home of a private nurse. His recovery was only partial.

"Petitioners, the employer and his insurance carrier, instituted proceedings to be relieved of liability for medical expense under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, section 9(a) (St. 1917, p. 836, as amended), claiming that the employee had refused to accept a tender of medical and surgical treatment. The commission found this to be the fact, and made an order absolving petitioners from such liability. A writ of review having been obtained, the District Court of Appeal reversed the order, holding that from the record it appeared that 'no tender of medical or surgical treatment was ever made by either the employer or insurance carrier.' O'Neill v. Industrial Accident Commission, 91 Cal. App. 121, 266 P. 866, 868. New proceedings were then instituted by petitioners before the commission, and new testimony was taken on this issue. The commission concluded that the new evidence did not meet the conditions of a sufficient tender laid down in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, and therefore made an order granting reimbursement to the employee for hospital and nursing expense. The cost of the chiropractic treatments was not included in the award on the ground that they were not proper treatment for the injury. Petitioners then sought a new writ from the District Court of Appeal, which was denied without opinion. Whereupon a hearing in this court was had.

"The holding of the District Court of Appeal was upon the ground that although the record showed some offers of medical attention made to the relatives of the employee, no offer was made to him personally. Petitioners contend that the evidence taken at the second proceeding before the commission established a tender to the employee and a rejection thereof by him."

[1, 2] In the petition for rehearing, it was urged that a later tender met all of the re-

---

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

1 P. (2d)—1

CAL.REP.1-2 P.2d-1

quirements laid down by the District Court of Appeal. This offer, it appears, was made orally at a formal hearing before the commission on October 13, 1927, and confirmed by a letter dated October 18, 1927, addressed to counsel for the injured employee. The letter reads, in part, as follows: "Referring to the proceedings now pending before the Industrial Accident Commission, we understand that Dr. S. J. Hunkin, whose services we offered during the hearing, is in Europe. We are therefore listing a panel of three other surgeons in accordance with the Workmen's Compensation & Safety Act, one of which the injured may select in the event that it is found reasonable by the Industrial Accident Commission that applicant should be sent to San Francisco for medical and hospital treatment. * * *" The commission was apparently of the opinion that this tender was unsatisfactory, for the reasons, first, that it was not directed to the employee himself; and, second, that it was made contingent upon a determination by the commission in the employee's favor. We think this last point is sound. The tender (St. 1917, p. 834, § 9(a) as amended by St. 1925, p. 640, § 1), must be unequivocal; it must be an offer which the employee could and should accept, when made. The particular tender relied upon is really not a tender at all, but a promise to make a tender if and when the commission decides in favor of the employee. If he had accepted it when it was made, he would not have received medical treatment at all, but would have been forced to await the termination of the proceedings before the commission. Under these circumstances, the commission concluded that the failure to accept this tender was not unreasonable, and we are satisfied that this conclusion finds support in the record.

The award is affirmed.

213 Cal. 81

IRVING v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 12673.

Supreme Court of California.

June 30, 1931.

1. Attorney and client ☞53(2).

Finding that attorney violated rule prohibiting attorney from sharing with unlicensed person compensation arising out of professional employment held supported (Rules of Professional Conduct No. 3; Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 4).

2. Attorney and client ☞52.

Disbarment proceeding initiated by notice to show cause held to give State Bar and court jurisdiction.

3. Attorney and client ☞54.

Finding that attorney violated rule and statute could not be sustained, where complaint charged no violation thereof, and no amendments were made, although at conclusion of hearing leave to amend was given (Rules of Professional Conduct No. 10; Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subds. 3, 4).

4. Attorney and client ☞58.

That attorney shared with unlicensed person compensation arising out of professional employment justified attorney's suspension for one year (Rules of Professional Conduct No. 3; Code Civ. Proc. § 287, subd. 4).

In Bank.

Disbarment proceedings against Bert L. Irving.

On application by Bert L. Irving to review a recommendation of the board of governors of the State Bar of California that petitioner be suspended for one year.

Suspension sustained.

Will H. Anderson and Edward J. Cotter, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

P. E. Keeler, of Los Angeles (Philbrick McCoy, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a proceeding to review an order of the board of governors of the State Bar of California recommending that the petitioner be suspended from the practice of law in this state for a period of one year.

The evidence upon which the sentence of suspension was based is similar to that in Howe v. State Bar of California (Cal. Sup.) 298 P. 25, decided April 1 of this year, in which the recommendation that Howe be suspended for a period of two years was followed by this court. Both Howe and petitioner were connected with the West Coast Claims Bureau, under which fictitious name one M. B. Rose conducted a business for the settlement of claims for personal injuries on behalf of injured persons against defendants who carried liability insurance, which practice is commonly known as "ambulance chasing." Howe was connected with the San Francisco branch of the bureau; petitioner with the Los Angeles office. Petitioner testified to receiving a percentage of the fee paid the bureau in some cases, while Howe stated upon his hearing that he was always paid a fixed sum for his services. Petitioner's connection with the bureau began in June, 1928, and continued to the time the present charges were filed against him in January, 1930. During that time petitioner was employed by the bureau in the majority of, if not in all, cases in the Los Angeles office in which the owner of the bureau deemed the services of an attorney necessary. For a complete statement of the agency's method of doing business and the capacity in which petitioner and Howe were employed by it, reference is hereby made to the statement of facts in the Howe Case, which we deem it unnecessary to repeat in the case herein.

On January 27, 1930, four verified complaints were filed against petitioner by the Los Angeles Bar Association, each charging a violation of rule III of the Rules of Professional Conduct adopted by the State Bar in regard to four separate claims for personal injuries. At the conclusion of the hearings held upon said complaints, the committee granted permission to its examiner to amend said complaints to conform to proof by charging that petitioner's conduct also violated rule X of the Rules of Professional Conduct and subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 287, Code of Civil Procedure, but the amendments were never made.

On May 13, 1930, after the hearings on the four complaints had been concluded, a notice to show cause was issued by the local administrative committee which charged petitioner with violations of rules II, III, and X of the Rules of Professional Conduct, and subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 287, Code of Civil Procedure, in connection with 162 cases, naming them, filed by petitioner in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles. Said proceeding was consolidated by stipulation and order with the proceedings initiated by the four complaints previously filed. No additional evidence was taken, but it was stipulated that all but two of the cases listed in the said notice arose out of the activities of M. B. Rose and his associates and were solicited cases, and were handled by the accused as attorney for the plaintiff because of his arrangements to that end with said M. B. Rose.

The local committee concluded that petitioner was guilty of violations of rules III and X and subdivision 4 of section 287, Code of Civil Procedure, in all proceedings and guilty of violations of subdivision 3 of said section in two of the proceedings initiated by complaint and in the proceeding commenced by the notice to show cause. It recommended disbarment. The board of governors of the State Bar adopted the findings of the local administrative committee except the finding that the accused employed other persons to solicit professional employment for him, and recommended suspension for one year.

[1] Petitioner urges the same reasons for the invalidity of his sentence of suspension as were urged in the Howe Case, supra. One of the attorneys for petitioner herein appeared on behalf of Howe, and the briefs in the two cases are largely counterparts so far as the argument on questions of law is concerned. By the decision in the Howe Case it is settled that rule III is constitutional, and that petitioner's conduct violated subdivision 4, section 287, Code of Civil Procedure, and that part of rule III which provides that no member of the bar shall directly or indirectly "share with an unlicensed person compensation arising out of or incidental to professional employment, nor shall he directly or indirectly aid or abet an unlicensed person to practice law or to receive compensation therefrom; nor shall he knowingly accept professional employment on behalf of a claimant in a personal injury or death case offered to him as a result of or as an incident to the activities of an unlicensed person who for compensation controls, directs or influences such employment." See, also, Smith v. The State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 294 P. 1057; Shaw v. The State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 297 P. 532; Smallberg v. The State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 297 P. 916. To here repeat our reasoning in the Howe Case and other cited cases would serve no purpose. The stipulation made in the case initiated by notice to show cause will sustain the finding as to a violation of said rule in that case.

[2] Petitioner's objection that neither the State Bar nor this court had jurisdiction of the proceeding initiated by the notice to show cause is answered by In re Herron (Cal. Sup.) 298 P. 474.

[3] The finding that petitioner violated rule X and subdivisions 3 and 4, section 287, Code of Civil Procedure, cannot be sustained in the proceedings initiated by verified complaints for the reason that said complaints charge only a violation of rule III. Although the committee's examiner, at the conclusion of the hearings, secured leave to amend to conform to proof, no amendments in fact were made, and the findings must rest on the charges filed. In the proceeding commenced by notice to show cause, a violation of rule X is charged, but the finding as to said violation cannot be sustained for the reason that the stipulation made is not broad enough, in the absence of other evidence, to support such a finding. We are further of the view that petitioner cannot be said to have violated said rule in those cases where the complaint in the personal injury suit was signed and verified in his presence and he was expressly or impliedly directed to file it.

[4] Petitioner's violation of rule III justifies the sentence of suspension for one year. This is the period for which the petitioners were suspended for similar infractions in Shaw v. The State Bar, supra, and Smallberg v. The State Bar, supra. In the Howe Case petitioner was suspended for two years, but he was shown to have been lacking in good faith in falsely representing that he had severed his connection with the claims bureau upon the filing of charges against him, when in fact he went from the San Francisco office to the Los Angeles office and there continued his operations.

It is therefore ordered that petitioner be suspended from practice as an attorney and counselor at law of this state for a period of one year from and after the filing of this order.

213 Cal. 58

PACIFIC STATES CORPORATION v. PAN-AMERICAN BANK OF CALIFORNIA

et al.*

L. A. 12433.

Supreme Court of California.

June 30, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1931.

1. Action ☞6.

Complaint seeking declaratory judgment determining rights of parties under lease held to state cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

Complaint alleged that plaintiff leased premises to bank; that lessee installed valuable fixtures in premises and was in default under terms of lease; that superintendent of bank assumed possession of property and was liquidating bank; that, under lease, personal property therein was required to be kept and maintained in leased premises; that defendants claimed right to remove property and dispose of same and threatened to remove property, by reason of which actual controversy has arisen between parties relating to rights with reference to lease, and prayed for judgment determining rights and duties of parties under lease.

2. Action ☞6.

Complaint for declaratory judgment is sufficient if alleging facts showing actual controversy relating to rights and duties under written instrument and request that rights be adjudged (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

3. Landlord and tenant ☞246(1).

Lien to landlord on fixtures and personalty on leased premises is valid as between parties and all persons knowing thereof (Civ. Code, § 2973).

4. Action ☞6.

In action for declaratory judgment determining rights under lease, allegation that plaintiff gave notice necessary under lease before termination thereof held not necessary to statement of cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1060, provided that construction of written instrument or adjudication of rights and duties of parties thereunder may be had in cases of actual controversy or disagreement before there has been any breach of obligation in respect to which declaration is sought.

5. Action ☞6.

Plaintiff suing for declaratory relief need not allege facts showing adverse party has breached terms of written instrument (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action for declaratory judgment by the Pacific States Corporation against the Pan-American Bank of California and others. From a judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed, with direction to overrule demurrer.

Superseding opinion in 298 P. 155. See, also, 290 P. 609.

Robert Brennan, of Los Angeles, and Russell & Heid, of Tulare, for appellant.

Alf. L. Armstrong, Louis W. Myers, and O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, all of Los Angeles, Elbert W. Davis, J. H. Hoffman, and Albert A. Rosenshine, all of San Francisco, and Chandler, Wright & Ward, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

Plaintiff has prosecuted this appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered upon the sustaining of a general demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend. The action was brought under section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure to obtain a declaratory judgment determining the rights of the parties under a certain leasehold agreement, and more specifically in and to certain fixtures, furniture, safe deposit boxes, chattels, and other property of a personal nature located in and upon the leasehold premises. As ancillary to such declaratory judgment, the plaintiff prays that defendants be enjoined from removing, as they threaten to do, any portion of said property from the premises. So far as pertinent here, section 1060, supra, provides that any person interested under a deed, will, or other written instrument, or under a contract, or who desires a declaration of his rights or duties with respect to another, or in respect to, in, over, or upon property, may, in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, bring an action for a declaration of his rights and duties in the premises, including a determination of any question of construction or validity arising under such instrument or contract. The section further provides that such a declaration of rights and duties may be requested either alone or with other relief and may be had "before there has been any breach of the obligation in respect to which said declaration is sought."

☞For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*For opinion denying rehearing, see 1 P.(2d) 931.

The complaint alleges, in substance, that on or about December 30, 1926, plaintiff and the defendant Pan-American Bank of California, hereinafter referred to as the bank, entered into a written contract of lease under the terms of which plaintiff let and demised to the bank for banking and office purposes certain real property in the city of Los Angeles; that the lessee has since installed in the premises a large amount of valuable fixtures, furniture, safe-deposit boxes, chattels, and personal property; that the lessee is in default, under the terms of the lease, by reason of its failure to pay and discharge, as provided therein, all taxes and charges levied and assessed against the property in excess of $25,000 per annum, and also by reason of its failure to pay certain electrical bills; that the defendants Rosenshine and Ewing, as superintendent and special deputy superintendent of banks, have assumed control and taken possession of the property and business of the bank for the purpose of liquidating the bank and converting its assets into cash; that under and by virtue of the terms, covenants, and conditions of the lease, all of said fixtures, furniture, safe deposit boxes, chattels, and personal property are required to be kept and maintained in the leased premises and are not to be removed therefrom; that the defendants claim and contend they have the right to remove said property from the leased premises and to dispose of the same, and that they have threatened to and will, unless restrained, remove and dispose of such property; and that, by reason of the foregoing facts, an actual controversy has arisen between plaintiff and defendants relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties with reference to the lease and the described property. The complaint concludes with a prayer for judgment declaring and determining the rights and duties of the parties with respect to each other under the lease and with respect to the fixtures, furniture, safe deposit boxes, chattels, and personal property. It is also prayed that it be declared and adjudged that all of said property be kept and maintained in the leased premises, that plaintiff has a lien thereon, and that defendants be enjoined from removing any portion of the same.

The lease, a copy of which is attached to and made a part of the complaint, contains many provisions having to do with the property and fixtures referred to in the complaint. They read, in part:

"Fifth: * * * that all alterations, additions and improvements made in or to the premises shall, unless otherwise provided by written agreement or by the terms hereof, be the property of lessor and remain and be surrendered with the premises, and lessee hereby waives * * * all claims for damages to or loss of any property belonging to the lessee that may be in or upon the premises. * * *

"Eleventh: Upon any termination of this lease, or any renewal thereof without fault or default upon the part of the lessee, but not otherwise, the lessee may remove all furniture and fixtures installed by it in the demised premises, provided, however, that it must totally restore and refinish the portions of said premises occupied or used for said furniture and fixtures to the same condition as they were previous to the installation of such furniture and fixtures.

"All of the improvements by lessee in the demised premises shall at the termination of this lease be and become the property of the lessor. Lessee hereby gives and grants to lessor a lien upon, and hereby hypothecates to lessor, all fixtures, chattels and personal property of every kind and description now or hereafter to be placed or installed in said premises and agrees that in the event of any failure on the part of the lessee to comply with each and every of the covenants and obligations hereof, or in the event of any default continuing for three (3) days after notice of default as hereinafter provided for in the payment promptly when due of any rents herein specified, lessor may take possession of and may sell the same in any manner provided by law and may credit the net proceeds upon any indebtedness due, or damage sustained by lessor without prejudice to further claims thereafter to arise under the terms hereof. * * *

"Thirteenth: Lessee hereby agrees not to remove any fixtures from said leased premises during the term hereof, without the written consent of lessor first had, and further agrees that when said premises are surrendered to lessor, all injury and damage of any kind done to said leased premises or any portion thereof, or any additions, fixtures and appurtenances therein shall, if desired by lessor, be repaired by lessor, and the amount expended therefor shall be paid by lessee to lessor upon demand, reasonable wear and tear excepted. * * *

"Sixteenth: It is hereby covenanted and agreed that if lessee shall fail to comply with any of the covenants, terms or conditions of this lease or any notice given hereunder, or if it shall remove or manifest an intention of removing its furniture and fixtures, or any of them, from the leased premises while in arrears as to the payment of rent, or shall become insolvent, or shall make an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or if any of its property be attached and said attachment not promptly released, or if an execution be issued against it, or, if a petition be filed by or against it, to have it adjudicated a bankrupt, or if a trustee or receiver shall be created or appointed to take charge of its assets, or if it shall desert or abandon the leased premises for a period of twenty-four hours, then or at any time thereafter the lessor may at its option enter into said demised premises and remove any and all persons therefrom and take and retain possession thereof either with or without process of law. * * *

"Eighteenth: It is expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that if the rent herein reserved and agreed to be paid, or any part thereof, shall be unpaid on the day of payment whereon the same ought to have been paid, and for three days thereafter, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants or agreements herein contained, or if lessee shall become insolvent or make an assignment for the benefit of its creditors or shall be adjudicated a bankrupt, or a receiver or trustee appointed by lessee, or if lessee shall violate any of the terms of this agreement, it shall and may be lawful for lessor, its agent, attorney or assigns at its or their election to declare said term ended, and enter into said demised premises or any part thereof, either with or without process of law, and the lessee or any other person or persons occupying or being in or upon the same, to expel, remove and put out, together with the goods and chattels found therein, or to take possession of said goods and chattels or any part thereof as security as herein provided, * * * and lessee, except as to the written notices herein expressly provided for, hereby waives all right to any notice from said lessor of its election to declare this lease at an end under any of the provisions, or any demand for the payment of rent, or for possession of the demised premises. * * *

[1-3] It is readily apparent that there is ample room for an attempted construction and reconciliation of these several provisions and an adjudication of the rights and duties of the parties thereunder. While the complaint in this action may not be a model pleading, we are of the view that the court below erred in sustaining a general demurrer thereto without leave to amend. As we understand section 1060, supra, it is sufficient if a plaintiff allege facts showing the existence of an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties under a written instrument and request that these rights and duties be adjudged by the court. Oldham v. Moodie, 94 Cal. App. 88, 89, 270 P. 688. In opposition to this conclusion, and in support of the judgment on demurrer, respondents' principal claim is that the appellant is not entitled to any relief under the facts stated in the complaint because the provision of the lease purporting to create a lien in the lessor upon the fixtures and personal property referred to in the complaint is asserted to be insufficient for that purpose, in that no valid lien independent of possession can be created upon personal property except by way of chattel mortgage. We do not find it necessary to determine this point on this appeal, for the reason that all that this court now has before it is the complaint and demurrer. There can be no doubt, of course, that such a lien is valid as between the parties and valid against all persons who, before parting with value, had actual knowledge thereof (Civ. Code, § 2973), and whether the creditors represented by the superintendent of banks come within this category can only be made to appear by answer. Moreover, appellant not only asks for an adjudication of its rights under the lien provision, but requests that the respective rights of the parties be adjudged and determined under the several other provisions of the lease dealing with the fixtures and personal property installed by the lessee in the leasehold premises. By way of illustration, the fifth and eleventh clauses of the lease provide that all alterations, additions, and improvements made in or to the leased premises shall at the termination of the lease become the property of the lessor, and by the thirteenth clause of the agreement the lessee agrees not to remove any fixtures without the written consent of the lessor. In the sixth paragraph of the complaint the appellant alleges that all of the fixtures, furniture, safe deposit boxes, chattels, etc., added to or installed in the demised premises, are required to be there maintained, while the respondents claim the right to remove them. In the absence of an adjudication of the rights of the parties with respect thereto, it cannot be definitely determined which fixtures the lessee, or those claiming under it, may remove without doing violence to the provisions of the lease. The allegations of the complaint are sufficiently broad to require a determination of the rights and duties of the parties at least in this particular. Moreover, by the terms of the sixteenth and eighteenth clauses of the lease it is provided that, in the event the lessee shall become insolvent or make an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or shall be adjudicated a bankrupt, or a receiver or trustee shall be appointed for it, the lessor may declare the term ended, enter the demised premises, and take possession of the furniture and fixtures. We are of the opinion, in view of the liquidation proceedings and in the face of respondents' threat to remove said fixtures and furniture, that the complaint is sufficiently broad to warrant an adjudication and determination of the appellant's rights under these clauses.

[4, 5] Assuming, as respondents urge, that appellant has failed to allege the giving of the notice necessary under paragraph 15 of the lease to work a termination thereof, and that such an allegation is essential to the statement of a cause of action, section 1060, supra, as already shown, expressly provides that the construction of a written instrument or the adjudication of the rights and duties of the parties thereunder may be had in cases of actual controversy or disagreement "before there has been any breach of the obligation in respect to which said declaration is sought." This being so, it is unnecessary, in an action for declaratory relief, that the plaintiff allege facts showing that the adversary party has violated or breached the terms of the written instrument. In conclusion, it might be said that appellant is not foreclosed, as respondents contend, from now urging any of the above points, for our only consideration on this appeal is whether the court below erred, and we believe it did, when it sustained the general demurrer without leave to amend.

The judgment must be, and it is hereby, reversed, with direction to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

Glenn M. DeVore, Dist. Atty., and C. T. Walton, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Fresno, U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PRESTON, J.

In this cause defendant, charged by information with the crime of murder, pleaded not guilty, and also not guilty by reason of insanity. Trial was had upon the question of his guilt, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty without recommendation. His plea of not guilty by reason of insanity was thereupon withdrawn. Judgment of conviction imposing the death penalty followed, and from said judgment and the order denying his motion for new trial defendant now appeals upon the ground that the court erred in permitting the admission of certain evidence, in allowing an interpreter for witness Emoto, and in refusing to give to the jury certain requested instructions.

We find the record to be free from prejudicial error; hence but a brief statement is necessary. There is no question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and judgment. In July, 1929, appellant, a twenty-four year old Filipino, and the deceased, an eighteen year old American girl, ran away and were married without the consent of the girl's parents. Appellant secured employment on a ranch in Fresno county, picking grapes and doing other labor, superintended by Roy Emoto. His wife, after returning to her parents for some six months, rejoined appellant in the spring of 1930, and thereafter, early in June, gave birth to a child. After her confinement in the hospital she convalesced about six days at the home of said Emoto under care of his wife. She then returned with her baby to appellant's house.

On the evening of July 2, 1930, after a quarrel, appellant took a butcher knife, stabbed her with it as she lay in bed, and killed her, also cutting his own body in several places in an alleged effort to destroy himself. The motive actuating the crime is shown by conflicting evidence. Some witnesses testified that appellant said he killed his wife because she was about to leave him and because of dissension between them, and a letter was admitted in evidence, written by the deceased on the day in question to her mother, stating that she was nervous and torn up, and asking her mother to send her money for her fare home. There was also testimony that the deceased had tried to get away, but that appellant had found her each time and induced her to stay with him. Appellant's final explanation, however, was that he caught said Emoto and his wife in the act of having illicit relations on the evening in question, and that, while still emotionally aroused over the situ-

213 Cal. 65

PEOPLE v. LACANG.
Cr. 3417.

Supreme Court of California.
June 30, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1931.

I. Criminal law ☞1169(9).

In murder prosecution, permitting physician to give opinion that wounds were not self-inflicted, if error, held harmless, where defendant admitted he inflicted death wounds.

2. Criminal law ☞1169(2).

In wife murder case, admitting evidence regarding conversations witness had with deceased and with defendant, showing motive, held not prejudicial, in view of unequivocal evidence of defendant's guilt.

3. Witnesses ☞230.

Permitting witness to testify through interpreter held matter within discretion of trial court.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; T. R. Thomson, Judge.

Tresco Lacang was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

John F. O'Sullivan, of Fresno, for appellant.

ation and his suspicions of past indiscretions on the part of his wife with other Filipinos, he killed her. Witness Emoto denied intimacy or improper conduct with the deceased, stating that his presence on the premises was to see that she was not annoyed by a Filipino boy whom she feared. Witness Dr. Sciaroni testified that the physical condition of the deceased, due to recent childbirth, was such that sexual intercourse would probably have been prohibited. There is also other evidence tending to show that appellant's suspicion of improper relations between the deceased and Emoto was unfounded.

After committing the crime appellant called at the house of a neighbor, told what he had done, and asked that the sheriff be called. Later, when in custody, appellant again freely admitted the crime and gave a detailed account of his actions to the sheriff and other officers and to the doctor who treated him. He gave like testimony upon the trial.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that the court erred in permitting Dr. Sciaroni, who performed an autopsy on the body of the deceased, to testify that the death wounds were so placed that in his opinion they could not have been self-inflicted. Appellant argues that this expert testimony was inadmissible because it expressed a conclusion upon a subject within the common knowledge and observation of the jurors, who had before them photographs of the body of deceased, showing the position of the wounds and the position in which deceased and the said knife were found after the killing; hence they did not need the assistance of an expert to aid them in determining whether said wounds could have been self-inflicted. Without passing upon the question of admissibility of this evidence, it is enough to say that obviously appellant's cause was not prejudiced in any way by it, for the jurors knew that appellant himself inflicted the death wounds. Appellant admitted it many times and testified to it in detail. No doubt whatsoever remained as to the manner in which the death occurred.

[2] Appellant next contends that the court erred in permitting Roy Emoto to testify as to various conversations had by him with the deceased and with appellant, upon the ground that they were hearsay, formed no part of the principal transaction, and may have led the jury to believe that appellant killed his wife solely because she was going to leave him. This contention is without merit, as the statements complained of were practically all made in the presence of appellant himself at a time immediately preceding the killing and they bore witness to the existence of dissension between appellant and the deceased and to the motive which led to commission of the crime. Furthermore, if the admission of any of this testimony did constitute error, we would be constrained to hold that such error was not prejudicial in view of the unequivocal evidence of appellant's guilt. The latter statement applies also to appellant's contention that the court erred in admitting in evidence the above-mentioned letter written by the deceased on the day of the crime to her mother.

[3] It is equally clear that there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in permitting witness Emoto to testify through an interpreter. His examination was commenced without an interpreter, and, though he understood English to quite an extent, it soon became apparent that the calling of an interpreter would facilitate matters, as it later proved. This was a matter within the discretion of the trial court, and to our mind the record shows that here there was a wise use rather than an abuse of such discretion.

We likewise find no error in refusing certain instructions offered by appellant. Without setting them forth we will state that it is questionable whether they contained a correct statement of the law on the subject of the establishment of the corpus delicti prior to consideration of a confession by the accused. The charge as given by the court contained ample instructions on all matters necessary to a proper determination of the cause.

With greatest care we have examined all the contentions of appellant, but find the record to be free from prejudicial error of any character.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.

213 Cal. 21

BERNSTEIN v. SIROTTA.

L. A. 11162.

Supreme Court of California.

June 24, 1931.

I. Master and servant ⇨70(3).

Under two-year employment contract entitling employee to share profits, percentage of losses for second year held not deductible from percentage of profits for first year.

Employment contract provided in substance that during two-year period employee was to receive, in addition to monthly compensation, "twenty per cent of the net annual earnings or profits" of the business, and that "when the amount" of the "twenty per cent of the net annual earnings or profits shall have been ascertained, at least three-fourths thereof shall be set aside and remain in said business until the time of the termination of this agreement, at which time it shall be due and payable to the party of the second part"; the other one-fourth being subject to withdrawal at any time at election of employee. During first year there was a profit, but during second year the business was operated at a considerable loss.

2. Joint adventures ⇨1.

Partnership ⇨20.

Contract employing buyer and salesman held not to create partnership or joint adventure so as to render employee liable for proportion of losses.

Contract by its very terms created relationship of employer and employee and merely made provision regarding rights of parties in case they decided to form a partnership. Contract gave employee share in profits as part of compensation.

3. Master and servant ⇨71.

Employee held entitled, upon termination of employment contract, to interest on share of profits left in business, only from date of termination of contract (Civ. Code §§ 3287, 3302).

Employment contract did not expressly provide for payment of interest on share of profits due employee but left in business at time contract was entered into. Provision of contract indicated intention of parties that compensation expressly provided therein was to constitute exclusive consideration for leaving share of profits in business.

4. Master and servant ⇨72½.

Employee under employment contract as buyer and salesman for wholesale business held not required to pay expenses incurred in performing authorized services.

5. Master and servant ⇨72½.

Employee upon termination of employment contract held entitled to recover advances made to employer.

In employee's action upon termination of employment contract, for accounting, contract of employment was alleged and also facts entitling employee to accounting in adjustment of rights under all provisions of contract. It was further alleged that moneys advanced were disbursed for and on behalf of employer's business. Advances were entirely separate and distinct from contract of employment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County: H. S. Gans, Judge

Action by Julius H. Bernstein against Henry N. Sirota. Judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. Pending the appeal the defendant died, and Dorothy Sirota, administratrix of his estate, was substituted as defendant and appellant.

Judgment modified, and as modified affirmed.

Van Lee Hood, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Philip Cohen and Alfred J. Smallberg, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J.

Henry N. Sirota, doing business under the name and style of Queen Ribbon Company, appealed from a judgment for plaintiff, Julius H. Bernstein, in the sum of $2,619.63. Pending said appeal Sirota died, and Dorothy Sirota, administratrix of his estate, has been substituted as defendant and appellant. References hereinafter made to the "defendant" are intended to apply to said Henry Sirota, rather than to the substituted defendant and appellant.

By a contract entered into on January 20, 1926, defendant, the owner of a wholesale business dealing in laces, ribbons, and handkerchiefs, employed plaintiff, who then was and for a long time prior thereto had been in his employ, as a buyer and salesman for an additional period of two years, terminating on December 31, 1927, and plaintiff agreed to accept such employment. By the terms of the agreement plaintiff was to receive as compensation for his services $10,200 in cash, payable in semimonthly installments of $212.50, and, in addition thereto, "twenty per cent of the net annual earnings or profits of the above business, same to be based on a statement of account covering the annual fiscal years of said business beginning January 1st, ending December 31st"; said statement to be made and submitted by a certified accountant not later than January 31st of each year. The paragraph relating to plaintiff's right to a 20 per cent share in the profits further provides: "When the amount of the above said twenty per cent of the net annual earnings or profits shall have been ascertained, at least three-fourths thereof shall be set aside and remain in said business until the time of the termination of this agreement, at which time it shall be due and payable to the party of the second part [plaintiff]. * * * The other one-fourth may, at the election of the party of the second part, be drawn out at any time."

The agreement also recites that in accordance with an accounting had between the parties as of the date thereof, it was agreed between them that there was due plaintiff the sum of $1,000 on account of his share of the profits of the business accumulated prior to December 31, 1925, but that said

$1,000 should remain in the business until the termination of the contract of employment. Should the parties agree to form a partnership, said sum, together with the three-fourths of plaintiff's share of the profits which was not to become due and payable until the termination of the contract of employment, was to be applied by plaintiff as a payment for a one-fourth interest in the business.

In the action herein, brought after the termination of the contract of employment on December 31, 1927, plaintiff sued to obtain an accounting and judgment for his 20 per cent. share of the profits of the business, the amount of which he was unable to ascertain for the reason that defendant had denied him an inspection of the books; to recover the $1,000 due him which was to remain in said business until the termination of the contract, together with interest thereon; and also to recover the sum of $200, which plaintiff alleged he had advanced to defendant for and on behalf of defendant's business at different times and which defendant had agreed to repay. The semimonthly cash payments which plaintiff was to receive under the contract were alleged to have been duly paid to him.

The court found that 20 per cent. of the profits for the year 1926 was $1,648.39; that during the year 1927 the business suffered a loss, but plaintiff was chargeable with no part thereof; that plaintiff was entitled to recover the sum of $200 which he had advanced for and on behalf of defendant's business under an agreement that he should be reimbursed for advances thus made; and that he was entitled to the $1,000 which he had left in the business, with interest in the sum of $183.79. The court further found that of the amount of $1,106.93 which defendant claimed plaintiff had withdrawn and should be charged with, $694.38 represented withdrawals on account of travel and automobile expenses of the business, and only the balance of $412.55 should be charged against plaintiff's personal account. In accordance with said findings, the court entered judgment for $2,619.63, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

[1] As noted above, there was a profit for the year 1926, but in 1927 the business was operated at a loss of over $5,000. Defendant contends that the contract, equitably construed, permits a deduction of the losses for the year 1927 from the profits for the year 1926, and the calculation of plaintiff's 20 per cent. share on the balance of profits thus figured. By estimating plaintiff's share in such a manner defendant would charge him with 20 per cent. of the loss for the year 1927. The court below rejected this interpretation and we cannot disturb its conclusion. Indeed, the provision quoted above is subject to no other possible interpretation than that placed upon it by the court below. The contract provides that plaintiff shall receive "twenty per cent of the net annual earnings or profits, same to be based on a statement of accounting covering the annual fiscal years of said business, beginning January 1st, ending December 31st." This language clearly indicates that plaintiff was to receive 20 per cent. of each year's earnings. The fact that three-fourths of his share was not to become due and payable until the termination of the agreement, does not affect the provision that the amount then to be paid was to be computed on annual earnings. The authorization to plaintiff to withdraw the remaining one-fourth at any time, conclusively shows that the parties did not intend that plaintiff's share should be computed at the end of the two-year period on the profits thereof, since if that were the case it would have been impossible to have ascertained the one-fourth which plaintiff, at his election, was privileged to draw out "at any time."

[2] Neither any one provision, nor the agreement as a whole, can be construed as establishing a relationship of partnership or joint adventure which would render plaintiff liable for any proportion of the losses. By its very terms the contract creates the relationship of employer and employee. Although the parties had in contemplation the formation of a copartnership, in which event plaintiff was to have a one-fourth interest, this was a mere possibility dependent upon their subsequent election and agreement, which never eventuated. This being so, plaintiff was entitled to receive his 20 per cent. as compensation for his services.

[3] The defendant also objects to the allowance to plaintiff of interest on the $1,000 due him on account of his share of the profits of the business prior to December 31, 1925, which was, by the terms of the contract, to remain in the business until the termination of said contract. The court computed interest at the rate of 7 per cent. from the date of the agreement, to wit, January 20, 1926. We are of the view that plaintiff was entitled to interest on said $1,000 only from the date of the termination of the contract of employment, December 31, 1927, rather than from the date of the making of the contract. The contract does not expressly provide for payment of interest on said sum. Considered as a whole, its provisions indicate the intention of the parties that the compensation expressly provided therein for plaintiff was to constitute the exclusive consideration for plaintiff's permitting said $1,000 to remain in the business as well as for his future services. In consideration of defendant's employing him on the terms set forth in the agreement, plaintiff consented to allowing the $1,000 then due him to remain in the business without payment of interest. Interest figured from December 31, 1927, the date payment was due, to September 13, 1928, the date of judgment, is $49.11, or $134.68 less than the sum allowed by the court below. Section 3302 and section 3287, Civ. Code; Puppo v. Larosa, 194 Cal. 717, 230 P. 439.

[4] Defendant further contends that the court erred in adjudging plaintiff entitled to recover the $200 which the court found he had advanced to defendant under an agreement for reimbursement, and in refusing to deduct from the amount of the judgment the sums withdrawn by plaintiff in payment of traveling and automobile expenses, on the ground that the contract sued on contains no provision for such items. Defendant does not contend that the $200 was not advanced or that the traveling expenses were not incurred. Although there is no express provision in regard to the payment of traveling expenses, we think it may fairly be implied from a consideration of the contract as a whole that plaintiff was not required to pay his own expenses incurred in performing authorized services for defendant.

[5] As to the allowance of said $200, plaintiff's right to recovery does not rest upon any provision of the contract of employment, but upon the understanding between the parties that plaintiff should be reimbursed. The pleadings sustain the recovery of this sum. The first count of the complaint sets forth the contract in haec verba and alleges facts which entitled plaintiff to an accounting in the adjustment of the rights of the parties under all provisions of the contract. Said count also contains allegations with reference to the advancement of $200, "disbursed for and on behalf of defendant's business." Plaintiff advanced said sum at different times during his employment for use in defendant's business. Under the circumstances the advancement was not an entirely separate transaction, but so closely related to the employment as to properly form an item in the action for an accounting.

The judgment for $2,619.63 is reduced by $134.68 to $2,484.95 on account of the improper allowance of interest. As thus modified it is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; LANGDON, J.; PRESTON, J.

213 Cal. 86

EDWARDS et ux. v. GULLICK et al.

S. F. 14250.

Supreme Court of California.

July 1, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 31, 1931.

1. Automobiles ☞6.

Statute limiting automobile guest's right of action against host did not affect cause of action existing when statute took effect (St. 1923, p. 517, § 141¾ as added by St. 1929, p. 1580).

2. Appeal and error ☞1066.

Although direct evidence was introduced by automobile guest, suing host, showing cause of collision, giving instruction on res ipsa loquitur doctrine held harmless under circumstances.

Circumstances disclosed that the negligence of the host in swerving from his side of the road to the other side at the time of the collision was clearly established by the evidence, and the instruction required that the doctrine should apply to the host and to him only, if the guest was injured in an accident on account of the manner in which the automobile was operated, thus confining the jury to the operation of the host's automobile, and excluding the operation of the other automobile.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Benjamin Edwards and wife, against C. M. Gullick and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Superseding 295 P. 372.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, CURTIS and LANGDON, JJ., dissenting.

Leo J. McEnerney, of San Francisco, Maurice J. Rankin, of San Jose, and J. B. Peckham, of San Jose, for appellants.

Bohnett, Hill & Campbell and L. H. Schellbach, all of San Jose, for respondents.

PRESTON, J.

This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff Huldah T. Edwards as the result of an automobile accident, which occurred about 8:30 p. m., April 1, 1927, just beyond the point where the Berryessa road intersects the Oakland-San Jose highway at an acute angle.

The night was dark, and the highway was wet and slippery from rain. Said plaintiff and her small daughter, as guests, and Mrs. Gullick, were riding in the rear seat of the closed car which defendant Gullick was driving southerly along said Oakland-San Jose highway. The automobile driven by defendant Murotsune was at the same time proceeding southwesterly along said Berryessa road; he reached the crossing and turned northerly into the highway. The headlights of his car shining on the wet road, or the allegedly wide turn made by him, misled defendant Gullick to believe that he intended to proceed straight across the highway in the path of the approaching Gullick car. At any rate, defendant Gullick, in an attempt to avoid what he thought was an imminent collision, applied his brakes and swung to the left, and the two cars thereupon collided at about the center of the road.

As a result of the collision, plaintiff sustained the severe and permanent injuries for which she seeks to recover by this action. Her complaint alleged and she, throughout the trial, maintained that both said defendants were negligent in the operation of their machines. The evidence in this behalf was not entirely free from conflict. There was evidence that defendant Murotsune may have made so wide a turn into the highway as to mislead defendant Gullick, but there was more persuasive evidence that had defendant Gullick kept to the right, or his own side of the road, instead of turning to the left, and had he driven at a speed enabling him to keep his car more under control in traversing a wet road at night, the collision might have been avoided. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff and against defendant Gullick in the sum of $6,000, and also returned a verdict in favor of defendant Murotsune.

[1] From said judgment defendant Gullick has alone appealed upon the ground of errors in instruction and other alleged prejudicial errors occurring upon the trial. He also contends that plaintiff's cause of action has been abated by section 141¾ of the California Vehicle Act, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580. Said statute, however, is not retroactive, and does not affect causes of action existing on August 14, 1929, the date it took effect. Callet v. Alioto (Cal. Sup.) 290 P. 438.

The various alleged prejudicial errors complained of by appellant, errors in instructions, remarks which the jury was admonished to disregard, made by a juror and by counsel for plaintiffs, have all received consideration. It is our conclusion that none of these matters constitute reversible error nor do they merit detailed discussion.

[2] One of the main points urged by appellant is that the court erred in instructing the jury that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur had application to the facts of this case giving rise to the legal presumption that defendant Gullick was guilty of negligence and shifting the burden of proof to him to meet plaintiffs' prima facie case. Appellant asserts that the giving of this instruction was error and cites Keller v. Cushman, 104 Cal. App. 186, 189, 285 P. 399, and other cases. In that case, no evidence was offered showing in what part of the intersection the collision occurred, nor which of the two entered the intersection first, nor which one had the right of way; no evidence was introduced showing which of the two drivers was at fault; they both admitted that they did not know whose fault it was or how the accident arose. With a record in this state, a refusal to apply the doctrine was proper. But here we have several eyewitnesses to the occurrence, and both plaintiffs and defendants gave in full their versions of the happenings which caused the collision. The objection to giving the instruction more properly lies in the fact that direct evidence was introduced by plaintiff showing the cause of the accident. But an examination of the instruction in the light of the evidence shows that its effect was harmless. First, the instruction required that the doctrine should apply to appellant, and to him only, if the plaintiff "was injured in an accident on account of the manner in which such automobile was operated, * * *" thus confining the jury to the operation of appellant's car, and excluding expressly the operation of the other car. In view of this qualification, the instruction did little more than to tell the jury that, if appellant was in fact negligent, they might presume that a prima facie case of negligence had been made out. For if the manner in which one drives a car causes a collision, negligence can hardly be absent. Secondly, we must always keep in mind that the negligence of appellant in swerving from his side of the road to the other at the time of the collision was clearly established by the evidence. No miscarriage of justice has resulted.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

213 Cal. 43
NEW YORK INDEMNITY CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.
S. F. 13954.

Supreme Court of California.

June 27, 1931.

Master and servant ☞361.

Newsboy held not "employee" within compensation statute, notwithstanding limited control which newspaper publishers undertook to exercise (Civ. Code, § 2009; St. 1917, p. 835, § 8 (a).

The newsboys daily purchased from district manager specified number of copies of daily issue for specific sum payable in cash or at the close of each day's sale, and undertook the retailing of such papers to such customers among the public at large as they were able to attract or procure, at a specified place and price fixed by the publishers.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Employé," see Words and Phrases.]

In Bank.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Claude Eustace, employee, opposed by the Los Angeles Evening Herald and another, employers, and the New York Indemnity Company and Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company, insurance carriers. To review an award of compensation by the Industrial Accident Commission, the insurance carriers bring certiorari.

Award annulled.

Superseding opinion, 294 P. 707.

B. E. Pemberton and Henry G. Sanford, both of San Francisco, for State Compensation Insurance Fund, amicus curiæ.

John Francis Neylan and Grove J. Fink, both of San Francisco, for Examiner Printing Company, amicus curiæ.

E. Herbert Herlihy and F. George Herlihy, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

E. Herbert Herlihy and F. George Herlihy, both of Los Angeles, for New York Indemnity Corporation and Federal Mutual Liability Ins. Co.

Flint & MacKay, H. S. MacKay and Edward L. Compton, all of Los Angeles (E. Herbert Herlihy and Edward L. Compton, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for Evening Herald Pub. Co.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondent.

Lawler & Degnan, Alexander T. Sokolow, and John M. Hall, all of Los Angeles (John M. Hall, of Los Angeles, of counsel), amici curiæ and attorneys for Los Angeles Examiner.

PER CURIAM.

A rehearing was granted in this proceeding after decision by this court affirming the award of the Industrial Accident Commission, in order to devote further consideration to the somewhat novel question presented herein, in view of the very earnest and able briefs and argument of counsel for both parties and of the several amici curiæ, discussing pro and con the issues involved in this inquiry. The original applicant for an award before the Industrial Accident Commission was one Claude Eustace who, while of the age of thirty-four years, was within the numerous class known as "newsboys," and who at the time he received the injuries for which he sought compensation was engaged in selling the daily issues of the Los Angeles Evening Herald and of the Los Angeles Record upon the streets of the city of Los Angeles. He was injured while in the act of selling one or other of the instant issues of said newspapers to a passing customer in an automobile, having run out into the street for the purpose of making such sale, where he was struck and injured by another passing machine. The facts with reference to said injuries and with reference to the calling in which he was engaged at the time thereof and to the relation which he bore in the course of said calling to the publishers respectively of said newspapers were practically undisputed. The sole question presented to the Industrial Accident Commission and to this court is the question of law as to whether, by virtue of his said relation to them and each of them, he came within the category of a compensable employee within the meaning and intent of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, so as to be entitled to an award for his injuries, or whether at the time thereof he occupied the relation of or analogous to that of an independent contractor in the vending of said newspapers so as not to be entitled to an award under the provisions of said act. The preliminary facts may be briefly stated. Eustace had for some time prior to his injuries been accustomed to have delivered to him from a district manager, acting as the representative of both publishing companies in the daily distribution of their respective issues to the newsboys within the district of which he was in charge, the newspapers of said companies. As to the Herald each of these newsboys, including the applicant, paid 2 cents each for the daily issues of said newspapers, said payments to be made either at the time of receiving the specified number of papers, or at the close of the sales for the day. Eustace was accustomed to take 130 Heralds for each day. Any unsold portion thereof was not returnable. As to the Record, Eustace received as few or as many as he ordered, at the above price, and credit was given to him for returned copies thereof. The daily relations between Eustace and the publishers were created through his contact with the district manager. He was not upon the pay roll of either publisher and received no salary or compensation directly from either. His daily profits, if any, consisted in the difference between the price paid or to be paid by him for the papers received and the price at which he was permitted by the publishers to sell the same to the purchasing public. There was some dispute in the evidence as to just what amount of control or regulation was exercised over newsboys by the district manager; but the evidence in that regard seems to go no further than the following extent, to wit: That certain specified corners or places upon the public streets were allotted, when unoccupied, to particular newsboys applying for the same, who received instructions from the district manager not to intrude upon or interfere with the corner or place allotted to another. Each particular newsboy was expected and in fact required to be active and vigilant in making sales of a prescribed minimum number of each of said newspapers at or near his designated place; in short, to be a "hustler" in making sales. Otherwise his allotted place or corner would be given to another newsboy and he would be refused further copies by the district manager. The latter testified that one of his duties as such district manager in the employ of both publishers was to maintain a status of peace and harmony among the newsboys, and to so far supervise their daily conduct in the territory covered by his district as to promote the sale of the largest possible number of copies of each of said newspapers within the said district.

The sole question presented to the commission for its determination in making or in refusing to make an award to Eustace, and presented for our consideration in reviewing the award which the commission made, and in determining whether or not, in view of the practically undisputed facts, the commission had jurisdiction to make such award, was and is as to whether upon the facts above set forth it could be legally determined that Eustace at the time of his injuries occupied the relation of an employee of said newspaper publishers, respectively, and of their and each of their insurers, so as to render him entitled to compensation in his proceeding before the Industrial Accident Commission.

It cannot, we think, be seriously contended upon the basis of the foregoing undisputed facts that the relation of master and servant existed between Eustace and the publishers of said newspapers as that relation is defined and limited by the provisions of section 2009 of the Civil Code of California, which provides that: "A servant is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter who is called his master." Nor do we think that, eliminating for the moment the question of control, it can be fairly concluded that under the provisions of section 8(a) of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 835), giving it its most liberal interpretation, Eustace could be held to have become and been at the time of his injuries an employee of said newspaper publishers. Section 8(a) of said act provides: "The term 'employee' as used in section six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act shall be construed to mean: Every person in the service of an employer as defined by section seven hereof under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written." The undisputed evidence discloses that aside from the question of control the relation created by the daily series of contacts between Eustace and the newspaper publishers, through their legal representative, the district manager, while somewhat difficult of definition as that of an independent contractor, was more nearly allied to the relation of a sales agent, under the authorities to which we have been cited, than to that of an employee and employer as these terms are defined in the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act. See Piper v. Oakland Motor Co., 94 Vt. 211, 109 A. 911; Poirier Mfg. Co. v. Kitts, 18 N. D. 556, 120 N. W. 558; Sinnett v. Watkins, 214 Ky. 76, 282 S. W. 769. Nor do we think that there is a sufficient analogy between the facts involved in this proceeding and those existing in the case of Globe Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 208 Cal. 715, 284 P. 661, to justify its application to the case at bar, since in that case the evidence showed that an express relation of agency for the distribution of the daily issues of the Oakland Tribune to its subscribers in San Rafael existed between the applicant for an award and the publishers of said newspaper, in pursuance of which the applicant not only received a percentage of the monthly price which the subscribers paid, but was also paid a regular sum in addition thereto to cover the cost of distribution in outlying territory. The evidence in that case disclosed that the relationship thus created was that of a month to month relationship rather than a daily renewed situation such as existed in the instant case, and with a much larger degree of control than that which is presented in the instant proceeding. A somewhat similar situation was presented to the Industrial Accident Commission in the matter of Servel v. Chronicle Publishing Co., 6 I. A. C. 23, wherein it appeared that the newsboy selling papers for the San Francisco Chronicle, in addition to a profit of 2½ cents received by him upon the sale of each copy of said newspaper, was paid the sum of $2.50 weekly by the publishers thereof for selling their newspaper exclusively upon a definite corner, the commission in that proceeding held that "except for the payment for 'hustling' applicant was on the same footing as any other vendor of merchandise who buys goods to sell for profit and who assumes the risk of loss, and therefore in this respect was an independent contractor and not an employee; but that inasmuch as the defendant had paid him a definite sum for securing his exclusive services each morning, the arrangement constituted a contract of hire, and therefore the applicant should be considered as an employee in respect to any injury which might occur while selling defendant's papers." This case, while in no sense binding upon this court, is persuasive with relation to what the previous attitude of the Industrial Accident Commission for the last ten years or more has been with regard to what may be described as "newsboy cases."

We are thus brought to what we deem to be the essential inquiry in the instant proceeding, which is as to whether the nature and degree of control exercised by the publishers of the two newspapers involved in this proceeding, through their district manager, was such as would suffice to justify the finding of the commission to the effect that newsboys, by virtue of such control, stood in the relation of employees of the publishers of said newspapers, and as such have a compensable claim for an award arising out of injuries received in the distribution to the public at large of their daily product. In the case of Hillen v. Industrial Accident Commission, 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570, it was held by this court that the essential test by which to determine whether in doubtful cases the relation between a workman and those for whom he was rendering service was that of an employee or of an independent contractor, was not so much dependent upon whether he received wages or whether he was to devote all or a portion of his time to the performance of his specified service, but was rather dependent upon the extent of control or right of control which the so-called employer was to exercise over its so-called employee. When we undertake to apply the reasoning of that case to the admitted facts of the instant proceeding, we are constrained to hold that the limited amount of control which the publishers of these two newspapers undertook to exercise over the newsboys, including Eustace, who daily purchased from their district manager a specified number of copies of their daily issues for a specific sum, payable in cash or at the close of each day's sales, and who undertook the retailing of the same to such customers among the public at large as they were able to attract or procure at a specified place and price fixed by the publishers, would not as a matter of law be sufficient to constitute such newsboys the employees of the publishers of said newspapers so as to entitle them to receive compensation at the hands of the Industrial Accident Commission in the event of injuries received by them in the course of their activities in making or attempting to make individual sales of the copies of said newspapers. We are satisfied that the finding of the commission upon the undisputed facts presented before it amounted to an erroneous legal conclusion which this court possesses jurisdiction to review.

The petitioners herein, both through their counsel and through the aid of amici curiae, have presented much plausible argument as to the effect of upholding the legal conclusion and award of the commission upon the numerous army of more or less irresponsible persons of immature years, of physical infirmities, and of failures in other vocations, who come at length within the classification of newsboys in the far-flung daily or periodical distribution of newspapers and other periodicals to the public at large. The impossibility in the main of exercising any more than a very limited supervision or control over this promiscuous and ever-changing body of assorted individualities occupied from day to day in the vocation known by the title of "news boys" has been plausibly urged as a reason why the legislature in the adoption and limited application of the Workmen's Compensation Act could not have intended to embrace within its terms this promiscuous and in a sense large irresponsible class of persons, and that to impose upon the publishers of newspapers and other periodicals responsibility for their individual mischances while pursuing such vocation would work disaster to a very large number of persons who now receive a measure of their livelihood in the retailing of newspapers and other publications, but with respect to whom such publishers could not in reason be held to assume the responsibilities arising out of the established relation of employer and employee. While the foregoing course of reasoning could not be held to be conclusive in determining whether or not such a relation in clear cases existed, it is persuasive in such doubtful cases of asserted jurisdiction as those wherein, as in the instant proceeding, the commission has undertaken as a legal conclusion from undisputed facts to make and to uphold an award. We are of the opinion that it fell into error in so doing in the instant case and that as a consequence its award to the original applicant herein should be and the same is hereby annulled.

213 Cal. 89

PEOPLE v. KING.

Cr. 3365.

Supreme Court of California.

July 1, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1931.

1. Homicide ☞253(1).

Evidence conclusively established accused's guilt of first-degree murder.

2. Homicide ☞228(1).

In homicide prosecution, corpus delicti must be proved beyond reasonable doubt.

3. Homicide ☞143.

Prosecution must first produce sufficient evidence of corpus delicti of homicide to send case to jury, and jury is first to be satisfied from evidence that crime has been committed.

4. Homicide ☞228(1).

Evidence supported finding in murder prosecution that crime had been committed.

5. Criminal law ☞778(9).

In murder prosecution, refusal of court to instruct that accused was presumed to have good reputation and character held proper, where accused did not attempt to refute prosecution's evidence impeaching his character.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Harry W. Falk, Judge.

Clarence L. King was convicted of first-degree murder, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Mars F. Morrison, of Eureka, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SEAWELL, J.

This appeal is from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Humboldt imposing the death penalty for the commission of the crime of first-degree murder.

On March 24, 1930, the dead body of Minnie McCoy, a woman twenty-six years of age, was found near the side of the Redwood highway in a mountainous section of this state, by a highway workman, at a point within the county of Humboldt, two and one-half miles south of the Humboldt-Del Norte county line. Death was caused by a pistol bullet which had entered the left side of her head at a point one and one-half inches below the orbit of the left eye, crossed upward and forward and emerged from the right side of the head one inch back of and from one-quarter to one-half inch below the orbit of the right eye. Although the wound was fatal and rendered the victim immediately unconscious, the bullet in its course did not penetrate the brain cells and, according to the autopsy physician, death did not ensue until some time after the mortal wound had been inflicted. Whether the shot that killed Minnie McCoy was fired on February 18, or on February 20, 1930, is a matter of slight dispute, the defendant maintaining at the trial that it was fired on February 18, while several witnesses testified that they saw and talked with the defendant and deceased on February 20 on said highway and in the vicinity where the body of the deceased was found some five weeks after she met her death. By photographs the identity of the deceased was established as the companion of the defendant when she was last seen alive by any person other than the defendant. A Ford coupé was also identified as the conveyance in which defendant and Minnie McCoy were traveling. Other evidence of a convincing effect tends to establish the fact that the deceased was killed on February 20. So far as the proof of guilt against the defendant is concerned, the particular day—whether the shot was fired on the 18th, 19th, or 20th day of February—is of small consequence, as the earlier day at most would only tend, if the shooting occurred on that day, to give slight coloring to defendant's claim that he did not begin to withdraw or prepare to withdraw the funds of the deceased from the several banks wherein she had deposited them until after her death, rather than before her death. There is ample uncontrovertible evidence in the voluminous record which shows beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant began making preparations to possess himself of the property of Minnie McCoy and rid himself of her at or before the time he surreptitiously fled the state with her, and that he had prosecuted with a marked degree of success the execution of his plan when he was arrested upon leaving the United States post office at Portland, Or., March 29, 1930, where he had gone in an effort to consummate, by forged signatures, a plan of withdrawing a pittance of $25.09, which remained on deposit in Minnie McCoy's name with the Missouri Valley Trust Company, located at St. Joseph, Mo. This money had been deposited by the deceased in her home state bank before she had ever seen or known of the existence of defendant. He attempted to gain possession of said funds by resorting to the air mail service, but the officers of said trust company became suspicious that the signatures of the deceased were forgeries and notified the officers of the law of their misgivings and also advised them of their reply by air mail delivery, as requested by the defendant, giving the fictitious name under which he was operating and the day he would call for the letter at the general delivery window. The discovery of the body of the deceased in the Humboldt county woods had been made four days before the appellant appeared at the Portland post office, where he was placed under arrest as above related.

Appellant has given no satisfactory account of himself. He claims that he has no relatives, and that his true name is Clarence L. King, but upon fleeing from this state in February, 1930, he assumed the name Clarence L. McCoy. He has also used the name Maynard. It appears that at one time he enlisted in the United States army from Idaho or Montana and served but one year of his enlistment. The reason of his brief service was kept out of the record by objection of his counsel. He admitted that he was "pinched" at Spokane, Wash., for bootlegging before he met the deceased. At the trial he gave his age as twenty-six years, but in the narrative of his activities there is reason to believe that he may be several years older than his categorical reply would indicate. In his statement made shortly after his arrest he claimed that he had lived practically all his life in California, but from the transcript of testimony it appears that he spent much of his time in the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and other northwestern states. The authentic information concerning the defendant begins early in 1928, at Yuba City, county of Sutter, where he and his companion were apprehended in the act of stealing gasoline at night from a wood and coal yard. During his detention in the Yuba City jail on that charge it developed that he had burglarized a garage located at Marysville, county of Yuba, and had stolen automobile tools and accessories aggregating several hundred dollars in value. Upon being formally charged with the crime of burglary he entered a plea of guilty of burglary in the second degree. Upon serving approximately one year and four months' imprisonment at the San Quentin state prison he was paroled, the terms of his parole being that he was to work in a garage at Marysville and be restricted in the use of automobiles to the district in which he was employed.

The first person upon whom he called upon his release from prison was a woman named Eunice Pardee, with whom he had a pre-prison association and with whom he intermarried at Mrs. Eunice Cooper's residence, located several miles easterly from Corvallis, Or., a few days after Minnie McCoy's death. Mrs. Eunice Cooper was the grandmother of Eunice Pardee, and during the former's quite extended but temporary residence at Sacramento Eunice Pardee resided with her until she returned to her Corvallis home in 1926. During the period of residence at Sacramento defendant was a frequent visitor at the Cooper home. His intimate associate and companion, Charles R. Lee, who figures quite closely with the defendant in his escapades in the Northwest, roomed at the Cooper house. The intimacy which existed between defendant and Eunice Pardee long antedated his acquaintance with the deceased. The latter, who seemed to have been a native of the state of Arkansas, where her mother and family reside, had not lived in California a great while before she met the defendant. He was then a paroled prisoner, working at a garage or automobile repair shop. Minnie McCoy, or Mickey McCoy, as she was also known, was, according to his frequent and too ready imputations, a sporting girl. The evidence shows that she was a very industrious, thrifty, sober young woman, and had formed the habit of saving. Before coming to California she had made deposits and investments in modest amounts in her home state banking and financial institutions and continued to save while in this state, but she did not stint herself as to her personal adornments and necessities. After meeting defendant she negotiated the purchase of a 1929 model Ford coupé on the usual sales contract plan and paid down quite a sum as the first payment. Defendant voluntarily gave her driving lessons and manifested an unusual interest in her personal welfare. According to the statement of the defendant, he, Minnie McCoy, and a man and woman whose names he could not recall, on a night early in June, 1929, drove from Marysville to Sacramento to attend a dance, and during the trip the man, who was driving a new Pontiac coupé, became so badly intoxicated that he could no longer drive, and defendant took the wheel and, after driving an hour, he collided with another car and the four were taken into custody by the law officers.

Defendant, so his story runs, being conscious that he had violated the terms of his parole, and fearing a return to prison as a parole violator, left Marysville with Minnie McCoy the following evening at 9 o'clock in her car, defendant driving, for the purpose of withdrawing himself from the jurisdiction of the state of California. Their journey was a long one, extending through the states of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, and into Utah. They traveled as man and wife from the day of departure in June, 1929, to the day on which deceased was killed, February 20, 1930. Many cities and towns in the above-named states were visited. The defendant claims that they were in search of work, which was difficult to obtain. He claims to have earned a considerable sum during that period as an automobile mechanic. That he worked but little and earned but a small amount of money while he was traveling with Minnie McCoy as her husband is given support even by his own discreditable story, which from beginning to end is a challenge to credulity and is impeached where evidence on the important facts is obtainable, and is discredited by contradictory and conflicting statements made by him in accounting for the death of Minnie McCoy, or else is so inherently improbable and unreasonable as not to be worthy of sober consideration. That she financed him during their nine months' stay in the Northwest is not even doubtful. Some trouble was made the deceased which threatened her ownership of the Ford coupé by forfeiture on account of having removed the same from the state of California without having notified the seller. That this was inspired by the defendant and was a part of his program to gain nominal ownership of the car, which he actually succeeded in doing, by deceit and subterfuge, is in accord with his other acts of obtaining by fraud and forgery everything of value which the deceased possessed. While at Pocatello, Idaho, defendant says that he worked at a garage and Minnie McCoy had rooms in a rooming house where she sold her body to men, while the defendant occupied an adjoining room connected by a door. He repeatedly referred to her in his testimony, with the evident purpose of bemeaning her, as a sporting girl, and volunteered upon several occasions to throw out the suggestion that she had contracted a venereal disease. He claims that she was a sporting girl at Marysville. That she did—certainly with the defendant's procurement and most likely in obedience to his demand—despoil her body for hire is told by the landlady of the house in which the defendant and the deceased lived from October 7, 1929, to February 9, 1930. During these four months the income of the deceased ran as high as $750 per month, and she did not leave the house to exceed six times while she was thus engaged. The landlady testified that she knew that she had in a Pocatello bank several hundred dollars. On February 9, without any previous notice to the landlady, defendant and Minnie McCoy left Pocatello in said automobile, taking with them a steamer trunk, phonograph, oil paintings, a new fur coat of the value of $97, and other personal effects, all the property of said Minnie McCoy, and after visiting with defendant's close friend and companion, Charles R. Lee, at Vancouver, Wash., with whom he had fraternized on two previous occasions while a fugitive in the Northwest, began the journey which led to the death of Minnie McCoy some ten days thereafter. During all the times the defendant was with Minnie McCoy he was secretly corresponding with Eunice Pardee.

It is indeed difficult to follow the defendant in his sinuous narrations of the events preceding the death of Minnie McCoy and the conversations which took place between him and the deceased immediately prior thereto, and the struggle which immediately preceded the firing of the shot by which she was slain. It would seem from a study of his many varying, equivocal and confusing stories that they left Vancouver, Wash., at 9 o'clock a. m. on the day before the homicide and drove a great distance, passing through Grants Pass, Klamath Falls, and Crescent City, and reached the point where the body of the deceased was found between 1 and 2 o'clock a. m. He stated that much of the time on the return trip was spent in registering protests on his part against returning to California, but the deceased insisted upon going to Eureka, Cal., and, although he was in command of the car, he proceeded against his will, bound for Eureka. In his first statement he said that the deceased had been threatening to turn him in as a violator of his parole. She had heard about the Pardee woman. She said if he would take her to the coast she would sign the car over to him and not bother him any more. She also said he was not going to marry any other woman. After leaving Grants Pass she had her gun where she could get her hand on it all the time. In other statements he admitted that he did not see a gun in her possession, but he had a "suspicion" that she had a gun. No credible evidence was introduced which tended to prove that she ever owned or knew how to use a pistol. He stated that they had been arguing all along the line, "when she pulled the gun and said, 'You son of a bitch, I will kill you right here,' and I slammed down on the pedals of the car and I pulled her left arm down with my right arm and swung my left arm around and caught her right arm with my left hand as she pulled the gun to shoot and it went off two or three times. [He afterwards admitted that but one shot was fired.] I shut my eyes when the shooting took place and the first thing I saw when I opened them up she had slumped down in the seat and blood was all over her face, she was bleeding hard. * * * I said, 'Good God, Mick.' By that time the car was stopped and I went around to her side after I got out of the car and I thought she was dead, and then when I got hold of her I knew she was dead and saw she was not breathing. * * *

The car was stopped on the right side of the road headed into California. I just looked around and knew I had to do something and did not want to get caught with that mess on my hands. Then I took her by the legs and the back, her feet were on the running board, then I picked her up and half carried her and half dragged her off the highway about 15 or 20 feet. I remember the place because there was a little hollow place and a log. I hated like hell to leave her like that, but I wanted someone to come along and see her and I thought it was best for her to be left there, as someone would notice her. [The body was dragged from the highway and hidden from the traveled highway by logs, where it remained until it was discovered more than a month thereafter by a highway caretaker who was engaged in cleaning out drainage ditches.] I then went back up to the car and I saw the gun on the floor of the car. I picked the gun up and tossed it upon the shelf back of the seat. I turned around and started back and before I got to the Oregon line a car passed me, but I did not pay any attention to it. After I had driven about 15 or 20 minutes from the body I came to a place where there was some water along the edge of the road and I stopped and cleaned up the mess in the car, as there was some blood in the car and on the running board, there was some blood on the sleeve of my coat, and I washed that off. I cleaned everything up the best I could in the dark, and then I drove north back to Oregon. * * * I had her purse, as it and a watch were in the car, the watch was in the side pocket, as the wrist band was broken, and

I think it is there yet. [The wrist watch was probably torn from her wrist as she recently had been seen wearing it and it was given to Eunice Pardee by defendant soon after he arrived at the Cooper ranch.] The purse was lying upon the back at the time of the shooting and I think that I also have that at home. [The money in the purse, amounting to several dollars, was appropriated by the defendant and the purse was given to Eunice Pardee shortly after his arrival at the Cooper ranch.] I had in the car on my back all of our belongings, a hat box and a grip belonging to her which contained all her belongings."

The defendant then relates driving to the Cooper ranch near Corvallis without stopping except at some small town to eat and meeting Eunice Pardee, whom he told that he had just arrived from Eureka, where he had taken "this girl." He stated that he had told Eunice Pardee in his letters written at Wallace and Pocatello, Idaho, "about this woman Mickey McCoy, but had never told her what she was doing or what the circumstances were." Continuing, he said: "She was so darned glad to see me that she did not say any more about the woman. I knew there was nothing in the grips, that is that would incite her suspicion, and I told her I had a couple of grips that I told this girl [Minnie McCoy] I would take to her mother. Eunice just took it for granted that that was right." Continuing, he stated that he stayed at the Cooper ranch two or three days, went to Portland and rented an apartment under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence King, and then went to Vancouver and from there expressed some used and worthless garments, old shoes and wearing apparel, belonging to Minnie McCoy, to her mother, Mrs. Flora Horn, whose residence was Malburn, Ark., without name or address of consignor, or note of explanation. They then returned to their apartment, and on March 1, 1930, they went to Vancouver and were married.

He further stated that while he and the deceased were together he made deposits of his money in the name of the deceased and made certain payments on her behalf. This contention was made to minimize the forgeries which he committed in drawing her funds from several banks, which will hereafter appear. That he completely dominated Minnie McCoy appears too plain by her submissions to him to require extended discussion. It is in evidence that she received from $700 to $800 per month for the four months she remained at Pocatello, and that she had been otherwise employed during their stay in the Northwest. This alone amounted to a fund of $2,800 to $3,200. The defendant was given sums of money by her to be deposited at the bank. How much he was given is not ascertainable, but several hundred dollars found their way to the bank. He was earning but a small amount compared with what she was receiving from the occupation in which she was engaged at his behest. In his effort to show that he had earned a sufficient sum to meet the expenses of his stay in the Northwest and to account for moneys which he claimed to have advanced on account of Minnie McCoy, upon making the most liberal allowance in his favor, it fell below the necessary figure, and he pieced out the deficiency by saying that he was paid $100 by his friend Lee and won money by gambling with cards. Returning to his said first statement, which he signed, he concluded it as follows:

"While living in Portland with my wife Eunice I had to get the title to the car straightened out and we drove to Boise, Idaho, and went to the License Department in the Capitol Building. I filled in the name of Minnie McCoy on the back of the certificate of title and signed my name transferring the car from Minnie McCoy to myself. In other words, I forged her name.

"The gun or automatic pistol that killed Mickey McCoy is home on the Cooper ranch laying on the side of an old dresser in my wife's and my bedroom. The purse which belonged to Mickey McCoy is still in our room also. I told my wife that it was one of Mickey's old purses. Mickey's wrist watch I think is still in the car at the Cooper ranch. At the time of the shooting we had between us, Mickey McCoy and myself, about $80.00." The defendant's attempt to arm the deceased with the thirty-two Savage automatic pistol with which she was shot to death and which was afterwards found in his possession is too absurd and incongruous to merit the serious consideration of court or jury. We herewith append a portion of his examination by the district attorney of the county of Humboldt, at the county jail, taken some six weeks after the homicide, as a fair sample of his attempt to divert the accusatory facts from himself:

"Q. When you first knew she had a gun on you this side of the checking station and above Klamath, where did she have this gun? A. She was sitting in the seat and had this pistol kind of pulled up around her as I remember the gun was here and she had it covered up with her hand. (Then the witness indicates.)

"Q. How long have you been carrying a gun? A. She had the gun in her possession, presumably in her wraps or purse. I can't say exactly, all the way from Vancouver, because I know she had not been into any of the grips where the guns could possibly have been previous to that time.

"Q. Where did she get the gun? A. That I do not know.

"Q. Did she have the gun when you first met her? A. I never seen the gun.

"Q. When was the first time you ever knew — A. The first time I ever suspicioned was in Pocatello, Idaho, when I seen some .32 calibre bullets in her possession.

"Q. You knew she had a gun? A. I didn't know for sure; I surmised as much, I cannot say.

"Q. You traveled with her and slept with her for a period of several months? A. I can't say I exactly slept with her. I was working daytimes and she was working practically all night. We had separate rooms.

"Q. At the time you were registering— A. At the times we checked into hotels I stayed with her; we checked in as man and wife.

"Q. You were sleeping with her, traveling with her, and didn't know she had a gun? A. The gun was never brought up. * * *

"Q. You got out and ate your supper or dinner at Grants Pass? A. Yes sir.

"Q. And then you didn't know she had that gun until you passed the checking station on the California line and had reached between Crescent City or the checking station and Klamath before you realized she had the gun? A. Yes, sir, that she had it in her immediate possession.

"Q. Just what was it that caused you to realize that she had that gun in her immediate possession? A. It was just sort of a suspicious movement, the way she would hold her hands, move it around in her coat.

"Q. She had been carrying it all the way from Vancouver for a period of 12 or 14 hours? A. she must have had it in her wraps or coat.

"Q. The only wraps was just the coat she was found in? A. Yes.

"Q. She didn't have a holster to carry it? A. It must have been in her purse then; it is the only thing I can recall, I am not sure, I cannot say.

"Q. Did you see her take the gun out from any place when you realized she had the gun? A. No, sir, I did not.

"Q. Well now, just what were those suspicious movements or what do you mean when you saw the unusual movement that led you to believe she had the gun? A. At the time I didn't see anything. When I first noticed the movements something kind of made me feel that she had a gun, but at the same time I didn't say anything to her.

"Q. Didn't ask her what she had? A. No.

"Q. Didn't ask her whether she had a gun or not? A. No.

"Q. When was the first time that you saw the gun? A. When she pulled it on me I realized it was a gun right then because I seen it.

"Q. You had seen it? A. I seen it when she pulled it on me.

"Q. Where did she pull the gun from? She said, 'You son of a bitch I will shoot you now?' A. She said, 'You son of a bitch I will kill you now,' up flew her hands.

"Q. What did you do? A. I slammed down on the brakes, swung around in the seat.

"Q. Did you grab her? A. I grabbed at her more like this (indicating) kind of closing my eyes. If I ever felt like I was going to get shot I sure did then.

"Q. Did you get her gun hand? A. I didn't get her gun, I can't hardly say as to whether I grabbed her gun. Everything happened so quick it sounded to me as if there was a couple of shots or possibly the concussion from the shot."

The attitude of the defendant to the deceased as showing a totally abandoned heart and a want of the common human instincts which the situation should have awakened in the most cruel of mankind is well illustrated in his own statement which we hereafter quote. The autopsy physician testified that the deceased probably lived for a considerable period after she was shot, as the bullet in its course through the head did not come in contact with any organ which would cause instant death. His opinion is based upon the fact that the autopsy showed that the lungs had gradually filled with blood, and this would not have been so had death immediately ensued. His brutal treatment of her body, whether life was extinct or not, at the time he hurried away from her crumpled remains, concealed from public view by the irregular contour of the mountain side and the log behind which he had dragged her, is best illustrated by his own words:

"Q. When you got out you looked up and heard the sigh, you said, 'Good God Mickey?' A. Yes.

"Q. You didn't see any blood streaming from her face? A. No, there was blood all over her face, I know the blood was running on the dress and coat.

"Q. Did you see any blood streaming from the face after the shot and after you got out of the car, came around and opened the other door? A. She was bleeding, surely.

"Q. Was it flowing out of the face? A. Flowing from somewheres, her head was bent over, and the blood was running down around the front of her.

"Q. Did you know where she was shot? A. Not exactly.

"Q. Did you ever make any effort to find out? A. No.

"Q. After you got around and pulled her out of the car, there was no motion any place, she was just slumped there? A. Yes.

"Q. Where did you think she was shot?
A. I knew she was shot somewhere in the head on account of the blood.

"Q. What part of the head did you think she was shot? A. I didn't know, I imagined she was shot somewhere around the front, because everything seemed all blood, just seemed to dawn on me that is where she was shot.

"Q. Did you look to see if the bullet had struck her in the head? A. No, I didn't.

"Q. Didn't examine to see whether the brains were flowing out or not? A. No.

"Q. Did you take her hat off to see? A. She didn't have a hat on.

"Q. Now listen, was she still bleeding when you dragged her down in back of the log? A. I suppose she was, because there was blood all over her; I can't say, I didn't see no blood gushing from her.

"Q. How did you seize her to bring her out of the car and drag her down back of the log? A. After I got her feet out first, I kind of got my arm under her legs and the other under the shoulder.

"Q. Carried her? A. Kind of half carried and dragged.

"Q. Feet dragging or head? A. If any part her feet were dragging.

"Q. After you got her out of the car did you lay her on the side of the road? A. The first place I laid her down was the spot I left her.

"Q. After you laid her down did you fool over her to see if there was any life? A. I suppose a few moments I will say.

"Q. A few seconds? A. Not exactly seconds, just stood there and looked.

"Q. Did you put your hands on her after you laid her down? A. After I laid her down I never touched her any more.

"Q. Did you look to see after you laid her down if there was any life? A. I had already taken for granted she was dead.

"Q. Did you feel any warmth in the body when you were carrying her? A. I don't recall getting my hands next to her body when I was carrying her.

"Q. Didn't you have, when you got your arms around her back, you had your hands under her arms? A. Kind of got one arm around her back and the other one down here.

"Q. Did you have your right arm under her back, or left? A. Left arm.

"Q. Did you feel any warmth then on either arm at all? A. Well, I can't say I left any warmth, possible a little, yes.

"Q. Did you get any blood on you? A. I did, yes.

"Q. On which arm? A. I got it on, some, a little bit on my left arm and some on this other arm.

"Q. Some on your right and some on your left? A. Yes.

"Q. When did you get the blood on your right arm? A. I don't know when I got it on my arms or overcoat at all, until after I laid the body down and I seen I had blood on my coat.

"Q. Is that the clothes you had on? A. This is the suit, yes, sir, but I had an overcoat.

"Q. Any blood on your suit or just the overcoat? A. Sent them to a cleaners in Corvallis, Oregon. * * *

"Q. Before you met Eunice? A. Afterwards.

"Q. Did Eunice see the blood? A. No, sir, I had taken my overcoat off.

"Q. Did she notice any on your trousers? A. No, very little on my trousers, I wiped the most of it off.

"Q. Did you notice whether or not the blood was streaming from her face and head when you were carrying her? A. No, sir, I watched more where I was going, watched my step in carrying her, everything seemed all blood around her face.

"Q. Did the blood seem flowing or coagulated? A. When I did look, it seemed more like it was flowing.

"Q. Did it stream on the ground in back of you? A. I didn't notice.

"Q. Did you notice when you came back on the road? A. I never looked."

The defendant was utterly unable to explain the manner in which deceased shot herself almost on a line directly through the head, the bullet entering the left side—the side which was next to the defendant—and passing out the right side of the head. The defendant made a number of explanations as to how the deceased, in attempting to shoot him shot herself in a most unnatural and improbable, if not impossible, manner. At the trial of the case he testified: "Well, after she threatened me and I turned I noticed her hands they were more in this position (illustrating) * * * and appeared as she had both hands on the gun and I don't know as she was holding the gun with both hands or which hand, but as near as I can remember, the best of my recollection, the gun would be in a position possibly a little bit higher (illustrating). The muzzle of the gun wasn't pointed directly toward me, like this would be more like—but I actually don't know which hand she had the gun in as far as that goes, it might have been her left, might have been the right, holding the gun something like this, so it looked as if in both hands, pointed not directly toward me, but more in the direction of the steering wheel. * * * I don't know which one (finger) she had on the trigger or which one she was actually gripping the gun with; I just noticed it at a glance."

The defendant disclaimed at all times that he grabbed or held the arm or hand which was directing the pistol or in any way deflected the pistol in any manner. His several attempts to account for the actual shooting are simply beyond human understanding. Beyond doubt he stripped from the person of the deceased everything of value, and took her steamer trunk and suitcases, with their contents, and removed from her clothing all marks that would serve to identify her.

According to his testimony, he drove from Vancouver, Wash., to the place where he disposed of the body of the deceased and drove back to the Cooper ranch, where Eunice Pardee had arrived from her Sacramento residence but a few days before, without rest or sleep. He gave all of deceased's clothing and articles of value to Eunice Pardee. Almost immediately upon his arrival and while his clothing and the cushion of the seat where Minnie McCoy had sat bore the stain of her blood, he began making trips in the car of the deceased in company with Eunice Pardee about the country. He forged the dead girl's name in at least four separate transactions, one of which he profited from to the extent of $300; another to the extent of $85, and the attempted third forgery led to his arrest. The forgery of her name purporting to transfer her Ford coupé constituted the fourth.

When he was arrested at Portland, June 29, 1930, he denied that he was with Minnie McCoy at the time she was killed. Upon being asked by Police Detective Tackaberry, of Portland, Or., if he knew she was dead, he replied: "Yes, Joe took her down the line and blowed her topper." The evidence connecting him with her in the journey became so overwhelming that the mysterious "Joe" theory was dropped as a defense.

On March 24, 1930, the defendant wrote from Portland to a friend, Ed. Dalton, at Wallace, Idaho, where defendant and Minnie McCoy had lived and where she had worked for some time, as follows: "Is Chris and Mott still with you? Give my regards to Earl and the boys. Will explain the reason for my flighty departure from that town when I see you. You probably know I had a dame working in a joint there. That is all over now." That Minnie McCoy was the person referred to in the above letter cannot be seriously contested.

The defendant and Minnie McCoy were seen by two or three travelers on the Redwood highway on or about February 20, 1930, who had occasion to converse with them.

William E. Martell, an automobile salesman, saw the defendant and the deceased in the highway late on the afternoon of February 20, not a great way from where the homicide took place. Both were on the highway engaged in a quarrel, and the defendant approached Minnie McCoy in a threatening manner. Martell told him to take his hand off the woman. The woman said, "All I want is my money." It should be noted here that defendant admitted in one of his statements that one of the last subjects heatedly discussed before the killing was money matters. In reply to the deceased's request for her money, the defendant said, "You will get your money in time." The girl repeated several times that all she wanted was her money and requested Mr. Martell to settle the argument. Defendant invited Martell to have a drink and as he opened the car to draw out a pint bottle half full of liquor, he noticed a pistol in a holster. As he touched the pistol he said he guessed, "We don't need that right now." The deceased had on a heavy fur coat, no doubt the coat she bought in Pocatello. He thought both showed the effect of liquor. The car was also identified as Minnie McCoy's car. Several other witnesses who were upon the highway gave evidence which either identified the defendant or tended to identify the automobile in circumstances which were unusual and need not be set forth.

[1] We have not set forth all of the facts and circumstances of an accusatory character with which the record abounds, and which conclusively establish the guilt of the defendant. The motives are apparent.

[2-4] Defendant and appellant insists that the corpus delicti has not been proved. We think the foregoing statement of the case fully answers appellant's contention. The corpus delicti must be proved like any other fact, that is, beyond a reasonable doubt. The people must first produce sufficient evidence to send the case to the jury, and the jury are first to be satisfied from the evidence that the crime has been committed. This the jury has done and its conclusions are substantially supported by the evidence.

[5] The defendant complains that the trial court refused to give an instruction to the effect that the defendant was presumed to have a good reputation or character, without stating the trait involved. However faulty in substance, the instruction was properly refused for the reason that the reputation of the defendant was directly assailed by showing that he had been convicted of burglary, stealing gasoline, and bootlegging. When his character was thus impeached, it was his duty, to avoid the force of the impeachment, to show, though convicted, nevertheless his character was good. This he did not attempt to do. He stood as an impeached defendant before the jury, and the court properly refused to instruct the jury as requested. The court did, however, instruct the jury that the law clothed the defendant with the presumption of innocence, and that the reputation of a person accused of crime is in law to be presumed to be good until the contrary appears from the evidence, and that the jury would not be justified in drawing any inference unfavorable to the defendant from the fact that he offered no testimony as to his good character on the case. Clearly the instruction as given was much more favorable to defendant than he was entitled to have under the law. The instructions were full, fair, and liberal, and the defendant was denied no substantial right either as to rulings of the court upon the admissibility of evidence or the law as given to the jury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.

115 Cal.App. 50

FORTIER v. HOGAN et al.
Civ. 463.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
June 16, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 13, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 13, 1931.

1. Evidence ⇨89.

Presumption is evidence and may, in certain cases, outweigh positive evidence adduced against it.

2. Evidence ⇨89.

Generally, disputable presumption has no weight against proved or admitted fact.

3. Evidence ⇨89.

Where endeavor is made to establish fact contrary to disputable presumption, fact in dispute remains to be determined on evidence including presumption.

4. Evidence ⇨89.

Presumption that one exercises due care for his safety disappears when contradicted or controverted by indisputable evidence of party relying on it (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

This is so if the uncontradicted testimony of the party relying on the presumption, or of his witnesses, is wholly irreconcilable with the presumption sought to be invoked, where the circumstances afford no indication that the testimony was the product of mistake or inadvertence.

5. Evidence ⇨89.

Presumption that one takes due care for his safety does not disappear from case as matter of law, when contradicted or controverted by party against whom it is invoked (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

6. Automobiles ⇨245(74).

In action for death of child of eight, struck by delivery automobile while crossing intersection on scooter, whether presumption that minor took due care for his own safety was controverted, held for jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

7. Automobiles ⇨245(74).

Whether child of eight, struck by delivery automobile while crossing street at intersection on scooter, was possessed of such intelligence, foresight, and judgment, as to be chargeable with contributory negligence, held for jury.

8. Automobiles ⇨245(74).

Whether child of eight, struck by delivery automobile while crossing intersection on scooter, exercised such judgment as he possessed, or was contributorily negligent, held for jury.

9. Death ⇨99(3).

$9,275 damages for death of boy of eight years of age held not excessive.

10. Automobiles ⇨244(7).

Finding that driver of delivery automobile, striking minor child crossing intersection on scooter, was negligent, held supported (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by Louis Philip Fortier against Michael Hogan and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Stearns, Luce & Forward, of San Diego, for appellants.

Glen H. Munkelt, of San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

This is an action by the father for damages for the death of his minor child eight years of age, occasioned by a collision between a delivery automobile of defendant corporation and the minor child of plaintiff. Said child was riding a scooter at the intersection of Dewey and Harrison streets in the city of San Diego. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and respondent in the sum of $9,275. Judgment was entered thereon in the amount of the verdict and costs of action, amounting to the total sum of $9,404.30. From this judgment, defendants appeal.

A statement of the case discloses the following facts: The son of plaintiff and respondent, Joseph James Fortier, of the age of eight years, five months, and eighteen days, was killed on October 25, 1929, at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon by coming in collision with an automobile delivery truck driven by the defendant Michael Hogan, who was at the time the agent and employee of the Exclusive Florists, Inc., a corporation. Harrison street was a street running approximately east and west, and was 70 feet wide at the intersection. Dewey street was a street running approximately north and south, and was 40 feet in width. The automobile delivery truck driven by defendant Michael Hogan was proceeding easterly on the south side or right-hand side of Harrison street towards the intersection of Dewey street. At the north-west corner of Harrison and Dewey streets was a house, a large palm tree, and a low cement wall, partially obstructing the view of the driver of the automobile delivery truck of other traffic proceeding southerly on Dewey street. At the time of the accident, the deceased boy was traveling south on Dewey street a few feet away from the west curb on the paved portion of the street. He had constructed for himself a small "scooter," being a piece of wood erected upon two skates with a small stand or rest extending upwards, upon which he rested his hands. The grade of Dewey street is downhill toward Harrison street. The boy was propelling the scooter with one foot on the scooter and one foot on the pavement, coming down the moderate incline. The driver of the truck was going easterly towards Dewey street at a speed variously estimated, and upon which there was a contradiction of testimony. There is no direct testimony that the speed was excessive. Respondent relies upon the circumstances disclosed after the accident to establish an unlawful and excessive rate of speed of defendant's delivery car. The driver of the truck testified that, as he approached the intersection, he looked first to his left, which would be the direction from which the child was approaching, and then looked to his right, and saw an approaching automobile going north on the east side of Dewey street close to the intersection of Harrison street. He, the driver, then directed his attention to this car, unable to determine whether it was going to stop and let him pass in front, or if it was going to pass in front of him. While he was thus proceeding, and his attention thus diverted, his car suddenly collided with the boy, who was proceeding south on Dewey street about 4 feet east of the west crosswalk of the intersection. The point of impact was at a point in the intersection just south of the center line of Harrison street and west of the center line of Dewey street about 4 feet east of the west crosswalk of this intersection. The testimony of the witnesses differ as to the actions and conduct of the boy after he arrived at the north crosswalk, and their testimony will be hereafter more fully considered. The boy collided with the left front fender of the truck. As the truck proceeded, the rear wheel ran over the child, and his death occurred. The boy's sweater was found about 7 feet east of the prolongation of the west curb line of Dewey street. The scooter was found 24 feet east of this line. There was a continuous skid mark of the right rear wheel of the truck extending from the spot where the scooter was found to a point 33 feet east, and of the left wheel, a skid mark of about 28 feet. The distance from the scooter to the truck when it stopped was 49 feet. The truck stopped about 71 feet from the point of impact. The deceased was a colored boy and was one of eight children of plaintiff, of more than average intelligence for his age, about 4 feet high, weighed about 88 pounds, his record in school was good, he was industrious and of an affectionate and lovable nature, helped his brother sell Sunday papers and a church magazine, he earned $6 a month, saved his money, and bought himself clothes.

The defendants and appellants specify the following as errors relied upon to justify a reversal of the judgment: (1) That the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict and judgment for the following reasons: (a) That the uncontradicted evidence establishes that the deceased was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to his injuries, (b) that at the time of the accident the deceased boy did not use ordinary care or caution, such as a boy 8 years of age would be reasonably expected to use under the same facts and circumstances, (c) that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence which was the proximate cause of his injuries, in that he did not use ordinary care and caution to avoid the accident, and for his own protection, (d) that the evidence does not establish that the defendant was guilty of any negligence that was the proximate cause of the accident and injuries to the deceased; (2) that the damages are excessive and not supported by the evidence; (3) that the trial court erred in not granting defendants' motion for nonsuit and for a new trial.

As to the actions and conduct of the minor child, plaintiff's witness testified as follows (from a deposition of defendants' witness offered and read into the evidence by plaintiff before resting his case).

Arvilla Olson, who was seated in an approaching car about one-fourth of a block south of the intersection at the time of the collision, testified:

"Q. Did you see a green delivery truck belonging to the Exclusive Florists at that intersection at about that time? A. I didn't see it approaching, but I saw it just as it crashed because I was watching the boy.

"Q. You saw the boy approaching the intersection? A. Yes, I did. * * *

"Q. And when you first saw him where was he? A. He was coming down sort of an incline on Dewey, about half way up when I saw him. * * *

"Q. Now, at the time you first saw him, how long did you observe him after you first saw him? A. Until he got hit.

"Q. Now will you describe for us just exactly what you observed, as far as the boy on the scooter was concerned, from the time you first saw him until he was hit? A. When I first saw him he had both feet on the scooter, coming down, and he was sort of crouched down on the scooter and as he came almost to the intersection he stood up, having one foot on the board and the other off, and pushed his scooter toward the intersection, and I saw him just as he crashed into the front wheel, or the fender, and he was tossed over.

"Q. Now, did you notice in what direction the boy was looking as he came down Dewey Street? A. As far as I could see he seemed to be watching his scooter. I didn't notice.

"Q. Did you see what direction his head was turned? A. It was turned straight ahead, or towards the ground, more or less. * * *

"Q. Did he change the direction of his head at any time before he was hit? A. I couldn't tell you about that.

"Q. When he got to the north property line of Harrison Street did he look toward the truck, or west on Harrison, or westerly on Harrison Street? A. I don't think he did. * * * I don't think that he looked either way. * * *

"Q. Any time that you could see him, did you see him swerve in any direction? A. No, he came direct.

"Q. And did he slacken his speed in any degree, as far as you could observe? A. No. If anything, his speed was accelerated. * * *

"Q. Did you have a clear, unobstructed view of the boy? A. Yes, of the boy, but not of the truck."

On cross-examination, this witness testified as follows:

"Q. Now you testified at the preliminary hearing, did you not? * * * A. Yes.

"Q. I will ask you if you didn't testify in this manner in answer to these questions: * * *

"Q. Now will you describe the accident as you saw it? A. I was watching the boy coming down the hill, and he had just taken his foot off of his scooter and had his foot on the pavement, and he seemed to go uneven from his path?" A. I didn't say that, 'uneven from his path.'

"Q. Just a minute until I finish the question. 'And I turned around and I didn't look again until I saw the car going over him. * * *' Did you so testify? A. Yes, except

I can't remember saying anything about going uneven. * * *

"Q. You could not see whether he glanced to the right or the left with his eyes, could you? A. No, not with his eyes, I watched his head."

The only other eyewitness testifying in behalf of plaintiff was seated on her porch near the corner where the accident happened:

"Q. About how fast was he (the boy) coming when you saw him? A. When I saw him he was pretty slow, because he had stopped there * * * just like someone would walk.

"Q. Did you see him do anything as he approached the intersection of Harrison? A. What attracted my attention—he slowed down and kind of stood there to adjust his hat, and the next thing I saw him pull out and pass my eyesight. * * *

"Q. Did he stop any appreciable length of time there, or did he just slow down, or what did he do? A. He slowed down, kind of stopped, adjusted his hat and went on out."

Two other eyewitnesses, seated in the car with plaintiff's witness Arvilla Olson, testified for defendant to about the same facts; that they observed him approach and cross the intersection with his head down but could not say where his eyes were looking or whether or not he may have looked when they were not observing him. The defendant, the driver of the truck, testifying for the plaintiff, stated that he looked as he approached the intersection but did not see the boy until he collided with him in the intersection.

It is upon these facts that appellants would have us declare that the uncontradicted evidence establishes that the deceased was guilty of negligence as a matter of law, which proximately contributed to his injuries. Appellants also contend that by reason of the testimony of eyewitnesses, testifying for the plaintiff as to the conduct of the deceased, plaintiff may not invoke or take advantage of the disputable presumption "that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns," citing subdivision 4 of section 1963, Code of Civil Procedure, and that by reason of that fact this presumption disappears, and plaintiff may not rely upon it to support his judgment.

[1-5] In the well-considered case of Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., reported in (Cal. Sup.) 299 P. 529, this question was discussed. The point there raised and presented was as to whether or not the presumption "that the deceased exercised due care for his safety" has been overcome and dispelled as a matter of law by the testimony of a witness called to testify for the plaintiff under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure. That a presumption is evidence and may, in certain cases, outweigh positive evidence adduced against it has long been the settled law of this state. People v.

Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 P. 833; Sarraille v. Calmon, 142 Cal. 651, 76 P. 497; Pacific Portland Cement Co. v. Reinecke, 30 Cal. App. 501, 158 P. 1041. The general rule that, as against a proved fact or a fact admitted, a disputable presumption has no weight, is subject to the exception that where an endeavor is made to establish a fact contrary to the presumption, the fact in dispute still remains to be determined upon a consideration of all the evidence, including the presumption. Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. In Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corporation, 190 Cal. page 1, 210 P. 269, 272, the court has again said: "There seems to be some confusion in the decisions of this state with respect to the extent to which under various circumstances presumptions of law are to be regarded as evidence of facts. The Code expressly declares them to be evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1957, 1963), and admonishes the trial judge to instruct the jury on all proper occasions 'that they are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a * * * presumption.' Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2."

In the Mar Shee Case, supra, it was held with approval, in the case of Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, that a fact is proved against a party relying on the presumption "by the uncontradicted testimony of the party himself or of his witnesses, under circumstances which afford no indication that the testimony is the product of mistake or inadvertence; and that, when the fact so proved is wholly irreconcilable with the presumption sought to be invoked, the latter is dispelled and disappears from the case." This presumption does disappear when contradicted or controverted by the evidence of the party relying upon it, with the qualification stated in the Mar Shee Case, but it is not correct to say that under the Code section, and the effect given to it by the court, it vanishes from the case as a matter of law, when contradicted or controverted by the party against whom it is invoked.

The question then presented in this case is whether or not the presumption of law "that the deceased person did take ordinary care of his own concerns," was dispelled by the evidence herein enumerated. The fact in dispute was not a question of whether the deceased looked before or while crossing the street, but the question of whether or not he exercised ordinary care of his own concerns. Conceding, but by no means holding, that the evidence was sufficient to establish the fact to be that he did not look, we are of the opinion, when we take into consideration the fact that the child was only 8 years of age and all the other surrounding circumstances, that the evidence, notwithstanding the loss of the benefit of the presumption, would not be sufficient to hold that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

In the case of Ryan v. Union Pacific Ry. Co., 46 Utah, 530, 151 P. 71, 74, cited in the case of Tyson v. Burton (Cal. App.) 294 P. 750, the Supreme Court of Utah, considering the question of presumptions, held as follows: "In the absence of evidence there is a presumption that the deceased used due care and, for his protection, did all that reasonably was required of him. * * * When, however, facts and circumstances are proven to show just what the deceased did, or failed to do, then his care, or the want of it, is to be determined, not on the presumption, but upon the facts and circumstances proven."

[6] Whether or not the presumption relied upon in the present case was controverted was a question of fact to be determined by the jury. Grantham v. Ordway, 40 Cal. App. 758, 761, 182 P. 73; Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 P. 308; Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, 726, 91 P. 616.

[7, 8] We cannot say, as a matter of law, at what age a boy would be possessed of such intelligence, foresight, and judgment as to charge him with contributory negligence in a case like the present. These matters, and the further question whether a minor duly exercised such judgment as he possessed, must, therefore, as a rule be left as considerations of fact for the jury's determination, and it would be an exceptional case which would present them as unmixed questions of law for the determination of the court. Mayne v. S. D. Electric Ry. Co., 179 Cal. 173, 175 P. 690.

[9] Defendants and appellants claim that the amount of damages awarded are excessive. It is true, in all such cases it is difficult to fix the definite pecuniary loss resulting from the death of a minor child. Precise accuracy in that regard is not capable of being attained, either by a court or jury. Manifestly, there can be no fixed standard by which that loss can be determined. Necessarily the law committed its ascertainment to the discretion and sound judgment of the jury. Bach v. Swanston & Son, 105 Cal. App. 72, 286 P. 1097.

[10] The evidence of the skid marks for a distance of 33 feet, made by the truck equipped with 4-wheel brakes, and the fact that the truck traveled 71 feet before it stopped, the driver applying the brakes continuously, may be a circumstance showing the amount of care and control exercised by the driver, and sufficient to support a finding that the truck was traveling in excess of the speed limit of 15 miles per hour in the intersection, in violation of law. Seperman v. Lyon Fire Proof Storage Co., 97 Cal. App. 654, 657, 275 P. 980; Warner v. Bertholf, 40 Cal. App.

776, 181 P. 808. These facts, together with the fact of his failure to see the child in the intersection are sufficient, if true, to warrant the finding of negligence. Gonzales v. Davis, 197 Cal. 256, 261, 240 P. 16. The record contains sufficient evidence to support the judgment in the amount found. O'Meara v. Haiden, 204 Cal. 354, 268 P. 334, 60 A. L. R. 1381.

The motions for nonsuit and new trial were properly denied. The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

CRAIG, J.

Upon a plea of guilty, appellant was permitted to file an application for probation, which was denied, and he appealed upon oral notice following an unsuccessful attempt to obtain a modification of sentence.

[1] Said motion, and the ground of this appeal, arose from an alleged inadvertence, in that he pleaded guilty to a violation of the California Vehicle Act, but that judgment was entered upon a count of the same information charging grand theft. It clearly appears from the record that appellant's codefendant pleaded guilty to the charge, as stated to him by the court, that he did "unlawfully steal and take away an automobile." In the same proceeding, and immediately thereafter, the court asked appellant: "How do you plead, Mr. Raymus, guilty or not guilty to the same charge?" To which question Raymus answered "Guilty." He subsequently offered no proof, by affidavit or otherwise, except the oral suggestion of substituted counsel, that he had not voluntarily pleaded guilty to a charge of grand theft. There was no abuse of discretion upon the part of the trial court in denying a motion to set it aside.

[2] Other matters discussed by appellant are not properly a part of, nor included in, the record; and they cannot be considered upon appeal. People v. Cruse, 24 Cal. App. 497, 141 P. 936; People v. Petros, 25 Cal. App. 236, 143 P. 246.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 138

PEOPLE v. LA MARR et al.
Cr. 2073.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

June 22, 1931.

1. Criminal law ☞274.

Where defendant claimed he pleaded guilty to charge of grand theft, rather than to violation of Vehicle Act, from inadvertence, court properly denied motion to set it aside.

It appeared from record that codefendant pleaded guilty to charge, as stated, to him by court, that he did unlawfully steal and take away an automobile, and in same proceeding, and immediately thereafter, court asked defendant whether he pleaded guilty or not guilty to same charge, and defendant answered, "Guilty." Defendant subsequently offered no proof, except oral suggestion of substituted counsel, that he had not voluntarily pleaded guilty to charge of grand theft.

2. Criminal law ☞1128(2).

Matters not properly part of nor included in record could not be considered on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Prosecution by the State against Percy La Marr and another, wherein Julian Raymus, after plea of guilty of grand theft, was denied probation, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Marshall A. Stutsman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

115 Cal.App. 765

PEOPLE of State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Mike RILEY, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1156.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

June 17, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 1, 1931.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Clinton W. Johnson, of Oroville, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM.

The defendant in this case was jointly tried with Frank Countryman, J. D. Countryman, and Lige Taylor.

The jury found him guilty of operating a still for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. A motion for a new trial was made and denied by the court. Judgment was imposed and a separate appeal taken.

The points raised for a reversal of the judgment are identical with those presented on the appeal of Frank Countryman, J. D. Countryman, and Lige Taylor. On the 16th day of June, 1931, we determined all questions raised adversely to appellant's contentions. Therefore, upon the authority of People v. Frank Countryman, J. D. Countryman and Lige Taylor (Cal. App.) 300 P. 871, the judgment and order denying a new trial in this case are hereby affirmed.

---

115 Cal.App. 145

WEINTRAUB v. SORONOW.
Civ. 6551.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

June 22, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 22, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 20, 1931.

1. Trial  $\hookrightarrow$ 140(1).

Credibility of testimony of witnesses is for jury.

2. Trial  $\hookrightarrow$ 140(1).

Inconsistencies in testimony of single witness presents conflict in evidence and question for jury.

3. Appeal and error  $\hookrightarrow$ 1001(1).

Evidence must be insufficient to afford ground for honest difference of opinion between intelligent men as to its effect, before appellate court can determine evidence is insufficient as matter of law to support verdict.

4. Master and servant  $\hookrightarrow$ 80(9).

In action to recover for services performed under employment contract, verdict for plaintiff held supported.

5. Action  $\hookrightarrow$ 48(3).

Each cause of action on employment contract, one express and other implied, held properly united in one complaint, where nothing remained to be done under contract but to pay salary earned (Code Civ. Proc. § 427).

6. Frauds, statute of  $\hookrightarrow$ 129(2).

Contract of employment for one year held not within statute of frauds where fully performed by employee (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 1).

7. Master and servant  $\hookrightarrow$ 3(1).

Employment contract fully performed by employee held not void for uncertainty, since performance made intention sufficiently clear.

8. Usury  $\hookrightarrow$ 16.

Employer's agreement to pay employee bonus for assisting in financing business held not usurious under circumstances.

Circumstances disclosed that employee not only advanced money on his own checks, for which no interest was charged, but used his credit at his own bank in securing loans for the employer, and that the contract was not one for the loan or forbearance of money, and that the compensation was not interest in any sense.

9. Witnesses  $\hookrightarrow$ 275(7).

Refusing to permit defendant to cross-examine plaintiff as to certain checks after withdrawal thereof with defendant's consent held not error.

10. Appeal and error  $\hookrightarrow$ 1067.

Refusing requested instruction that even if employee was to receive bonus for assisting in financing business, and if employee loaned money, only compensation recoverable was interest, held not prejudicial error, where evidence justified finding that something more than making loan was done by employee in performing services.

11. Trial  $\hookrightarrow$ 349(2).

Submitting or refusing to submit particular questions of fact to jury is discretionary (Code Civ. Proc. § 625).

12. Appeal and error  $\hookrightarrow$ 974(1).

Clear abuse of discretion in submitting or refusing to submit particular questions of fact to jury must be established to show error (Code Civ. Proc. § 625).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. Rey Schauer, Judge.

Action by M. Weintraub against Frank Soronow, doing business under the fictitious firm name of Soronow's Furniture Manufacturing Company, and Frank Soronow, individually. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

W. W. Kaye, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Crail, Shutt, Penprase & Crail and Claude A. Shutt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff's amended complaint is based on an alleged contract with defendant whereby the former was to have been employed for a period of one year commencing January 18, 1925, as general manager of the latter's furniture manufacturing establishment and to assist in financing said business. The first count alleges the contract to have been for an agreed compensation of $6,000 for services as general manager and $4,000 as a bonus for assistance in financing the business, or a total of $10,000 for the year; that the employment terminated February 8, 1926; and that no part of such compensation, excepting the sum of $2,195, has been paid. The amended complaint further alleges that the assistance in financing was to commence forthwith and that plaintiff was also to begin familiarizing himself with the conduct of the business and to take over active management upon the completion of a house which he was then building for defendant. The second count is for the balance due for the reasonable value of plaintiff's services alleged to be in the sum of $7,805. Defendant's answer denies generally the allegations of the complaint, except it admits that plaintiff was hired as an employee in said business at a salary to be mutually agreed upon, and that thereafter the parties mutually agreed that such salary was to be $50 per week until August 9, 1925, that it was then changed to $250 per month until October 9, 1925, and thereafter $300 per month until February 6, 1926, at which time, it is alleged, plaintiff refused to continue in said employment, a settlement was made and plaintiff fully paid for all services rendered. As a further defense the answer sets up the statute of frauds. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff entered on the verdict of a jury in the sum of $6,000 defendant has appealed.

Appellant contends: (a) That the evidence does not justify a recovery under the second count, as it shows that there was an express contract for one year and that plaintiff voluntarily terminated the employment; (b) that the contract is void for uncertainty, both as to the agreement for services to be performed as general manager and the assistance to be rendered in financing; (c) that the bonus agreement is usurious; (d) that the contract is within the terms of section 1624, subdivision 1, Civil Code, and void; (e) that the evidence shows plaintiff was employed at the pleasure of both parties and upon a fixed salary, which was paid; (f) that the court erred in refusing defendant the privilege of cross-examining plaintiff as to certain checks; (g) in denying defendant's motion for nonsuit; and (h) in refusing certain requested instructions.

(a), (d), and (e). It is appellant's theory that respondent voluntarily terminated his employment before the year was up and so cannot recover on the second count; that the contract, being made January 18, 1925, to commence in April of that year and continue for one year, is void under the statute of frauds; and that as the services rendered were fully paid for no recovery can be had. There is the same conflict in the evidence as there is in the pleadings as to when the employment began. The plaintiff testified to the following conversation between him and defendant: "I tell you, Mr. Soronow, * * * if you will guarantee me $4,000 for assisting financing you, I will draw $6000 [he had already testified that defendant was drawing $6000] and that will give me $10,000 a year, and I will go with you." He says, 'That suits me fine,' and that was the last we talked about it." Plaintiff had previously testified that the two had had many conversations about the same matter, their last one occurring on a Sunday morning. Asked as to when he first advanced money to assist in the financing, he said: "On the 18th day of January I gave him a check for $1000.00. He was short of money." The 18th of January, 1925, was on a Monday, and the witness testified that on said Monday, following the Sunday conversation, he went down to the plant, and that from then until in April, when he says he took complete charge, he was at the plant "pretty nearly every day. I was getting myself posted as to how he runs the business." Again he says: "I went down there—I remember it was on Monday. He came down after me, and I went down with him immediately after we transacted business; after I told him I would accept his proposition. I was constantly with him, with the exception of the morning I would go down to the buildings and attend to a little bit there. * * *" He also testified that he finished his building operations the latter part of March or the first of April, "but I didn't give my time entirely to the business until I went down either the first part of April or the latter part of March, I am sure."

[1-3] As to the termination of the employment, it is immaterial who is at fault in so doing, so long as there is evidence from which the jury could infer that the employment began on January 18, 1925, as the termination on February 8, 1926, would carry past the period of one year; although the jury could conclude from the evidence that the breach was due to appellant's action in countermanding some of respondent's orders in arranging the new plant into which they were moving. In this connection Weintraub testified that he "was to take charge of the concern and run it as general manager and credit manager * * * and nobody was to give me any dictation." He said appellant told him, "Mr. Weintraub, you can run the business to suit yourself, and I will assist you in bringing in the orders." Witnesses were also produced by respondent, consisting of salesmen and others who dealt with the Soronow Furniture Manufacturing Company, who testified to the effect that during the year 1925 all their orders for materials and supplies were given by respondent, together with other evidence from which the jury could infer that the latter was acting in the capacity of manager of the business. Of course, there is evidence sharply in conflict with this, but the determination of the credibility of the testimony of the various witnesses was for the jury in the first place, and apparently the jurors have accepted the evidence in favor of respondent. Appellant urges that the testimony of respondent is so full of "glaring inconsistencies" and "irreconcilable contradictions" that no reliance can be placed upon it, and that under such circumstances it justifies the conclusion that it is insufficient to uphold the verdict, in which case a question of law arises which may be reviewed by the appellate court, citing in support thereof the case of Snyder v. Miller, 29 Cal. App. 566, 157 P. 22. We do not find such inherent weakness in the testimony of respondent that a question of law arises, and the so-called irreconcilable and inconsistent testimony is capable to a large degree of reconciliation. But even if it were not, our understanding is that in such a case "if the evidence is such as that different conclusions upon the matter can rationally be drawn therefrom—then the case presented is one for the jury." Firth v. Southern Pacific Co., 44 Cal. App. 511, 514, 186 P. 815, 816. In other words, it still presents a conflict in the evidence even though found in the testimony of a single witness, and appellant's arguments here were undoubtedly vigorously made in the first instance to the jury, which decided as to the credibility of the witnesses contrary to his contention, and in the second place to the trial judge, who heard the evidence and saw the witnesses and who likewise decided contrary to such contention. In view of these circumstances we cannot say that the evidence was not such as to afford grounds for an honest difference of opinion between intelligent men as to its effect, which we understand must be the situation before an appellate court can determine that the evidence is insufficient as a matter of law to support the verdict.

[4-6] So it appears that the evidence supports the allegations of the complaint as to the nature of the employment and that the employment began January 18, 1925, and continued for more than one year, the term which respondent contends was agreed upon. The contract having been fully performed, and nothing remaining to be done under it but to pay the salary earned, and each cause of action being based upon a contract, one express and the other implied, they would seem to be properly united in one complaint under section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Respondent possibly having some doubt as to his ability to establish to the satisfaction of the jury that there was an agreed consideration of $10,000 as alleged in the first count, properly relied upon a count based on the reasonable value of the services rendered (Wilson v. Smith, 61 Cal. 209), and evidently the jury determined the amount due thereunder. As we have seen, there seems to be evidence to support their verdict, so contentions (a), (d), and (e) would appear to be settled thereby, under the evidence.

[7] (b) It is to be observed that this is not an action to enforce performance of the contract alleged, but to recover for services performed under it. As long as the parties performed it, it was made sufficiently clear what was intended to be done under it. We see no merit in this contention.

[8] (c) The allegation in the amended complaint is that "plaintiff agreed to * * * assist in financing said business." The complaint does not show what plaintiff was to do in so assisting, and the evidence shows that he not only advanced money on his own checks, for which no interest was charged, but used his credit at his own bank in securing loans on the Soronow Furniture Manufacturing Company's notes; so the agreement alleged is not usurious on its face, and the evidence shows that what was done by the parties under it consisted not only in advancing plaintiff's own money when needed, but in services rendered in securing money on obligations of the corporation, a very valuable assistance. It appears therefore that the contract alleged and proved was not a contract for the "loan or forbearance of money," and the compensation alleged was not interest in any sense, so we cannot say it was void on that ground, as appellant urges here for the first time—except as said question was raised in instructions requested bearing upon that contention and refused by the trial court, and in which refusal we see no prejudicial error.

[9] (f) Plaintiff offered in evidence some 469 checks as one exhibit. They were apparently not read or shown to the jury, nor was the total amount of money which they represented put in evidence, but they were marked "Exhibit 26." Counsel for defendant questioned some of them, and in order to save time counsel for plaintiff asked leave to withdraw those checks from the exhibit to which defendant said he would make no objection. Such checks were ordered withdrawn and were placed together and marked "Exhibit 26-x" for identification. Counsel for defendant proceeded to cross-examine plaintiff as to such checks after such withdrawal, to which plaintiff objected, the objection being sustained by the court. We see no error in so doing under the circumstances, nor (g) in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

[10-12] (h) Defendant requested certain instructions, one of which instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for defendant and another was to the effect that the evidence did not warrant their finding plaintiff entitled to any compensation for assisting in financing defendant. In view of what we have already said regarding the evidence, we see no error in refusing such instructions. Another instructed the jury that even though they found from the evidence that defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $4,000 as a bonus for assisting in financing the business, if they should also find that defendant did not render any service other than the exchange of checks or the loan of money, the only compensation to which plaintiff would be entitled was interest. In view of the fact that the evidence is such that if a finding of fact had been requested as to the services rendered in such assistance it would have justified a finding that something more than the exchange of checks and the loan of money was done by plaintiff in performing such services, we fail to see where any prejudice resulted from the failure to give such instruction. Defendant also requested the court to instruct the jury to find upon certain questions of fact presented. Under section 625 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is discretionary with the court to submit or refuse to submit particular questions of fact to the jury. The exercise of the power and the extent of its exercise are left to the discretion of the court, and error cannot be maintained without at least a clear showing of the abuse of such discretion. Olmstead v. Dauphiny, 104 Cal. 635, 641, 38 P. 505. In the instant case we fail to see where there was any such abuse.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

115 Cal.App. 74

TOMS et al. v. HELLMAN et al.
Civ. 7671.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

June 18, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 18, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1931.

1. Pleading ⚡428(4).

Objection that amended complaint did not state cause of action interposed to first question asked complainants' first witness held in effect general demurrer.

2. Contracts ⚡25.

Where minds of parties have met respecting more formal writing to be executed, and agreed terms are certain, obligatory contract exists, dating from making of earlier agreement.

3. Contracts ⚡25.

Unless agreement to execute future contract is definite and certain on all subjects, it is nugatory.

4. Contracts ⚡147(3).

Where contract, if any, was in writing, intention of parties was to be ascertained from it alone, if possible (Civ. Code, § 1639).

5. Contracts ⚡143.

Language of contract, if clear and explicit, is to govern its interpretation (Civ. Code, § 1638).

6. Contracts ⚡169.

Where no doubt appeared on face of offer, and none was alleged, surrounding circumstances were not to be considered in interpreting contract resulting from claimed acceptance of offer.

7. Corporations ⚡573(3).

Three items of procedure in offer to obtain reorganization of corporation's finances held interdependent; hence offerors were not liable for failure to cause levy of assessments on stockholders, where entire plan was not accepted.

The offer to obtain reorganization of the corporation's finances was conditioned on the floating of a new bond issue, due ten years from date, to be issued by the company and exchanged for bonds then outstanding, the providing of money to pay existing indebtedness, and, as means of raising such moneys, the offerors being willing to agree that the directors of the company would levy assessments on stockholders in the aggregate of $3 per share, and finally a partial distribution of assets. It appeared that the primary purpose to be accomplished in the reorganization was the issuance of new bonds, thereby postponing the maturity of the debt evidenced by them, and that, if the maturity of the debt were not delayed by issuance of new bonds, no reason existed for assessment on stockholders.

8. Corporations ⚡573(1).

Where offer to obtain reorganization of corporation's finances was a unit, uncertainty in any of its items would prevent formation of contract by its acceptance.

9. Corporations ⚡573(1).

Offer to obtain reorganization of corporation's finances held uncertain; hence acceptance of offer did not create contract.

The offer was uncertain in details of new bond issue, for, although the proposal fixed the principal sum, interest rate, and maturity of the new bonds, and provided that new issue should be secured by trust indenture approved by bondholders' reorganization committee, it was silent as to powers and duties of the trustee, as to what should constitute a default, and as to how trustee should foreclose.

10. Corporations Ⓒ573(1).

Where offer to obtain reorganization of corporation's finances contemplated subsequent execution of complete contract, acceptance of offer did not create contract.

41. Estoppel Ⓒ52.

Estoppels must be mutual.

12. Estoppel Ⓒ54.

Party asserting estoppel must be ignorant of true facts.

13. Estoppel Ⓒ52.

That parties offering to reorganize corporation treated their offer as binding on acceptance of stockholders did not create estoppel to deny existence of contract; it being unenforceable against stockholders for uncertainty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Action by G. Parker Toms and others, as and constituting the Bondholders' Reorganization Committee of the holders of San Joaquin Valley Farm Lands Company first and consolidated mortgage serial 7 per cent. gold bonds, against Marco H. Hellman and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; LANGDON, J., not participating.

Bauer, Wright & Macdonald, Alexander Macdonald, and Fred E. Pettit, Jr., all of Los Angeles, and V. K. Butler, Jr., of San Francisco, as amicus curiæ (Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Anderson & Anderson & Sheahan, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

GRAY, Justice pro tem.

[1] To the first question asked by appellants of their first witness, respondents objected on the ground that the complaint as amended (hereinafter referred to as the complaint) did not state a cause of action. This objection was sustained, and thereafter a judgment of dismissal was entered. The objection was, in effect, a general demurrer to the complaint. Moore v. Douglas, 132 Cal. 399, 64 P. 705. The parties agree that the sole question for determination upon this appeal is whether the complaint states a cause of action.

The complaint alleges that a named corporation, in December, 1921, had sold $1,500,000 principal sum of its bonds in accordance with a trust indenture, secured by its lands; that on May 29, 1926, $1,277,000 principal sum of said bonds was outstanding, which was subordinate to underlying liens of county taxes and bonds of certain reclamation and irrigation districts; that in May, 1926, the corporation was without cash and had defaulted in payment of the current installment of taxes, of interest on irrigation bonds, and of principal and interest on reclamation bonds; and that respondents at all times therein mentioned were the owners of the majority of the corporation's issued and outstanding stock. It is then alleged that on May 29 and June 9, 1926 (the latter clarifying the former), the respondents by letters addressed to the bondholders made a written offer to the bondholders, each letter being set forth in hæc verba, and that, prior to June 25, 1926, the holders of more than 75 per cent. in amount of outstanding bonds accepted in writing this offer, which acceptance is also fully set forth. In support of their complaint, appellants argue that the offer to execute, in the future, an agreement upon terms definitely and certainly set forth in the offer, became, by acceptance, an enforceable contract. On the other hand, respondents, in support of the court's ruling, contend that the offer, being uncertain, indefinite, and incomplete as to the details of the future agreement, amounted, when accepted, only to an agreement to agree, and further the offer, contemplating by its terms the execution of a future written agreement, is not binding prior to such execution.

[2, 3] The legal principles, which the respective parties claim are here applicable, are well stated and contrasted in the following excerpt from Fly v. Cline, 49 Cal. App. 414, 425, 193 P. 615, 620: "It may be conceded that where the minds of the parties have met respecting the terms and conditions of the more formal writing that is to be executed by them, and the agreed terms of the contract thereafter to be executed are certain and in all respects definitely understood and agreed upon in advance, either orally or by informal writing, there is in such case an obligatory contract dating from the making of the earlier agreement. 13 C. J. p. 290 et seq. But it also is elementary law that, unless the agreement to execute the future contract be definite and certain upon all the subjects to be embraced, so that nothing is left for future negotiation, it is nugatory. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gorman, 79 Kan. 643, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 637, 100 P. 647."

The principle, which respondent claims is here decisive, is aptly expressed in the following language taken from Dillingham v. Dahlgren, 52 Cal. App. 322, 329, 193 P. 832, 835:

"It is essential to the validity of a contract that the parties should have consented to the same subject-matter in the same sense. They must have contracted ad idem." Breckinridge v. Crocker, 78 Cal. 529, 536, 21 P. 179, 181. In this connection one of the rules governing the creation of contracts in general is stated in 13 Corp. Jur. 289, § 100, as follows: "The preliminary negotiations leading up to the execution of a contract must be distinguished from the contract itself. There is no meeting of the minds of the parties while they are merely negotiating as to the terms of an agreement to be entered into. To be final, the agreement must extend to all the terms which the parties intend to introduce, and material terms cannot be left for future settlement; nor is there a binding contract where, although its terms have been agreed on orally, the parties have also agreed that it shall not be binding until evidenced by writing." The same rule applies whether the preliminary negotiations were oral or in writing, if it manifestly appears that certain parts of the contract are later to be agreed upon and inserted in the formal draft. The writer has carefully selected all of the following cases as substantiating the foregoing proposition: Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 99, 109; Los Angeles Immigration & L. Co-op. Ass'n v. Phillips, 56 Cal. 539, 545; Pacific Rolling-Mill Co. v. Riverside & A. Ry. Co., 90 Cal. 627, 633, 634, 27 P. 525; Talmadge v. Arrowhead R. Co., 101 Cal. 367, 371, 35 P. 1000; Spinney v. Downing, 108 Cal. 666, 668, 41 P. 797; Jules Levy & Bro. v. A. Mautz & Co., 16 Cal. App. 666, 670, 117 P. 936; Las Palmas, etc., Distillery v. Garrett & Co., 167 Cal. 397, 400, 139 P. 1077; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset, etc., Co., 176 Cal. 461, 469, 168 P. 1037; Durst v. Jolly, 35 Cal. App. 184, 190, 169 P. 449. The rule is general in California whether the question arises in a case of specific performance (Los Angeles Immigration & L. Co-op. Ass'n v. Phillips, supra); or an action to foreclose a mortgage (Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset, etc., Co., supra); or an action to quiet title (Durst v. Jolly, supra); or an action for damages (Talmadge v. Arrowhead R. Co., supra; Jules Levy & Bro. v. A. Mautz & Co., supra; Las Palmas, etc., Distillery v. Garrett & Co., supra).

"An agreement that parties will, in the future, make such contract as they may then agree upon amounts to nothing. An agreement to enter into negotiations and agree upon the terms of a contract, if they can, cannot be made the basis of a cause of action. Where a final contract fails to express some matter, as, for instance, a time of payment, the law may imply the intention of the parties; but where a preliminary contract leaves certain terms to be agreed upon for the purpose of a final contract, there can be no implication of what the parties will agree upon. Shepard v. Carpenter, 54 Minn. 153, 55 N. W. 906. See, also, Rldgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Cases, 263, 10 Reprint, 1297."

The rule for which appellants contend is thus stated in Levin v. Saroff, 54 Cal. App. 285, 289, 201 P. 961, 963, by the same justice who wrote the last-cited decision: "Whether an instrument is a lease in present or an agreement to execute a lease in future is largely a question of the intention of the parties. Jackson v. Kisselbrack, 10 Johns (N. Y.) 336, 6 Am. Dec. 341; Pacific Imp. Co. v. Jones, 164 Cal. 260, 128 P. 404. Nevertheless, where the parties have agreed upon all essential facts there is a binding contract, notwithstanding the fact that a more formal contract is to be prepared and signed later. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, supra; Marcus v. Collins Bldg. & Const. Co., 27 Misc. Rep. 784, 57 N. Y. S. 737. The mere fact that a written lease was in contemplation does not relieve either of the contracting parties from the responsibility of a contract which was already expressed in writing. When one party refuses to execute the lease according to the contract thus made, the other has a right to fall back on the written propositions as originally made, and the absence of the formal agreement contemplated is not material."

The rule as to the necessity of the execution of a subsequent written contract is well phrased in Conner v. Plank, 25 Cal. App. 516, 518, 144 P. 295, 296: "Counsel for appellant relies upon the proposition that, where parties have agreed to reduce an understanding to writing, it never becomes a binding agreement until it is written and is signed by the parties to it. The principal cases relied upon in support of appellant's position are Pacific R.-M. Co. v. Riverside, etc., Railway Co., 90 Cal. 632, 27 P. 525, Spinney v. Downing, 108 Cal. 666, 41 P. 797, and Las Palmas Winery & Distillery v. Garrett & Co., 167 Cal. 397, 139 P. 1077 (March 17, 1914). These cases go no further than to establish the rule that, when it is a part of the understanding between the parties in negotiating the terms of their contract that the same be reduced to writing and signed by the parties, the assent to its terms must be evidenced in the manner agreed upon or it does not become a binding or completed contract. The record in each of the three cases above cited showed that the parties understood that the agreements were not to become binding upon either until evidenced in the written form. When the facts are as last stated, the rule relied upon here by the appellant will apply; but where, on the other hand, the contract is of such a nature that the law does not require it to be in writing, and the terms of the contract are in the first instance definitely agreed upon and completed, then the mere fact that immediately thereafter they agree to evidence the contract by a written instrument does not interfere with the force and effect of the oral agreement."

[4-6] It now becomes our task to analyze the offer and apply the proper principle to the facts as so shown. Since the second letter merely clarified the terms of the offer embodied in the first letter, they will be considered as together forming but one offer. According to the theory of the complaint, such offer addressed to the bondholders, when accepted by the latter, became a contract between respondents and such accepting bondholders. The contract, if any, being in writing, the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from it alone, if possible (Civ. Code, § 1639), and its language, if clear and explicit, is to govern its interpretation (Civ. Code, § 1638). There being no doubt on the face of the offer, nor any alleged, the surrounding circumstances are not to be considered. United Iron Works v. Outer H., etc., Co., 168 Cal. 81, 141 P. 917.

Since, admittedly, the forepart of the first letter merely informed the bondholders, under these quoted headings, as to corporate "Organization," "Improvements," "Financial Structure," "Fixed Charges Per Annum," "Sales Policy," "Present Condition of the Property," "Present Financial Status," "Recent Appraisal," and "Estimated Requirements to December 1st, 1928," the terms of the offer are to be found under the heading "Proposed Reorganization of the Bond Issue." Under the caption "Partial Distribution of Assets," there is outlined a proposed scheme for the retirement of certain stock in exchange for certain corporate assets, but this containing no offer is important only in so far as it may form part of the bond reorganization plan. Under the heading "Proposed Reorganization of the Bond Issue" respondents first state: "The signers of this letter own or control over 136,000 shares out of a total of 213,585 shares outstanding and after numerous conferences with the underwriters of the bond issue are willing to cause the company to subscribe to the following procedure upon the following conditions." (Italics ours.) The first item of the procedure was "that a new bond issue of $1,277,000 First Mortgage Seven Per Cent Gold Bonds, dated June 1st, 1926, due ten years from date, be issued by the company and exchanged bond for bond with the present outstanding bonds." The second item was the providing of money to pay existing indebtednesses due for taxes, reclamation, and irrigation districts assessments, and bond interest. As to raising these moneys, the letter stated (1) "the undersigned stockholders are willing to agree that the directors of the company will levy assessments upon stockholders payable between now and December 1st, 1928, in the aggregate sum of $3.00 per share, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay charges last above mentioned and (2) will also agree to see that the irrigation districts are operated in an efficient manner in so far as these funds will permit, and (3) will also agree severally to pay said assessments upon our said stock. (4) The undersigned will also cause to be paid the coupons falling due on June 1st, 1926, if, on or before June 25th, 1926 75% of the bondholders file with the Trustee their assent to the reorganization plan, a copy of which assent is enclosed. * * * (5) the undersigned will agree to have the company take the proper steps necessary in the event there is a failure of any solvent stockholder to pay his assessment, to enforce payment by suit." (Numerals and italics ours.) The third item was the partial distribution of assets. This is so because the partial distribution was expressly referred to and incorporated into the proposed reorganization, and because the amount paid by withdrawing stockholders for their proportion of corporate debt was to be given to bondholders in reduction of bond debt.

[7, 8] The present action is predicated upon respondents' failure to cause the levy of assessments to the full amount of $3 and seeks damages for such failure. In so doing, they treat this part of the offer as a separate and distinct promise. Reading all parts of the two letters together, it is clear that the three items of procedure were interdependent and together formed the whole plan, and that respondents promised that the company should subscribe to the plan as a whole, but assumed no commitment to cause the directors to levy assessments except as part of the whole plan. The primary purpose to be accomplished was the issuance of new bonds, thereby postponing the maturity of the debt evidenced thereby. To protect the existing bond debt and to obtain further credit, it was necessary to pay underlying charges by raising money through the levy of assessments. If the maturity of the debt were not delayed and foreclosure prevented by issuance of new bonds, no reason existed for the stockholders to agree to an assessment. It is apparent, therefore, that, unless the primary purpose of the offer, to wit, issuance of new bonds, were accomplished, no advantage accrued to the stockholders in the consummation of a subsidiary and auxiliary object. Since the offer was a unit, an uncertainty in any of its terms would prevent the formation of a contract by its acceptance. Meux v. Hogue, 91 Cal. 442, 27 P. 744.

[9] Conceding that the offer as to the levy of assessments and their payment is complete, yet it is vitiated by the incompleteness and uncertainty in the details of the new bond issue and the partial distribution plan. The proposal fixed the principal sum, interest rate, and maturity of the new bonds, and further provided that the new issue "be secured by a trust indenture in the customary manner as approved by the Bondholders Reorganization Committee." This sufficiently designated the property to be conveyed as security. In the absence of any allegation as to what is the customary manner, this phrase is clearly uncertain. Burnett v. Kullak, 76 Cal. 535, 18 P. 401; Wineburgh v. Gay, 27 Cal. App. 603, 150 P. 1003. The offer possibly provides for the selection of a trustee by the committee, but it is silent as to his powers and duties; what shall constitute a default, except to negative any default as to interest, if land sales were inadequate for that purpose, and except to allow a default upon "proper" but unspecified notice for failure to pay underlying liens; and how he shall foreclose. The tentative nature of the offer is also shown by the provision for the approval of the committee to the form of the indentures. This uncertainty as to form also occurs in the provision for a release schedule of lands "which may be adjusted by a majority of the Bondholders Reorganization Committee" and in another provision that "the committee may enter into an arrangement with the company to exclude such amounts" from sales "as are necessary in their opinion for sales commission, etc.," because the number and method of selection of the members of the committee was undetermined. More uncertain is the offer as to distribution of assets, for here no details are given at all, but the hope and belief is merely expressed that the commissioner of corporations will approve the plan devised, and, subject to adjustments, a portion of the stockholders will accept. It would appear, therefore, that the offer was so incomplete and uncertain as to permit the formation of no contract by its acceptance.

[10] For another reason, the acceptance of the offer failed to make a contract, because the offer by its terms clearly contemplated that the complete contract should be embodied in a written contract to be subsequently executed. The word "subscribe" in the phrase "the signers * * * are willing to cause the company to subscribe to the following procedure" clearly implies a subsequent written contract. The sentence: "We are willing to say that the committee as tentatively selected is agreeable to us in working out the necessary arrangements to carry the plan through," shows that the letter was merely a tentative basis for negotiation, which was to culminate in a final written agreement. That the bondholders so understood it is proven by the following statement in their acceptance: "It is understood that upon receipt by you of written expressions of approval from the holders of 75% in face value of outstanding bonds of the above company that the June 1st, 1926, coupons will be paid and the necessary steps will then be taken to effectuate this plan." (Italics ours.)

[11-13] In an attempt to plead an estoppel, the complaint alleges that the first letter was prepared by the company's secretary and counsel, submitted to the directors at a regular meeting, and forwarded to the bondholders, after consultation between appellants and a directors' committee appointed for that purpose; that one month later the directors granted the same committee full power to bind the company as to the details of the reorganization plan, especially as to the release schedule; that on August 9, 1926, with the knowledge and urging of respondents, 75 per cent. of the bondholders entered into a bondholders' reorganization agreement constituting appellants their agents to effectuate the reorganization plan; and that from May 29 to October 1, 1926, respondents treated the offer and acceptance as a binding agreement, and represented that they were obligated to perform the promises of the offer and suggested modifications, to which appellants replied that they were relying on the agreement. Appellants next alleged that, from the date of the offer to the filing of the complaint, they relied upon the promises of the offer, particularly as to levy and payment of assessments, and because of such reliance did forego the rights of the bondholders to foreclose, and that, after October 1, 1926, respondents did not in good faith attempt to perform the reorganization plan, but arbitrarily refused to perform. Then follow allegations as to accrual of damages because of the lessened value of the bonds, due to the financial crisis created by the failure to levy assessments. Parenthetically, this portion of the complaint convinces us as to the correctness of our previous conclusion as to the uncertainty of the offer. Estoppels must be mutual; and, since the contract was unenforceable against appellants because of its uncertainty and its contemplation of a subsequent contract, as pointed out above, and could have been repudiated by them, they cannot urge that respondents were estopped because of their attempted compliance with its terms. Spinney v. Downing, 108 Cal. 666, 41 P. 797. It is also an essential element of an equitable estoppel that the party asserting it must be ignorant of the true facts. Here the terms of the agreement were in writing, and therefore appellants cannot claim, nor have they so pleaded, that they were ignorant of the facts. Merely because respondents treated their offer as binding upon acceptance does not create an estoppel. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Sunset, etc., Co., 176 Cal. 461, 168 P. 1037.

Believing that the court's ruling was correct for the above reasons, it is unnecessary to consider further grounds urged by respondents to establish such correctness.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

115 Cal.App. 325

PEOPLE v. McDONALD.
Cr. 1160.District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
July 1, 1931.Criminal law ⇨1130(4).

Conviction will be affirmed where no brief was filed and no appearance made for appellant (Pen. Code, § 1253).

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; John F. Pullen, Judge.

Tom McDonald was convicted of attempt to commit robbery, and he appeals.
Affirmed.

A. M. Mull, Jr., of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM.

The defendant was convicted in the superior court of Sacramento county of a felony, to wit, attempt to commit robbery.

The transcript on appeal was filed in this court May 15, 1931. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellant. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on July 1, 1931. No appearance was made for appellant at the time the case was called for hearing.

Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgment and the order are affirmed.

115 Cal.App. 165

McCOLGAN v. SCOBLE.
Civ. 7422.District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
June 23, 1931.1. Appeal and error ⇨757(1).

Points advanced without statement of case, with mere reference to certain portions of testimony, held not to demand consideration.

2. Appeal and error ⇨882(19).

Where defendant's own exhibit admitted certain amount to be due, including such amount in judgment held not error on defendant's appeal.

3. Interest ⇨22(1).

Sum awarded plaintiff being due upon written contract and readily ascertainable, interest on judgment held properly allowed.

4. Partnership ⇨258(6).

Surviving partner could sue, upon written contract for payment of money to partnership, without joining representative of deceased partner.

5. Pleading ⇨237(6).

In action upon written contract for payment of money, allowing plaintiff to amend by pleading supplemental contract, so as to conform to proof, held not error.

It appeared that partnership which plaintiff represented had agreed to pay to defendant one-twelfth of any money found necessary to settle with defendant's creditors, not exceeding $500, and that defendant agreed to pay to partnership, in event of compromise of certain pending litigation, one-sixth of all moneys received in settlement. Thereafter supplemental contract was executed, at which time partnership paid to defendant $500 under terms and conditions of first contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by R. McColgan against Alice G. Scoble. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Alice G. Scoble, in pro. per.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, P. J.

Plaintiff sued as the surviving partner of the partnership known as Daniel A. McColgan. The suit was upon a written contract for the payment of money. Plaintiff had judgment for $2,298.36. The defendant appeals upon typewritten transcripts.

In the month of May, 1919, defendant became involved in litigation over certain real property. Pending the litigation, claims of certain creditors of defendant's husband were asserted, and defendant deemed it advisable to adjust these claims prior to the termination of the litigation. For this purpose she entered into a written contract with the McColgans (which will hereafter be referred to as the partnership) whereby it agreed to pay to defendant one-twelfth of any money found necessary to settle with the said creditors not exceeding $500, and defendant agreed to pay to the partnership in the event of a compromise of the pending litigation one-sixth of all moneys received in settlement. Thereafter a supplemental contract was executed, at which time the partnership paid to the defendant $500 under the terms and conditions of the first contract. The litigation was settled for $18,500 after the creditors' claims had been adjusted in the amount of $7,000. On the trial the issues between the parties were these: Plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to one-sixth of the full sum of $18,500, and the defendant claimed that he was entitled to only one-sixth of the sum of $11,500, that being the amount received after the settlement of creditors' claims, plus eleven-twelfths of the advance of $500, making a total liability on the part of the defendant of $2,298.36. The trial court adopted the theory of the defendant and entered judgment accordingly.

[1] The appeal is taken by the defendant in propria persona. She advances certain points without a statement of the case and with but a mere reference to certain portions of the testimony. Points so presented do not demand consideration. Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 690, 76 P. 661; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Reay, 96 Cal. App. 568, 571, 274 P. 401.

[2] However, as the appeal is not presented by counsel, we may briefly refer to these points in order. It is argued that the court erred in allowing judgment for more than $1,840.03, "the amount due the partnership shown by Exhibit C." The point is that the court should not have allowed recovery in the sum of $458.33, eleven-twelfths of the amount advanced by the partnership to the defendant. Exhibit C was offered in evidence by the defendant and admits this amount to be due; hence under defendant's own evidence the amount admitted to be due is the same sum which was allowed in the judgment.

[3] It is stated that the trial court erred in allowing interest on the judgment. No argument is made upon the point, and, inasmuch as the sum awarded became due upon a written contract and the amount due was readily ascertainable, the interest was properly allowed.

[4] It is argued that the court erred in overruling the demurrer because it appears that Daniel A. McColgan is deceased. As heretofore stated, the suit was brought by the surviving partner. The demurrer did not specify a failure to join a representative of the decedent, but, even if it had, the demurrer would have been without merit.

[5] Finally it is stated that the court erred in allowing an amendment to the complaint. The amendment consisted merely in pleading the supplemental contract heretofore referred to, and was allowed for the purpose of permitting the pleading to conform to the proofs. There is no error in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 201
THORPE v. LOS ANGELES GAS &
ELECTRIC CORPORATION.
Civ. 7687.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 26, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 25, 1931.

1. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 72.

Where land abutting on street is described by lot number and recorded maps, and purchase is at stipulated rate per acre, street area is not included in reckoning price.

2. Vendor and purchaser $\S$ 72.

Under contract, street area could not be considered in determining total purchase price at stipulated rate per acre.

The contract specifically included other street areas in a paragraph enumerating the property to be purchased and paid for, in which the street in question was unnamed, thus showing that the area of the street in question was not to be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Marshall F. McComb, Judge.

Action by A. C. Thorpe against the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

D. A. Stuart and Edward A. Stuart, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Paul Overton, S. W. Guthrie, Samuel Poorman, Jr., and Douglas Van Dyke, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by plaintiff upon the judgment roll, from a judgment in his favor for $653 and interest and costs. The controversy arises over the construction of a written contract for the purchase by defendant from plaintiff of certain parcels of real property, and the sole question for determination is whether or not, in reckoning and determining the total purchase price at the rate per acre stipulated in the contract, the area of the public street known as Old South street, whereon certain of said parcels abutted, should be included. The trial court in the making of the award to the plaintiff excluded such area and rendered a judgment accordingly.

The contract by way of recital states: (1) The defendant "is desirous of acquiring title to a strip of land one hundred ten (110) feet in width over and across said Carlton Tract, said strip being that portion of said tract (and including the present South Street) lying between the southerly line of the present right of way of Pacific Electric Railway and a line 110 feet southerly from * * * said southerly right of way line, and being parallel therewith; and all that portion of Texas, Maryland and Virginia Streets within said strip. * * *" (2) That "it is the desire of both parties" that defendant "shall acquire such land as may be owned by plaintiff and included within said strip, together with certain other lands hereinafter specified. * * *" (3) Defendant agrees to pay therefor "at the rate of Three Thousand Five Hundred ($3,500) dollars per acre as hereinafter provided. * * *" (4) Plaintiff agrees to convey within thirty days "all of said lands described in paragraph 'First' hereof. * * *" Defendant shall pay to plaintiff "at the rate of Three Thousand Five Hundred ($3500) dollars per acre for all of the land described in paragraph 'First' hereof, to which it can secure satisfactory title, as aforesaid, * * * also to pay at the rate of $3500 per acre for all contained in portion of Tex. Md. and Vir. Sts. in said strip when vacated and satisfactory title derived through" plaintiff, which said description does not include any reference to the South street area above mentioned.

After enumerating certain provisions not here involved, the contracts continue: (4) Defendant shall endeavor to purchase certain parcels owned by said parties and agree for a stipulated price to convey to plaintiff all such parcels as are not included in the 110-foot strip. (5) Defendant "agrees to endeavor to secure the vacation of and legal title to old South Street in Carlton tract, from the easterly line of Texas Avenue to the westerly line of Michigan Avenue and will, if required so to do as a condition precedent thereto, dedicate * * * in lieu thereof, a new South Street forty (40) feet in width between said easterly line of Texas avenue and the southerly boundary line of said Carlton Tract * * * adjacent to, the southerly line of the one hundred ten (110) foot strip. * * *" (6) Plaintiff agrees to execute all instruments required "to secure the vacation of South Street, that portion of Texas, Maryland and the 40 ft. between Blocks 36 and 37, Virginia St. as herein provided for, and not to oppose * * * such vacation, and, as may thereafter be necessary, to secure to" defendant title satisfactory to it to said 110-foot strip at $3,500 per acre "as herein provided." In this section the words "Texas, Maryland and Virginia Streets" were interlined, and the trial court found that such interlineations were made before the signing.

It will be observed that there is no specific provision for the payment of the area in Old South street unless it is contained in paragraph 6, but there is a specific provision for payment at an agreed price for all the area contained in Texas, Maryland, and Virginia streets when vacated. The sole question then to be determined is whether the area embraced in Old South street should be included in determining the gross purchase price to be paid plaintiff. The court determined this adversely to the plaintiff, and the correctness of this conclusion is the sole question in issue. The appellant contends, first, that it is unfair and unreasonable; and, second, that the words in paragraph 6 should be given their usual and ordinary sense and meaning, which it contends was not done by the trial court, that provision had been made for all parts of lots, streets, and alleys except South street area, and that, if it was not the intention to pay for that area, there was no reason to refer in paragraph 6 to the acre purchase price figure at all; third, that any uncertainty, if such exists, should be most strongly construed against the promisor.

[1] It is our opinion that these contentions are fully disposed of both in law and logic, and that the determination of the trial court is correct. The weight of authorities sustains the position that, where land fronting or abutting on a street is described by lot number and recorded maps, if purchased at a stipulated rate per acre, the gross price is to be reckoned on the area of the lots exclusive of the street.

In the case of Earl v. Dutour, 181 Cal. 58, 183 P. 438, 6 A. L. R. 1163, the plaintiff had a decree quieting his title to a strip of land 15 feet wide adjacent to the center line of lot 17 of the Hilliard tract, of which lot plaintiff and defendant owned respectively the easterly and westerly half. The question in dispute was whether the center line of the lot formed the eastern or western boundary line of the strip of land in suit; its solution depending upon the construction to be placed upon the word "lot" in the deed by which was conveyed to defendant the westerly one-half of lot 17 of the Hilliard tract as per map recorded. The map indicated that the western boundary of lot 17 was the center line of an avenue 60 feet in width. Plaintiff successfully contended in the trial court that the 30-foot strip covered by the avenue was part of the lot within the meaning of the deed and that therefore the eastern boundary of defendant's line was a line half way between the center line of the avenue and the eastern boundary of lot 17. The Supreme Court rejected this contention, saying: "However clearly it may appear that the owner of a lot holds title to the center of an adjoining street, subject to the public easement, and that the boundary of the lot is technically, therefore, the center of the street, in view of the fact that the owner of such lot or land has no right to the possession or occupancy of any portion of such public street, we are of the opinion that the word 'lot,' as generally and customarily used, does not include such portion of the street. Wegge v. Madler, 129 Wis. 412, 109 N. W. 223, 116 Am. St. Rep. 953. As stated by the Supreme Court of Indiana: 'Lot and street are two separate and distinct terms, and have separate and distinct meanings. The term "lots," in its common and ordinary meaning, includes that portion of the platted territory measured and set apart for individual and private use and occupancy. While the term "streets" means that portion set apart and designated for the use of the public, and such is the sense in which such terms will be presumed to have been used, unless it be made to appear that a contrary meaning was intended.' * * * In the absence, therefore, of any circumstance indicating that a more unusual and technical meaning of the word 'lot' was contemplated and intended by the grantor, it will be presumed that the grant of a fractional part or of a given number of feet of a certain lot or parcel of land conveys the given fractional part or number of feet of that portion of the lot or parcel of land which is set apart for private use and occupancy."

In Joens v. Baumbach, 193 Cal. 567, 226 P. 400, 401, the court says: " * * * When a grantor describes his land, as was done in this case, as fronting on the county road, and running 'thence northerly nine hundred (900) feet,' it will be presumed that the grant conveys the given number of feet of land which is set apart for private use and occupancy."

In 4 Cal. Jur. 379, in discussing the presumption declared by section 831 of the Civil Code that "an owner of land bounded by a road or street is presumed to own the center of the way, but the contrary may be shown," and the rule (Civ. Code, § 1112) that, if land be described in a conveyance as so bounded, the line is presumed to be the center of the street or road, unless a contrary intention appears, it is said: "If lots are sold by number, and not by metes and bounds, reference being made to a registered map and plat, the conveyance carries title to the center of the street. * * * And in conveying a certain quantity of land in a block, the quantity is not measured from the center line of the street; it is measured exclusive of the street."

The only case in which the principle here involved is reflected in the actual gross purchase price paid is in Pratt v. Law, 9 Cranch, 456, 490, 3 L. Ed. 791. In that case where a large area of land was purchased at 5 cents per square foot, which land had been divided into squares and lots, it was contended that in computing the areas the lots were not chargeable for their proportion of the internal alley in the square in which they were situated, laid out for the common benefit of those lots. In sustaining this contention, the court adverts to the circumstance that, under the president's instructions, there was reason to think that these alleys were rights of way appurtenant to the lots of each square respectively, and then proceeds: "If this claim of Law's [the purchaser] extended to the alleys in those squares of which the whole was conveyed to him, there would be some ground for disputing it. But as it is confined to those squares only in which the right could not be merged, because some one or more of the lots were the property of another, we think the allowance ought to be made; for Law certainly has not acquired a title in fee simple in those alleys."

[2] The law as indicated by the authorities hereinabove stated has to do with determining the area embraced in real estate transactions involving land abutting upon public streets or highways, and is persuasive argument in support of the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff should not be paid, except upon conclusive evidence that the parties so intended, for the land to which he had no right of use or occupancy in any other degree or manner than is accorded to the public generally. Such being the law with respect to an area of land abutting upon a public street, it was incumbent upon plaintiff in contracting for payment for the area embraced within Old South street to have his contract, to that effect, worded in such unmistakable terms as to foreclose any doubt on that question, in the place of which we have a contract that by its terms industriously negatives that purpose. The other street areas are specifically included in the paragraphs enumerating the property to be purchased and paid for in which South street is, as we take it, significantly unnamed. In paragraph 6, after outlining the duties of the parties with respect to the abandonment of street areas, the section concludes with the statement: "To secure to defendant title satisfactory to it to said 110-foot strip at $3500 per acre as herein provided." This is not a promise to pay for South street, but is merely a recital of matters determined in the preceding paragraph of the agreement as to payments. The words "as herein provided" are indicative of that understanding by the parties to the contract. There is no price fixed in paragraph 6; the price fixing having been accomplished in the preceding paragraph wherein no mention is made of South street.

So far as the contract itself is concerned, there is nothing unfair or unreasonable in the construction placed upon the contract by the court. By the terms of the contract the defendant was obliged to supply a 40-foot street in the place and stead of Old South street, and he did so, and this circumstance is not without significance. In differentiating in the manner of payment between Old South street and Texas, Maryland, and Virginia streets, the parties no doubt took into consideration that with respect to Texas, Maryland, and Virginia streets, there was no compensation by way of substitution of other streets.

From the foregoing we are satisfied that the construction placed upon the contract by the court is correct, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

115 Cal.App. 187

McINTIRE v. CHEVROLET MOTOR CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al.

Civ. 494.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

June 25, 1931.

1. Conspiracy ☞6.

Conspiracy is not actionable unless combination results in perpetration of unlawful act or of injurious act by unlawful means.

2. Conspiracy ☞1.

Elements of civil conspiracy action are formation and operation of conspiracy and damage resulting to plaintiff from acts done in furtherance of common design.

3. Conspiracy ☞18.

Complaint alleging conspiracy which destroyed business of corporation in which plaintiff claimed to be entitled to interest held not to show actionable conspiracy.

Complaint contained no allegations that plaintiff had any interest in the business of the corporation, but the real substance of the complaint was that he had bought and paid for stock in the corporation which he did not receive, and there was no allegation that the plaintiff was induced to purchase or failed to receive the stock as a result of the conspiracy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clair S. Tappaan, Judge.

Action by A. W. McIntire against the Chevrolet Motor Company of California and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Jas. W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Flint & MacKay and Robert B. Jackson, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JENNINGS, J.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal by the superior court after the demurrers of defendants to his amended complaint were sustained by said court, without leave to amend.

Appellant makes no point of the refusal of permission to amend, and bases his appeal solely on the sufficiency of the complaint.

The action was instituted to recover damages arising from an alleged conspiracy between defendants by means of which the business of defendant H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, in which corporation appellant claimed to be entitled to an interest, was destroyed.

The facts alleged, upon which the cause of action is based, are pleaded substantially as follows:

That for more than a year prior to September 1, 1927, respondent H. I. Langworthy was the duly authorized distributor of Chevrolet motor cars in the town of Compton, Los Angeles county, and was sole agent, in said town, of the respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California, for the sale of Chevrolet automobiles.

That on July 14, 1927, said respondent H. I. Langworthy organized a corporation under the name of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated. The said corporation had a capital stock of $20,000 divided into 20,000 shares of stock of the par value of $1 each. Articles of incorporation were duly filed with the secretary of state and the corporation received a charter authorizing it to engage in the business of buying and selling automobiles and automobile accessories at wholesale and retail and to do a general automobile repair business in the state of California. H. I. Langworthy and two other individuals, Bart F. Wade and Walter L. Fowler, were named as directors of the corporation thus organized.

That on August 26, 1927, the corporation, upon application to the commissioner of corporations of California, received a permit to issue to respondent H. I. Langworthy 7,500 shares of capital stock of the corporation in exchange for the business and assets of H. I. Langworthy, and on September 1, 1927, H. I. Langworthy transferred all the assets of his business to the corporation in exchange for 7,500 shares of stock of the corporation and there was at that time issued to Walter L.

Fowler 2,500 shares of stock of the corporation.

That on December 16, 1927, appellant, on the representation of H. I. Langworthy that the stock in trade of the corporation was of a value in excess of $10,000 and that the interest of Walter L. Fowler could be purchased for $2,500, agreed to purchase said interest for said sum and paid H. I. Langworthy $1,500 as part payment of the purchase price of said interest and at the same time H. I. Langworthy agreed to cause Fowler's stock to be transferred to appellant and that Walter L. Fowler would resign as director of the corporation and that Langworthy would cause appellant to be elected to the office of director of the corporation.

That respondent H. I. Langworthy thereupon purchased Fowler's interest for less than $1,500 and Fowler indorsed the stock certificate representing his interest in the corporation in blank and resigned as director of the corporation. Respondent H. I. Langworthy then caused the Fowler stock to be transferred to one Gradoville, an employee of the corporation, who was elected a director of the corporation. Respondent Langworthy represented to appellant that the transfer of stock to Gradoville and his election as a director were only temporary expedients. That, during all the time when appellant was carrying on the negotiations which resulted in his acquisition of the Fowler stock in respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, the respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California was insisting that respondent Langworthy secure additional capital to carry on the business of the corporation and in all dealings with appellant the respondent H. I. Langworthy acted with the advice and encouragement of said Chevrolet Motor Company of California; that thereafter and on December 31, 1927, respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California delivered to the respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, four Chevrolet motorcars on which payment of $1,000 was due; that on said date appellant paid to the respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, an additional sum of $1,000, which sum was used to pay the respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California for the automobiles thus delivered to the corporation, but that the shares of stock which appellant had agreed to purchase for the sum of $2,500 were never transferred to appellant nor was he ever elected to the office of director of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated; and that appellant never received any consideration for the money which he paid.

That on March 12, 1928, respondents Chevrolet Motor Company of California, H. I. Langworthy, and H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, conspired together to make it appear that H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, did not have sufficient capital to carry on the agency for the sale and distribution of Chevrolet motorcars and that the agency should be terminated to enable respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California to appoint a new agent without incurring any liability to respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, and that pursuant to said conspiracy and to effectuate its purpose, the respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California, on March 12, 1928, wrongfully and unlawfully removed from the place of business of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, the four Chevrolet motorcars theretofore delivered to said corporation, for which the Chevrolet Motor Company of California had received the sum of $1,000 paid by appellant, and wrongfully and unlawfully converted said automobiles to its own use; that about the same time respondent H. I. Langworthy, acting with the consent and upon the advice of the respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California, and in pursuance of the conspiracy, stopped payment on a check drawn by respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, in favor of General Motors Acceptance Corporation; that at said time the respondents induced the Compton National Bank to bring suit on a past due note of respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, and to attach all assets of the said corporation to secure payment of said note; that in pursuance of the conspiracy respondent H. I. Langworthy permitted judgment to go against respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, by default and all of its assets to be sold to satisfy the judgment. And the respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California, pursuant to the conspiracy and with the consent of respondent H. I. Langworthy and without authority of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, canceled the agency of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, whereby the business of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, was completely destroyed and all the corporate assets were lost; that all of the acts of the said respondents were malicious and done with the intent and purpose of evading liability to appellant for the money expended by him under his agreement to purchase Fowler's interest in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated.

That although appellant invested the sum of $2,500 in stock of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, with the understanding and agreement that he should succeed to the interest of Walter L. Fowler and become a director of said respondent corporation, he did not in fact become such director and the act of respondent H. I. Langworthy in the surrender of the automobile agency was unauthorized by respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated.

From the foregoing averments, it is clear that appellant has attempted to allege a conspiracy between respondents to defraud him of the interest in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated.

porated, which he had agreed to purchase and for which it is alleged he had in fact paid the agreed purchase price.

[1, 2] Conspiracy is not actionable unless the combination results in the perpetration of an unlawful act or of some injurious act by unlawful means. Moropoulos v. C. H. & O. B. Fuller Co., 186 Cal. 679, 683, 200 P. 601; Menner v. Slater, 148 Cal. 284, 83 P. 35. The elements of an action for civil conspiracy are the formation and operation of the conspiracy and damage resulting to plaintiff from an act or acts done in furtherance of the common design. Mox, Incorporated, v. Woods, 202 Cal. 675, 677, 262 P. 302.

[3] An analysis of the facts hereinabove narrated fails to disclose the perpetration by the alleged conspirators of an unlawful act or of an injurious act by unlawful means. It is not alleged that appellant was induced to purchase the stock as a result of the conspiracy or that appellant failed to receive the interest in the respondent corporation which he purchased as a part of the plan of the conspiracy. It is charged that H. I. Langworthy alone brought about the purchase of the stock and that it was through his dereliction alone that the stock was not issued to appellant and that appellant was not made a director in the respondent corporation. It is alleged that respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California was, during all of the time when appellant was negotiating for the purchase of stock in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, and after he had agreed to buy said stock, insisting that respondent H. I. Langworthy should secure additional capital and that in all dealings between appellant and respondent H. I. Langworthy the latter acted with the advice and encouragement of the former. But this was neither unlawful nor did it amount to an injurious act accomplished unlawfully. There was nothing unlawful or injurious about the delivery of the four Chevrolet automobiles to H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, by the Chevrolet Motor Company of California. There was nothing unlawful in the inducement by the alleged conspirators, of the action instituted on the past due note by the bank that owned it, and while the bringing of the suit may have resulted injuriously to H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, it was not, so far as appears, brought about by unlawful means. It can hardly be maintained that permitting judgment in the suit to go by default was unlawful, since it is alleged that the note was overdue. Neither can it be maintained that there was anything unlawful in permitting the assets of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, to be sold on execution to satisfy an obviously just judgment. Stopping payment of the check drawn by H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, which is alleged to have been done in pursuance of the conspiracy, was not of itself an unlawful act, nor can it be discovered from the allegations of the complaint that any injury was occasioned thereby to appellant. It is alleged that as a part of the plan of the conspiracy to destroy the business of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, the Chevrolet Motor Company of California on March 12, 1928, wrongfully and unlawfully took and removed the four Chevrolet automobiles delivered to H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, on December 31, 1927, partial payment for which had been made by H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, from the final payment of $1,000 made by appellant for purchase of stock in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, and that the Chevrolet Motor Company of California wrongfully converted the automobiles to its own use. It is also further alleged that pursuant to the conspiracy and with the consent of respondent H. I. Langworthy, and without the consent of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California canceled the agency of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, for the sale and distribution of Chevrolet automobiles in the town of Compton, whereby the business of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, was entirely destroyed, and that the various acts of respondents in carrying out the conspiracy were done maliciously and with the intent of evading liability to appellant for the money paid by him under his agreement to purchase an interest in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated. With respect to the alleged seizure and conversion of the four Chevrolet automobiles, it may be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that it resulted in injury to H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, and that the allegations of the complaint show that it was accomplished unlawfully, but since it does not appear that appellant was a stockholder or the owner of any interest in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, the averments of the complaint fail to indicate that appellant was injured thereby. The same reasoning applies to the cancellation by the Chevrolet Motor Company of California of the agency which H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, had for the distribution of Chevrolet automobiles in the town of Compton. It may be conceded that the allegations of the complaint are sufficient to show that by taking away the agency, the respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California accomplished the complete destruction of the entire business of respondent H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, and that this manifestly injurious act was accomplished unlawfully, but this does not make out a case of injury sustained by appellant through the unlawful combination of respondents. There are no allegations in the complaint indicating that appellant had any interest in the business of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated. Indeed, when the whole story is told, it is clear that appellant's complaint is that he bought and paid for stock in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, which he did not receive. But he made this agreement with H. I. Langworthy and paid the greater part of the purchase price directly to H. I. Langworthy. There is no pretense that respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California or the corporation of H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, had anything to do with the making of the agreement for the purchase of the stock. There is, to be sure, an allegation that H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, was a one-man corporation, controlled and operated by H. I. Langworthy, but other allegations of the complaint negative this statement, for it appears that two other individuals owned stock in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, and that one of these individuals, Fowler, had a substantial interest in H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated. Furthermore, if it be conceded that appellant's contention that H. I. Langworthy, Incorporated, was in fact the mere corporate double of H. I. Langworthy, who dominated and controlled it, the complaint is fatally defective in that there is no allegation that the Chevrolet Motor Company of California participated in any way in the fraud alleged to have been perpetrated upon appellant.

It follows, therefore, that the complaint, drawn as it is on the theory of actionable conspiracy, does not meet the test required of such an action. Moropoulos v. C. H. & O. B. Fuller Co., supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

115 Cal.App. 103

PEOPLE v. ACOSTA.

Cr. 51.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

June 18, 1931.

1. Criminal law ⇨511(1).

In prosecution for possessing still, evidence held to sufficiently corroborate witnesses claimed to be accomplices (Pen. Code, § 1111).

2. Criminal law ⇨511(1).

Corroboration of accomplices required by statute need only be slight (Pen. Code, § 1111).

3. Criminal law ⇨507(2).

Where defendant was charged with possessing still, one living in house containing still who was not shown to have anything to do with possession of still could not be considered "accomplice" (Pen. Code, § 1111).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Accomplice," see Words and Phrases.]

4. Criminal law ⇨982.

"Conviction" of felony which prevents granting of probation in subsequent case is legal proceeding of record which ascertains guilt of party upon which sentence or judgment is founded and includes plea of guilty (Pen. Code, § 1203).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Convicted; Conviction," see Words and Phrases.]

5. Criminal law ⇨982.

Provisions of statute respecting effect of completing probation held not in conflict (Pen. Code, § 1203, subd. 4).

Pen. Code, § 1203, subd. 4, provides in first part that after defendant has completed his probation and action has been dismissed, he shall thereafter be relieved from all penalties and disabilities resulting from offense of which he has been convicted, and last part of section provides that in any subsequent prosecution for any other offense, prior conviction shall have same effect as if probation had not been granted or action dismissed.

6. Criminal law ⇨982.

Where defendant pleaded guilty to violation of vehicle act and was granted probation, and later action was dismissed, he could not be granted probation after subsequent conviction for possessing still (Pen. Code, § 1203; St. 1923, p. 564).

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Jesus Acosta was convicted of possessing a still, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Duckworth & Harrison, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BARNARD, P. J.

The defendant was convicted by a jury of the crime of possession of a still, a felony, and was sentenced to imprisonment at Folsom. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It appears from the evidence that on January 7, 1931, certain officers raided a house in San Bernardino, Cal., and found therein a still and coil which were still warm, a hydrometer (an instrument usually used to measure the content of alcohol in liquor), a quantity of intoxicating liquor, and several barrels of mash. The barrels of mash were setting in an excavation below the floor, and were covered by the floor boards, which had been loosened. When the officers entered the house, between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening they found Mr. and Mrs. Moreno in bed in one of the bedrooms and a Mr. Bejarano in bed in another bedroom. All of these parties denied having anything to do with the still. Moreno testified that he had been promised work at picking oranges by a man named Rivera, and that Rivera told him he could live in his house, rent free. He had been living there some two weeks before the raid. Bejarano testified that he had come to San Bernardino to look for work and had slept in the house three nights, being absent in the daytime in his search for employment. Moreno testified that Rivera and this appellant had been making liquor in the house on the morning of January 7, 1931; that on the evening of January 7 he saw the appellant working with the still; and that "they made liquor." A police officer testified that some days later he took Rivera into the presence of Moreno and Bejarano and asked them if this was the man who had the still in the house, to which both answered, "No." They were then confronted with this appellant and both said he was the man who had the still there. Moreno was tried jointly with this appellant, was found guilty and released on probation, and has not appealed. Bejarano was held to answer on the same charge, but on motion of the district attorney, the charge was dismissed as to him on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence.

While appellant concedes that the evidence is sufficient to show that he had possession of the still in question, his first contention is that this evidence is largely that of Moreno, Mrs. Moreno, and Bejarano; that they were all accomplices; and that their testimony is not sufficiently corroborated under the provisions of section 1111 of the Penal Code.

Aside from these three parties, who are claimed to have been accomplices, testimony was given by Barlota Torres and Mrs. Pasquel Torres. Barlota Torres testified that he went to the house in question on January 7, 1931, at about 5 o'clock in the evening; that he saw appellant and Rivera in the back room of the house making liquor; that they were both around the still; that Rivera was measuring or testing the liquor with a tester to see how high it was getting; and that he sent the appellant on an errand, from which he later returned with a hundred-pound sack of sugar. He also identified the still and the liquor in evidence as being similar to those he saw in the house that night. Mrs. Pasquel Torres stated she had gone to the house on January 3, 1927, where she had seen appellant and Rivera distilling liquor; that she saw the still on the stove; that this appellant was distilling; and that she saw the liquor dropping from the coil.

[1-3] We think the testimony of the two witnesses last above referred to constitutes sufficient corroboration of the other witnesses, even if they be deemed to be all accomplices. The corroboration required by section 1111 of the Penal Code need only be slight. People v. Viets, 79 Cal. App. 576, 250 P. 588, and cases there cited. In addition, it may be said that Bejarano was not "liable to prosecution for the same offense" in the sense of there being any hope of success in such a prosecution, and he should not be considered as an accomplice. There is absolutely no evidence in the record which even tends to show that he had anything to do with possessing the still.

[4-6] Appellant next contends that the court erred in refusing to grant him probation. It appears that in 1927 appellant was charged with the violation of section 146 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 564), and that after a plea of guilty he was granted probation. It also appears that in December, 1929, in accordance with section 1203 of the Penal Code, he was permitted to withdraw this plea of guilty and enter a plea of not guilty, after which the action was dismissed. In the instant case, the court stated that the application for probation was denied for the reason that it could not be granted under the provisions of section 1203, since the appellant had previously been convicted of a felony. That section provides that probation "shall not be granted to any defendant unless the court shall be satisfied that he has never in any place been previously convicted of a felony." Subdivision 4 of said section reads as follows: "Every defendant who has fulfilled the conditions of his probation for the entire period thereof, or who shall have been discharged from probation prior to the termination of the period thereof, shall at any time prior to the expiration of the maximum period of punishment for the offense of which he has been convicted, dating from said discharge from probation of said termination of said period of probation, be permitted by the court to withdraw his plea of guilty and enter a plea of not guilty; or if he has been convicted after a plea of not guilty, the court shall set aside the verdict of guilty; and in either case the court shall thereupon dismiss the accusation or information against such defendant, who shall thereafter be released from penalties and disabilities resulting from the offense or crime of which he has been convicted. The probationer shall be informed of this right and privilege in his probation papers. The probationer may make such application and change of plea in person or by attorney authorized in writing; provided, that in any subsequent prosecution of such defendant for any other offense such prior conviction may be pleaded and proved and shall have the same effect as if probation had not been granted or the accusation or information dismissed."

Appellant argues that there can be no conviction until sentence is imposed, relying on the case of Ex parte Rosencrantz (Cal. Sup.) 297 P. 15. That case involved a violation of section 476a of the Penal Code. Under that section the nature of the offense, as to whether or not it is a felony or misdemeanor, is determined by the sentence actually imposed. On the other hand, section 146 of the California Vehicle Act provides that the violation thereof will constitute a felony without any alternative. The word "conviction" is usually defined as the legal proceeding of record which ascertains the guilt of the party upon which the sentence or judgment is founded. People v. Rodrigo, 69 Cal. 601, 11 P. 481. This includes a plea of guilty as well as conviction by a jury, and the language used in section 1203 of the Penal Code plainly shows that such an interpretation is contemplated thereby. Appellant argues that there is a conflict between that part of subdivision 4 of section 1203 which provides that after a defendant has completed his probation and the action has been dismissed, he shall "thereafter be released from all penalties and disabilities resulting from the offense or crime of which he has been convicted," and the last part of the section, which provides that in any subsequent prosecution for any other offense, such prior conviction shall have the same effect as if probation had not been granted or the action dismissed. We see no conflict here. The provision that the defendant shall be released from all penalties and disabilities resulting from the offense of which he has been convicted, applies to the previous offense which resulted in his being released on probation. It does not apply to any subsequent offense which may be committed by him. The provision that such prior conviction may be considered in any subsequent prosecution for any other offense is in no way a penalty for the first offense, upon which probation was given. It is simply one of the circumstances surrounding the commission of the second offense. It is usual to make the degree of punishment for any offense dependent upon the circumstances surrounding its commission. For instance, burglary in the nighttime is punished differently from burglary in the daytime. In the granting of probation, many circumstances are to be considered in order to determine whether or not the defendant is one to whom such a privilege should be extended. In such determination, whether or not a defendant has or has not profited by a previous lesson and a previous leniency granted, may be much more important than whether or not he has complied with certain instructions during his probationary period. The provision we are here considering merely considers the fact of previous conviction for a felony in connection with the question as to whether a privilege should be granted in connection with a new offense, and it is in no way a further punishment for the former offense, the action in which has been dismissed. The very act providing for such a change of plea and dismissal after a period of probation also provides that such action shall not prevent such a prior conviction being considered upon any subsequent prosecution for any other offense, and that in any such subsequent prosecution, the prior conviction shall have the same effect as if probation had never been granted and as if the action had never been dismissed. In People v. Rosencrantz, 95 Cal. App. 92, 272 P. 786, the court said: "The defendant denied this conviction and, the issue having been joined, the jury found against the defendant. She now argues that, because she was given probation following that conviction, it might be possible that the plea of guilty had been withdrawn and the charge dismissed. Aside from the fact that it was for the defendant, and not the state, to prove those circumstances if they existed, it is sufficient to say that they are wholly immaterial here. The code section (Pen. Code, sec. 644) relates to a prior conviction of a felony, and not to the manner in which the judgment on the conviction has been expiated. (Pen. Code, sec. 1203, subd. 4)." See, also, People v. Payne (Cal. App.) 289 P. 909, and People v. Superior Court, 208 Cal. 688, 284 P. 449.

In our opinion no error is here shown.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 252
WASHBURN v. KELTZ,
Civ. 403.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
June 27, 1931.

1. Executors and administrators Ⓒ443(7).

Complaint against estate, not averring that contract claim sued on has been presented to administrator, fails to state cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 1500).

2. Executors and administrators Ⓒ228(3).

Filing claim in proceeding before Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement, and service of unverified copy thereof on administrator, held not to comply with statute relating to claims against decedent's estate (Code Civ. Proc. § 1500).

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; V. N. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Lillian M. Washburn against E. E. Keltz, administrator of the estate of Emily M. Whiting, deceased. From an order sustaining the demurrer to the amended complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Karl F. Kennedy, of Coalinga, for appellant.

D. B. Roberts, of El Centro, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

The allegations of the amended complaint recite the following facts:

That respondent was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting administrator of the estate of Emily M. Whiting, deceased. That on or about February 8, 1929, letters of administration upon her estate were issued to defendant. That defendant caused a notice to creditors of said deceased to be published in the manner required by law, requiring all persons having claims against said deceased to exhibit them to said administrator at El Centro, Cal.; said place being specified therein as his place of business, within four months from February 28, 1929, the last day for filing claims in said estate being June 28, 1929. That on June 15, 1929, appellant filed an original affidavit or verified claim (a copy of which was attached to the original complaint, marked "exhibit A," and referred to in the amended complaint by reference only) with the Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement in California, at its regular office in the Rowell building, Fresno, Cal., setting forth certain items of wages due her from said estate for services performed in the city of Fresno.

A portion of the purported claim contains wording as follows: "Bureau of Labor Statistics of the State of California. Mrs. Lillian M. Jordan, Applicant, v. E. E. Keltz, Administrator of the Estate of Emily M. Whiting, Deceased, Respondent. Affidavit of Applicant." Then follows an affidavit setting forth the alleged facts supporting her claim for wages before the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The affidavit closes with this prayer: "Wherefore affiant prays that the wages claimed of $570.63 may be adjudged and decreed in these proceedings to be due and payable against the estate Emily M. Whiting, Deceased," etc.

That on June 15, 1929, a full, true, and correct copy of said affidavit and claim, unverified, was served upon defendant administrator. On July 12, 1929, appellant attempted to file a claim, apparently in proper form, with respondent as such administrator, but, the time for filing claims having expired, respondent refused to receive or file said claim, and so notified appellant.

The only allegation in plaintiff's complaint as to the presenting or filing of a creditor's claim against the estate is the allegation of filing the affidavit or claim with the Division of Labor Statistics and serving a copy thereon on respondent administrator.

The only question involved in this appeal is whether or not the filing of such an affidavit or claim in a proceeding before the Division of Labor Statistics and Law Enforcement, and the service of a copy thereof, unverified, upon the administrator, complied with the statute relating to the presenting and filing of claims against the estate of a decedent.

The statute provides that all claims arising upon contract must be filed or presented within a time limited in the notice to creditors, and any claim not so filed or presented is barred forever. Code Civ. Proc. § 1493. It further provides that no holder of any claim against an estate shall maintain any action thereon unless the claim is first filed with the clerk (of the court) or presented to the executor or administrator. Code Civ. Proc. § 1500.

[1] A complaint against an estate, stating a cause of action founded on contract, which does not aver that a claim for the cause of action sued on has been thus presented to the administrator, fails to state a cause of action. Morse v. Steele, 149 Cal. 303, 86 P. 693; Morrow v. Barker, 119 Cal. 65, 51 P. 12; Burke v. Maguire, 154 Cal. 456, 463, 98 P. 21.

[2] Appellant claims that the filing of her verified claim with the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Fresno was a sufficient compliance with the statute, and relieved her of the necessity of filing a verified claim in the estate with the clerk of the court, or presenting a verified claim to the administrator of the estate, and cites as her authority Griffith v. Lewin, 129 Cal. 596, 62 P. 172; Guerian v. Joyce, 133 Cal. 405, 65 P. 972. We see no merit to this contention.

Appellant relies upon the case of Doolittle v. McConnell, 178 Cal. 697, 174 P. 305, 310, holding that a court may properly refuse "to hear minute technical objections based upon the supposed faulty verification of a claim made long after the commencement of an action and after the time for presentation of claim has expired." We do not believe the allegations of the complaint before us are similar to the facts in that case. The administrator, as a reasonable man, had a right to assume that the service of this copy of the affidavit and claim, as it was worded, was but a process of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, notifying the administrator of his right to be present and contest the claim before the bureau, and that a claim for the amount found might be subsequently filed in the estate.

Under the circumstances, we are of the opinion that appellant has neither alleged, nor can she allege, facts sufficient to bring herself within the requirements of the statute.

The order of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

115 Cal.App. 1

BENNETT v. CENTRAL CALIFORNIA TRACTION CO.

Civ. 4151.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

June 13, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 13, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 10, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002.

If there is sufficient testimony in record supporting judgment, reviewing court will not say that jury should have accepted testimony conflicting therewith.

2. Evidence ⇨492.

Witness' opinion, based on hearing sound of street car, that street car was proceeding at very rapid speed, held competent.

3. Street railroads ⇨113(5).

Evidence that street car traveled at speed exceeding that limited by municipal ordinance may be introduced to support charge of street railway's negligence.

4. Street railroads ⇨113(5).

Distance which street car traveled after collision held proper fact for jury's consideration in action against street railway company for injuries.

5. Street railroads ⇨113(4).

Motorman's testimony that he did not see automobile until after stopping street car held proper for consideration of jury in determining whether motorman neglected duty immediately preceding collision.

6. Street railroads ⇨90(2, 3).

Motorman approaching intersection must be vigilant in his watch for approaching automobiles and must have street car under control.

7. Street railroads ⇨90(2).

Fact that street car at time of collision with automobile was not exceeding speed limit does not excuse negligent operation thereof.

8. Street railroads ⇨90(2, 3), 98(6).

There is common duty incumbent upon street car motorman and driver of automobile to keep careful lookout and use due precaution in crossing intersection of busy street.

9. Torts ⇨22.

All tort-feasors are liable if injury is result of concurrent tort.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1004(3).

Action of trial court in modifying verdict cannot be accepted as proof that trial court considered verdict to have resulted from passion or prejudice.

11. Damages ⇨132(14).

$25,000 to 18 year old girl for injuries to face and body and to jawbone and chin bone, teeth, and eyes, causing distortion of face and defective vision, held not excessive.

The evidence showed that plaintiff's lower jawbone was broken in three places, chin bone was splintered, two teeth had been driven into nasal cavity, and four upper teeth driven into upper jawbone; that for a long time plaintiff was unable to masticate food; that defect in her vision would prevent her from using her eyes for reading or work of any kind; and that plaintiff's face was hardly recognizable.

12. Appeal and error ⇨1002.

Where there is conflict of testimony, jury's verdict is binding upon reviewing court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Helen P. Bennett, by her guardian ad litem, against the Central California Traction Company. Judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

See also 1 P. (2d) 53.

Butler, Van Dyke, Desmond & Harris, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Albert E. Sheets and J. Q. Brown, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J.

The jury in this action awarded the plaintiff the sum of $47,000 as damages for injuries sustained by her when a street car belonging to the defendant collided with an automobile in which the plaintiff was riding as a guest. The verdict was reduced to the sum of $25,000 by the trial court and judgment entered for that sum. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

The record shows that the collision between a street car belonging to the defendant and the automobile in which the plaintiff was riding occurred at the intersection of Fifteenth and X streets in the city of Sacramento, at approximately 9 o'clock p. m. The evening was clear and the intersection was well lighted. Fifteenth street runs northerly and southerly, and X street easterly and westerly. The automobile in which the plaintiff was riding was traveling in a southerly direction, and the street car with which it came into collision was traveling eastward. On the evening in question the plaintiff and four other young people left the Y. W. C. A. building in Sacramento, where the plaintiff resided, in a five-passenger Pontiac sedan automobile, to attend a dance at the William Land Park clubhouse—a clubhouse situated a short distance south of the city of Sacramento. The plaintiff seated herself on the right-hand side and in the rear seat of the automobile. To the left of the plaintiff was a Miss Elizabeth Bivens. The automobile was driven by a young man by the name of Walter Thorrr. At his right was a Miss Schilling and at her right a Mr. Aungst. The automobile proceeded west on M street to Fifteenth street, turned south on Fifteenth street, and traveled southerly on that street until it reached the intersection of Fifteenth and X streets. The defendant maintains a double track on X street, on which it propels street cars carrying passengers, and also during certain hours, cars carrying freight. The car belonging to the defendant which came in collision with the automobile in which the plaintiff was riding was being propelled easterly on the southerly line of tracks maintained by the defendant. The collision occurred at or near the center of the intersection. The momentum of the street car carried the automobile a distance of 97.5 feet and practically demolished it. Both Fifteenth and X streets are 48 feet in width. The exhibits and the testimony show that a street car traveling easterly on X street can be seen from a point on Fifteenth street approximately 150 feet north of the intersection of Fifteenth street with X street, and likewise that a motorman propelling a street car easterly on X street can see an automobile approaching from the north on Fifteenth street from a point approximately the same distance west of the intersection of X and Fifteenth streets. There is no building on the lot at the northwest corner of the intersection of the two streets.

Upon this appeal it is contended by the appellant: First, that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to introduce certain testimony as to the speed of the street car; second, that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; third, that the evidence shows that the negligence of the driver of the automobile was the sole and proximate cause of the collision; and, fourth, that the amount of damages awarded is excessive. The answer of the respondent to these contentions is that the street car was being propelled at a negligent rate of speed, and in excess of 20 miles per hour, the speed limit fixed by ordinance of the city of Sacramento; that the motorman failed to keep a lookout for approaching automobiles; that the testimony to which we shall hereafter refer was properly admitted; and that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff show that the award was and is not excessive. The testimony introduced on the part of the plaintiff is to the effect that preceding the collision the automobile was being driven southerly on the right-hand side or westerly side of Fifteenth street; that it was proceeding through the intersection at a speed of from 10 to 15 miles per hour. Mr. Thorrr testified that when he first saw the street car just outside the intersection it was traveling at a speed of from 30 to 35 miles per hour. The testimony of the plaintiff was to the same effect. The testimony of Thorrr also was to the effect that upon perceiving the approach of the street car he swerved the automobile to the left. In the collision which followed, Miss Schilling and Mr. Aungst lost their lives. The motorman of the street car testified that he at no time saw the automobile until he had stopped the street car and opened one of the car windows. This, after the street car had carried the automobile a distance of a trifle over 97 feet from the point of collision. The occupants of the automobile also testified that no gong was sounded nor warning given of the approach of the street car.

[1] On the part of the appellant there was testimony introduced that the automobile in which the plaintiff was riding was being propelled southerly at a very high rate of speed, and much attention is given by appellant to the testimony, from which it might be concluded that the automobile driver was extremely careless and negligent in the operation of the machine; but with this phase of the question, although it is argued at length in the briefs of counsel, we are not concerned upon this appeal for the simple reason that if there is sufficient testimony in the record supporting the judgment, and accepted by the jurors, it is not for the court to say that the jury should have accepted and acted upon the testimony conflicting therewith. As we have stated, the night was clear; the intersection where the collision occurred was well lighted; both the driver of the automobile and the motorman on the street car could have seen each other at a distance approximately 150 feet from the intersection; what one could see the other could see. The testimony of the driver of the automobile is to the effect that he did not see the street car until just preceding its entry into the intersection. The motorman testified that he did not see the automobile until after he had stopped his car a trifle over 97 feet from the point of collision. The motorman did testify that the force of the collision jarred him from the stool on which he was sitting. This, however, did not affect his failure to see the automobile during the intervening distance which we have mentioned from the point of possible vision to the point of collision.

Appellant stresses the point that while the witnesses for the plaintiff testified that preceding the collision the car was traveling southerly on the right-hand side of Fifteenth street, the marks made by the automobile upon the intersection, after the collision, indicated that it was on the easterly side of the "button" located at the center of the intersection. Respondent's contention is that the force of the collision by the rapidly approaching street car lifted the automobile some distance and prevented it making any marks upon the pavement for a few feet. The testimony of the driver of the automobile also is called to our attention, that he swerved the car to the left in the hope of avoiding the impact. Be this as it may, we do not regard the exact location of the automobile on Fifteenth street as having any particular bearing upon the issues involved herein, for the simple reason that there was nothing upon Fifteenth street requiring the automobile in which the plaintiff was riding, to be driven southerly on the right-hand side thereof, other than the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 557, § 122), which requires it to be so driven. No can it be said that the alleged negligence of the defendant is in anywise affected or excused by reason of whether the automobile was actually on the right-hand side, on the left-hand side or the medial line of Fifteenth street at the instant of the collision.

[2] As the main force of appellant's argument relative to errors in the admission of testimony is directed against that given by the witness Checchetini, we set it forth somewhat at length:

"Q. Where do you live? A. At 2320—15th Street in Sacramento.

"Q. How long have you lived there? A. I have lived in Sacramento all my life; I have lived there over two years. I am now City Fireman, Fire Department of the City of Sacramento; have been such 5½ years. My employment previous to that time was with the Zellerbach Paper Company for 3 years; prior to that I worked for the Western Pacific Railroad in its shops, for 6½ years.

"Q. Have you observed these cars of the Traction Company on X Street as they traveled back and forth? A. For 20 years.

"Q. With the exception of an intervening lot, you live on the corner of 15th and X? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Have you ridden on street cars as they travel back and forth? A. I ride on these cars every day.

"Q. Have you ridden on car No. 103, the car involved in the collision on the night of February 14th? A. Many times.
1 P.(2d)—4

"Q. Have you watched the cars going past the intersection? A. Well, I have watched it for days before.

"Q. Now, on the night of February 14th, what were you doing at the time of the accident? A. Well, I had just gone to bed and heard a big crash.

"Q. That is, you had gone to bed in your house? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And heard a crash? A. An awful crash.

"Q. By the way, had you heard anything previous to the crash? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Could you tell from the sound whether or not, at what rate of speed the car was going? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You say you could tell from hearing how fast the car was going? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How fast?

"Mr. Butler: Now, we object to that as calling for conjecture and opinion. I don't know of any rule by which speed can be ascertained from sound.

"The Court: I think what he could do would be to testify whether or not it was going, from sound, at a high rate of speed, or moderate or slow.

"Mr. Sheets: Q. Could you tell in that way how fast the car was going?

"The Court: I only suggest the question. The question I asked you, could you tell from the sound of the car as you heard it that night?

"A. I know from the sound of the car it was going at an awful speed.

"Mr. Butler: Just a moment; we would like to interpose an objection to that.

"The Court: Yes; the objection will be sustained and that part of the answer stricken out.

"The Court: Now, just answer this question in a limited way, just the way it is asked: Could you tell whether or not—and I am not asking you how fast it went now—I just want to know whether or not you could tell whether it was going very slowly, whether it was going moderately, whether it was going very rapidly?

"Witness: Well, I would say it was going very rapidly, very fast."

The witness then stated that after the crash he stepped to the window and saw the street car just as it was coming to a stop.

In support of its contention that the admission of this testimony was error, appellant relies upon the cases of Diamond v. Weyerhaeuser, 178 Cal. 540, 174 P. 38, 39, and Rosander v. Market St. Ry. Co., 89 Cal. App. 710, 265 P. 536, 537, where similar testimony was considered other than as to the question of sound. These cases, however, we think are readily distinguishable from the facts of the case with which we are dealing. In the Diamond Case the plaintiff relied for its proof of negligence upon speed alleged to be in excess of that fixed by a municipal ordinance, the only testimony in support thereof being that the car was going very fast, or at a good speed, etc. This is illustrated by the following excerpt taken from the opinion: "Nor, looking to the specific averment of violation of the ordinance, did the evidence sustain the charge that the automobile was being propelled at an unlawful or otherwise excessive rate of speed. The plaintiff testified that the machine was coming 'very fast'; another witness, that its speed was decreasing before it reached the milk wagon, but that it was still going 'at a good speed.' The only other witness who testified for plaintiff on the subject said that it looked to him as if the automobile 'was going pretty fast.' These statements are entirely too uncertain to serve as a basis for a finding that the speed was over 20 miles an hour, or that it was in excess of the maximum rate which would be dictated by the demands of ordinary prudence." This case does not hold that testimony that a vehicle is moving very fast, is inadmissible; it simply holds that such testimony does not furnish the basis for concluding, when standing alone, that a vehicle is being driven in excess of a certain fixed speed limit.

In the Rosander Case the court instructed the jury as follows: "You are instructed that in considering the weight to be given to testimony of witnesses as to the speed of vehicles involved in the collision, such expressions as 'slow,' 'very slow,' 'fast,' 'very fast,' 'speeding,' 'crawling,' and the like are merely relative, and their meaning and effect must depend upon the unknown factor of the witnesses' personal views regarding standards of speed, and such expressions, standing alone, are entirely too uncertain to serve as a basis for any finding that the speed of the vehicle was in excess of or within the rate which would be dictated by the demands of ordinary prudence." It will be noticed that both cases rest upon the basis of such testimony, standing alone, being insufficient to sustain a verdict. Neither one of the cases just referred to hold such testimony inadmissible, nor does either one of the cases referred to limit or in anywise seek to modify the ruling announced and adhered to in the case of Johnsen v. Oakland, etc., Ry., 127 Cal. 608, 60 P. 170, 171. We take therefrom the following: "In view of the fact that they were regular travelers upon this line of cars, and that the schedule and statutory time was eight miles per hour, there can be no question that the testimony given by these witnesses to the effect that the car was going very fast, and at an unusual rate of speed, was proper evidence to go to the jury; and, indeed, the law recognizes a very broad and liberal rule in the reception of opinion evidence of nonexperts as to the rate of speed cars may be traveling. As before suggested, these witnesses had been in the habit of traveling upon this line of road, and had, at least, made casual observation as to the speed of the cars at other times. They were fairly intelligent, and only gave an approximate opinion as to the rate of speed the car was going at the time. The fact that they were passengers upon the car, rather than by-standers, does not bar them from testifying in this regard. The reported cases rejecting the class of evidence here offered are few indeed, while there is an abundance of authority to support its admission." Citing Thomas v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 86 Mich. 496, 49 N. W. 547; Walsh v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 102 Mo. 582, 14 S. W. 873, 15 S. W. 757; and Ward v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 85 Wis. 601, 55 N. W. 771.

That the overwhelming weight of authority supports the doctrine just stated will appear from the following citations: In Dawson v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 82 Cal. App. 141, 255 P. 215, 218, we find the following: "It is also contended by appellant that the trial court erred in permitting certain witnesses to testify that at or immediately preceding the time of the accident the street car was traveling at a speed 'faster than the ordinary rate,' and that the street car 'was going the faster of the two vehicles.' No authorities are cited by appellant to sustain its position. On the other hand, the authorities are numerous in principle which uphold the admissibility of such evidence." Citing Overtown v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 181 Ill. 323, 54 N. E. 898; Illinois Central Ry. Co. v. Ashline, 171 Ill. 313, 49 N. E. 521, 522; Ottoby v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co., 197 Mo. App. 473, 196 S. W. 428; Johnsen v. Oakland, S. L. & H. E. Ry. Co., 127 Cal. 608, 60 P. 170; Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 140 P. 706; Cargall v. Riley, 209 Ala. 183, 95 So. 821; Schultz v. Starr, 180 Iowa, 1319, 164 N. W. 163; Parker v. Boston & M. R. R., 84 Vt. 329, 79 A. 865.

In L. R. A. 1918A, beginning on page 662, is an extended note dealing with the admission of nontechnical testimony. On page 705 of L. R. A. 1918A, the rule is thus stated: "In order to be admissible, an opinion as to the speed of a street car need not be stated in miles per hour, it being competent merely to state that the car was running at the usual, or at an unusual, rate; or that it was going at an excessive rate, or 'going pretty fast;' or that it was going much faster than an automobile going at a certain rate of speed. And even assuming that, in such testimony, the standard employed for comparison was not sufficiently definite, such testimony has been held not to amount to prejudicial error, where other witnesses have testified without objection to the rate in miles per hour." In the case at bar other witnesses testified without objection as to the rate per hour. The citations in support of the rule which we have just stated are too numerous to be set forth herein. The competency of the witness whose testimony we are considering appears to be unquestioned. He had ridden upon street cars of the defendant company, upon the identical car, a number of times; had lived in close proximity to the street car line for many years, and his line of employment for a number of years gave him an opportunity to consider railroads and their operation. It is further urged, however, that testimony as to speed, based upon sound, is inadmissible. No authorities, however, are cited in support of this contention. Disregarding, for the moment, what we think is common knowledge possessed by every intelligent person, that the sound made by rapidly moving vehicles differs very materially from that made by those moving slowly, and that this fact is brought home to every one who walks the streets of our cities and hears the sound of passing vehicles, a person knows whether they are speeding by or proceeding at a moderate rate, we will cite a number of decisions supporting the ruling of the court in the instant case.

Referring again to the annotation in L. R. A. 1918A, on nontechnical testimony, we find the following rule relative to the admission of testimony based upon sound, where it is said: "Although it is perhaps proper to permit a witness whose opinion is based on sound to tell whether a train was going rapidly or slowly, the courts, with but one exception, have held it improper for witnesses to testify to estimates of the rate of speed of trains and street cars, based entirely upon the sounds arising from their operation." That is exactly the course pursued in the instant case. The witness was allowed to testify as to whether the street car was moving rapidly or slowly. Thus, in Van Horn v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co., 59 Iowa, 33, 12 N. W. 752, the court said: "Small differences in the speed of moving trains cannot probably be determined by the sound, but we think that the difference between the speed of a slowly-moving and of a rapidly-moving train could be distinguished quite easily from the sound by a person in the immediate vicinity. The evidence, we think, was not inadmissible. Such evidence, we think, could not, under all circumstances [of the case], be deemed wholly unreliable. What weight the evidence in question was entitled to, under the circumstances shown, it was for the jury to determine."

In Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Moore, 51 Ind. App. 110, 97 N. E. 203, witnesses who lived near a railroad, who testified that they were familiar with the surroundings and with the running of trains, and that they had frequently heard the sound of a whistle and bell, were properly permitted to testify as to where a train was when it whistled, and give an opinion of its speed.

In Nesbit v. Crosby, 74 Conn. 554, 51 A. 550, the Supreme Court of Connecticut, considering the question of admitting testimony based upon sound, held that a witness may be allowed to express his opinion as to the speed at which a horse was traveling along a highway, judging from the sound. The clatter of hoofs would indicate whether the horse was moving slowly or rapidly. Likewise, the clatter of a street car or of the trucks thereof as it speeds over the joints of a railway, indicate to an intelligent observer whether the car is moving rapidly or slowly.

In Kuhn v. Stephenson, 87 Ind. App. 157, 161 N. E. 384, the Appellate Court of Indiana, sitting in banc, held admission of testimony as to the speed of an automobile, based upon sound, to be proper; citing in support of the ruling a number of cases.

In the case of Lake Erie v. Moore, supra, as reported in 97 N. E., may be found, on page 208, a number of cases cited to support the admission of testimony as to whether a train is running rapidly or slowly, based upon the sound made by the train.

In the case of Hamilton v. De Camp, 120 Kan. 645, 244 P. 1057, the Supreme Court of Kansas upholds the rule that estimates of speed of a street car, based upon the noise it makes, is admissible.

Without quoting therefrom it is sufficient to say that an examination of the following additional cases shows that testimony as to speed, couched in general language such as "very fast," "mighty fast," etc., is admissible: Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Hildebrand, 52 Kan. 284, 34 P. 738; Davis v. Smitherman, 209 Ala. 244, 96 So. 208; Little Rock Ry. & Electric Co. v. Green, 78 Ark. 129, 93 S. W. 752; Colorado Midland Ry. Co. v. Robbins, 30 Colo. 449, 71 P. 371; Shea v. Hemming et al., 97 Conn. 149, 115 A. 686; Heidenreich v. Bremner, 260 Ill. 439, 103 N. E. 275; McLaughlin v. Griffin, 155 Iowa, 302, 135 N. W. 1107; Illinois Central Ry. Co. v. France's Adm'x, 130 Ky. 26, 112 S. W. 929; Anderson v. Wells (Mo. App.) 261 S. W. 952; State v. United Rys., etc., 139 Md. 306, 115 A. 109; Jones v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co. (Mo. Sup.) 220 S. W. 484; Burke v. Shaw Transfer Co., 211 Mo. App. 353, 243 S. W. 449, also, State ex rel. Shaw Transfer Co. v. Trimble (Mo. Sup.) 250 S. W. 384; Ehrmann v. Nassau Electric Ry. Co., 23 App. Div. 21, 48 N. Y. S. 379; Macchi v. Portland, etc., Co., 76 Or. 215, 148 P. 72; Moore v. Northern Texas Traction Co., 41 Tex. Civ. App. 583, 95 S. W. 652; Sears v. Seattle Consolidated Street Ry. Co., 6 Wash. 227, 33 P. 389, 1081; Gerbing v. McDonald, 201 Wis. 214, 229 N. W. 860.

In view of the foregoing decisions and the fact that the testimony of the witness that the street car was moving very fast does not stand alone in the record, it must be held that the court did not err in permitting its admission, and when all the facts of this case are kept in mind, it is readily perceived that the holding of the court in the Diamond and Rosander Cases, supra, is inapplicable.

[3] That evidence of speed in excess of that limited by municipal ordinance may be introduced to support the charge of negligence, is the established law of this state. Simoneau v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 264, 137 P. 544, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737; Keena v. United R. R., 197 Cal. 148, 239 P. 1061; Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 P. 734; Switzler v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 104 Cal. App. 138, 285 P. 918.

[4-6] In addition to the testimony to which we have referred relative to the speed of the street car, the distance it traveled after the collision was a proper fact for the jury to consider. The testimony that he did not see the automobile until after he had stopped the street car and opened one of the windows, constituted an important item for the consideration of the jury in determining whether the motorman had or had not neglected his duty immediately preceding the collision, as well, also, as the fact of his having speeded up the car just before reaching the intersection. "It is well settled that as a general rule the driver of a street car approaching a street intersection must be vigilant in his watch for automobiles, etc., approaching the tracks, and have his car under control." This rule of law is set forth in 28 A. L. R. page 275, in an extended note dealing with automobile and street car collisions, and is supported by a long list of authorities, so long as to prohibit their listing here. See, also, the annotations found in 46 A. L. R. page 1040, citing cases in support of the rule just stated.

[7] The fact, if it be a fact, that the street car was not exceeding the speed limit, would not excuse any negligent operation. Indiana Union Traction Co. v. Love, 180 Ind. 442, 99 N. E. 1005; and note 28 A. L. R. 278; Carey v. Pacific G. & Elect., 75 Cal. App. 129, 242 P. 97; Tousley v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 457, 137 P. 31; Johnson et al. v. Sou. Pacific Co. et al. (Cal. App.) 288 P. 81.

[8] The record contains sufficient testimony to support the conclusion that the motorman rang no bell and gave no alarm of the car approaching Fifteenth street; even the testimony of the motorman is deficient in this respect, and such as to warrant the jury in doubting its accuracy, as in answer to a question as to whether he rang the bell, he answered, "Yes, I always do," which immediately raises the inference that the answer was based upon a custom or practice, and not upon the fact that he rang the bell as a warning of the approach of the car before entering the intersection at Fifteenth street.

That the jury was authorized to conclude that no signal had been given of the approach of the car, based upon the testimony introduced, is supported by the cases of Jones v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co., 74 Cal. App. 10, 239 P. 429, and Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 105 Cal. App. 340, 288 P. 81.

It further appears from the record that Fifteenth street is a busy street, which necessarily demanded of all persons using the intersection in question to keep a careful lookout and use due precaution not to injure any one lawfully thereon, or lawfully entitled to use the same. This was a common duty incumbent upon both the motorman and the driver of the automobile.

[9] It is further urged that the testimony shows not only negligence on the part of the automobile driver, but that the accident was due solely to his inattention. The testimony to which we have referred, however, if accepted by the jury, is sufficient to show that the negligence of the motorman concurred in, and was at least a joint, proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury. The law is well settled that if the injury is the result of the concurrent tort of two or more persons, all are liable. In support of this statement we need only cite the cases of Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 105 Cal. App. 340, 288 P. 81, and Switzler v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 104 Cal. App. 138, 285 P. 918, where authorities upon this question are cited. The record in this case does not disclose any facts upon which the plaintiff, riding as a guest in the automobile, could be charged with contributory negligence.

[10-12] It is finally urged that the verdict is excessive, and was the result of passion and prejudice. In this particular it may be stated that the action of the trial court in modifying the verdict cannot be accepted as proof or any indication that the trial court considered the verdict as the result of either passion or prejudice.

An examination of the transcript presents for our consideration a case where one might well consider that no pecuniary compensation would ever make amends for the injuries sustained and suffering endured by the plaintiff, and while the verdict was reduced in a large sum by the trial court, the facts are such as to show that the jury might very well have fixed the damages in the sum that it did, without any passion or prejudice but simply as a result of their deliberate judgment in attempting to make adequate reparation. With this statement we need only to consider the judgment for damages as allowed to stand by the trial court, and add a few excerpts from the testimony, showing that it is not excessive.

At the time of the accident the plaintiff was 18 years of age, with practically her whole life before her. The record shows that in addition to her body being bruised, and as stated by one of the doctors, her face so injured that he could scarcely recognize the plaintiff, it is shown that the lower jawbone was broken in three places; the chin bone was splintered; the upper jawbone in front had been splintered where her lower teeth had been driven into it; two teeth had been driven into the nasal cavity; twelve teeth were lost; four of the upper teeth were driven into the upper jawbone; the jawbone had to be wired together; there were several operations; the plaintiff was confined in the county hospital for a short period of time; was then moved to the Sutter hospital where she remained five and one-half weeks; for a long time the plaintiff was unable to masticate food; at the time of the trial the jaws were not entirely lined up; one of the eyes was so injured that an eye specialist testified "that the defect in her vision cannot be corrected by glasses, and she may recover one or two tenths vision but the balance of the vision will be gone, it will be distorted; she will only be able to see to get around; she might see an object from this side, but she will never be able to use it for reading or work of any kind." Dr. Binkley testified that the face of the plaintiff "was almost unrecognizable as a face after the collision." This witness further testified that "the gums just stuffed away." And further, "That the lower front teeth were tipped at an angle of probably 45 degrees; they were forced right back, like you take your finger and just move these four teeth as one group; in other words, these teeth were broken off below the roots so they all stuck together by the bone that held them in place." It further appears from the record that the mouth of the plaintiff is twisted and is not in its former shape. Other details of injuries might be set forth, but the foregoing is sufficient to support the judgment for damages.

We need not cite authorities to the effect that where there is a conflict of testimony, the verdict of the jury is binding upon this court. Nor does it matter that this court, if sitting as a jury considering the same testimony, would have concluded that it preponderated in favor of the defendant, and found in its favor.

Finding no sufficient cause to warrant a reversal herein, the judgment of the trial court must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: PRESTON, P. J.; R. L. THOMPSON, J.

115 Cal.App. 30

SCHILLING v. CENTRAL CALIFORNIA TRACTION CO.

Civ. 4153.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

June 16, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 16, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 10, 1931.

1. Street railroads ☞118(7).

Instruction that speed over limit prescribed by ordinance constituted negligence as matter of law held not erroneous, though ordinance further provided that greater speed was only prima facie unreasonable.

2. Master and servant ☞328.

Statute authorizing maintenance of action against person causing injury, "also" against his employer authorizes action against employer alone, without joining employee (Code Civ. Proc. § 376).

The word "also" is defined as "as well; besides; in addition; some other thing; including; further; furthermore; likewise; in like manner; in the same manner; moreover; and further," and as a copulative injunction the word is used as denoting nearly the same as the word "and" or "likewise."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Also," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Appeal and error ☞187(3).

Defendant could not on appeal object for first time on ground of defect of parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 434).

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by G. A. Schilling against the Central California Traction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Butler, Van Dyke, Desmond & Harris, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Albert E. Sheets and J. Q. Brown, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J.

In this action the plaintiff had judgment in the sum of $5,000 in an action brought to recover damages for the death of a minor daughter named Iva May Schilling. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

In most particulars this is a companion case with that of Helen P. Bennett v. Central California Traction Co., a corporation, 1 P. (2d) 47, heretofore decided by this court in an opinion filed on the 13th day of June, 1931.

The cause of action in this, as in the Bennett Case, arises out of a collision between a street car owned by the defendant, and an automobile in which the plaintiff was riding. As stated in the Bennett Case, the collision occurred at the intersection of Fifteenth and X streets in the city of Sacramento, at about 9 o'clock on the evening of February 14, 1929. For a detailed description of the circumstances attending and surrounding the collision, we refer to the opinion in the Bennett Case. Here, as in the Bennett Case, the argument is made that the testimony does not support the verdict, and that the death of Iva May Schilling, which resulted from the collision, was caused by the sole negligence of the driver of the automobile.

It is further argued that the court erred in the admission of testimony, and particularly in the admission of the testimony of the witness Cecchetti. The same argument is presented here in relation to this testimony as was presented in the Bennett Case. As we there took occasion to consider, somewhat at length, the admission of the testimony of this witness, and also cited a long list of authorities supporting the ruling of the trial court, it is unnecessary to repeat here our reasons for upholding the ruling of the trial court, and we therefore refer to the opinion in the Bennett Case as showing the correctness of such ruling.

The testimony of this case relative to the speed of the street car at the time of the collision, the failure of the motorman to sound any gong or give any warning of the approach of the street car, and that he did not see the automobile with which the street car collided, until after his car had been stopped a trifle over 97 feet from the point of the collision, is the same as that set forth in the Bennett Case, and what we said there applies here, and without further elaboration we think presents sufficient to send the cause to the jury.

In addition to the legal questions involved in the Bennett Case, which need not be reconsidered here, it is urged that the court erred in giving an instruction to the jury relating to the speed of the street car, and also, as the motorman was not joined with the Traction Company as a party defendant, no cause of action is stated. The instruction complained of is as follows: "If you find that at the time and place of the collision in this case the defendant was propelling its street car at a speed in excess of twenty miles per hour, then I instruct you that this constitutes negligence as a matter of law, it being provided in the city ordinance of the city of Sacramento that street cars must not exceed twenty miles per hour in the residence district of the city."

Ordinance No. 304, Fourth Series, article VI, section 40, of the city of Sacramento, reads, so far as pertinent here: "The operator of a street car in a city shall operate the same at a careful and prudent speed, and subject to this limitation may lawfully proceed at a speed not exceeding the following: * * * 20 miles per hour in a residence district. Speeds in excess of those set forth above shall be taken as prima facie, but not conclusive evidence of a speed greater than is reasonable and proper."

[1] It is contended upon the part of the appellant that in instructing the jury that speed in excess of 20 miles per hour is negligence as a matter of law, the court committed reversible error for the reason that the concluding paragraph of the ordinance which we have quoted specifies that "speeds in excess of those set forth above shall be taken as prima facie, but not conclusive evidence of a greater speed than is reasonable and proper." In support of its contention the appellant cites the case of Brixey et al. v. Craig, 49 Idaho, 319, 288 P. 152, 154, where the court had under consideration a somewhat similar question, but which we think is distinguishable from the issue here involved. In that case the court did say that the violation of a positive statutory inhibition is negligence per se and not merely prima facie evidence of negligence. However, the statute there under consideration did not in terms make it unlawful to drive in excess of a certain speed. Subdivision (b) of section 4 of the act (Laws Idaho 1927, c. 260) relating to the operation of vehicles upon public highways under consideration in that case, reads as follows: "Subject to the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section and except in those instances where a lower speed is specified in this act, it shall be prima facie lawful for the driver of a vehicle to drive the same at a speed not exceeding the following, but in any case when such speed would be unsafe it shall not be lawful." In the ordinance under consideration the statute expressly provides that it is lawful only to proceed at a speed not exceeding a certain specified rate, being 20 miles per hour at the intersection where the collision in this case occurred. It is true that the ordinance concludes in the following language: "Speeds in excess of those set forth above shall be taken as prima facie, but not conclusive evidence of a greater speed than is reasonable and proper." This portion of the ordinance is not controlling in this action. We have not been cited to any authorities which hold that a city council has any power to fix, change or limit rules of evidence in the trial of actions in superior courts. The speed fixed by the ordinance is 20 miles per hour; that is the lawful rate which cannot be exceeded under certain conditions, and could not be lawfully exceeded under the conditions presented, at the intersection of Fifteenth and X streets in the city of Sacramento. The instructions to the jury as to what would be the result of exceeding that speed limit was and is a pure matter of law for the courts and not for the city council, in actions involving personal injuries. That the city council might affix penalties and provide for their imposition, and how proof of violation of its ordinances may be established in city courts, is beside the question.

That the construction given by the Supreme Court of Idaho in the case of Brixey v. Craig, supra, is not controlling here appears from the decisions in the recent cases of Benjamin v. Noonan, 207 Cal. 279, 277 P. 1045, 1046; Cooper v. Smith, 209 Cal. 562, 289 P. 614; and Loggie v. Interstate Transit Co. (Cal. App.) 291 P. 618. These cases deal with the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553, § 113, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30), the concluding paragraph (subdivision c) of which reads as follows: "In all charges for a violation of this section, speeds in excess of those set forth in subdivision (b) of this section shall be taken as prima facie but not as conclusive evidence of a violation of this section," etc. In the Noonan Case the instruction was in substance and effect the same as that here given, as appears from the following quotation: "We find no error in said instruction. As said in Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 144, 140 P. 706, 710: 'While it is undoubtedly correct to say that the act of driving a vehicle over a street or public highway beyond the speed limit established by a municipal ordinance or a statute merely constitutes evidence of negligence in cases where damage has followed the infraction of such an ordinance or law, the rule in this state is, however, that it is conclusive evidence of negligence. [Citing cases.] Therefore, the statement that such an act is "of itself negligence," or "negligence as a matter of law" or "negligence per se" (equivalent expressions) is, in this state, strictly correct.'" Citing Baillargeon v. Meyers, 180 Cal. 507, 182 P. 37; Flynn v. Bledsoe, 92 Cal. App. 145, 262 P. 887; Towne v. Godeau, 70 Cal. App. 148, 232 P. 1010; Greeneich v. Knoll, 73 Cal. App. 1, 238 P. 163.

In Cooper v. Smith, supra, it is said that a speed limit in excess of 35 miles per hour, being the speed limit fixed for the conditions where the accident took place, constituted negligence on the part of the automobile driver. To the same effect is the holding of this court in the case of Loggie v. Interstate Transit Co., supra, where the court instructed the jury that a speed in excess of the limit fixed by the California Vehicle Act was negligence as a matter of law.

In addition to the foregoing cases, we may cite the case of Simoneau v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 264, 136 P. 544, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737, where, on page 269 of the California volume cited (136 P. 547), is listed a number of cases showing that the violation of a city ordinance relative to the rate of speed is negligence per se. Also, we may cite the recent case of Flynn v. Bledsoe, 92 Cal. App. 145, 267 P. 887, where a number of cases are cited to the same effect. See, also, 23 California Jurisprudence, p. 870, § 35.

[2] Finally, the appellants contend that no cause of action is stated by reason of the fact that the motorman was not joined as a party defendant. This contention is based upon a reading of section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where, after providing for the maintenance of an action for the death or injury of a child, the section concludes as follows: "Such action may be maintained against the person causing the injury, or death, or if such person be employed by another person who is responsible for his conduct, also against such other person." The construction of this section advanced by appellant is that it was the intention of the Legislature, and the necessary meaning of the language employed, that the action could only be maintained jointly against the employer and the employee. This contention, however, does not appear to us to be tenable. The word "also" does not carry any such meaning.

In 2 C. J. 1164 we find the word "also" thus defined: "As well; besides; in addition; some other thing; including; further; furthermore; likewise; in like manner; in the same manner; moreover." And further: "As a copulative conjunction 'also' is used as denoting nearly the same as the word 'and' or 'likewise.' The words 'also,' or 'and also,' are usually read in wills as copulative, carrying on the same sense of the preceding words, and are equivalent to 'in like manner' or 'in the same manner,'" etc. None of these definitions contain the idea that the action must be joint. The plain interpretation is that the action may be maintained against the person causing the injury; likewise, an action may be maintained against the employer. Take the first definition and it reads, "An action may be maintained against the employee," and "as well," an action may be maintained against the employer. Take some of the other definitions and the statute reads that an action may be maintained against the person causing injury; and an action may be maintained "in like manner" against the employ-er.

[3] Our attention is called to the provisions of section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizing heirs or personal representatives to maintain an action for damages, and the case of Salmon v. Rathjens, 152 Cal. 290, 92 P. 733, is cited as supporting appellant's contention. Section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure differs in its reading from section 377. Furthermore, the case cited by the appellant holds that the objection of misjoin-der of parties must be taken before trial, and cannot be raised upon appeal. Under section 434 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which specifies that objections, save as to the failure of the complaint to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or to the jurisdiction of the court not taken before trial, are deemed waived, the appellant in this case is foreclosed from making the contention that the motorman should have been joined as a defendant in this action. All the argument advanced by the appellant in this particular only goes to show that the appellant should have applied to the trial court for an order directing that the motorman be brought in and made a party to the action, and not having done so, it is too late now to raise any objection based upon lack of parties to the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: PRESTON, P. J.

115 Cal.App. 113

AUNGST v. CENTRAL CALIFORNIA TRACTION CO.
Civ. 4152.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

June 19, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 18, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 10, 1931.

1. Master and servant ☞328.

Statute authorizing maintenance of action against person causing injury, "also" against his employer, authorizes maintenance of action against employer alone without joining employee (Code Civ. Proc. § 376).

2. Appeal and error ☞930(1).

In must be presumed sufficient evidence was introduced to justify verdict, where order granting new trial makes no reference to insufficiency of evidence.

3. Street railroads ☞90(2, 3).

Driver of street car approaching street intersection must be vigilant in watch for automobiles and must have car under control.

4. Street railroads ☞117(8).

Negligence of street car motorman held question for jury in action for injuries to occupant of automobile.

In addition to the testimony that no bell was rung or warning given of the approach of street car, and that it was traveling in excess of speed limit, the motorman testified that just before reaching intersection he added additional power to the car and that he did not see automobile approaching until after his street car had stopped 97 feet beyond the point of collision.

5. Street railroads ☞81(3), 98(1).

Street car companies and automobiles must use public streets with due regard to rights of each other.

6. Street railroads ☞102(1).

Guest in automobile can recover damages from street railway company for injuries caused by concurring and contemporaneous negligence of automobile driver and operator of street car.

7. Street railroads ☞99(10).

Rule requiring traveler to stop, look, and listen before crossing railroad tracks held inapplicable to street cars.

8. Street railroads ☞118(13).

In action for injuries resulting from collision, instruction that guest was negligent if he failed to warn driver of automobile as early as reasonably prudent person would have warned him held erroneous.

9. Courts ☞90(1).

Opinion of District Court of Appeal cannot be relied on as authority, where case has been transferred to Supreme Court for further hearing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by J. T. Aungst against the Central California Traction Company. There was a verdict for defendant, and from an order granting plaintiff a new trial, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Butler, Van Dyke, Desmond & Harris, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Albert E. Sheets and J. Q. Brown, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J.

In this action, tried before a jury, a verdict was returned in favor of the defendant. Upon motion of counsel for the plaintiff a new trial was granted. The defendant appeals from this order.

The facts involved in this action are identical with those presented in the companion cases of Helen P. Bennett v. Central California Traction Company (Cal. App.) 1 P. (2d) 47, and G. A. Schilling v. Central California Traction Company (Cal. App.) 1 P. (2d) 53. A detailed statement of the facts involved is set forth in the opinion of this court filed in the Bennett Case on June 13, 1931. In the instant case all the legal questions involved in the Bennett Case are again presented, but as we are satisfied with our conclusions in the Bennett Case we will content ourselves with referring thereto concerning all questions involving the admission of testimony and the rulings of the court, other than as herein-after set forth. The testimony introduced in this case being in all respects similar to that introduced in the Bennett Case, it is sufficient, without setting it forth, to justify the ruling that it was sufficient to send the cause to the jury.

[1] The plaintiff began this action under the provisions of section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to recover damages on account of the death of his son, which resulted from the collision mentioned in the Bennett and Schilling Cases. The objection is made here that under the terms of that section the motorman should have been joined as a party-defendant. The same objection was raised and considered in the Schilling Case. Upon the authority of what is there said, we hold that the objection of the appellant is untenable.

[2, 3] As the order granting a new trial in this action makes no reference to the insufficiency of the evidence, it necessarily follows that it must be presumed sufficient evidence was introduced to justify the verdict. The question then arises: Are there any rulings of the court which necessitated the granting of the plaintiff's motion? An examination of the record satisfies us that such is the case. As a preliminary to what we will hereafter set forth, we may state that the evidence introduced by the plaintiff was sufficient to make out a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the defendant. As said in the case of Bennett v. Central California Traction Company: "It is well settled that * * * the driver of a street car approaching a street intersection must be vigilant in his watch for automobiles, etc., approaching the tracks, and have his car under control." Notes in 28 A. L. R. page 275; also annotations found in 46 A. L. R. page 1040; Whitmeyer v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. App. 199, 282 P. 1005; Carey v. Pacific Gas & Elect. Co., 75 Cal. App. 129, 242 P. 97; Taylor v. Pacific Elect. Ry. Co., 172 Cal. 638, 158 P. 119.

[4, 5] In addition to the testimony introduced on the part of the plaintiff that no bell was rung or warning given of the approach of the street car, and that it was traveling in excess of 20 miles per hour, the motorman in this case, just as in the Bennett and Schilling Cases, testified that just before reaching the intersection of Fifteenth and X streets, he added additional power to the car and increased its momentum. He likewise testified that he did not see the automobile approaching the intersection, and did not see it until after his car had stopped 97 feet beyond the point of collision. From this testimony it is clear that the jury might have inferred that the motorman was negligent in not having his car under control, and in not keeping a proper watch for those who might also be using the intersection.

As stated in 46 A. L. R. page 1001, "that where both street car companies and automobiles have the right to use the public streets, the right of each must be exercised with due regard to the rights of the other, and in such a manner as not unreasonably to infringe upon the rights of the other." While street cars must run upon the tracks provided for them, they have no absolute or pre-eminent right of way over intersections, but must use the same with due regard to the safety and rights of the general public. O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 141 P. 809.

[6] A considerable portion of appellant's brief is devoted to the alleged negligence of the driver of the automobile, and for the purposes of this decision it may be admitted that there is sufficient testimony set forth in the transcript to justify the conclusion that the automobile driver was negligent, and that as to him, no cause of action could be maintained. This case, however, does not depend upon the sole negligence of the automobile driver. It is evident from a reference to the facts set forth in the Bennett Case and the additional testimony to which we have just referred, that the jury could conclude that the collision was caused by the concurrent negligence of both the driver of the automobile and the motorman in charge of the defendant's car. Under such circumstances a guest riding in the automobile, or, in this case, his father, is entitled to maintain an action unless the guest was also guilty of contributory negligence. The law is well settled in this state that one riding as a guest in an automobile is entitled to recover damages from a street railway company for injuries sustained in a collision caused by the concurring and contemporaneous negligence of the automobile driver and the operator of a street car. Nichols v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319; Thompson v. L. A., etc., Ry. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 P. 709; Unger v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Ry., 61 Cal. App. 125, 214 P. 510; Simmons v. Pacific Elect. Ry. Co., 60 Cal. App. 129, 112 P. 637; Bibby v. Pacific Elect. Ry. Co., 58 Cal. App. 658, 209 P. 387; Switzler v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 104 Cal. App. 138, 285 P. 918, 921.

The duty of a guest riding in an automobile, when approaching an intersection crossed by railroad tracks, will be considered after reference is made to certain instructions given to the jury which we think erroneous.

[7] At the request of the defendant the court gave to the jury instruction No. 22 in the following words: "It was the duty of the driver of the automobile in which Robert Aungst was riding, upon approaching the street car track, to look for the approaching car, and if his view was obstructed, this duty to look before going upon the track continued, and he should at some point before reaching the car track, look for the cars, even though it was necessary for him to stop in order to get an effective view of the track. During this period of time it was his duty to have had his automobile under such control, and to have operated it at such a speed, as to enable him to stop before reaching the track, if on looking, he should observe the approaching street car." Some contention is made by the appellant that as interurban cars were operated over the same line, the "stop, look and listen" rule applies to the instant case the same as where one is approaching a crossing over which steam engines or ordinary railroad trains are operated. The same question was raised in the case of Callett v. Central California Traction Co., 36 Cal. App. 240, 171 P. 984, 986. What is said there is applicable here, to wit: "The fact that the appellant operates interurban cars over the track in question does not, in our opinion, affect the merits of the case."

We may further add that the collision involved in this action was not between an interurban train, but was between an ordinary street car operated by the defendant, and the automobile driven by Thorr. That the "stop, look and listen" rule does not apply to street cars definitely appears from the case of Carey v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 75 Cal. App. 129, 242 P. 97, where this court (quoting from the syllabus) said: "The duty of stopping, looking, and listening made incumbent upon one about to cross the right of way of a steam railroad is not the rule governing the rights of foot-passengers and vehicle drivers in venturing upon, crossing, or using the tracks of a street railroad, but the duty of such is no higher than or different in law from the duty of the company operating the electric car saving in the one particular that, because the car is confined to its tracks, vehicles and foot-passengers must give way to clear its passage." Hamlin v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 776, 89 P. 1109. That the "stop, look and listen" rule does not apply to intersections in cities crossed by street railways, appears from a long list of notes found in 28 A. L. R. beginning on page 229.

[8, 9] At the request of the appellant the court gave to the jury instruction No. 25, which reads as follows: "If you find from the evidence in this case that the driver of the automobile in which Robert Aungst was riding had, prior to this accident, been driving and operating said automobile while Robert Aungst was riding therein, in a careless, reckless and negligent manner, it was the duty of Robert Aungst to remonstrate with said driver relative to the negligent operation of said automobile. Therefore, if you find that prior to said accident, and while Robert Aungst was riding in said automobile, said automobile was being driven in a careless, reckless and negligent manner, and that Robert Aungst acquiesced, in the manner of operation thereof, or failed to remonstrate with the driver of said automobile, Robert Aungst was guilty of negligence, and if you further find that said negligence of Robert Aungst, if any, contributed to the accident in question, then your verdict must be for the defendant."

At the request of the defendant the court gave to the jury instruction No. 26, which reads: "There was a legal duty upon Robert Aungst to exercise ordinary care and prudence for his own safety. If, from the evidence, you find that Robert Aungst observed the street car of the Central California Traction Company approaching the intersection prior to the accident, at such a time as to enable him to warn the driver of the approach of said street car, and if you further find that the said Robert Aungst, having such knowledge of the approach of said street car, neglected and failed to warn the driver of the automobile, as early as a reasonably prudent person, under similar circumstances, would have warned him, Robert Aungst was negligent, and if you further find that such negligence contributed to the injuries which caused his death, then your verdict must be for the defendant and against the plaintiff."

Our attention has not been called to any testimony upon which to base instruction No. 26, and we have not found any which would justify the giving of such an instruction, if it were otherwise a correct statement of the law. In support of this instruction the appellant calls our attention to the recent case of Cate v. Fresno Traction Co. (Cal. App.) 295 P. 98. However, this case has been transferred to the Supreme Court for further hearing, and cannot, therefore, be relied upon as an authority.

In the case of Brown v. Davis, 84 Cal. App. 180, 257 P. 877, 878, this court had before it a similar instruction, and speaking through the late Presiding Justice Finch, we there said: "The court instructed the jury, in effect, that if the defendant was driving at an excessive or dangerous rate of speed and that fact was known to the deceased 'or was plainly obvious to a reasonable person in her situation,' and that she failed to remonstrate with the defendant, she was guilty of contributory negligence. The instruction is so clearly erroneous that it is deemed sufficient to cite Dowd v. Atlas T. & A. Service, 187 Cal. 523, 202 P. 870, and Curran v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc., 77 Cal. App. 462, 247 P. 236, wherein the duty of a passenger in case of a driver's negligence is considered."

Again, in Switzler v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., supra, this court had occasion to examine the question as to the contributory negligence of a guest. We there said: "This question has been before the appeal courts of this state a number of times, and it seems to be pretty well settled that a guest riding in an automobile must use ordinary care and prudence to insure his own personal safety, that is, he must use such reasonable care and prudence as an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances. However, a guest when not having any control, supervision or management over the automobile, is not placed in the same legal situation as the driver. As stated in Carpenter v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 51 Cal. App. 60, 195 P. 1073, 1075: 'Interference by the passenger or guest where the vehicle is about to be placed in a position of danger might prove to be gross imprudence and so disconcert the driver as to cause the disastrous result which such interference was designed to avoid.' And further * * *: 'For aught that appears to the contrary, he might have reasonably believed that Gibson intended to and would have either stopped or increased the speed of the car and thus have easily escaped the threatened peril.' The opinion in that case quotes from a number of other cases, and then the rule approved is as follows: 'Assuming that deceased, when the automobile which he occupied as a passenger or guest, reached the point 30 feet distant from the crossing, and traveling at a speed of only 4 miles per hour, saw the train 300 feet away therefrom and approaching at a high rate of speed, we cannot say as a matter of law that his failure to interfere with the driver's operation of the car rather than to rely upon the latter's judgment in escaping the threatened danger, nor that his failure to leave the car, constituted contributory negligence. * * *' 'While one who knows, or should know, that the driver is carelessly operating the car must use ordinary care for his own safety, and it is incumbent upon him to take proper steps for his own protection, still whether by failing to protest against the course being pursued by the driver, or to leave the vehicle, constituted a want of ordinary care which proximately contributed to his injuries was a question of fact to be submitted to the jury, unless from the evidence but one conclusion might reasonably be drawn.' The following cases all show that whether the guest is chargeable with contributory negligence in not protesting with the driver, or doing anything to interfere with his management and control of the car, is a question to be submitted to the jury." Crabbe

v. Mammoth Channel G. Min. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 P. 714; Ilardi v. Central California Traction Co., 36 Cal. App. 488, 172 P. 763; Dover v. Archambeault, 57 Cal. App. 659, 208 P. 178; Carpenter v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., supra; Curran v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc., supra. See, also, notes 47 A. L. R. 289. That the negligence of an automobile driver, even in approaching railway crossings, is not imputable as a matter of law to a passenger having no control or direction, likewise appears from the text found in 3 California Jurisprudence, pages 853, 854, and 855.

The recent case of Marchetti v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co., 204 Cal. 679, 269 P. 529, is a complete answer to the appellant's contentions. It is there said (quoting from the syllabus): "The negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be imputed to a passenger therein in the absence of any evidence showing that the latter exercised some control over the driver, or that he possessed the power to supervise or direct the manner in which the automobile should be operated. A passenger in a motor vehicle approaching a railway crossing is under no legal obligation to warn the driver, either of the presence of the tracks or of an approaching train; and while it is the passenger's duty to look and listen, it is not his duty to stop for a successful observation, since he has no authority over the driver, but is fully subject to the latter's action, and he has the right to assume that the driver, on approaching a railway crossing, will exercise due care for the protection and safety of his passengers and that even when so near the crossing as to be in apparent danger of a collision with an oncoming train he will take some action to avert an accident."

In addition to the authorities cited we may list the following cases which uphold the same rule: Bryant v. Pacific Elect. Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 737, 164 P. 385; Irwin v. Golden State Auto. Touring Co., 178 Cal. 10, 171 P. 1059; Nichols v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 630, 174 P. 319.

We do not need to discuss instructions Nos. 29 and 30 given at the request of the defendant, further than to state that they should be remodeled to conform to what is said in the case of Armock v. United R. R. of San Francisco, 56 Cal. App. 160, 204 P. 856, and other cases cited herein, as to the respective rights of street car companies and the public at intersections.

We think it evident that the instructions which we have been considering, given to the jury, were prejudicially erroneous, and justify the court in granting a new trial; and therefore the order is affirmed.

I concur: PRESTON, P. J.

117 Cal.App.(Supp.) 775

PEOPLE v. CHASE et al.

Cr. A. 598.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

June 25, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 10, 1931.

4. Criminal law ☞45.

Words "room" and "building" in statute respecting gambling include ships (Pen. Code, § 318).

Word "building" in its primary sense means merely that which is built, but usually indicates some sort of edifice or structure located on or affixed to land. Word "room" is defined to mean space inclosed or set apart by a partition, an apartment, or chamber, and a room may as well be on a ship as on shore.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Building" and "Room," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Criminal law ☞45.

Expression "prevall upon" in statute respecting gambling means to bring persuasion, inducement, or urgency to bear successfully (Pen. Code, § 318).

3. Criminal law ☞45.

Crime of inviting others to visit place kept for purpose of gambling is committed at place where defendant delivers invitation or makes use of device (Pen. Code, § 318).

4. Criminal law ☞97(3).

Even if ship kept for purpose of gambling was on high seas, if invitation to visit ship was given in state, offense could be prosecuted in state (Pen. Code, § 27, subd. 1, and § 318).

Pen. Code, § 27, subd. 1, provides that persons who commit, in whole or in part, any crime within state, are liable for punishment under laws of state.

5. Criminal law ☞112(1).

Prosecution for prevailing upon persons to visit ship kept for gambling purposes could be had in county wherein acts of inducement occurred, notwithstanding ship was kept in another county (Pen. Code, §§ 781, 318).

6. Criminal law ☞369(2).

In prosecution for prevailing upon persons to visit place kept for gambling, evidence regarding acts done on other days than date charged held admissible to prove conspiracy (Pen. Code, § 318).

7. Criminal law ☞45.

That ship also contained facilities for eating and dancing did not affect its character as place for gambling (Pen. Code, § 318).

8. Criminal law ☞562.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for prevailing upon persons to visit place kept for purpose of gambling (Pen. Code, § 318).

9. Criminal law ☞45.

Invitation to visit place kept for purpose of gambling in violation of statute may be given by any conduct which conveys the idea (Pen. Code, § 318).

10. Criminal law ☞45.

Sign at dock, pamphlets, and free tickets for rides to ship, constituted "invitation" to visit ship kept for gambling purposes (Pen. Code, § 318).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Invitation," see Words and Phrases.]

11. Criminal law ☞45.

Speedboats, dock, sign, free parking place, and free tickets on speedboats constituted "device" to prevail upon persons to visit ship kept for gambling purposes (Pen. Code, § 318).

"Device" is defined as a contrivance, invention, project, scheme, often a scheme to deceive, stratagem, artifice.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Device," see Words and Phrases.]

12. Criminal law ☞552(1).

Facts regarding what induced person to visit place kept for gambling could be proved by circumstantial evidence (Pen. Code, § 318).

13. Criminal law ☞45.

Invitation or device need not be sole cause moving person to visit place kept for purpose of gambling in order to establish offense (Pen. Code, § 318).

14. Criminal law ☞559.

Ordinarily, jury may infer from fact that person, after being invited to visit place kept for gambling, does so, that he was by means of invitation prevailed upon (Pen. Code, § 318).

15. Criminal law ☞740.

Whether invitation and device of defendant were in whole or in part causes moving any of persons visiting ship for purpose of gambling to do so held for jury (Pen. Code, § 318).

Appeal from Municipal Court of Long Beach; Charles D. Wallace, Judge.

Clarence R. Chase and others were convicted of prevailing upon persons to visit a place kept for the purpose of gambling, and they appeal.

Affirmed.

John S. Cooper and Newton J. Kendall, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John K. Hull, City Pros., and Charles C. Stratton, Deputy City Pros., both of Long Beach, for respondent.

SHAW, J.

The charge on which appellants were convicted is that in the city of Long Beach they "wilfully and unlawfully, by invitation and/or device, did prevail upon persons to visit a place kept for the purpose of gambling, to-wit, the 'Johanna Smith,' a ship anchored off the coast of the City of Long Beach." This is alleged to be a violation of section 318 of the Penal Code, which reads in part as follows: "Whoever, through invitation or device, prevails upon any person to visit any room, building or other places kept for the purpose of gambling or prostitution, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

[1] Appellants contend that a ship does not come within the provisions of this section of the Code, relying on the rule of ejusdem generis to cut down the meaning of the word "places" so as to exclude ships from its purview. Many cases are cited in which general terms have been limited by reference to preceding particular terms, but we do not deem it necessary to review them, because we can discern no genus of places broad enough to include all rooms and buildings that might not also include ships. The word "building" in its primary sense means merely "that which is built" (Webster's Dictionary), but usually indicates some sort of edifice or structure located on or affixed to land. It has been held to include a railroad car, which, while located on land, is certainly not affixed to it. Hardin v. State, 92 Neb. 298, 138 N. W. 146; State v. Lintner, 19 S. D. 447, 104 N. W. 205. The word "room" is defined to mean "space inclosed or set apart by a partition; an apartment or chamber." Webster's Dictionary. A room may as well be on a ship as on shore; in fact, the spaces assigned to passengers on a ship are known as staterooms. In view of the manifest purpose of section 318 to further the suppression of gambling and prostitution, we cannot think the Legislature intended to draw any fine distinctions as to the nature of the places put under its ban, and we hold that the words enumerating those places are used in their most general sense, and as so used include ships. See Coleman v. State, 13 Ala. 602, and Dickey v.

State, 68 Ala. 508, holding that a steamboat or ferryboat is a place, within the meaning of a statute prohibiting gambling in public places.

[2] Appellants also attack the judgments on the ground that the evidence shows the Johanna Smith, at the time of the offense charged, to have been on the high seas and therefore entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the state of California, or at least in Orange county, and therefore beyond the criminal jurisdiction of the Long Beach municipal court, claiming that, for one or the other of these reasons, the offense is without the jurisdiction of the municipal court. In the view we take of the matter the position of the ship is immaterial. To state our reasons for this conclusion requires some further interpretation of section 318.

The conduct constituting the offense at which this section is aimed is defined in the words "through invitation or device, prevails upon any person to visit any room, building or other places"; the remainder being merely descriptive of the places. It is plain that the offense is not committed by the mere passing of an invitation or use of a device. If it were, no further words describing the offense would be necessary, and the sentence might have been completed by the use of the word "requests," or other equivalent term; but instead thereof we find the expression "prevails upon," whose meaning goes far beyond the mere giving of an invitation. The primary sense of the word "prevail" is "to gain the victory; have the mastery; triumph." Webster's Collegiate Dictionary. In a secondary or figurative sense it means, according to the same authority, "to bring persuasion, inducement or urgency to bear (on, upon or with) successfully." (Italics ours.) Similar definitions are given by other lexicographers. In section 318 the word is unquestionably used in the sense last stated, and by its use the Legislature declared that the offense is not completed unless the person subjected to an invitation or device actually goes to a place described in the section. Without this there might be an attempt to violate section 318, but nothing more, and, since the appellants were found guilty of a completed offense, we are not here concerned with an attempt. This statute is very similar to a Minnesota statute which was under consideration in State v. Stickney, 118 Minn. 64, 136 N. W. 419. That statute declared it unlawful "to induce, entice or procure * * * any female person * * * to enter any house of ill fame," and the court there declared that this crime is not complete and no conviction can be had therefor unless the female actually enters the house of ill fame. Our statute of 1929 regarding gambling ships (St. 1929, p. 703) is an example of a statute more broadly worded and shows by contrast the effect of section

318. Section 2 of the act of 1929 makes it "unlawful for any person, within this state, to solicit, entice, induce, persuade or procure * * * any person to visit any gambling ship." By the use of the word "solicit," this statute makes it clear that the conduct of the person solicited is not material to the offense; and this difference between the statutes shows that the act of 1929 has not by implication repealed section 318 as to gambling ships.

[3] But, notwithstanding the conclusion just reached, we think the gist of the offense under section 318 is the giving of the invitation or the use of the device by which some person is prevailed upon to visit a place described in the section. The actual visiting is not an act done by the defendant, but a result of his acts, the happening of which is by the section made a condition to his criminal responsibility. Hence we think it may fairly be said that the crime is committed at the place where the defendant delivers the invitation or makes use of the device, and, if that place is within the jurisdiction of the court, it is enough; that jurisdiction is not affected by the location of the place visited by the other person. The purpose of the statute is to protect the inhabitants of this state against being led into evil courses, and it matters not to that purpose whether the places of evil doing are in this state or outside of it. Such was the conclusion reached in State v. Stickney, supra, where the acts of enticement occurred and the prosecution was had in Minnesota, but the house of ill fame entered was in Wisconsin, and it was held that the crime was committed in Minnesota and was within the jurisdiction of the Minnesota courts.

[4, 5] But, if it be conceded that we are wrong in this conclusion, and that the commission of an offense under section 318 is consummated at the place visited, nevertheless the acts of invitation, etc., would constitute a part of the offense, the crime would be partly committed where those acts were done, and, if any of them were done in Long Beach, as charged, the Long Beach court would have jurisdiction of the offense, under either section 27 or section 781 of the Penal Code, as the case may be. Section 27 provides, in part: "The following persons are liable to punishment under the laws of this state: 1. All persons who commit, in whole or in part, any crime within this state." Even if the Johanna Smith was on the high seas, yet, if the invitation was given in this state, the offense may be prosecuted here, under this section (People v. Botkin, 132 Cal. 231, 64 P. 286, 84 Am. St. Rep. 39; People v. Chapman, 55 Cal. App. 192, 197, 203 P. 126); and it matters not, to this conclusion, that there may be no law on the high seas by which the transaction in question is made a crime (People v. Chapman, supra). See, also, People v.

Staples, 91 Cal. 23, 29, 27 P. 523. On the other hand, if the ship was in Orange county, the prosecution may be had in Los Angeles county, under section 781, which reads as follows: "When a public offense is committed in part in one county and in part in another, or the acts or effects thereof constituting or requisite to the consummation of the offense occur in two or more counties, the jurisdiction is in either county."

[6, 7] Since the guilt of the appellants, as well as the jurisdiction of the court, depends on the commission of acts of inducement and there appears to be no question that such acts as were done in that respect were done in Long Beach, we proceed to consideration of the question whether acts sufficient to show the guilt of the appellants were proved. It may be stated at once that as to several of them there is no showing that they personally did anything amounting to a direct invitation to any one to visit the Johanna Smith. The respondent contends as to them that there was a conspiracy of which they were members, the object of which was to prevail upon other persons to visit the Johanna Smith, and that hence these persons were criminally liable for acts which were done by other persons in furtherance, as it is claimed, of this conspiracy. Here it should be noted that the complaint charges an offense committed November 29, 1930, and that, after evidence had been introduced as to occurrences on several different days, the prosecutor was required to elect on which he would rely for conviction, and elected the date charged in the complaint. Hence, unless there be found evidence of an offense committed on that date, the conviction cannot be upheld. People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 168, 65 P. 323; People v. Hatch, 13 Cal. App. 521, 534, 535, 109 P. 1097; People v. Bartnett, 15 Cal. App. 89, 94, 113 P. 879; People v. Harlan, 29 Cal. App. 600, 603, 156 P. 980. The evidence as to acts done on other days was probably introduced for the purpose of proving the conspiracy, and was proper for that purpose.

The evidence shows that the ship Johanna Smith was on the date charged and for several months prior thereto had been anchored in the ocean off Long Beach. The character of this ship is not seriously questioned by appellants, and the evidence is ample to show that during all of this time and particularly on November 29th it was "kept for the purpose of gambling." Its character in that respect is not affected by the fact that in addition to its gambling equipment it also contained facilities for eating and dancing. 27 Corpus Juris, 1010; State v. Eaton, 85 Me. 237, 27 A. 126.

It also appears that during this time persons visiting this ship were transported to and from it by a number of speedboats called "water taxis." These boats ran from a dock at No. 1415 West Seventh street in Long Beach, at which place, in addition to the docking facilities, there was a free parking place for automobiles and a shed which contained a lunch counter, an office, and the gang plank for entering and leaving the boats. This line of boats and the dock and other appurtenances were owned and operated by appellants Chase and Casey, and all of the other appellants were their employees. On the street in front of the dock there was a Neon sign about 8x12 feet in size, which read: "Visit the Johanna Smith cabaret ship, dining and dancing. Get water taxi here." A free bus was operated from the business district of Long Beach to this dock. On it was a sign reading, "Free bus to 1415 W. 7th St. Water Taxi." There is no direct evidence to show who operated this bus or that it was running on November 29th, although it did run a few days before.

The operators of the Johanna Smith maintained a box for receipt of mail on the street in front of the dock, and on receiving inquiries regarding the ship would mail out cards, each of which stated that it "entitles you and your party to one free round trip speedboat ride" to the ship, that free busses run from Long Beach to the dock at 1415 West Seventh street, and that boats leave this dock every 20 minutes. They also gave away these cards on the ship, distributing altogether 10,000 of them every week, and gave away other tickets purporting to be complimentary passes for one "round trip West Seventh Street Water Taxis, 1415 W. 7th St., Long Beach." Like tickets were given away at the docks. These tickets and cards were accepted for passage by the operators of the speedboats. Persons who did not have them were charged from 10 to 50 cents for passage to the ship, or, if they declined to pay, were carried free. Tickets collected were handed to some one on the ship by the operators of the boats and cash was handed to appellant Casey. No fares or tickets were collected on return trips. Persons who sent in by mail inquiries about the ship also received in reply a pamphlet describing the attractions to be found on the Johanna Smith, including the gambling games. These pamphlets stated that the trip to the ship is made on speedboats which leave the dock at 1415 West Seventh street, and that free busses from Long Beach connect with these "water taxis." There was also a picture of the bus showing that, in addition to the sign above mentioned, the words "Johanna Smith, Amusement Ship," were conspicuously painted on the cover of its spare tire. On the back of this pamphlet was printed a coupon reading "Pass 2 Free complimentary to West Seventh Street Water Taxis." About 60,000 of these pamphlets were printed and delivered to the dock at 1415 West Seventh street. Some were received there by appellant Ellis and others by appellant Casey. Casey opened one bundle of them and looked at it, and at another time gave one of the pamphlets to a police officer. On various occasions in November several hundred persons visited the Johanna Smith, and on the evening of November 29th the visitors numbered about 1,500 persons.

On November 29th the appellants Chase and Casey were actively engaged in operating the West Seventh street water taxis, and the other appellants were assisting them. Connor and Montoya were operating one of the speedboats, Ellis was maintaining order at the head of the gang plank and keeping an account of the passengers, and Bateman and Pullman were helping dock the boats and helping the passengers off and on. The five appellants last named had worked at the dock for at least a month. Some of them admitted seeing the sign and the bus above mentioned, and the jury might well have believed that the others saw them. Some of them disclaimed knowledge of the destination of the water taxis and of the character of the Johanna Smith, but, as one of them said, "Everybody knows it was a gambling ship," and the jury was justified in rejecting these disclaimers also. There is some suggestion in the evidence of the defendants that these speedboats could be hired for trips to other places than the Johanna Smith, but no showing that any of them ever did go elsewhere, during a period of five months including November 29th, except on one occasion.

[8] Taking all the evidence together, we think it is sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the Johanna Smith was a place kept for the purpose of gambling; that there was a conspiracy by the appellants Chase and Casey and the operators of that ship to prevail upon persons to visit it; that the other appellants, with knowledge of the nature and purposes of this conspiracy, aided and abetted their codefendants in carrying it out; and hence that all the appellants are equally responsible criminally for what was done in pursuance of it.

A police officer who went out to the Johanna Smith early in the evening of November 29th and remained there an hour and a half testified that 43 other passengers went out with him on the same speedboat, and that he saw 1,500 persons on the ship. Other officers were stationed in and around appellants' dock during the same period of time, and their testimony presents a picture of continual activity on the part of the various appellants in running boats, directing passengers, and supervising the loading and unloading of the boats. These officers also saw many people park cars in the parking place and enter the dock, about 100 cars being parked there at one time, and observed the entry of many persons to the dock and upon the boats. The jury could properly infer that a large number, if not all, of the 1,500 persons who were on the ship that evening, reached it on appellants' speedboats.

[9-11] It was necessary, of course, for the prosecution to show also that the appellants made use of some invitation or device and thereby prevailed upon some of these persons to visit the ship. An invitation, while it may be oral or written, need not be either; it may be given by any conduct which conveys the idea. The Neon sign maintained at the dock and above described constituted an invitation to all who read it to visit the Johanna Smith. The same is true of the pamphlets and the tickets. The sign faced the street, where it could be read by all who passed by or approached the dock. We think the combination of the speedboats, the dock, the sign, the free parking place, and the free tickets on the speedboats, which were given away in quantities of 10,000 every week, also constituted a device, the purpose of which was to prevail upon persons to visit the Johanna Smith. A device is defined as "a contrivance; an invention; project; scheme; often, a scheme to deceive; a stratagem; an artifice." Webster's Dictionary; 18 Corpus Juris, 1032. The combination to which we have just referred answers that description.

[12-15] There is no direct evidence showing what induced any person other than a police officer to visit the Johanna Smith on November 29th, but the fact regarding this matter, like any other, may be proved by circumstantial evidence. In order to establish an offense under section 318, it is not necessary to show that the invitation or device was the sole cause moving a person to visit one of the places therein described. If it was a moving cause of his visit, that is sufficient. In the ordinary case the jury is justified in inferring, from the fact that a person, after being invited to visit a place, does so, that he was by means of the invitation prevailed upon—that is, successfully urged—to make the visit, without having before them the information necessary for making an analytical investigation of his state of mind to ascertain whether some other cause also influenced him. Here there is proof, not only of invitation and device put forth by appellants, but also that so many persons came within their range and visited the ship as to support an inference that some of these persons, at least, were influenced by the invitation and device. Under the circumstances of the case, it was a question of fact for the jury whether the invitation and device of appellants were in whole or in part the causes moving any of the persons who visited the Johanna Smith on November 29th to do so, and with their decision upon it we cannot interfere.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: McLUCAS, P. J.; BISHOP, J.

Order Denying Rehearing.

PER CURIAM.

Appellants' petition for a rehearing after judgment in the above entitled case having been filed, and said petition having been duly considered, it is now ordered that said petition be denied.

We concur: SHAW, Acting P. J.; BISHOP, J.

117 Cal.App.(Supp.) 763
PEOPLE v. ANDERSON et al.
Cr. A 601.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

July 10, 1931.

1. Breach of the peace ☞1.

"Breach of the peace" is substantially synonymous with "disturbance of the peace," and means violation of public tranquillity and order—offense of breaking or disturbing public peace by any riotous, forcible, or unlawful proceeding (Pen. Code, §§ 415, 416).

The term "breach of the peace" is generic and includes all violations of public peace or order, or decorum; in other words, signifies offense of disturbing public peace or tranquillity enjoyed by citizens of a community; a disturbance of public tranquillity by any act or conduct inciting to violence or tending to provoke or excite others to break the peace; a disturbance of public order by any act of violence, or by an act likely to produce violence, or which, by causing consternation and alarm, disturbs peace and quiet of community.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Breach of the Peace," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Unlawful assembly ☞1.

Statute requiring certain officers to go among persons unlawfully assembled and command them to disperse held inapplicable to statute respecting disturbing public peace (Pen. Code, §§ 415, 416, 726).

3. Unlawful assembly ☞1.

Police officers' going among persons assembled for purpose of disturbing peace and directing them severally to move on, or using similar words, is sufficient compliance with statute (Pen. Code, § 415).

4. Criminal law 1159(4).

Appellate court cannot review jury's determination as to credibility of witnesses.

5. Unlawful assembly 3.

Evidence warranted finding that one purpose of assembly in street was to resist by force attempt to arrest or disperse defendants and to disturb the peace (Pen. Code, § 415).

6. Unlawful assembly 1.

Guilt of offense of assembling for purpose of disturbing peace and refusing to disperse did not depend on consummation of purpose of assembly (Pen. Code, § 415).

7. Unlawful assembly 1.

Where crowd listening to speech overflowed into street more than halfway to street car tracks, it was duty of police to keep crowd moving (Pen. Code, § 415).

8. Criminal law 304(5).

Courts could take judicial notice of fact that street where assembly of people occurred was business street along which there was much traffic.

9. Unlawful assembly 1.

Where one speaking to people in street refuses to move on request though hearers are blocking traffic, he becomes at least an aider and abettor, and a principal in offense (Pen. Code, §§ 31, 415).

10. Arrest 63(3).

Where speakers committed misdemeanor in presence of officers by refusing to move on, though hearers were blocking traffic, police officers could arrest defendants without warrant or previous declaration of intention to do so (Pen. Code, §§ 836, 841).

11. Unlawful assembly 3.

In prosecution for unlawfully assembling to disturb public peace, evidence that police officers had received instructions from superiors not to permit meeting held properly excluded (Pen. Code, §§ 410, 416).

12. Unlawful assembly 1.

That police officers prevented some people from going to place of assembly afforded no justification for breach of peace by defendants or for assembly for purpose of committing breach (Pen. Code, § 416).

On Rehearing.

13. Criminal law 369(2).

Conspiracy may be proved on trial of any one of conspirators for crime committed in pursuance of it, although defendants are not charged with conspiracy (Pen. Code, § 182).

14. Unlawful assembly 1.

In prosecution for assembling for purpose of disturbing peace, defendants' acts in resisting officer or violating ordinance regulating public speaking could be scrutinized to ascertain their purpose in assembling (Pen. Code, § 416).

15. Unlawful assembly 1.

If part of purpose of assembling was to commit disturbance of peace, offense was complete though no such disturbance actually happened (Pen. Code, § 416).

16. Criminal law 1172(6).

Court's reading to jury parts of statute inapplicable to case held not prejudicial, where there was no evidence to which such parts were applicable.

17. Criminal law 1159(4).

Points depending on argument regarding credibility of certain evidence held not reviewable.

Appeal from Municipal Court of Los Angeles; H. Parker Wood, Judge.

Thorsten Anderson and others were convicted of unlawfully assembling for purpose of disturbing public peace and committing an unlawful act, and refusing to disperse on being commanded to do so by a public officer, and they appeal.

Affirmed.

Leo Gallagher and F. H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles P. Johnson, City Pros., and Joe W. Matherly and John L. Bland, Deputy City Prosecutors, all of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, J.

Three separate complaints were filed in the municipal court and tried together. Appeals by all the defendants from judgments of conviction entered against them are now presented to us on a single record. In each case the charge was that the defendants named in the complaint "did willfully and unlawfully assemble for the purpose of disturbing the public peace and committing an unlawful act, to-wit: a violation of 415 of the Penal Code, and did fail and refuse to disperse on being desired and commanded so to do by a public officer, to-wit: (naming a different officer in each case) a police officer of the City of Los Angeles," in violation of section 416 of the Penal Code.

Section 416, just mentioned, provides that, "if two or more persons assemble for the purpose of disturbing the public peace, or committing any unlawful act, and do not disperse on being desired or commanded so to do by a public officer, the persons so offending are severally guilty of a misdemeanor." In order to show an offense under this section four facts must appear, viz.: (1) an assembly by two or more persons, (2) for the purpose of disturbing the public peace or committing an unlawful act, (3) that such persons be desired or commanded by a public officer to disperse, and (4) that they then fail to do so. The language of the section as to the first and fourth of these facts is so clear as to need no elucidation, but as to the second and third some discussion seems proper.

☞For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] The unlawful purpose charged in this case is to disturb the public peace and to violate section 415 of the Penal Code. The only part of section 415 that could possibly be material here is that providing for the punishment of "every person who maliciously and willfully disturbs the peace or quiet of any neighborhood or person, by loud or unusual noise, or by tumultuous or offensive conduct, or threatening, traducing, quarrelling, challenging to fight or fighting," and this adds little to the phrase "disturbing the public peace" appearing in section 416. The expressions, "disturbance of the peace" and "breach of the peace," are substantially synonymous, and have a well-understood legal meaning. "Breach of the peace has been defined as a violation of the public tranquillity and order—the offense of breaking or disturbing the public peace by any riotous, forcible or unlawful proceeding." 4 Cal. Jur. 471, citing Black's Law Dict. "The term 'breach of the peace' is generic, and includes all violations of the public peace or order, or decorum; in other words, it signifies the offense of disturbing the public peace or tranquillity enjoyed by the citizens of a community; a disturbance of the public tranquillity by any act or conduct inciting to violence or tending to provoke or excite others to break the peace; a disturbance of public order by any act of violence, or by any act likely to produce violence, or which, by causing consternation and alarm, disturbs the peace and quiet of the community." 9 Corpus Juris. 386, citing cases. "A breach of the peace is a violation of public order, a disturbance of the public tranquillity, by any act or conduct inciting to violence, or tending to provoke or excite others to breach the peace." 8 R. C. L. 284. "It is a disturbance of public order by an act of violence, or by any act likely to produce violence, or which, by causing consternation and alarm, disturbs the peace and quiet of the community." People v. Most, 171 N. Y. 423, 64 N. E. 175, 58 L. R. A. 509; People v. Wallace, 85 App. Div. 170, 83 N. Y. S. 130, 133. The term "breach of the peace" includes all violations of the public peace and order, and may include disturbances in the nighttime by shouting alone, though the expressions used are innocent and harmless. State v. Christie, 97 Vt. 461, 123 A. 849, 34 A. L. R. 577.

The assembly described in section 416 appears to be included within the definition of an "unlawful assembly" stated in section 407 of the Penal Code. Consequently the offense defined by section 416 is similar to that punishable under section 409, which declares that "every person remaining present at the place of any riot, rout, or unlawful assembly, after the same has been lawfully warned to disperse" (with certain exceptions) is guilty of a misdemeanor. In People v. Sklar (1930) 292 P. 1068, we held that the words just quoted from section 409 refer to section 726 for a definition of a lawful warning. In this case the commands were similar to those considered in People v. Sklar, and would be insufficient to comply with section 726, under the rule declared in that case. It is therefore necessary to determine whether section 726 applies to the proceedings of officers acting under section 416.

[2, 3] There are several differences between section 416 on the one hand, and sections 409 and 726 on the other. Section 409 is manifestly incomplete in not stating what constitutes a lawful warning, and a reference to section 726 is necessary to supply the omission, that being the only section which could serve such purpose, while section 416 appears to be complete in itself, on this point, and needs no cross-reference. Section 416 confers power to order a dispersal of the assembly on "any public officer," but section 726 gives such power only to certain enumerated officers, who are far from constituting the entire class of "public officers," and therefore section 726 does not fully cover the situation provided for by section 416. For these reasons we conclude that section 726 is not applicable to the cases provided for in section 416. If police officers go among the persons assembled and direct them severally to "move on" or to leave the place where they are assembled, or use other similar words, this is in effect a command to disperse and is a sufficient compliance with this requirement of section 416, at least as to the persons to whom such commands are addressed.

While every assembly subject to the provisions of section 416 may also be dispersed under sections 409 and 726, and the construction we give to section 416 results in two modes of procedure for the dispersal thereof, yet there is discernible some ground for such a course of legislation. Under section 409, an assembly for the doing of a lawful act in a violent, boisterous, or tumultuous manner may be dispersed, and an offense is committed by every person not in the excepted classes, who remains at the place of assembly, after the proper warning, although he may not have participated in the assembly; whereas the assembly denounced in section 416 must be for an unlawful purpose and only the participators therein may be punished for failure to disperse on command. The Legislature may have thought that these differences justified a more summary mode of proceeding under section 416.

While we have before us three separate complaints, the events from which they arose were so connected that the jury might have considered them all part of a single transaction or at least the result of a single plan in which all the defendants participated. All these events happened about 2 p. m. on September 1, 1930, on public streets, and within a distance of about one block from the public square or park known as the Plaza. An organization holding Communist doctrines and known as the Trades Union Unity League had called what its members referred to as a "demonstration against unemployment," to be held at this time at the Plaza, and large crowds were gathered on all the streets in this vicinity, in places blocking the sidewalks and even the roadways. All of the defendants were members of the Trades Union Unity League and had come to the neighborhood of the Plaza either to speak or otherwise to assist in the "demonstration." The defendants all took the stand, and from their evidence, taken with the circumstances appearing from other testimony, the jury could properly infer that they were all acting in concert and with a common purpose in so assembling, that whatever was done by any one of them was in furtherance of their common design, and hence that all were equally responsible criminally for the acts of any of them. Looking at the case from this standpoint it appears that all the defendants were a part of one assembly, although the overt acts committed by them may be divided into three occurrences separated by a space of a city block and a time interval of a few minutes.

The defendant Olson was raised on the shoulders of defendants Snyder and Anderson, on Main street about 50 or 60 feet south of Arcadia street, and began to make a speech. Speaking in the streets is not prohibited there. Police officers who were near heard a crowd shouting, and as they approached saw Olson above the crowd, holding a placard, and heard him shouting. One of the police officers started toward him, and had to force his way through by pushing aside a ring of eight or ten people, who surrounded these three defendants, to get there. As he approached he heard Olson shout: "Don't let the police disperse us, don't let them arrest our speakers, fight for unemployment insurance, fight against unemployment." The police officers testified that the noise was so great they could not hear all that was said. As soon as the first police officer reached defendants, he told them to disperse; that they were disturbing the peace and blocking traffic. Olson refused to get down, but went on speaking and said the streets were public and he would speak there if he wanted to. Two other police officers came up, and the three pulled Olson down, in spite of much forcible resistance on the part of all three defendants, and the defendants were arrested. Defendant Anderson then threw in the air a handful of cards bearing the words, "Fight police brutality." While the arrest was being made the crowd was shouting, "Don't arrest our speakers."

The arrest of defendants Olson, Anderson, and Synder was witnessed by defendants Chambers and Yamaguchi. Shortly thereafter, around the corner but within a distance of 100 feet from the scene of that arrest, Chambers was held up on the shoulders of Yamaguchi and began to make a speech to the crowd on Arcadia street just east of Main street, at a place where speech making was prohibited by ordinance. He was "hollering in a loud manner" and saying, "Fellow workers and comrades, don't starve, fight," and also something about the release of Imperial Valley prisoners. Before he spoke further, both defendants were arrested. Chambers had a placard on which was printed, "Demand release of Imperial Valley prisoners" and Yamaguchi had a placard reading, "Vote Communist." A police officer told the defendants to go on, and they refused, whereupon they were arrested.

The defendant Reynor was raised on the shoulders of two other persons, near the corner of Arcadia and Los Angeles streets, at a place where speech making in the streets was prohibited, and began to speak to a crowd of about 65 people. She said rather loudly, "Fellow workers, don't run, fight," and, "Down with the police." The crowd had been moving on at the direction of the police, and she was trying to stop them. Officer Chambers three times told her and those with her to move on and not obstruct the sidewalk, and another officer told them to move on, but they refused; defendant Reynor saying, "This is our sidewalk and we can make speeches anywhere we want to."

[4-6] The evidence was conflicting, but the foregoing statement finds support in that part of it which, as shown by their verdict, the jury believed. We cannot review their determination as to its credibility. These facts are sufficient to warrant a finding that one of the purposes of the assembly in which the defendants participated was to resist by force any attempt to arrest or disperse them and to commit a disturbance of the peace, within the meaning we have already given that term. Some of the defendants went farther than others in executing this unlawful purpose, but their guilt does not depend on the consummation of the purpose by all, or even by any, of them. The four facts necessary under section 416 were shown as to each defendant. People v. Wallace, supra, was a similar case, though the evidence against defendants was perhaps somewhat stronger than here, and a conviction was sustained under a statute providing for the punishment of one who "seriously disturbs or endangers the public peace."

[7-10] The conduct of defendants cannot be justified on the theory that they were merely resisting unlawful arrests. Two of the speech-making episodes occurred at places where such speaking was prohibited and the participants were for that reason subject to arrest. While speech making, per se, was not prohibited at the other place in question, yet, according to the testimony of the officers, when they approached the defendants there assembled, the crowd overflowed into the street more than halfway to the street car tracks and it would be hard for any one to move back and forth, and these defendants were told that they were blocking traffic, but refused to move or quit speaking. Under the circumstances here appearing, it was not only the right but the duty of the police to keep the crowd moving and the streets open for passage. People v. Wallace, supra. We may take judicial notice of the fact, which is not shown by the evidence, that Main street, where this occurred, is a business street along which there is much automobile and street car traffic. Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 341, 208 P. 125; Katz v. Helbing, 205 Cal. 629, 635, 271 P. 1062, 62 A. L. R. 825. The primary purpose of a street is for passage, not for public meetings; and even where public speaking is not prohibited, standing, or congregating in the streets in such a manner as to block traffic is prohibited by city ordinances. While a speaker who is not himself obstructing traffic may not always be criminally responsible for such obstruction created by his hearers, yet when he refuses to move on request and insists on holding his meeting at a place where his hearers are blocking traffic, as in this case, he becomes at least an aider and abettor, and a principal in the offense. Penal Code, § 31. For such a misdemeanor committed in their presence the police officers could properly arrest defendants, without a warrant or a previous declaration of their intention to do so. Penal Code, §§ 836, 841; People v. Wolfgang, 192 Cal. 763, 221 P. 907.

Complaint is made by defendants of the action of the court in the matter of instructions, but little argument is made in support of it. We have examined the instructions given and refused and find no substantial error in regard thereto.

[11, 12] Defendants sought to prove that the police officers present at and near the Plaza had received instructions from their superiors not to permit the holding of the meeting above mentioned, which had been called to be held at the Plaza, but the offered evidence was excluded as immaterial. There was no error in these rulings. It was the duty of the police, regardless of such orders, to suppress unlawful assemblies. Penal Code, § 410. Perhaps the offered evidence might be regarded as corroborative of evidence given by defendants and some of their witnesses that police officers prevented them from going to the Plaza. But if this be accepted as a fact it affords no justification for a breach of the peace by defendants or for an assembly for the purpose of committing such a breach. And if we assume both that the defendants' original intention was to assemble at the Plaza and that they were prevented from doing so, yet we find sufficient evidence in the record to show that their intention as to the place of the assembly was quite flexible, that they were determined to make speeches at any available place, and that the above mentioned unlawful purpose entertained by them extended not alone to the Plaza, but to any place where speeches might be made.

The judgments are affirmed.

I concur: McLUCAS, P. J.

I concur, without giving assent, however, to that portion of the opinion holding that those making speeches to a crowd halfway to the car tracks were subject to arrest for blocking traffic: BISHOP, J.

On Rehearing.

SHAW, J.

[13] Appellants' petition for rehearing is for the most part based on the contention that they were not charged with the crime of conspiracy and hence the evidence tending to show that they entered into a conspiracy could not be considered by the jury or by this court. Under section 182 of the Penal Code, a conspiracy to commit any crime is an offense entirely separate from the crime which is the object of the conspiracy; and it is undoubtedly true that appellants, not having been charged with the crime of conspiracy, could not be convicted of it. But where several persons conspire or combine together to commit any crime, each is criminally responsible for the acts of his associates or confederates committed in furtherance of the common design, and such conspiracy may be proved on the trial of any of the conspirators for a crime committed in furtherance of it, although the defendants are not charged with conspiracy. People v. Brown, 59 Cal. 345, 352; People v. Holmes, 118 Cal. 444, 456, 50 P. 675; People v. Kauffman, 152 Cal. 331, 334, 92 P. 861; People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 374, 149 P. 821; People v. Ford, 25 Cal. App. 388, 397, 143 P. 1075; People v. Wilson, 76 Cal. App. 688, 694, 245 P. 781.

[14, 15] It is also true that appellants cannot be convicted of the offense here charged merely because the evidence may show them to be guilty of some other offense, such as resisting an officer, or violation of the ordinance regulating public speaking. But their acts in that respect may be scrutinized for the purpose of ascertaining their purpose in assembling; and if a part of that purpose was to commit a disturbance of the peace, the offense charged was complete even though no such disturbance actually occurred.

[16] The action of the trial court in reading to the jury parts of section 415 of the Penal Code other than those we held applicable to the case could not have prejudiced appellants, as there was no evidence to which such parts of the sections were applicable. People v. Rivera, 75 Cal. App. 222, 242 P. 506.

[17] Other points made in the petition depend on an argument as to the credibility of certain evidence, which is beyond our review.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

I concur: BISHOP, J.

McLUCAS, J., being absent, does not participate in this order.

213 Cal. 30

MASON v. DEL VALLE et al.

L. A. 10993.

Supreme Court of California.

June 26, 1931.

1. Judgment ☞565.

Judgment denying injunction without prejudice to plaintiff's maintenance of action for damages held not res judicata as against defendant's contention of prescription.

2. Judgment ☞540.

Judgment is only real conclusion of law, and displaces all former statements in findings on subject.

3. Judgment ☞720.

Only such issues become res judicata as are properly adjudicated in judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stephen G. Long, Judge.

Suit by O. R. Mason against R. F. Del Valle and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Erwin P. Werner, City Atty., W. Turney Fox, Asst. City Atty., Jess E. Stephens, City Atty., W. B. Mathews, Clarence S. Hill, Francis H. Lindley, and Kenneth K. Scott, Deputies City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

R. M. Wiley, of Silver City, N. M., and Otto A. Gerth, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J.

Proceeding instituted in 1928 to enjoin the use and maintenance of a 66-inch pipe line across property acquired in 1924 by plaintiff, and described as lot 45, tract 1336, city of Los Angeles. Defendants are the city itself and certain agents or agencies thereof. At least two special defenses were interposed: First, that a public use had theretofore intervened; and, second, that defendant city had acquired by prescription a right of way 25 feet in width across said property for the construction, maintenance, and use of said pipe line which had become part of the trunk line carrying a supply of water from Inyo county to said city for the use of its inhabitants. Defendants claimed that upon either or both grounds plaintiff must be denied injunctive relief.

The complaint prayed for no alternative relief in damages or otherwise. It stood exclusively upon the claim for an injunction. The answer prayed for no affirmative relief. The issue of injunction was therefore the sole issue before the court. Upon the trial the court denied the injunction and gave judgment for defendants, which judgment contained the following language: "Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that the injunction as prayed by plaintiff above named be and the same is hereby denied, for the reason that the detriment to be suffered by defendants would not be adequately balanced by the benefit to be enjoyed by plaintiff in the event that said injunction should be granted as prayed. And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the denial of the said injunction as prayed be without prejudice to the maintenance by plaintiff of an action for damages, if any, occasioned by the trespass of the defendants and each of them through the maintenance and use by them and each of them of a sixty-six (66) inch pipe line in and across that portion of plaintiff's property described as follows: * * *

[1-3] Defendants appealed from all of the judgment except, of course, that part thereof denying the injunction. Coupling the above-quoted provision of the judgment with certain rather ambiguous findings of fact and conclusions of law, appellants fear that the issue of prescription has reached the state of res adjudicata as against their contention, and accordingly they assert that the evidence shows without substantial conflict that a right of way for said pipe line was in fact acquired by prescription in that the pipe line was completed in 1914, and has been continuously since then in use openly and notoriously under a claim of right for said purpose. We do not see any real ground for this fear on the part of appellants. Indeed, counsel for respondent himself concedes that no such adjudication has yet been made. The judgment is the only real conclusion of law, and displaces all former statements in the findings on the subject. Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 437, 82 P. 66.

Even if it be conceded that the judgment might have been broader under the findings of fact, it does not follow that such issues as were not determined by the judgment have become res adjudicata because of the language of the findings. The safe rule seems to be that only such issues have become res adjudicata as were properly adjudicated in the judgment. While appellants have not urged this contention, it seems to be sound and to be conceded by respondent and to dispose of the appeal, for the judgment does not purport to settle any issue save alone the issue of injunction based upon the ground of the intervention of a public use. The language of the judgment above quoted seems to be merely precautionary, to make certain that no adjudication has been made of the question of damages for an act founded originally at least in trespass. The action of the court as thus interpreted is not subject to the attack made upon it by appellants.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

EBERHARD et ux. v. PACIFIC SOUTHWEST LOAN & MORTGAGE CORPORATION. ***

L. A. 12861.

Supreme Court of California.

June 23, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 20, 1931.

Licenses 18½.

Promissory note issued by private corporation evidencing loan made by individual creditor secured by mortgage on specific real estate held not "security" requiring permit for issuance and sale (St. 1917, pp. 674, 675, 679, § 2, subd. 6, and §§ 3, 12).

St. 1917, p. 674, § 2, subd. 6, provides that word "security" includes all bonds, debentures, and evidences of indebtedness issued by any company, excepting therefrom bills of exchange and promissory notes not offered to public by drawer, maker, or underwriter thereof, and all mortgages and deeds of trust of property situated in state, executed to secure payment thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Security," see Words and Phrases.]

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Lloyd E. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Jules Eberhard and wife against Pacific Southwest Loan & Mortgage Corporation. From the judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Dudley Robinson, of Los Angeles (Harry C. Miller, of El Paso, Tex., of counsel), for appellant.

Bayard R. Rountree, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J.

This action was instituted for the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the defendant to the National Loan Company of Los Angeles and duly assigned to plaintiffs, which mortgage had been given upon a particular parcel of land situate in the city of San Diego for the purpose of securing a promissory note in the sum of $1,000, payable to the National Loan Company of Los Angeles, and also duly assigned to plaintiffs. The complaint alleged the nonpayment of the principal and interest due upon said note. The defendant mortgagor appeared and answered, admitting practically all of the averments of the complaint, but pleading by way of a separate defense to said note and to the foreclosure of said mortgage that the note and mortgage constituted a security as defined by the Corporate Securities Act of California, and that no permit had ever been issued or granted by the corporation commissioner of the state of California for the issuance or sale of said promissory note and of the mortgage securing the same, and that by virtue of the provisions of section 12 of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 679) the note and mortgage were void. In amplification of this latter plea the defendant averred that the note and mortgage sued upon constituted one of a number of mortgage notes made and executed by appellant in favor of the National Loan Company of Los Angeles; that each of said mortgage notes was secured by an individual mortgage covering a separate and specific parcel of land; that each mortgage note and mortgage was in itself an individual and separate transaction, although the mortgagor and mortgagee were in each instance the same; that the National Loan Company of Los Angeles took these notes and mortgages from appellant for loans made in each individual case, and after acquiring the same sold and assigned them, without recourse, to various and divers persons who had the money to loan upon mortgage notes of the above character. The prayer of the defendant's answer was that said promissory note and mortgage be declared void, and that plaintiffs take nothing by said action. The provisions of the Corporate Securities Act (Stats. 1917, p. 673), as amended from time to time since the date of its passage, proceeds to define the various corporate acts and obligations to which its provisions have relation. By its title one of its declared purposes was "to prevent fraud in sale of securities." By subdivision 6 of section 2 (St. 1917, p. 674) thereof the word "security" includes "(b) All bonds, debentures, and evidences of indebtedness issued by any company; (c) * * * excepting therefrom the following: 1. Bills of exchange and promissory notes not offered to the public by the drawer, maker, or underwriter thereof, and all mortgages and deeds of trust of property situated in this state, executed to secure the payment thereof." By section 3 of said act (St. 1917, p. 675) it is provided that "no company shall sell, except upon a sale for a delinquent assessment * * * or offer for sale, negotiate for sale of, or take subscriptions for any security of its own issue until it shall have first applied for and secured from the commissioner a permit authorizing it so to do." Section 12 of the act (St. 1917, p. 679) provides that "every security issued by any company, without a permit of the commissioner authorizing the same then in effect, shall be void, and every security issued by any company, with the authorization of the commissioner but not conforming in its provisions to the provisions, if any, which it is required by the permit of the commissioner to contain, shall be void."

It was in reliance upon the foregoing provisions of the Corporate Securities Act that the defendant made the averment in its answer above set forth. Upon the filing of the answer the plaintiffs interposed a demurrer thereto, alleging that the answer did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a defense for the reason that the mortgage note and mortgage described in the complaint were not securities within the meaning of the Corporate Securities Act as the term "security" is therein defined, and that, if included within the operation of the act, that portion of the act so defining the same was unconstitutional and void. Upon a full hearing and argument upon the demurrer by respective counsel the trial court sustained the demurrer to the appellant's answer, holding that the mortgage note and mortgage sought to be foreclosed in this action were not securities for which a permit of the corporation commissioner was required under the provisions of said act. The defendant declined to amend its answer, and the trial court proceeded to a hearing upon the complaint, and having had such hearing, and upon motion of the plaintiffs, proceeded to enter its judgment in favor of the plaintiff, sustaining the validity of said promissory note and mortgage and directing foreclosure. From the judgment thus entered the defendant has prosecuted this appeal.

The sole point presented by the appellant is that urged before the trial court to the effect that said note and mortgage were and are void as within the inhibitions of the Corporate Securities Act. We are of the opinion that there is no merit in this contention. The language of the Corporate Securities Act, as above set forth, would seem to be plain and unambiguous in its definition of what securities were intended to be brought within the purview of the act, and in its express provision excepting from such operation "bills of exchange and promissory notes not offered to the public by the drawer, maker or underwriter thereof, and all mortgages and deeds of trust of property situated in this state, executed to secure the payment thereof." The transaction set forth in the complaint is nothing more or other than that of a promissory note issued by a private corporation evidencing a loan, made by an individual creditor, secured by a mortgage upon specific real estate. The other transactions to which the defendant in its answer makes reference were of the same identical character, each pertaining to a specific loan of money from a private person, and each secured by a separate mortgage upon separate and specific property, and each in no wise connected with each other except in the fact that the parties to each transaction were the same. There is nothing contained in defendant's answer tending in the remotest degree to show that these separate and individual transactions were ever "offered to the public" in the sense in which that term is employed in the Corporate Securities Act. Nor is there anything contained in the record herein to indicate that the Legislature had such private and individual transactions in mind in the adoption of the Corporate Securities Act, or that such transactions were sought to be embraced within the provisions of the act designed "to prevent fraud in the sale of securities." The express exceptions embraced in the terms of the act as above set forth negative such an assumption, and we are fully satisfied that had the act not contained said exceptions it would have been unconstitutional and void as an unwarrantable interference with the rights of individuals in dealing with each other respecting their private transactions and private properties.

The appellant relies in support of his appeal upon the case of People v. Leach (Cal. App.) 290 P. 131. That was a criminal proceeding involving an alleged conspiracy between certain persons interested in the National Loan Company of Los Angeles and also in the Pacific Southwest Loan & Mortgage Corporation, and involving some of the transactions to which the defendant in its answer referred. The facts set forth in said proceeding are not before the court in the instant case, but, in so far as it was purported to hold that transactions of the character of that set forth in the complaint and admitted in the answer herein come within the purview of the Corporate Securities Act, the language and conclusion of that case touching that subject are hereby expressly disapproved.

We discover no error in the action of the trial court in upholding the validity of the promissory note which forms the subject of this action and in directing the foreclosure of the mortgage upon the defendant's specific property securing the same.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

213 Cal. 33

In re FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' BANK OF IMPERIAL.

L. A. 11630.

Supreme Court of California.

June 26, 1931.

Banks and banking ☞80(10).

Order directing that no dividend be paid on irrigation district's deposits until further order held proper, in view of pendency of action to determine rights of parties in security given district.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

Petition by the Imperial Irrigation District against Will C. Wood, as Superintendent of Banks for the State of California, for payment of dividend on petitioner's claim against the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Imperial, in liquidation. From an order dismissing an order to show cause, petitioner appeals.

Affirmed.

Superseding opinions of the District Court of Appeal in 292 P. 665, and 293 P. 176.

Chas. L. Childers and D. B. Roberts, both of El Centro, for appellant.

Albert A. Rosenshine, Elbert W. Davis and J. H. Hoffman, all of San Francisco, for respondent superintendent of banks.

PRESTON, J.

Treating the petition herein as one in mandate, the action of the court below in denying it seems clearly correct and its order is hereby affirmed.

We may do this without a discussion of the contention that the petition is but an effort to modify a previous appealable order that had become final; hence the present order denying the petition was not appealable. We may also dispose of the cause without a discussion as to whether the so-called bankruptcy rule or the so-called chancery rule obtains in this state in bank liquidation proceedings where dividends upon the claims of general and partially secured creditors of the bank are involved.

The underlying facts of the present controversy are as follows: On October 10, 1927, respondent Will C. Wood, then superintendent of banks for the state of California, closed the doors of Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Imperial and took possession of its property and business under the provisions of section 136 of the Bank Act of the state of California (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652). Said respondent at all times herein has been and now is proceeding to liquidate the affairs of said bank and is administering them for the benefit of depositors and creditors thereof

Petitioner and appellant, Imperial irrigation district, on the above-mentioned date, had on commercial deposit in said bank approximately $54,547.62 and its claim for that sum was regularly approved as a legitimate claim against said bank. Appellant, however, before making said deposit, had exacted from said bank, as security therefor, United States Liberty bonds of the par value of $50,000. After this controversy arose it appears that appellant collected said bonds and received on account thereof the sum of $51,062.50, which it still retains. When appellant's claim for the above amount of said deposit was approved, it was with notice that respondent denied the validity of said pledge of securities, with a demand for the surrender of the bonds or proceeds thereof to him. Appellant refused this demand, whereupon respondent instituted in the superior court of Imperial county an action to recover said assets from appellant, which action is still pending and undetermined. On April 28, 1928, respondent petitioned the superior court of said county for authority to pay a 15 per cent. dividend to depositors of said bank and with respect to the claims of this appellant he alleged the following: "That a claim was filed against the commercial department of said bank by Imperial Irrigation District, a corporation, for $54,547.62; that said claim has been allowed, but claimant is claiming certain security therefor, and an action to determine the rights of the parties is now pending; that your petitioner does not desire to pay any dividend upon said claim until after said action is determined."

The court, on said April 28, 1928, gave the order prayed for and, after declaring authority to pay the dividend, concluded as to appellant's claim, which was No. 433, with the following language: "Excepting only that no dividends be declared or paid upon the claim of Imperial Irrigation District claim No. 433 until further order of this court." This order was not appealed from and became final. On October 9, 1928, the present proceeding was instituted by appellant to compel the payment to it of the full 15 per cent. dividend on the whole of its claim. An order to show cause was granted, but on the hearing the order was discharged and the petition denied. This action is under review upon this appeal.

The action of the court in withholding payment to appellant of said dividend, upon the showing made, seems clearly to have been a wise use of its discretion. To apply the bankruptcy rule contended for by respondent would be to pay appellant a 15 per cent. dividend upon the balance due upon its claim after the proceeds of the security taken had been applied thereon but to apply the equity rule contended for by appellant would be to allow it a fifteen per cent. dividend upon the full original amount of its claim, regardless of collateral, except that it could in no case receive more than the full amount of its demand. Merrill v. National Bank, 173 U. S. 131, 19 S. Ct. 360, 43 L. Ed. 640.

If respondent should prevail in his contention, the question put forth in appellant's petition would become immaterial and moot, for appellant would in such case be but a general creditor; again, if respondent's position be sound, appellant would then have in its possession the sum of 51,000 odd dollars belonging to respondent and it would be manifestly improper to make a payment of a dividend to a party withholding funds belonging to the trust estate. On the other hand, if appellant should prevail in its contention as to the right to retain said securities or the proceeds thereof, the 15 per cent. dividend upon the entire claim of 54,000 odd dollars would yield a larger sum than the total amount of appellant's claim.

It is therefore clear that from every standpoint the issue in the action pending between the parties to settle the rights to said securities or the proceeds thereof is a material factor to be considered by the court in ruling upon the matter of payment of dividends. Houghton v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 661, 203 P. 765. If, after a final determination of the pending cause, the question of application of the chancery as distinguished from the bankruptcy rule, should become important, it can be disposed of at that time; hence the above ruling.

We concur: SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

213 Cal. 70

PEOPLE v. RANNEY.
Cr. 3422.

Supreme Court of California.
June 30, 1931.

1. Criminal law ⇨1166½(6).

Refusal to permit defendant's counsel to examine prospective jurors to determine whether defendant's previous conviction would prejudice them held reversible error when taken with errors in instruction.

2. Criminal law ⇨695½.

To secure evidence ruling, better practice is to ask questions and secure direct ruling, not to secure advance ruling whether question, if asked, would be proper.

3. Criminal law ⇨369(1).

Evidence of offenses other than charged, except in exceptional cases, is incompetent as proof of crime charged.

4. Jury ⇨33(2).

Accused is entitled to be tried by fair impartial jury free from bias or prejudice.

5. Criminal law ⇨806(1).

Larceny ⇨70(2).

Instruction twenty-one times telling jury to convict of grand theft if they found defendant "unlawfully" took money held erroneous (Pen. Code, § 511).

Instruction was erroneous because it did not define "unlawful" as requiring finding that the taking was felonious or otherwise criminal and because accused claimed money admittedly taken had been taken as commissions with authority of four or five directors of corporation, while theory of prosecution was that directors never made such promise, and that it would have been unlawful transaction had they done so, so that in effect jury were permitted to convict if accused merely had no legal right to take money, though acting in good faith and without criminal or felonious intent required by Pen. Code, § 511.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Unlawfully," see Words and Phrases.]

6. Larceny ⇨70(2).

"Unlawful," as used in instruction on grand theft, is not synonymous with "criminal."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Criminal" and "Unlawful," see Words and Phrases.]

7. Criminal law ⇨823(4).

Error in instruction authorizing conviction for grand theft if accused "unlawfully" took property involved held not cured by qualifying instruction (Pen. Code, § 511).

The qualifying instruction was practically in language of Pen. Code, § 511, and told jury that conversion of property does not constitute grand theft if done under bona fide claim of title, and to that extent was correct and directly applicable to facts, but such statement was nullified by further instructing that such provision would not excuse the unlawful retention of property to pay accused's demands against corporate owner, since latter statement was not appropriate to any theory of case and must have been misleading.

8. Criminal law ⇨1137(3).

Accused, whose requests to charge acquittal of grand theft if money was not unlawfully taken were refused, held not precluded from objecting to instructions to convict if he unlawfully took money on theory he requested such instructions.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

W. S. J. Ranney was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 293 P. 887.

Gumpert & Mazzeria and Claude H. Hogan, all of Stockton, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Guard C. Darrah, Dist. Atty., and Ward A. Hill, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Stockton, for the People.

PER CURIAM.

A hearing was granted by this court in this case after decision by the District Court of Appeal, 293 P. 887, in order to give further consideration to some of the matters discussed therein. The facts of the case, so far as it is necessary to recount them on this appeal, are as follows:

The defendant was charged with 21 counts of grand theft, and with having been twice previously convicted of a felony. Upon defendant pleading not guilty to the various charges of grand theft, a trial by jury was had, resulting in a conviction on seven of the counts charged in the indictment, the jury being unable to agree on the remaining counts. From the judgment so entered and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Defendant contends that the trial court committed two major errors sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal of the judgment. In the first place, it is contended that defendant was improperly restricted by the trial court in his examination of prospective jurors in that the trial court prohibited defendant from asking prospective jurors certain questions as to whether the fact that defendant had been twice convicted of a felony would bias or prejudice them to the extent that they would be unable fairly to weigh the evidence given by the defendant, as provided by law in such cases, in their deliberation upon the case.

In the second place, it is contended that the trial court committed reversible error in that it instructed the jury that it should bring in a verdict of guilty, if it should find that defendant unlawfully took the property involved. Defendant contends that an unlawful taking is not necessarily a felonious taking sufficient to constitute the crime of grand theft. These contentions will be discussed in order.

[1, 2] In reference to the first contention, the record shows the following facts:

During the voir dire examination of the jury, counsel for the defendant asked a prospective juror whether he knew that the defendant had previously served two prison terms. The trial court sustained the district attorney's objection to the question. The question, standing alone, was undoubtedly objectionable, for the reason that, the defendant having admitted the prior convictions, the jury had no concern with them, except in so far as they might tend to impeach the defendant, if he should take the stand. There is nothing in the question to indicate what relevancy it had as to the juror's qualifications. Immediately thereafter, however, the following took place: Counsel for defendant explained to the court that the question was merely preliminary; that the defendant would take the stand in his own behalf; that he presumed the district attorney would bring out the fact of the prior convictions on cross-examination, for purposes of impeachment; that he desired to question the prospective jurors "as to whether or not they would regard an admission of those felonies as evidence in the case, and indulge in the presumption of guilt * * * that this is one of the most vital questions that has been propounded to the jury. * * * It is only to show the extent of his bias and prejudice"; that what he wanted to determine was whether any juror will be biased or prejudiced by reason of the fact that "the defendant had been twice previously convicted of felony." After a question by the court, counsel for the defendant again stated: "We are asking to ascertain whether or not the jury, by reason of an admission on the part of the defendant of serving these two prior terms, would indulge in the presumption of guilt by reason of that fact alone. We can readily understand that the outside layman might be influenced, might be induced even to the extent of arriving at a verdict in this case on the basis of a past, or past convictions, and we are entitled to go into that fact in order to determine whether or not they would." The court thereupon announced that the objection would be sustained. Counsel then asked if the court's ruling went "to the extent of prohibiting the defendant from questioning any or all of the jurors as to whether or not they would be influenced in their deliberations at all by a statement of admission of prior conviction of a felony." To this the court answered: "That is correct."

It is our opinion that the refusal of the trial court to permit counsel for defendant to thus examine the prospective jurors on this important question, involving their possible bias or prejudice, while, if standing alone, might not justify a reversal of the case, yet, when taken with the errors in the instructions hereafter mentioned, is sufficient, in the circumstances of this particular case, to constitute reversible error. In so holding, however, we do not approve the practice that is becoming increasingly prevalent in such cases of counsel, by stating the purpose for which a question will be asked, thus securing an advance ruling on whether such questions will be proper. The better practice is to ask the direct question and thus secure a direct ruling on it. The rulings of the trial court should not be made in colloquys between itself and counsel as to how it would rule if the specific question were propounded. The trial court should refuse thus to rule in advance as to whether a specific question would be proper, if asked, and counsel should not be satisfied with anything less than a direct ruling on the question. Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Carroll, 206 Ill. 318, 68 N. E. 1087; Columbia Investment Co. v. Alameda Land Co., 87 Or. 277, 168 P. 64, 440; Wigmore on Evidence (2d Ed.) 168, § 117. However, under the circumstances of this case, we do not feel justified in holding that counsel is now precluded from making the point because he failed to propound the specific question. We will, therefore, treat the matter as if the proper questions had been asked and objections had been sustained, as the record indicates that this would have been the trial court's ruling, had the questions been asked.

We are satisfied that the District Court of Appeal properly disposed of this question, and also the question as to the instructions involved. We therefore adopt as part of the opinion of this court the following portions of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, written by Mr. Justice pro tem. Shields:

[3] "We think that this action of the court and this ruling was clearly erroneous. 'Nothing is better settled or more rational than that an indictment for one crime cannot be supported by proof of another.' People v. Carpenter, 136 Cal. 391, 68 P. 1027, 1028. It is not proper to show the defendant 'to have been guilty of some other offense, for the purpose of raising a presumption, either of law or fact, of his guilt in the case under consideration.' People v. Sears, 119 Cal. 267, 51 P. 325, 327. 'When a person is accused of crime, and placed upon trial, he cannot be required to defend himself against anything but the specific charge, and he cannot be compelled, under the rules of law to maintain the honesty and integrity of his entire life.' People v. Arlington, 123 Cal. 356, 55 P. 1003; 8 Cal. Jur. 58.

"Evidence of other offenses than the one charged, except in exceptional cases not involved here, is incompetent as proof of the charge upon which an accused is on trial. If it gets before the jury by suggestion, or in connection with evidence otherwise competent, it must be disregarded by the jury, and the court, upon request, should definitely so instruct them. Whether or not a prospective juror will be influenced by knowledge of any such previous offense, whether he will be governed by the rule of law which rigidly excludes such a consideration, and whether or not if chosen as a juror, he will obey an instruction by the court to dismiss from his mind all consideration of any separate and different offense of which he may have obtained knowledge in any way, except for purposes of impeachment, is a question of vital importance to an accused person in the circumstances of the defendant here.

[4] "He is entitled to be tried by a fair and impartial jury, wholly free from bias or prejudice. Defendant knew that the fact of his previous convictions would be brought to the attention of the jury if they did not already know of it. He intended to be, and later was, a witness in his own behalf. He had a right to expect that the prosecution would bring out the fact that he had been twice convicted of a felony for the purpose of impeaching him. The defense which he had planned, and later presented, was interwoven with this fact, and required its disclosure. He did not gratuitously introduce this fact to the jury's attention. There was no fact more fundamental to his defense than that he should select a jury which would not be biased by this fact, and regard it as evidence in the case from which they might find or presume his guilt of the charges upon which he was being tried. He had a right to inquire of the panel fully as to the existence of any such bias to enable him to secure his constitutional right of trial before a legally qualified jury."

(The opinion here cites and quotes at length from People v. Carmichael, 198 Cal. 534, 246 P. 62, and from People v. Hosier, 132 App. Div. 146, 116 N. Y. S. 911, affirmed 196 N. Y. 506, 89 N. E. 1107.)

[5, 6] "Other questions raised on this appeal relate to instructions given and refused. One instruction given by the court was erroneous, particularly so in the circumstances of this case. In it the jury was told: 'If the jury find to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant W. S. J. Ranney did, at and in the County of San Joaquin, State of California, and on or about the 20th day of July, 1926, unlawfully take the property of the Harris Manufacturing Company * * * it will be your duty to bring in a verdict of guilty of grand theft, a felony, as charged and set out in the first count of the indictment on file herein; otherwise you should acquit him on said first count.' A like instruction was read in reference to each of the remaining twenty counts of the indictment. This instruction did not define unlawful; it did not instruct the jury that before they could convict the defendant they must also have found that the 'taking' was felonious, or otherwise criminal. It made no reference to any distinction between what was criminally unlawful and civilly unlawful. Under the instruction they were to convict the defendant in either case.

"The jury were told twenty-one times by this instruction that if they found that the defendant unlawfully took the property involved that they should find him guilty of the crime charged. But there are many acts of 'taking' of property which are unlawful but are not criminal, and which would not justify a conviction of felony. Section 511 of the Penal Code illustrates this, wherein it provides that a certain appropriation of property is not criminal if made under a claim of title 'even though such claim is untenable,' in other words, 'unlawful.' The law is so stated in People v. Lapique, 120 Cal. 25, 52 P. 40. So in People v. Ephraim, 77 Cal. App. 29, 245 P. 769, 772, in a prosecution for embezzlement, the court say that 'it was incumbent upon the appellant to prove that she had appropriated the money openly and avowedly and under a claim made in good faith, but it was not necessary for her to prove that her claim was a valid one upon which she might recover in law.'

"Countless decisions might be cited to show that an act may be unlawful and not be penal. Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Unlawful; 39 Cyc. 829. The word unlawful in connection with a contract for the use of a machine, does not mean a criminal use, but any use in violation of the contract. Cortelyou v. Charles Eneu Johnson Co. (C. C.) 138 F. 110. Unlawful in relation to the acts of a corporation may mean acts only ultra vires. Dunbar v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 238 Ill. 456, 87 N. E. 521. Unlawful is not synonymous with criminal, 'To speak of an act as unlawful is not equivalent to saying it has been denounced as a crime. "Every criminal act is illegal or unlawful, but illegal or unlawful acts may not be criminal."' State v. Tinkler, 72 Kan. 262, 83 P. 830. So the use of the word 'unlawfully' in an instruction relative to embezzlement will not supply the place of the word feloniously or fraudulently. 'Many things are unlawful done which are not crimes because the criminal intent is wanting.' State v. Cunningham, 154 Mo. 161, 55 S. W. 282, 287. When the broad meaning of the word 'unlawful' is thus understood, the error of an instruction which directs the jury to convict upon the mere finding that the defendant had committed an unlawful act, is very apparent.

"The instruction complained of here was particularly inappropriate to the facts of this case, which in the briefest way and according to the testimony of the defendant were these. Defendant was acting as manager of the Harris Manufacturing Company. He sold some $83,500 worth of preferred stock which at the time stood in the name of four of the directors of the company, the sale being made in the interest of and for the benefit of the company. These four directors individually promised and agreed to pay him for his services in selling the stock a commission of 15 per cent. which was to be paid out of the funds of the company, from time to time, as the finances of the company might permit. The four directors required, however, that the money was to be taken without the knowledge of the remaining director, a Mr. Henry. The sums taken as specified in each of the seven counts upon which he was convicted, as defendant testified, were part of this 15 per cent. commission which he had been so authorized to withdraw. Defendant relied upon this authority, as he claimed it to exist, to justify his admitted taking of the money. It was the theory of the prosecution that the four directors never made any such promise, and that it would have been an unlawful transaction had they done so. The real question before the jury in such a state of the evidence and in finding upon each of the counts in the indictment was as to whether or not the defendant fraudulently and with a felonious intent appropriated the money as charged in the respective counts. It will be readily seen that if the four directors promised the defendant the 15 per cent. commission and told him to take it as he did, even if they had no legal right to make such promise or to authorize such taking, if the defendant believed that they had, and acting upon such claimed authority, he took the money in good faith, he would clearly be committing no crime. But his taking would have just as clearly been 'unlawful'; and the jury were instructed to convict him if the taking were unlawful.

[7] "So stated, the error in the instruction is obvious. It is contended, however, that other instructions given in connection with the one now in question, supplied the deficiencies, and together with it, completed a fair presentation of the law. It is doubtful if any separate or detached instruction could be held to have cured the error in this instruction, given at the end of the charge, and twenty-one times repeated. It contains a definite direction, upon the finding of a certain fact, to find the defendant guilty. It is the rule that in the case of instructions which so direct a conviction, the instruction must state all of the conditions necessary to a legal conviction, which this instruction admittedly did not. But waiving these considerations, the qualifying instruction relied upon by the respondent is insufficient for that purpose. The greater portion of this latter instruction (page 1652, vol. 5, Reporter's transcript) is practically in the terms of section 511, Penal Code. By it the jury was told that if a person in converting property to his own use does so under a bona fide claim of title thereto, he is not guilty of the crime of grand theft, although his claim of title was not good. Continuing, the court further instructed: 'If you find * * * that the defendant appropriated property owned by the Harris Manufacturing Company and by said company entrusted to said defendant, and the defendant laid claim to the property so appropriated, such claim of title, if preferred in good faith, is a sufficient defense, even though the claim is untenable.'

"So far this instruction is a correct statement of the law, and directly applicable to the facts of this case. It so far differs from the instruction in which the jury were told that if they found that the defendant 'unlawfully' took the sums mentioned in the various counts of the indictment, that they should convict him, as to tell them that even if his claim of title to the property 'was not good' or 'untenable,' if made in good faith, that they should not convict him. Whether or not this instruction so far supplied the deficiencies of the first instruction, and limited the forces of the specific direction to convict the defendant, if the jury found that he had 'unlawfully' taken the sums withheld, we do not have to decide, for reasons which we will briefly discuss. At the end of and concluding this instruction the court said: 'But this provision would not excuse the unlawful retention of the property of the Harris Manufacturing Company to offset or pay demands held against it by defendant.' This concluding part of the instruction should not have been given; there is no theory of the case to which it is appropriate. The prosecution contended that the defendant took the sums mentioned in the different counts of the indictment without any right or authority whatever. Defendant contended, not that he retained the money appropriated by him to pay any debt or claim which he had against the company, but that he took it as provided in the first portion of the above instruction, and as provided in section 511 of the Penal Code, under a claim of title to it, and in pursuance of a definite direction of four of the directors of the company, instructing him to do so.

"Ordinarily the giving of an irrelevant instruction is of no consequence in a case, and the giving of this portion of the instruction given here would not constitute error in itself. But in this case it could not fail to have misled the jury. There having been no theory of the case to which it was appropriate, the jury might quite properly have taken it as having been given as applicable to the facts of the case they were considering. So understood the jury were told, substantially, by the first portion of the instruction that if the defendant took the property under claim of right, and in good faith although unlawfully he should be excused, and in the second and concluding portion, that if he retained the property unlawfully, he should not be excused. Such an instruction so confused and apparently contradictory cannot be held to have explained and properly qualified the direct instruction first above mentioned, to convict the defendant if the jury found that he took the property in question unlawfully. Other instructions relied upon to supplement and qualify the instruction first above mentioned need not here be referred to. It is enough to say that in no portion of the charge was the jury told that the taking, or retention of the money mentioned in the indictment, must, in any aspect of the case, have been fraudulent or felonious before the defendant could have been convicted. State v. Cunningham, 154 Mo. 161, 55 S. W. 282."

While we approve the foregoing discussion, as applied to the facts of this case, we do not mean to hold that in every case such an instruction would constitute reversible error. We have grave doubts as to whether, in a case where the defendant denied having taken the property, either unlawfully or feloniously, but, if the taking, if proved, would necessarily constitute a felonious taking, error could be predicated on such an instruction. But, in this case, as already pointed out, defendant's defense was that the taking was unlawful, but not felonious.

[8] Respondent contends that the defendant is precluded from claiming that the giving of the instructions complained of constituted error, for the reason that defendant offered 21 instructions in substantially the same form. Respondent relies on the well-settled rule that, where a defendant offers an instruction, he is precluded from basing error thereon. However, that rule has no application to the facts of this case, for the reason that the instructions offered by defendant were radically different from those given by the trial court. The instructions offered by the defendant were to the effect that, if the jury found that the money was not unlawfully taken, they should acquit the defendant. The instructions given, as already pointed out, were the converse of these instructions, namely, if the money was unlawfully taken, then the jury must find defendant guilty. The instructions offered by defendant, although not as apt as could be drawn, state a correct principle of law; the instructions as given, as already pointed out, under the facts of this case, state an erroneous principle of law. There is no merit in this contention.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

213 Cal. 36

STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA v.
ROLLINSON.

S. F. 14096.

Supreme Court of California.

June 26, 1931.

1. Attorney and client ☞53(1).

In proceeding to revoke attorney's license for making false affidavit when applying for admission, statements respecting attorney's character held relevant.

2. Attorney and client ☞40.

Attorney's false affidavit, when applying for admission, regarding disbarment proceedings against him did not warrant revocation of license, where proceeding had been dismissed.

The evidence disclosed that respondent's professional conduct during five years or more of practice in state had been without reproach, and that the disbarment proceeding commenced in another state had been commenced in bad faith and had been dismissed on motion of proponents thereof without a hearing upon the merits, before respondent's application for admission to practice law in state, and that he had been advised by judge of court in which such charges had been pending that dismissal of charges without hearing amounted in substance to such withdrawal thereof as would place respondent in position as though such charges had never been made, and that he would therefore be justified in not referring to same in his affidavit.

Petition by the State Bar of California to revoke the license of Charles W. Rollinson as an attorney at law. The license was revoked by the District Court of Appeal (291 P. 431), and respondent applies to the Supreme Court for a review of the decision of the District Court of Appeal.

Revocation of license set aside, and respondent restored to right to practice law.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Dana R. Weller, Chas. J. Orbison, and Don S. Irwin, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Charles W. Rollinson applied to this court for a review of the decision (291 P. 431) of the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 1, revoking his license to practice law in the state of California. The proceeding before said tribunal was initiated by the State Bar of California through the presentation on or about April 28, 1930, of a petition on behalf of that body praying that the license of said Rollinson, the petitioner herein, to practice law in this state, which license had been issued to him by said court on or about March 23, 1925, be revoked. In support of its petition the State Bar alleged as the only ground for the granting thereof that the license of said petitioner then issued had been fraudulently procured through the concealment by Rollinson of the fact that some years previously, while he was a practitioner before the bar of the state of Indiana, proceedings for his disbarment had been instituted in that state, which proceedings had been subsequently dismissed. Upon a hearing upon said petition a stipulation as to the facts had been entered into between the representatives of the State Bar and the petitioner herein and which stipulation formed the basis for the order made by said tribunal revoking the license of this petitioner and which, relying in the main upon said stipulated facts, he herein seeks to have reviewed. The facts as therein agreed to may be more briefly stated as follows:

On or about May 29, 1912, Charles W. Rollinson, after a course of training pursued in the schools and colleges of Indiana, of which state he was a native, and after an examination, was duly and regularly admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in all the courts of said state. He then engaged and continued in the practice of the law therein successfully and creditably for the period of about ten years. While thus engaged and on or about June 15, 1922, a disbarment proceeding was instituted against him in the circuit court of Marion county, Ind., said proceeding being entitled "State of Indiana on Relation of Lewis A. Coleman v. Charles W. Rollinson." An examination of the record herein shows that the complaint in said proceeding consisted in the main of generalities and was unverified. The defendant in due course appeared to oppose said petition, to demand that the same be made specific and be verified. Shortly thereafter the venue of said proceeding was changed from the circuit court of Marion county to the circuit court of Hancock county, state of Indiana. Subsequent to the change of venue and on or about May 16, 1923, an amended complaint was filed in said proceeding, consisting of specific averments of alleged unethical practices on the part of said defendant, who thereafter through a firm of attorneys filed in said latter court a motion to strike out certain of the specifications embraced in said amended complaint upon specified grounds, which motion was granted by said court. Thereafter the plaintiff in said proceeding filed two supplemental complaints, to which the defendant responded with specific denials and with motions to strike out certain portions of the further specifications thereof. Thereafter and without any further hearing upon the merits of said pending proceeding, the plaintiff and relator therein on or about October 4, 1924, filed in open court a written motion to dismiss said proceeding, which motion was informally granted upon said date. In the meantime and while said proceeding was still pending, Charles W. Rollinson began to contemplate removal to California, and carried his purpose in that direction into effect by coming to California and establishing his residence here and in the city of Los Angeles during the month in the year 1924 preceding the dismissal of said disbarment proceeding. Having done so, on or about December 24, 1924, he presented an application to the District Court of Appeal of the State of California in and for the Second Appellate District, Division 1, for admission to practice law in the state of California. He accompanied his application with an affidavit in the form and substance required by the rules of said court, in which affidavit he proceeded to set forth the facts with relation to his citizenship of the United States and of his admission to practice law in the state of Indiana and of the fact that he had been engaged in actual practice in said state for a period of at least three years within the period of seven years immediately preceding the filing of his said application. He further set forth therein and in the printed form thereof the statement:

"3. That so far as affiant is aware no charges of unprofessional conduct or proceedings for disbarment have been filed against said affiant before any bar association, court or other body.

"4. That affiant has never been charged before any court with crime amounting to either felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude."

The matter of the admission of said Rollinson was referred to the state board of bar examiners for examination as to his moral character and other qualifications, and being favorably reported thereon by that body, the said District Court of Appeal on March 23, 1925, made and entered its order admitting said Rollinson to practice as an attorney and counselor at law in and before all of the courts of the state of California upon his taking the oath of office and signing the roll of attorneys, which being done the license herein sought to be revoked was duly issued to said petitioner and he then and thenceforward entered upon and for a period of more than five years thereafter engaged in the practice of the law in this state. So far as the record discloses, his professional conduct during the five years or more of the practice of his profession in this state has been without reproach. During the year 1930, however, it was brought to the attention of the State Bar of California, which had in the meantime become organized as a public corporation, that the above-quoted statements in the affidavit filed by said Rollinson upon his application for admission to practice law in this state were untrue, and that in point of fact the proceeding for his disbarment as an attorney and counselor at law in the state of Indiana above referred to had been for some time pending in said state and had been dismissed on motion of the plaintiff in said proceeding only a short while before the presentation of the petitioner's application for admission to practice law in this state and the filing of his aforesaid affidavit containing said statements in support thereof. Thereupon the petition on behalf of the State Bar of California was presented to the District Court of Appeal, seeking the revocation of Rollinson's license to practice law in this state upon the ground above set forth. A hearing was had upon said petition during which the stipulation as to the aforesaid facts was entered into and also in the course of which the respondent therein and the petitioner herein offered certain affidavits relating to his attempted disbarment in the state of Indiana and the issue thereof, and also presented a considerable body of certificates and statements made on his behalf by the judges of the several courts before which he had practiced in the state of Indiana, and of various attorneys and counselors at law in said state who had been his fellow practitioners therein, who testified to his high character and professional standing as a member of the Indiana bar during the years of his professional activities in said state.

The stipulation as to the facts shows with respect to the aforesaid offer that counsel for the State Bar stipulated that the matters offered by Rollinson might be used, produced, and received in evidence before said tribunal in lieu of depositions or the testimony of witnesses, subject only to objection on the ground of immateriality. The record herein discloses that the District Court of Appeal in deciding the cause upheld said objection upon the ground that the court was not called upon at that stage of the proceeding to pass upon the respondent's moral qualification. After an extended hearing before said District Court of Appeal, during which the petitioner was examined at length and with much of detail by counsel representing the State Bar, the matter was finally submitted to that tribunal, which thereafter made and filed its decision revoking the license of the petitioner to practice law, and which decision is sought to be reviewed in this proceeding.

[1,2] Upon the threshold of this inquiry it may be stated as our conclusion from a review of the record that the District Court of Appeal was in error in its refusal to consider the evidence which the respondent offerred to produce in the form above set forth as bearing upon the question whether the respondent's action in failing to state in the affidavit accompanying his original application for admission to practice law in this state the fact that prior thereto proceedings for his disbarment had been instituted in the state of Indiana, and which proceedings, without a hearing upon the merits thereof, had been dismissed by the parties instituting the same, constituted such a willful fraud on the part of the petitioner as would suffice to justify the revocation of his license to practice law in this state. That the statements above set forth in the affidavit of this petitioner were untrue has been freely admitted by him both in the hearing before the District Court of Appeal and in the hearing before this court. But as an excuse for his action or inaction in the foregoing regard petitioner, by the aforesaid body of offered evidence, proposed to show not only that his career as a practitioner for a period of ten years or more in the Indiana courts had been honorable and not subject to reproach or criticism, but also proposed to show that the proceedings for his disbarment instituted in the year 1922 before the courts of that state were not begun in good faith and were not founded on facts susceptible of proof affecting his moral character or professional integrity. He also proposed to show that when the proponents thereof had voluntarily moved the dismissal of said charges without a hearing upon the merits thereof and prior to the application of said respondent for admission to practice law in this state, he believed in good faith that the dismissal of said charges had practically wiped out the record of their unfounded presentation, and that when, after he had received from the board of bar examiners of the state of California the form of affidavit which he was required by its rules and regulations to sign, he took said affidavit to the judge of the Indiana court in which the aforesaid charges had been pending, and wherein the dismissal thereof had been filed, and took counsel with said judge as to whether it was necessary for him to disclose in said affidavit the fact that such charges had been made and had been dismissed. He was thereupon advised by said judge that the dismissal of the charges without a hearing by the parties preferring the same amounted in substance and effect to such a withdrawal thereof as would place him in the position as though such charges had never been made, and that he would therefore be justified in not referring to the same in said affidavit; and that acting upon said advice he had signed the affidavit in the form in which it was verified, and returned it to the board of bar examiners of this state. That the judge of whom he took counsel was in error in giving such advice, and that the act of the respondent in signing and verifying the affidavit in the form in which it appears was an error—and it may be said a serious error—is not to be denied. But the aforesaid showing which the respondent offered to make furnished not only evidence of a material character to the effect that the respondent during his years of professional practice in the state of Indiana had justified the reputation which he enjoyed for professional uprightness and integrity, and that the years during which he had practiced law in this state after his admission in California and prior to the institution of the proceeding for the revocation of his license had been marked with a like degree of integrity, but also tended strongly to show that the mistaken concealment by him of the fact that said proceedings had been instituted against him in the state of his former residence and practice and that the same, without a hearing thereon, had been dismissed by the parties instituting the same prior to his removal to California and his application for admission here was not made or contemplated by him with the fraudulent intent of misleading the board of bar examiners or the District Court of Appeal or of preventing an investigation by the latter as to the fact and merits of said former disbarment proceeding. It would have been charitable, we think, on the part of the latter tribunal to assume that the action of the respondent Rollinson in the foregoing regard was not characterized by a fraudulent purpose inconsistent with his past record for both personal and professional uprightness and integrity, but was rather the offspring of a natural hesitation on his part to make known a fact which, if exploited, even though ultimately found baseless, might operate injuriously upon him in seeking to establish himself in his profession and practice in the state into which as a stranger he had come, in an effort to escape from whatever conflicts and enmities might have attended his previous career, and also in seeking to here establish himself in a new and unblemished personal and professional career. The period of five years of honorable and apparently successful practice intervening between the date of his admission to practice in this state and the inception of the aforesaid proceedings in the appellate tribunal, which he here seeks to have reviewed, plead strongly, and we believe convincingly, in favor of the adoption of this charitable view with relation to the petitioner's misstep in signing said affidavit and to his absence of bad faith and intentional fraud in so doing. After a careful review of the entire record herein we are of the opinion that the mere fact that petitioner made such misstep in the circumstances attending his making of the same would not be sufficient in itself to constitute an adequate basis for the finding of a fraudulent intent on his part which would suffice to uphold the order of the appellate tribunal revoking his license to practice law in this state; nor do we think that the authorities to which we have been cited by the proponents in support of said order sustain their position in that regard, since an examination of the cases to which we have been thus cited shows that in each instance the concealment indulged in related to earlier proceedings in other jurisdictions which had resulted in disbarments and did not relate to instances like the present, where in such earlier and undisclosed proceedings had been instituted in apparent bad faith and had been terminated by the voluntary withdrawal thereof on the part of those instituting the same. It is our conclusion that the petitioner has made a sufficient showing before this court to justify a reversal of the order heretofore made revoking his license to practice law in this state.

It is ordered that the revocation of Charles W. Rollinson's said license be and the same is hereby set aside, and that he be and he is hereby restored to his right to practice law as an attorney and counselor in the state of California conferred upon him by his said license so to do.

213 Cal. 107

DINSMORE v. CALIFORNIA HIGHWAY INDEMNITY EXCHANGE et al.
S. F. 13480.

Supreme Court of California.
July 2, 1931.

I. Automobiles ⇨245(10).

Jitney bus driver's negligence in violating ordinance and statute by not sounding horn and by clearing street car by only two feet held for jury (St. 1923, p. 560, § 134).

Evidence tended to show also that street car in question had stopped when bus driver attempted to pass; that injured child, after alighting from street car, had taken one or two steps, but was not seen by driver until only a foot in front of bus; and that five or six seconds elapsed between time child alighted and moment of impact.

2. Automobiles ⇨245(74).

Eight year old boy's contributory negligence in alighting from street car and taking several steps without looking held for jury (St. 1923, p. 560, § 134).

Child's contributory negligence was a jury question, for it could not be said as matter of law that child acted unreasonably in taking several steps without looking for automobiles because he expected drivers to follow their usual practice by either stopping or clearing street car by safe distance, especially in view of California Vehicle Act, § 134 (St. 1923, p. 560), regulating speed of motor vehicles and distance by which they must clear stationary street car.

3. Negligence ⇨85(2).

Eight year old child cannot be held to same standard of care as mature person.

4. Insurance ⇨668(3).

That insurer, pursuant to ordinance, issued policy specifying kind of automobile, and that driver was operating such kind when accident occurred, presented jury question respecting insurer's liability.

The facts mentioned were sufficient to make out a prima facie case for jury, since, if jitney bus involved in accident was not in fact the specific automobile covered by policy, insurer had opportunity to make such defense.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Allen Dinsmore, a minor, by Veldo Allen Dinsmore, as his guardian ad litem, against the California Highway Indemnity Exchange, an association, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Edmund J. Holl, of San Francisco, for appellant.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This is an action for personal injuries brought by plaintiff, a minor, by his guardian ad litem. Plaintiff, who is a boy of 8, was riding on a street car bound east on Haight street in San Francisco. The car reached Buchanan street, and plaintiff got off the front end, where he was struck by a jitney bus driven by defendant John Volz. He sustained severe injuries, and sued the driver of the bus and California Highway Indemnity Exchange, which had issued to the driver an insurance policy under the provisions of an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco which made the insurer liable for damages resulting from negligent operation of the bus, up to the sum of $5,000. At the conclusion of the trial, the court, upon motion of counsel for defendants, directed the jury to bring in a verdict for the defendants. Disregarding that order, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, which verdict was set aside by the court.

The grounds upon which the verdict was directed are, first, that the evidence fails to show any negligence on the part of the driver; second, that contributory negligence of the plaintiff is shown; and, third, that the evidence does not establish the liability of the defendant insurance company for an injury arising out of the operation of the particular automobile involved herein.

[1] With respect to the first ground, the record shows that the driver of the bus had nine passengers in the car. Two were in the front seat with him, and another was seated on the front door. The driver knew the street very well, saw the street car, and was proceeding to pass it. His machine cleared the street car by only two feet, in violation of the provisions of the California Vehicle Act, § 134. He gave no signal or warning, contrary to a city ordinance requiring the sounding of bell or horn by a jitney bus approaching an intersection. The testimony varies as to the speed at which he was going, the estimates ranging from 10 to 20 miles an hour, which latter figure would constitute another violation of section 134 of the California Vehicle Act. The evidence is also conflicting as to whether the car had stopped when he attempted to pass it, but several witnesses testified that it had. It appears that plaintiff had taken one or two steps after alighting from the car, but the driver testified that he did not see him until he was only a foot in front of the automobile. Several witnesses testified that 5 or 6 seconds elapsed between the time plaintiff alighted and the moment of the impact. We need go no further into this phase of the case. There is obviously sufficient evidence indicative of negligence upon which to go to the jury. See Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125.

The alleged contributory negligence of plaintiff is derived from his own testimony that he did not look in the direction from which the automobile was coming. The following excerpts from the cross-examination cover the point:

"Q. Now, before you got off the street car, Allen, did you look to see if there was any automobile coming? A. No, when I—usually when I get off the street car the machines stop in back.

"Q. You did not look on this special morning? A. No.

"Q. Do you ever look? A. Yes, when I get off in the back I look but when I get off in the front I don't look.

"Q. Why do you look, Allen? A. Because sometimes I want to jump off and sometimes I just get off and walk to the corner."

He was also asked whether he knew that, if he jumped off and an automobile was coming, the automobile would hit him, and he answered that he did; and he also testified that he was walking fast, or running.

[2, 3] It may well be questioned whether this evidence would be sufficient to hold an adult guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; but we are satisfied that it can have no such result in the case of a child of 8 years, who cannot be held to the same standard of care as a mature person. See Patania v. Yellow-Checker Cab Co., 102 Cal. App. 600, 283 P. 295. In effect, plaintiff testified that he alighted from the front end of a stationary street car, took several steps, and did not look for automobiles because he expected drivers to follow their usual practice (and, he might have added, the law) by either stopping or clearing the car by sufficient space to permit passengers to alight in safety. We see nothing unreasonable in this notion in the mind of a young child. It was one which was apparently based upon his experiences in the past. He testified, also, on direct examination: "I got off at Buchanan and then I waited until—for my sister to get off, and as I started to go over the machine came along and I didn't know what to do, I got all excited, and the machine came along and hit me." Placed in a position of extreme peril by the conduct of the driver of the jitney bus, it is no wonder that he could think of nothing to do. We are satisfied that this issue, like the other, should have gone to the jury. The case of Moeller v. Packard, 86 Cal. App. 459, 261 P. 315, relied upon by defendants as controlling here, is not in point at all. In that case a child ran from the side of a highway directly into the path of an automobile. This action was characterized by the court as reckless and not excusable even in the case of a child of 8½ years. Counsel for defendants say in their brief: "Except that the child left the side of the highway instead of a street car to plunge into a place of peril, the circumstances of the Moeller Case are strikingly similar to those of the case at bar. * * *" But the similarity begins and ends with the fact that the plaintiff in each case was in a position of peril. The essential distinguishing fact is that, in the Moeller Case, the peril was caused by the child's unreasonable conduct, without any unlawful act by the driver, while here the peril was caused by the unlawful conduct of the driver in attempting to pass a street car, stationary or nearly so, without sounding his horn and without giving it proper clearance.

[4] The final question is whether the court was correct in its view that plaintiff had failed to show liability on the part of defendant California Highway Indemnity Exchange. Counsel for plaintiff first read into the record that portion of the city ordinance requiring a bond or insurance policy of jitney drivers, which provides that the liability thereon shall inure to the benefit of persons injured by the operation of the automobile. He then offered in evidence a policy of automobile liability insurance issued by defendant company to defendant Volz, covering a Buick automobile. A rider on the policy, of subsequent date, provided for coverage of a Cadillac machine. A later indorsement stated that the policy was amended to cover the Cadillac instead of the Buick. The defendant Volz testified that he was driving a Cadillac at the time of the accident, and that this was the automobile which had been substituted for the Buick he had driven when he first applied for his jitney license. This was sufficient to make out a prima facie case against the defendant company. If the car was not, in fact, the one covered by the policy, defendants had abundant opportunity to make this defense. They did not; and there was enough evidence for the jury to draw the inference that the policy covered the car which caused the injury. This question, too, should have gone to the jury.

There being no merit in any of the grounds upon which the court directed a verdict for defendants, it follows that the judgment must be, and it is hereby, reversed.

213 Cal. 120

WARE v. McPHERSON et al.
S. F. 14200.

Supreme Court of California.
July 13, 1931.

1. New trial ☞74.

Amount of damages for personal injuries is committed first to sound discretion of jury, and next to discretion of trial judge.

2. Appeal and error ☞1004(1).

Verdict will not be disturbed unless so excessive as to suggest, at first blush, passion, prejudice, or corruption on part of jury.

3. Damages ☞132(7).

$3,000 to boy for injuries to knee, cuts on leg, cut over eye, enlarged nose, and other injuries, held not excessive.

Evidence disclosed that after being hit by automobile plaintiff was carried about 50 feet on fender; that he suffered severe shock, was injured at knee, and in addition had several cuts on both legs, large cut over one eye, with chest, arm, and nose hurting, and nose, arm and eye bleeding; that his knee continued to bother him and hampered his athletic work while at high school until he gave it up; and that his nose had a hump on it which could be rectified only by operation; and that since accident plaintiff had been in run-down and nervous condition, under normal weight, subject to headaches, and inability to concentrate at work.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Howard F. Ware, by Arthur F. Ware, his guardian ad litem, against Charles McPherson and wife, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 293 P. 636.

Treadwell, Van Fleet & Laughlin, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Vincent W. Hallinan and James J. Roach, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J.

This case is appealed upon the sole ground that the verdict of the jury, awarding plaintiff $3,000 damages for personal injuries received when hit by defendants' automobile, is excessive. Defendants claim that the trial court erred in denying their motion for new trial based upon the above contention, and ask for a reversal of the judgment entered upon said verdict, or for reduction of the award.

[1, 2] It is elementary that in such cases as this the amount of damages is committed first to the sound discretion of the jury and next to the discretion of the trial judge in ruling upon the motion for new trial. Upon appeal, their decision cannot be set aside unless the verdict is so grossly disproportionate to any reasonable limit of compensation warranted by the facts as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a strong presumption that it is based on prejudice or passion rather than sober judgment; that is, unless the verdict is so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion, or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury. Martin v. Shea, 182 Cal. 130, 139, 187 P. 23; Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 713, 715, 106 P. 83; Lahti v. McMenamin, 204 Cal. 415, 419, 268 P. 644.

[3] We are of the opinion that, in fixing the verdict in this case, the jury were moved by none of the above elements, and that their discretion and that of the trial court was properly exercised under the conflicting evidence adduced upon the subject of the extent and permanence of plaintiff's injuries. We shall, therefore, close this discussion with a brief statement of plaintiff's injuries and the severity of his experience as shown by some of the competent evidence which appears in the record in sufficient support of the action of judge and jury.

There is evidence that after being hit plaintiff was carried some fifty or more feet on the fender of defendants' car going at a speed approximately at thirty to thirty-five miles an hour; that he suffered a severe shock, was injured at the knee, and in addition had several cuts on both legs, a large cut over one eye, with chest, arm and nose hurting, and the nose, arm and eye bleeding. Plaintiff testified that he still felt the effect of these injuries; that his knee continued to and still did bother him to some extent; that it hampered his athletic work while in high school until he finally gave it up. He further testified that although his nose was straight before the accident it is now enlarged and has a hump on it, and he has difficulty at times in breathing. This difficulty, a physician testified, was due to a healed fracture and deviated septum, which could be rectified only by an operation. Medical testimony was also admitted to corroborate plaintiff's claim that he had since the accident been in a run-down and nervous condition, under normal weight, subject to headaches and inability to concentrate at his work.

It is not necessary to review the record further. As above stated, we find ample evidence which, if believed by the jury, constituted sufficient support for the verdict rendered.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

213 Cal. 26

YATES v. EUDEMILLER et ux.
L. A. 11146.

Supreme Court of California.

June 26, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 23, 1931.

1. Exchange of property ☞8(4).

As respects exchange contract, evidence warranted conclusion that defendants did not rely upon representations of plaintiff regarding building and locality.

2. Appeal and error ☞1058(3).

In specific performance suit, excluding evidence regarding representations made to defendants held not prejudicial, where defendants did not rely upon representations, and evidence rejected was brought out on other examination of witnesses.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Suit by J. I. Yates against Charles Eudemiller and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

William C. Bartlett, Lucas F. Smith, and Hulme, Hastings & Bartlett, all of Los Angeles (Stanley C. Howell, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Arthur A. Weber, and J. C. Dunn, both of Santa Monica, for respondent.

PRESTON, J.

This action to compel specific performance of an agreement for the exchange of certain real properties located in Santa Monica and Venice, Cal., pursuant to written agreement of the parties dated October 20, 1927, was tried by the court without a jury.

Plaintiff, ready at all times to perform, duly tendered a deed to defendants, which they refused to accept and they likewise refused to convey to plaintiff in conformity with said contract. The agreement of exchange consisted of a writing subscribed by defendants, stating that they desired to exchange their described property for that of plaintiff, and appointing D. A. Fearon as agent to secure an acceptance of the proposition, followed by a written acceptance thereof by plaintiff, agreeing to convey his said property to defendant Beatrice Eudemiller.

Upon the claim of defendants that alleged uncertainties in the writing rendered it incapable of specific performance, the court found that said writing was a complete instrument and agreement by which the parties were bound; that it became effective as to all of the parties on said 20th day of October, 1927, and was delivered to said D. A. Fearon by them without reservation, limitation, or condition; and that said Fearon was at all times the agent for all of said parties.

Upon conflicting evidence as to the respective values of the properties to be exchanged, the court found that the said contract of exchange was fair, just, reasonable, and equitable; that the considerations between the parties from one to the other were just and adequate; that said contract was mutual between the parties, and the value to each of the several properties intended to be exchanged was equal; further that the exchange was prevented solely by defendants' neglect and refusal to perform, as above set forth.

Defendants, seeking to justify their nonperformance, relied upon three fraudulent representations alleged to have been made by plaintiff, to wit: That the building to be conveyed by him was a brick building with brick walls, covering the entire lot, whereas the back of the building was found to be stucco with a small yard in the rear, and that there were no colored persons within three blocks of said property, whereas colored persons were seen eating in the building next door. In this behalf, the court found that it was not true that plaintiff so represented to defendants; that on the contrary, plaintiff acted in good faith and defendants did not rely upon any representations made by him.

From the above findings, the court concluded that the case was a proper one for an order of specific performance, and judgment was entered accordingly decreeing that the exchange be consummated and that plaintiff recover costs. Defendants have appealed.

[1] Several of the contentions urged upon appeal are already disposed of by the above recital. There is competent evidence in abundance to support the findings and judgment, showing a complete and effective agreement of exchange executed by these parties, through their joint agent, with a sufficient tender of performance by respondent, refused by appellants. The evidence also thoroughly supports the conclusion that the properties sought to be exchanged were about of an equal value, and that no reliance was placed by appellants upon the fraudulent or any representations of respondent or said agent.

[2] We shall now discuss the effect of certain erroneous rulings made by the trial court in sustaining respondent's objections to the admission of evidence relating to alleged representations made to appellants, without the presence of respondent, by said agent upon the ground that the agent was acting for both parties with their knowledge. Respondent, in effect, concedes that the objections were improperly sustained by the trial court, but argues that the error was not prejudicial, and with this position we are in accord.

We do not desire to go into the evidence at length. It is sufficient to say that the testimony of appellant Beatrice Eudemiller contained practically all of the material evidence of the character contained in the rejected offer of proof. Prior to execution of said agreement and about the middle of October, agent Fearon took said appellant down to visit the property. There was no concealment of the evident fact that the rear walls of the building were of stucco or cement construction, and that the building did not entirely cover the lot. In fact, said appellant stated that plaintiff told her it was not built solid, and that agent Fearon told her there were negroes two or three blocks away. Her testimony, relating this visit, included an account of the statements made by plaintiff and said Fearon which might have constituted representations made to her concerning the property. A witness, one Southall, who was working in a store located in said building, testified that said appellant not only visited it on October 10th, but that he also saw her in his store on October 13th or 14th, accompanied by her son. Said appellant further testified that shortly after signing the agreement, when she again visited the property with her son and saw colored people eating in the building next door, she returned to agent Fearon's office, and told him about it, whereupon he "put his hand to his head" and said, "Well, golly, I did not know that" and told her that she would have to fight it out with respondent.

In short, as ample and abundant support for the findings and judgment appears in the record, and as it is plain therefrom that appellants did not rely to their hurt upon any of the alleged representations made by respondent or said agent, and as, for all practical purposes, the evidence rejected by the court was brought out upon other examination of witnesses, we must hold that appellants' cause was not prejudiced in any manner whatsoever by the errors of which they complain. All of appellants' contentions have received consideration and have been found to be without merit, further discussion being unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.

---

DEXTER v. PIERSON et al. *
L. A. 11934.

Supreme Court of California,
June 27, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 27, 1931.

1. Contracts ⇨129(5).

Provision in mortgage for unlimited waiver of statute of limitations held valid, although no such waiver appeared on note (Code Civ. Proc. § 337).

2. Limitation of actions ⇨197(1).

Evidence established that mortgagor's grantee taking subject to mortgage had notice of waiver of statute of limitations by mortgagor, hence was bound thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 337).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by Louie S. Dexter against George M. Pierson and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Edwin J. Miller and Wier Casady, both of Los Angeles, and Robert M. Cordill, of Omaha, Neb., for appellant.

J. Irving McKenna and Geo. M. Pierson, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Catherine A. McKenna.

PER CURIAM.

This action was brought for the purpose of foreclosing two mortgages given to secure an indebtedness of $1,600, evidenced by two promissory notes, each in the sum of $800. Each note is dated May 28, 1915, and matures one year from date. The property mortgaged consists of a considerable number of parcels of real property. At the time these mortgages were duly and properly recorded, they constituted a first lien on the real property involved. The notes and mortgages were signed by George M. and Rena W. Pierson, who were acting as trustees for one H. Percival Oates. Oates paid the interest on the notes until January of 1917, since which time no payments of principal or interest have been paid. The mortgagee was one Edward Russek.

Since 1917, the property involved has been in constant litigation. Edward Russek, the mortgagee, died in that year, and his estate, including the two notes and the two mortgages here involved, was distributed to his widow, Rosario Russek. The decree of distribution misdescribed the notes, the description being corrected by order of court, dated December 6, 1927.

In 1920, Ester Russek, as purported assignee, commenced an action to foreclose the mortgages, which action resulted in a judgment of foreclosure. This action was subsequently dismissed in September of 1924.

In April of 1924, Ester and Rosario Russek transferred the notes and mortgages to Louie S. Dexter, the plaintiff and appellant herein, and gave as evidence of the transfer a quitclaim deed to the property. This quitclaim deed was reformed by order of court, dated October 14, 1927, so as to constitute a formal assignment of the notes and mortgages.

In March of 1924, the Piersons, the original mortgagors, conveyed all the real property covered by the two mortgages to L. and Roy Lockwood. Catherine A. McKenna, respondent herein, subsequently secured the Lockwood title to the property.

Louie Dexter, after securing the quitclaim deed mentioned above, started a quiet title action against the Lockwoods and others, but subsequently dismissed as to the Lockwoods. Catherine A. McKenna intervened in that action and took a default judgment against Dexter. This default judgment was subsequently set aside by order of court.

In July of 1926, Dexter commenced this present foreclosure action, naming the Piersons, Oates, Catherine A. McKenna, and others as defendants. The complaint sets forth two causes of action, one on each note and mortgage, and in each cause of action it is specifically pleaded that defendants have waived the bar of the statute of limitations. On various motions and on two trials of this action, five different trial judges have passed on the question as to whether the action is barred by the statute of limitations; three judges ruled that it was not barred, and two that it was. Judgment was finally entered in favor of defendants, principally on the theory that the action was barred. From the judgment so entered appellant has prosecuted this appeal. From an examination of the briefs filed in this case, it appears that neither counsel has shown the diligence in the preparation of the briefs nor the regard for the rules of court expected of counsel in causes pending in this court. In the interests of justice, however, we will consider the merits of the appeal.

The only question worthy of discussion presented is whether or not the statute of limitations has been waived by these defendants. In each mortgage appears the following clause: " * * * The pleading of the statute of limitations as a defense to any demand secured by this mortgage is hereby waived. * * * "

[1, 2] The debt, evidenced by the promissory note, is obviously the "demand" referred to, and, in reference to such "demand," the mortgagor has expressly waived the statute. The fact that no such waiver appears on the face of the note is immaterial. The situation is simply one by which the mortgagor, by a separate writing, has waived the statute of limitations (Code Civil Proc. § 337) in reference to any action based on the note or mortgage. From the facts of the case, it clearly appears that the grantee of the mortgagor had notice of the waiver of the statute by her predecessor in title. It is obvious that, if the waiver is binding against the mortgagor, it is likewise binding on all those who take the property subject to the mortgage and with knowledge thereof. The only question involved, therefore, is whether this waiver, being unlimited as to time, is a binding and enforceable waiver. Although there is a great conflict of authority in other states as to the effect of such unlimited waiver (37 Cor. Jur. 722, section 41 et seq.), the law in this state has been finally settled by the case of Brownrigg v. De Frees, 196 Cal. 534, 238 P. 714. In that case, this court, after a complete review of the authorities, held a waiver for 99 years was valid. In McGee v. Jones, 79 Cal. App. 403, 249 P. 544, on the authority of the DeFrees Case, supra, the District Court of Appeal held an unlimited waiver valid. In Ham-mell v. Atkinson, 79 Cal. App. 708, 250 P. 1117, the very point now being discussed was decided. In that case, the waiver was to be found in a mortgage, and was in exactly the same words as the waiver here relied on.

The court held that the waiver was valid, and that the statute of limitations was no defense to an action to foreclose.

On the authority of the above cases, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

213 Cal. 13

WASHINGTON LUMBER & MILLWORK CO.
v. McGUIRE.

L. A. 10484.

Supreme Court of California.

June 23, 1931.

1. Payment ⇨16(1).

Where notes were not accepted in lieu of cash payment, there was no "payment" of debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Payment," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Estoppel ⇨75.

Ordinarily owner clothing another with apparent title and indicia of ownership is estopped, as against innocent purchaser for value, to deny he intended to transfer title (Civ. Code, § 1142).

3. Chattel mortgages ⇨6.

One taking title to automobile from conditional buyer to secure loan, giving back conditional sale contract, at most acquired only lien (Civ. Code, § 2924).

4. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨132(1).

Conditional buyer's purported sale of automobile unaccompanied by any change of possession and intended only as security held void as against seller's creditors (Civ. Code, §§ 2924, 3440).

5. Fraudulent conveyances ⇨135.

Statute providing that sale of personality without change of possession is void as against seller's creditors held not repealed in part by implication by subsequently enacted statute relating to sale of motor vehicles (Civ. Code, § 3440; Deering's Gen. Laws Supp. 1929, Act 5128, § 45).

6. Statutes ⇨158.

Repeals by implication are not favored.

7. Statutes ⇨159.

There must be irreconcilable conflict between two statutes before later will be deemed to have repealed earlier.

8. Fraud ⇨3.

Case of actionable deceit may be based on negligence as well as on willful misrepresentation (Civ. Code, § 1710).

9. Liens ⇨7.

One taking title from conditional buyer as security for loan and registering transfer held entitled to equitable lien, as against original conditional seller who gave conditional buyer indicia of title (Civ. Code, § 1710).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Replevin action by Washington Lumber & Millwork Company against George M. McGuire, in which defendant cross-complained. Judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed, with directions.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 291 P. 458.

Coleman E. Stewart, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

W. P. Butcher, Jr., of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

LANGDON, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court restoring possession of a truck and giving damages for its detention to the defendant herein on his cross-complaint. Plaintiff was originally the registered owner of the machine. Some time in 1925 it entered into a contract of conditional sale with G. H. Hubbard, who paid part of the purchase price and executed promissory notes for the balance. At this time, also, plaintiff indorsed and transferred the certificate of ownership to Hubbard, and the latter thereafter caused a new certificate to be issued, in his own name. Plaintiff later discovered its error, and attempted to correct it by communicating with the motor vehicle department. Before this could be done, however, Hubbard approached defendant, seeking a loan of some money, and defendant agreed to advance it with the truck as security. Nothing appears in the record to indicate that defendant knew of plaintiff's interest. But defendant refused to take a chattel mortgage. Instead he insisted that title be first transferred to him following which he would give Hubbard back a conditional sale contract. This was done on July 3, 1926. Defendant took the indorsed certificate of ownership from Hubbard and registered it in his own name with the department, and then executed the conditional sale contract for the same amount for which he had purported to buy the car. During the period of the negotiations the truck was in Hubbard's yard, and it never left his possession, nor was his use of it interrupted in any respect.

Hubbard defaulted in his payments to plaintiff. The latter repossessed it by stealth;

Hubbard retook it by force; and eventually, after considerable strife among the parties, defendant secured it, and plaintiff brought suit to recover it. Defendant cross-complained, and the trial court gave judgment in his favor for possession of the truck or its value, set at $1,000, and for damages for its detention in the sum of $2,880.

[1] The trial court apparently based its judgment on one of two theories: First, that plaintiff, by indorsing and transferring to Hubbard the certificate of ownership, clothed the latter with the indicia of title, and was consequently estopped to deny that title as against third parties who acted in reliance upon it; and second, that in accepting promissory notes for the balance of the purchase price, plaintiff caused actual title to pass to the buyer.

The second theory may be readily disposed of. The evidence sufficiently shows that the notes were not accepted in lieu of cash payment; and the rule is well settled that the taking of a promissory note does not constitute payment of a debt, so as to discharge it, unless the parties so agree at the time. Western Fuel Co. v. Sanford G. Lewald Co., 190 Cal. 25, 210 P. 419; Merchants' National Bank v. Bentel, 166 Cal. 473, 137 P. 25; First Nat. Bank v. Corcoran, 105 Cal. App. 116, 286 P. 1105. Plaintiff did not, therefore, part with title to the car by accepting the notes.

[2] The more important question relates to the effect of the indorsement and delivery of the certificate of ownership. Through this act plaintiff made it possible for Hubbard to deceive innocent parties by his apparent ownership, and plaintiff would normally be estopped to deny that it had intended to transfer title to Hubbard. The doctrine of estoppel in such cases is expressly stated in section 1142 of the Civil Code, and has been frequently applied in this and other states. See Rapp v. Fred W. Hauger Motors Co., 77 Cal. App. 417, 246 P. 1067; Democrat-Herald Publishing Co. v. Pettit, 94 Cal. App. 724, 271 P. 910; Pacific Finance Corporation v. Hendley, 103 Cal. App. 335, 284 P. 736; 15 Cal. L. Rev. 505; Ballantine, Purchase for Value and Estoppel, 6 Minn. L. Rev. 87. The court found, upon sufficient evidence, that defendant had no knowledge of plaintiff's actual ownership under the original conditional sale contract, and this finding places defendant in the position of an innocent party. Hence Hubbard had the power to give a good title to the machine to defendant.

[3,4] But the transaction between Hubbard and defendant had no such result. In the first place, it was clearly intended to secure the loan, and therefore, notwithstanding the apparent transfer of title, gave defendant at most a lien upon the property. Cal. Civ. Code, § 2924; Commercial Securities Corporation v. Lindsay Mercantile Company, 92 Cal.

App. 91, 267 P. 766; Bonestell v. Automotive Finance Corporation, 69 Cal. App. 719, 232 P. 734; Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 56 Cal. App. 728, 206 P. 674; Arena v. Bank of Italy, 194 Cal. 195, 228 P. 441. But it did not operate to transfer the title for another reason; it was a purported sale from Hubbard to defendant, unaccompanied by any actual change of possession as required by section 3440 of the Civil Code. Defendant testified: "I identified the truck by putting my hand on it." This is obviously not a compliance with the statute. There must be "an immediate delivery" followed by "an actual and continued change of possession." Cal. Civ. Code, § 3440; see Sequeira v. Collins, 153 Cal. 426, 95 P. 876; Pfunder v. Goodwin, 83 Cal. App. 551, 257 P. 119. Defendant, therefore, did not take title from Hubbard; the purported sale was intended only as security, and also was void as against creditors of the seller because of the failure to transfer possession. The title remained in plaintiff throughout all of the transactions.

[5-7] To escape from the above conclusion, defendant advances another proposition of some importance, which we now proceed to consider. It is, briefly stated, that section 3440 of the Civil Code does not apply to the transfer of a motor vehicle, because the California Vehicle Act, passed subsequent to section 3440, provides an exclusive and complete means of transferring such property. This question has not as yet received the consideration of the courts of this state, although it was assumed in one case without discussion that the section did apply. Fletcher v. Commercial Discount Co., 103 Cal. App. 656, 284 P. 990. The section is mentioned also in Samuels v. Barnet, 79 Cal. App. 529, 250 P. 405, but in that case there had been no compliance with the terms of the California Vehicle Act. The problem is, therefore, to be solved upon a consideration of the content and purposes of the two statutes, although, as will appear, there are several cases dealing with analogous situations which indicate what the rule should be.

Defendant's contention is, in effect, that the provisions of section 3440, in so far as they apply to motor vehicles, were repealed by implication upon the enactment of section 45 of the California Vehicle Act (Deering's Gen. Laws Supp. 1929, Act 5128). Section 3440 in terms covers "every transfer of personal property" with certain enumerated exceptions. It is a commonplace observation that repeals by implication are not favored, and that there must be an irreconcilable conflict between two statutes before the later will be deemed to have repealed the earlier. Fay v. District Court of Appeal, 200 Cal. 522, 254 P. 896; 23 Cal. Jur. 694, § 84. The two statutes which we are examining are not irreconcilable. Section 45 of the Vehicle Act, after stating the manner in which the certificate of ownership shall be indorsed and sent to the division of motor vehicles for registration, goes on to provide: "(e) Until said division shall have issued said new certificate of registration and certificate of ownership as hereinbefore in subdivision (d) provided, delivery of such vehicle shall be deemed not to have been made and title thereto shall be deemed not to have been passed and said intended transfer shall be deemed to be incomplete and not to be valid or effective for any purpose."

The meaning of this language is quite plain: The formalities specified in the act cannot be disregarded, and no other formalities will operate to pass the title to a motor vehicle. But it does not follow that the formalities required by the act were intended to do away with all statutory requirements on sales of personal property generally. In other words, because these formalities are essential to the transfer of title is no ground for concluding that they are exclusive of all other restrictive provisions. To say, as the section does, that one requirement cannot be disregarded, is not at all the same as to say that all others may be.

An examination of the language of section 3440 leads to the same conclusion. That statute makes express exceptions to its terms, e. g., in the cases of choses in action and ships or cargoes at sea or in a foreign port, and where the person making the transfer does not have possession or control of the property at the time. It has also been held that an exception is implied in the case of growing crops, which are, of course, physically incapable of manual delivery. Rosenberg Bros. v. Ross, 6 Cal. App. 755, 93 P. 284. Under these circumstances the fact that the Legislature has made no express exception in the case of motor vehicles cannot be ignored; and, of course, there is nothing in the nature of a motor vehicle which would make change of possession impossible or difficult.

Still further support for this conclusion may be found in the provisions of the Civil Code and California Vehicle Act with respect to chattel mortgages. Section 2957 of the Civil Code provides, in substance, that a mortgage of personal property is void against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith and for value unless accompanied by an affidavit of good faith, and unless acknowledged and recorded; and section 2959 requires recordation in the county where the mortgagor resides, and in the county where the property is situated or to which it is removed. In Ruggles v. Cannedy, 127 Cal. 290, 53 P. 911, 59 P. 827, 46 L. R. A. 371, the court declared that the recordation required by these sections in the case of chattel mortgages was the equivalent of the change of possession required by section 3440 in the case of all other transfers either of title or lien. See, also, Hopper v.

Keys, 152 Cal. 488, 92 P. 1017. The chattel mortgage sections have been recently applied to motor vehicles. Kahrman v. Fitzgerald, 85 Cal. App. 180, 259 P. 90. The Legislature has, in fact, recognized this condition by a subsequent enactment. Instead of enacting, as it should have done if defendant's contention were correct, that a chattel mortgage of a motor vehicle could be made merely by indorsement, delivery, and registration of the certificate of ownership, it provided that no chattel mortgage of a motor vehicle would be valid, except between the parties thereto, unless the mortgagee were registered with the division as the legal owner. California Vehicle Act, § 45¼ (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1929 Supp., Act 5128, p. 3441). The meaning of this amendment, considered in connection with the Civil Code sections, is that registration with the division is essential, but is not exclusive of all other statutory requirements. It is still necessary that the parties execute a proper chattel mortgage, with its affidavit of good faith; and that this mortgage be recorded in the county where the mortgagor resides and where the property is. These statutory protections to creditors and purchasers are not superseded but supplemented by the requirement of registration with the division. If this be true of a chattel mortgage, it must also be true of transactions covered by section 3440, for, as already pointed out, the theory of our legislation in this connection is that the change of possession required by section 3440 is the equivalent of recordation as required by the chattel mortgage sections. Ruggles v. Cannedy, supra; see 17 Cal. L. Rev. 50.

It must be concluded, therefore, that whatever reasons of policy or practical expediency might be advanced in favor of defendant's proposition the Legislature has given no indication of an intention to exclude the transfer of motor vehicles from the provisions of section 3440, and, without such an indication, we must hold the section applicable to them.

[8, 9] The result is that defendant never gained title to the property and plaintiff never lost title to it. But a final question remains: Should the defendant lose all of his investment by reason of his failure to protect his security? He might, of course, have taken a chattel mortgage, which, if in proper form, recorded and accompanied by the registration of the certificate of ownership, would have given him a valid lien upon the property. He did not do this. But the record shows that he did do what he thought was the equivalent; he did register the transfer with the motor vehicle department. His conduct was in good faith throughout the transaction; there was no attempt by him to keep his interest secret; it was at all times ascertainable by inquiry at the department, and, presumably, by inspection of the copy of the certificate required by

MERTENS v. BERENDSEN.

S. F. 14164.

Supreme Court of California.

July 2, 1931.

law to be kept in the machine. His failure to record a chattel mortgage, or transfer possession of the property, would be a circumstance which would make his rights inferior to ordinary creditors of Hubbard. But is plaintiff in the same position as other creditors? To our minds there is a decided and material difference between its position and that of other innocent third parties. It was its original negligent act which permitted Hubbard to appear as the owner of the car, and which constituted the inducement for defendant to lend money to Hubbard. That representation, relied upon by defendant to his subsequent damage, would seem to present a case of actionable deceit, which in this and many other states may be based upon negligent as well as willful misrepresentation. See Civ. Code, § 1710; 12 Cal. Jur. 745, § 26; Ultramares Corporation v. Touche, 255 N. Y. 170, 174 N. E. 441; 26 Ill. L. Rev. 49.

In addition to such a right of action in tort for negligent misrepresentation, defendant has another means by which his investment may be protected. The contract and, indeed, the entire transaction between Hubbard and defendant was believed by them to convey a security title to defendant. By reason of their failure to comply fully with the technical statutory provisions, the contemplated title did not materialize, but, between the parties and others who are not innocent third parties, an equitable lien should arise in favor of defendant to secure the money lent. The requirements of such a lien are fully met here. " * * * If the intent appear to give, or to charge, or to pledge property, real or personal, as a security for an obligation, and the property is so described that the principal things intended to be given or charged can be sufficiently identified, the lien follows." 3 Pomeroy Equity Jurisprudence 2968, § 1237; see Nau v. Santa Ana Sugar Co., 79 Cal. App. 685, 250 P. 705. There is nothing inequitable in this result, for plaintiff is not an innocent party, and the lien of defendant is measured by the extent of the loss actually suffered by him, a loss which was caused by the plaintiff's own act.

It follows that plaintiff still has title to the truck; but that defendant has a lien upon it for the amount of his loan together with interest thereon. The judgment is therefore reversed, with directions to the trial court to ascertain said sum due, and to take any further evidence and permit such further or amended pleadings as may be necessary to enable it to render judgment in accordance with the conclusions reached herein; and it is further ordered that neither party shall recover costs.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇨130(1).

In absence of special express requirement of perfect title, it is sufficient if title be marketable.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇨130(2).

"Marketable title" generally is one free from reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Marketable Title," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇨130(9).

Encroachment of building along frontage of 35 feet tapering from 2 inches to  $\frac{7}{8}$  inch held not to render title unmarketable.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by M. J. Mertens against John C. Berendsen. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Superseding 292 P. 1005.

Walter H. Robinson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thos. R. White, of San Francisco, and Chas. W. White, of Hayward, for respondent.

LANGDON, J.

This is an action by a purchaser to rescind a contract for the sale of real estate. The plaintiff entered into a written agreement to purchase from the defendant a lot and three-story concrete building on the northeast corner of Kearny and California streets in San Francisco, for the sum of $150,000. A deposit of $1,000 was paid at the time the agreement was signed. The said agreement provided that the purchaser had "seven days in which to report any defects in either title or survey." Within the specified time plaintiff gave notice of rescission and demanded the return of his first payment, claiming that the property encroached upon the street, and that the title was consequently defective. Upon the refusal of the defendant vendor to return the deposit, this action was brought.

There is no dispute about the fact of the encroachment, and the evidence sustains the court's finding in that regard, which reads as follows: "That * * * the building on said premises encroached on property belonging to the city and county of San Francisco for a length along the California street frontage of at least 35 feet and to the extent of two inches on the westerly end, tapering to an encroachment of seven-eighths of an inch to the easterly end. * * * That said encroachment consists only of the marble veneer at base of buildings and a slight overlap of the concrete behind the marble." The record contains uncontradicted evidence that the overlap could be eliminated at a cost of $200.

[1-3] The question presented by these facts is, of course, whether the encroachment renders the title of the vendor defective. In the absence of a special express requirement of, e. g., a "perfect" title, it is sufficient if the title be marketable; and a "marketable title" has been defined generally as one free from reasonable doubt. The case of Kenefick v. Schumaker, 64 Ind. App. 552, 116 N. E. 319, fully discusses the meaning and implications of the term. The court there said (64 Ind. App. 552, 116 N. E. 319, page 323): "Such a title must be free from reasonable doubt, and such that a reasonably prudent person, with full knowledge of the facts and their legal bearings, willing and anxious to perform his contract, would, in the exercise of that prudence which businessmen ordinarily bring to bear upon such transactions, be willing to accept and ought to accept. It must be so far free from defects as to enable the holder, not only to retain the land, but possess it in peace, and, if he wishes to sell it, to be reasonably sure that no flaw or doubt will arise to disturb its market value. But a mere suspicion against the title or a speculative possibility that a defect in it might appear in the future cannot be said to render a title unmarketable. It is not required to be free from mere shadows or possibilities, but from probabilities. Moral, not mathematical, certainty that the title is good is all that is required." See, to the same effect, Zelman v. Kaufherr, 76 N. J. Eq. 52, 73 A. 1048; Liberty Oil Co. v. Condon Nat. Bank (C. C. A.) 291 F. 293; and see, also, in general, Howe v. Coates, 97 Minn. 385, 107 N. W. 397, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170, 114 Am. St. Rep. 723; note, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1.

The effect of encroachments upon the marketability of title is a problem which does not appear to have been directly presented in any California case, but it has received the attention of the courts of other states, and in particular of the state of New York. In this latter jurisdiction a most curious line of decisions may be noticed. The earlier cases, such as Empire Realty Corp. v. Sayre, 107 App. Div. 415, 95 N. Y. S. 371, and Broadbelt v. Loew, 15 App. Div. 343, 44 N. Y. S. 159, held that even a substantial encroachment on the public street did not affect marketability, on the ground that there was no likelihood of interference by the city authorities. These cases were subsequently overruled or disregarded because of a change in municipal policy, which is discussed in Acme Realty Co. v.

Schinasi, 215 N. Y. 495, 109 N. E. 577, L. R. A. 1916A, 1176. The court there speaks of the increasing density of population and the spread of business districts, and then says (215 N. Y. 495, 109 N. E. 577, 579): "It is familiar recent history that these changed conditions have led to the compulsory removal of building encroachments from areas, streets, and blocks where they had always before been permitted. When the late Mr. Justice Patterson wrote the opinion in the Case of Broadbelt, there was nothing to indicate that there would ever be a radical departure from the early policy of the city with reference to building encroachments on the streets. Since then the change has become an accomplished fact, and its binding force has been recognized in the later judicial decisions." See, also, Perlman v. Stellwagen, 115 Misc. Rep. 6, 187 N. Y. S. 845; Leo N. Levy Corp. v. Dick, 116 Misc. Rep. 145, 190 N. Y. S. 238.

We have before us no evidence of the policy of the municipal authorities of the city of San Francisco, nor would we be disposed to give much weight to such policy in reaching our decision in the instant case. We think that if it should appear that the city has a right of action based upon the encroachment and that the enforcement of that right would cause substantial loss to the owner, the title cannot be said to be free from reasonable doubt. A purchaser should not be compelled to rely upon past acquiescence or mere indifference on the part of city officials to substantial interference with the property rights of the people. Hence we shall treat this case as if the city were prepared to enforce these rights, and we shall determine the question of marketability by considering what would be the result of an action brought by the city against the owner.

The answer seems to be clearly indicated in the cases of Rothaermel v. Amerige, 55 Cal. App. 273, 203 P. 833, and McKean v. Alliance Land Co., 200 Cal. 396, 253 P. 134. In the Rothaermel Case, a wall encroached about two inches upon adjoining property. A mandatory injunction was sought to remove it. The court said (page 275 of 55 Cal. App., 203 P. 833, 834): "We have here a case where a bare legal right, unsupported by any damage shown, is sought to be enforced by mandatory writ requiring affirmative personal action to be taken." Further, quoting from 14 Ruling Case Law 317, section 15, the opinion continues: "It is also true, as a general rule, that the court should not interfere by way of mandatory injunction, even though the injury be clearly established, where there has been a long-continued delay in asserting the right, and a remedy exists at law, or where the injury is so slight as to bring it within the maxim de minimis, or full compensation can be made in damages. If there is an adequate remedy at law, no relief will be granted, especially where there is no appreciable damage, and its issuance would require the performance of an act which would be difficult, and involve a considerable expense." In the McKean Case, the encroachment was from one-half to five-eighths of an inch. The trial court refused to order its removal, and awarded nominal damages in the sum of $10. This court upheld the judgment, saying (page 399 of 200 Cal., 253 P. 134, 135): "There was no direct evidence that the encroachment of from one-half to five-eighths of an inch caused any actual damage to plaintiffs, and to our mind the award of the trial court is both wise and just." As a result of these decisions it follows that the encroachment of the building involved herein would give the city no right to have it removed, and the owner could not be required to pay more than nominal damages. This being so, there is, we think, no reasonable probability of either the commencement or the successful prosecution of such a suit, which probability would have to exist before the title could be deemed unmarketable. The problem here turns upon a pure question of law, and this question has, as we have seen, been decided by the courts of this state in holding that neither injunctive relief nor substantial damages may be secured for a slight encroachment.

There is nothing in the cases from other jurisdictions which is inconsistent with the conclusion we have reached. Even in the later New York decisions, the encroachments which were held to render the title unmarketable were substantial ones, which, it was decided, the municipality could have removed, and the removal would have required a considerable expenditure. Thus, in the Acme Realty Co. Case, supra, the encroachments included show windows, oriel windows, and bay windows of masonry, projecting one foot beyond the building line, a portico of limestone projecting one foot, and a stoop projecting four feet. The court found that the cost of removal would be over $5,000, that proceedings by the city authorities were imminent, and that removal would damage the building and decrease its rental and fee value. The opinion states (215 N. Y. 495, 109 N. E. 577, page 580): "In these circumstances it cannot be said that a vendor has a marketable title if his building encroaches upon the public street to such an extent as to threaten a vendee with a substantial loss in the fee and rental value of the premises and a burdensome expense in altering the building to meet the requirements of the law." In Leo N. Levy Corp. v. Dick, supra, walls, buttresses, and a bay window and chimney projected over one foot, and it was claimed that removal would cost $10,000. In Klimas v. Brumbach, 116 Misc. Rep. 299, 190 N. Y. S. 307, there were eighteen encroachments, consisting of store windows, cellar doors, steps, fire escapes, cornices, and pilasters, the largest extent being five inches. It was held that they were substantial and burdensome in view of testimony that the cost of removal would exceed $3,000. But the court said (116 Misc. Rep. 299, 190 N. Y. S. page 307): "Practically all of the encroachments mentioned have been disregarded in various decisions. * * * In the Acme Case the court found it impossible to ignore oriel windows of solid masonry construction from the foundation up, which encroached one foot over the street line, because they could not be removed without defacing the entire building, but platforms, steps, and show windows were not considered serious." And in Gelman v. Herrmann, 118 Misc. Rep. 290, 193 N. Y. S. 174, where four bay windows projected one and one-half feet, and the cost of removal and remodeling of the front of the building would only be $300, the court gave specific performance to the vendors, saying (118 Misc. Rep. 290, 193 N. Y. S. 174, page 176): "The premises in question are more than a mile from the business center of Buffalo; the likelihood of interference with the bay windows is very remote; the expense of reconstruction is very slight; the encroachment is trivial; the rental value of the premises is not affected; the value of the premises has in no wise suffered." Some doubt is expressed in Perlman v. Stellwagen, supra, as to whether any encroachment can be regarded as negligible; but most of the authorities clearly distinguish between an immaterial overlap causing no actual damage and removable at slight cost, and a substantial encroachment, requiring costly removal. See Maupin on Marketable Title to Real Estate (3d Ed., 1920) p. 868.

We are therefore satisfied with the trial court's conclusion that the title to the property was marketable, and that the contract of sale was valid and enforceable.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.

PEOPLE v. McINTIRE.
Cr. 3413.Supreme Court of California.
June 29, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1931.

1. Witnesses ☞63.

Occasional illicit intercourse of defendant and witness held insufficient basis for attempted statutory marriage without license; hence witness was not incompetent as defendant's wife (Civ. Code, §§ 55, 79).

2. Witnesses ☞78.

Defendant claiming that witness was his wife and incompetent to testify in prosecution against defendant had burden of establishing that they had lived together as man and wife, justifying attempted statutory marriage without a license (Civ. Code, §§ 55, 79).

3. Automobiles ☞356.

Whether claimed intoxicated motorist striking pedestrian was guilty of second-degree murder or manslaughter held for jury (Pen. Code, § 192, subd. 2).

4. Automobiles ☞355(6).

Conviction for driving automobile on public highway while under influence of intoxicating liquor held supported (St. 1923, p. 553, § 112, as amended by St. 1929, p. 537, § 44).

5. Automobiles ☞355(8).

Conviction for failing to stop and render aid after automobile accident held supported (St. 1923, p. 562, § 141, as amended by St. 1929, p. 554, § 62).

6. Automobiles ☞358.

Verdict finding defendant guilty of failing to stop and render aid after automobile accident could not support conviction of second-degree murder (St. 1923, p. 562, § 141, as amended by St. 1929, p. 554, § 62).

Verdict could not support conviction of murder in second degree, since the unlawful act of the defendant in failing to stop and render aid to the person whom he had previously injured occurred after and not in commission of the homicide.

7. Criminal law ☞1184.

Evidence supporting conviction of driving automobile on public highway while intoxicated held of such doubtful force as to justify changing conviction of murder in second degree to manslaughter (St. 1923, pp. 553, 562, §§ 112, 141, as amended by St. 1929, pp. 537, 544, §§ 44, 62).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

W. R. McIntire was convicted of murder in the second degree, of driving a motor vehicle while under influence of liquor, and of failing to render aid to person after having collided with and having caused personal injury to such person, and he appeals.

Modified in part and otherwise affirmed, and remanded, with instructions.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 292 P. 675.

Paul Taylor, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Ralph O. Marron, Deputy Atty. Gen.; Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and John Oliver, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

RICHARDS, J.

This appeal is from a judgment of conviction of the defendant based upon the verdict of the jury finding him guilty upon each of three charges contained in an information filed by the district attorney of the county of Los Angeles. In count 1 the defendant was charged with the crime of murder in the second degree; in count 2 with the offense of driving a motor vehicle while under the influence of liquor, in violation of section 112 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553, § 112, as amended by St. 1929, p. 537, § 44), making the same a felony; and in the third count of failing to stop and render aid to a person after colliding with and causing personal injury to such person, in violation of section 141 of said act (St. 1923, p. 562, § 141, as amended by St. 1929, p. 544, § 62), also a felony.

The facts out of which each of these charges arose were that on January 1, 1930, between the hours of 6 and 8 o'clock p. m., one Margaret Towers was struck by an automobile driven by the defendant at the intersection of Atlantic boulevard and Hubbard street in the county of Los Angeles. Mrs. Towers, accompanied by her daughter, granddaughters, and grandson, was crossing Atlantic boulevard from east to west in the pedestrian lane when she was struck by defendant's automobile and suffered the injuries which resulted in her immediate death. The defendant at and prior to the time of the casualty was accompanied in his car by a girl named Ruby Burroughs. After striking Mrs. Towers the defendant traveled about 100 feet and stopped his car and started back to the scene of the accident. When about half way back he was met by a man who had witnessed the collision and who told him, "You have killed that lady"; whereupon the defendant, without going further, returned to his car and drove off. After going a short distance he was stopped by a man who asked if they had been drinking, to which it was replied by Ruby Burroughs that the defendant had taken a drink or two that afternoon; whereupon the man suggested that some one else should drive the car, and Ruby Burroughs undertook to drive it and did so for some distance, when the defendant resumed his place as the driver of the car, driving it to the home of a friend in Glendale, where certain incidents bearing upon the defendant's state of intoxication, to be hereinafter referred to, occurred.

[1,2] The appellant makes a number of contentions upon this appeal. The first is that the trial court committed reversible error in permitting Ruby Burroughs to be called and examined as a witness for the people. In support of his objection to the calling and examination of this witness before the trial court, the defendant put forward the claim that between the time of the commission of the offenses charged in the information and the date of the trial the defendant had married Ruby Burroughs, and hence that at the time she was called and sought to be examined as a witness she was his wife, and for that reason incompetent to testify as a witness against him without his consent. In support of this claim the defendant offered evidence tending to show that a marriage ceremony under the provisions of section 79 of the Civil Code had taken place before a clergyman and without a license. Section 79 of the Civil Code provides: "When unmarried persons, not minors, have been living together as man and wife, they may without a license, be married by any clergyman. A certificate of such marriage, must, by the clergyman, be made and delivered to the parties, and recorded upon the records of the church of which the clergyman is a representative. No other record need be made." In further support of said claim the defendant offered certain evidence which, according to his contention, established that prior to the celebration of such purported marriage he and Ruby Burroughs had been living together as man and wife. This evidence, however, was sharply disputed by the prosecution, which produced quite convincing testimony of Ruby Burroughs' mother, of her employer, and of a number of other witnesses, showing that during the period of several months preceding the casualty out of which the charges against the defendant arose, and during which period he claimed to have lived with Ruby Burroughs in the relation of man and wife, she was living at home with her mother, where her clothing was kept, and from which home she was rarely absent at night, and then only at occasional week-ends; that her mother and her employer knew nothing of her relations with the defendant; that she was known to all of her friends and acquaintances as Ruby Burroughs, and that other than her occasional and meretricious intercourse with the defendant they had never lived together as man and wife. The legislative intent in the adoption of section 79 of the Civil Code and in the assertion therein concerning the requirement as to persons seeking to avoid the effect of section 55 of the Civil Code requiring the solemnization of a marriage in the manner therein provided was fully discussed by this court in the case of Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 P. 26, 131, wherein the court clearly points out that the creation of the relation of husband and wife contemplates a course of conduct involving the assumption of those marital rights, duties, and obligations which are usually manifested by married people. In the case of Campbell v. Campbell, L. R. 1 Sc. Div. App. 200, 211, the subject of what would suffice to constitute cohabitation as husband and wife was quite aptly described as follows: "It is holding forth to the world by the manner of daily life, by conduct, demeanor and habit, that the man and woman who live together have agreed to take each other in marriage and to stand in the mutual relation of husband and wife; and when credit is given by those among whom they live, by their relatives, neighbors and acquaintances to these representations and their continued conduct, then habit and repute arise and attend upon cohabitation. The parties are holden and reputed to be husband and wife." The occasional illicit intercourse of the defendant and Ruby Burroughs could not, therefore, have furnished the basis for their attempted marriage under the provisions of section 79 of the Civil Code, and it seems quite plain from the record herein that the sole reason why they went through the form of marriage prescribed by said section was in order to prevent the prosecution from calling and examining Ruby Burroughs as a witness in this case. The defendant's contention that upon making proof of the performance of the ceremony provided in section 79 of the Civil Code a sufficiently conclusive presumption arose that the marriage relation had been created, and that such marriage could not be made the subject of a collateral attack, such as was made upon it in the instant case, has no merit. The defendant having undertaken to disqualify Ruby Burroughs as a witness for the prosecution upon the ground that at the time she was his wife, and that she had become so through conformity with the provisions of section 79 of the Civil Code, had cast upon him the burden of showing to the satisfaction of the trial court that his prior relations with her were such as to show that they had been living together as man and wife. Having failed to sustain that burden the defendant was not entitled to urge such disqualification, and the trial court committed no error in requiring Ruby Burroughs to be sworn and testify.

[3,4] The next contention of the defendant is that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. We do not deem it necessary to review in detail the evidence in the case further than to state that the practically uncontradicted evidence in the case shows that the defendant ran down and killed the deceased while driving his machine upon the wrong side of the street and while crossing a pedestrian intersection where the decedent was walking with her family in plain sight and where she had the right to be. No sufficient justification or excuse was offered by the defendant for his conduct in the foregoing regard and for the reckless driving of his machine which resulted in the decedent's death. It is the defendant's contention that the evidence of his act and conduct at the time was at most only sufficient to justify a verdict of manslaughter. But this in our opinion was a matter which, under proper instructions from the trial court, it was the function of the jury to decide. In this connection it becomes necessary to also consider the evidence offered in support of each of the other two counts contained in the information, since, in order to justify a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree, as distinguished from a verdict of manslaughter, it would be necessary to show that the act of the defendant, if involuntary, was done in the commission of an unlawful act amounting to a felony. Pen. Code, § 192, subd. 2. We shall, therefore, in this connection consider the further contention of the defendant that the evidence was insufficient to sustain either the second or third count of the information. By the second count the defendant was charged with driving an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, in violation of section 112 of the California Vehicle Act. The defendant insists that the evidence is insufficient to support this charge. There is evidence, however, given by Ruby Burroughs to the effect that the defendant before starting out with her upon the fatal ride took one or two drinks from a bottle or flask of whisky which he carried with him. There is also the evidence of another witness that during the course of the afternoon the defendant drank some wine; and added to this there is evidence that within a short time after the casualty the defendant was seen by several witnesses at the home of his friends in Glendale, and that he was then in a state of maudlin intoxication. We think this evidence abundantly sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury against the defendant upon the second count in the information, and also sufficient to establish the fact that the defendant at the time he struck and killed the woman was engaged in the commission of a felony under the provisions of section 112 of the California Vehicle Act.

[5-7] The defendant's next contention relates to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify his conviction upon the third count of the information charging his failure to stop and render aid to a person after having collided with and caused personal injury to such person, in violation of section 141 of the California Vehicle Act. The evidence in the case showed that the defendant stopped his car after the impact and within about 100 feet of the place of its occurrence; that he started back toward the scene of the accident but when about halfway was met by a witness who informed him that he had killed the woman; whereupon he immediately and without either verifying the statement or otherwise approaching and offering to render aid, as required by section 141 of the California Vehicle Act, turned immediately and left the scene without any further pretense or effort in the way of a compliance with the requirements of said section of the California Vehicle Act. We are satisfied that from this showing the jury were entitled to return a verdict finding the defendant also guilty under this count in the information. We do not, however, hold that the charge and conviction of the defendant under the third count of the information would have rendered him liable to and properly convicted of the charge of murder in the second degree, since the unlawful act of the defendant in failing to render aid to the person whom he had previously struck down and, as it appeared, had killed occurred after and not in the commission of the homicide. This constitutes the distinction between murder in the second degree and manslaughter. The conviction of the defendant of the former crime must therefore rest solely upon his guilt of the charge of driving an automobile while under the influence of intoxicating liquor immediately prior to and at the time of his collision with the deceased. While we have hereinbefore held the evidence sufficient to sustain his conviction of this offense, we are constrained to hold from a consideration of the entire record that the evidence in that regard is of such doubtful force as to have upheld a verdict of the jury either way, and, this being so, we are disposed to give to this defendant the benefit of the doubt and to hold that a verdict of manslaughter would have sufficiently satisfied the course of justice in the particular situation herein presented.

It is therefore hereby ordered that as to count 1 of said information the judgment is hereby so modified as to find and adjudge the defendant guilty of manslaughter instead of murder in the second degree. The cause as to said count is remanded to the trial court, with instruction to enter a judgment of manslaughter against the defendant and thereupon to pronounce judgment upon him as prescribed by law. Otherwise the judgment herein is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

DAHMS v. GENERAL ELEVATOR CO.***

Civ. 7568.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

June 30, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1931.

1. Negligence ⇨2.

No actionable negligence arises without existence of corresponding duty upon part of person charged.

2. Negligence ⇨55.

Generally, independent contractor is not liable to third persons for injuries caused by negligent performance, after completion of job and acceptance thereof.

3. Negligence ⇨55.

Independent contractor continues liable after completion of work and acceptance thereof, where work, though not imminently dangerous, is rendered dangerous by defects in performance.

4. Negligence ⇨48.

Independent contractor, to become liable after completion of work, must have knowledge of defect and danger to third persons whom he knew or should have known would use work without such knowledge.

5. Trial ⇨253(7).

Instruction, directing verdict if jury finds certain facts, must embrace all things necessary to show legal liability.

6. Trial ⇨296(8).

Where plaintiff separately charges two acts of negligence, erroneous formula instruction as to one is not cured by correct instruction as to other.

7. Trial ⇨253(7).

In action by elevator operator against independent contractor, which repaired elevator, for personal injuries sustained when elevator fell, formula instruction for plaintiff held erroneous as omitting essential element.

Instruction complained of, in substance, told jury to find for the plaintiff if defendant-independent contractor undertook to repair elevator and machinery or parts used in connection therewith in careless or negligent manner rendering elevator unsafe and dangerous for use, and if jury found that unsafe or dangerous condition, if any, was unknown to plaintiff and was proximate cause of injury to plaintiff. Instruction did not state that to hold independent contractor liable, it must have had knowledge of defect and dangerous situation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Charles Dahms against the General Elevator Company. Judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

Reversed.

John Ralph Wilson and Carl E. Day, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls and Cleveland R. Wright, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

GRAY, Justice pro tem.

[1] Respondent, who, while operating an elevator in the course of his employment, was injured by its fall, recovered a judgment, based upon a verdict, against appellant, who had been employed over a period of years by respondent's employer to inspect and repair such elevator. The acts of negligence charged were that appellant so negligently inspected and repaired such elevator prior to the accident, as to leave it in such an unsafe and defective condition, that it fell, thereby inflicting the injuries upon respondent. Since there can be no actionable negligence without the existence of a corresponding duty upon the part of the person charged and appellant's contract of employment created no such duty to respondent (Buckley v. Gray, 110 Cal. 339, 42 P. 900, 31 L. R. A. 862, 52 Am. St. Rep. 88), it is first necessary to determine whether such duty was otherwise created.

[2-4] Generally, an independent contractor employed to do given work is no longer liable to third persons for injuries received because of his negligent performance, after he has completed the job and it has been accepted by his employer. To this rule certain exceptions exist of which the following only is here applicable: The contractor continues liable where the work performed is not imminently dangerous in kind, but is rendered dangerous by defect. Wood v. Sloan, 20 N. M. 127, 148 P. 507, L. R. A. 1915E, 766, and note; Healey v. Heidel, 210 Ill. App. 387; Berg v. Otis Elevator Co., 64 Utah, 518, 231 P. 832, 835; notes in 26 L. R. A. 504 and 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 968. As stated in Berg v. Otis Elevator Co., supra, "the contractor continues liable where the work is turned over by him in a manner so negligently defective as to be imminently dangerous to third persons." It is also essential to the contractor's liability that he have actual or constructive knowledge of the defect and the danger to third persons, whom he knew, or should have known would use it and that such third persons have no such knowledge. Wood v. Sloan, supra; Berg v. Otis Elevator Co., supra.

[5-7] Appellant assigns as error the giving of the following instruction: "If you find

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*For subsequent opinion see 7 P.2d 1013.

from the evidence that the defendant General Elevator Company did undertake to repair the elevator in the Wilson Building and certain machinery or appliances used in connection therewith, and if you further find that any such repairs were carelessly and/or negligently made so that said elevator was in an unsafe and dangerous condition for use on the 23rd day of April, 1927, and if you further find that said unsafe and/or dangerous condition, if any, was unknown to plaintiff Charles Dahms, and if you further find that any such unsafe or dangerous condition was the proximate cause of the alleged injuries to the plaintiff Charles Dahms, then I instruct you that your verdict must be against the General Elevator Company, a corporation, and in favor of the plaintiff, Charles Dahms."

"The rule is that where an instruction directs a verdict for plaintiff if the jury finds certain facts to be true, it must embrace all the things necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant and to warrant the direction or conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict. Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 184, 118 P. 700, citing Killelea v. California, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 602, 74 P. 157." Starr v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 187 Cal. 270, 278, 201 P. 599, 602. "The authorities are legion to the effect that a so-called 'formula' instruction must contain all the elements essential to a recovery, and the absence of any one of such elements may not be compensated for nor cured by a reference thereto in other instructions correctly and fully stating the law." Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 393, 264 P. 237, 238. Where, as here, plaintiff separately charges two acts of negligence, an erroneous "formula" instruction as to one act is not cured by correct instructions as to the other act, because it is impossible to tell for which act the jury rendered its verdict. Sterne v. Mariposa Commercial, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 516, 97 P. 66. An examination of the instruction in light of the law as above stated, clearly shows an omission of the essential element of appellant's knowledge of the defect and danger. There is no need of setting forth at length the testimony on this issue because both parties in their briefs concede its materiality, its conflicting nature, and the different inferences to be drawn therefrom. It is apparent, therefore, that the giving of this instruction was prejudicial and requires a reversal.

What has been said as to the substantive law, applicable to the case, renders unnecessary a discussion of the sufficiency of the present evidence to support the verdict because a guide has been given to test the sufficiency of the evidence to be presented upon a retrial.

For the foregoing reason the judgment is reversed.

We concur: SPENCE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

115 Cal.App. 221

DAY v. LAGUNA LAND & WATER CO. et al.
Civ. 6688.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

June 27, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1931.

1. Contracts ⇨123(1).

Contract between former internal revenue agent and taxpayer corporation, made shortly after agent's resignation, held contract to aid in prosecution of claim against United States (5 USCA § 99).

Rev. St. U. S. § 190 (5 USCA § 99) makes it unlawful for any former government officer or employee to act as attorney or agent for prosecuting any pending claim against the United States, within two years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer or employee. Contract between taxpayer corporation and former internal revenue agent, made shortly after agent's resignation, required latter to aid taxpayer corporation in establishing that report of another revenue agent concerning additional income tax liability was erroneous, and that additional liability alleged did not as a matter of fact exist.

2. Contracts ⇨141(3).

Claim of taxpayer corporation against United States held, under evidence, not pending at time of contract with former internal revenue agent, requiring latter to aid in prosecution of claim (5 USCA § 99).

Former internal revenue agent testified that tax returns of corporation were turned over to him to make customary investigation of tax liability; that at time of his resignation as internal revenue agent the investigation had merely reached a preliminary stage; and that agent had not reached point where he knew whether or not corporation owed government any additional taxes or not. Immediately upon agent's resignation from department becoming effective, he was relieved by another agent.

3. United States ⇨113.

Taxpayer's contention that amount of tax shown by income tax return was correct held not "claim against United States" within statute restricting prosecution of claims in department by exofficers or employees (5 USCA § 99).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Claim Against United States," see Words and Phrases.]

4. United States ⇨113.

Statute authorizing adoption of rules governing agents representing claimants before United States Treasury Department held to indicate nature of qualifications within authority of Secretary of Treasury to impose (5 USCA § 261).

Act July 7, 1884, § 3, 23 Stat. 258 (5 USCA § 261), provides in substance that Secretary of Treasury may prescribe rules and regulations governing recognition of agents, attorneys, or other persons representing claimants before his department, and may require of such persons, agents, and attorneys, before being recognized as representatives of claimants, that they shall show that they are of good character and in good repute, possessed of necessary qualifications to enable them to render valuable service, and otherwise competent to advise and assist claimants in presentation of their cases.

5. United States ⇨113.

Circular promulgated by Secretary of Treasury of United States, prohibiting appearance before department by attorney or agent who acquired knowledge through connection with treasury department, held authorized (5 USCA § 261).

Circular No. 230 promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury under authority of Act July 7, 1884, § 3, 23 Stat. 258 (5 USCA § 261), provides in substance that no attorney or agent shall be permitted to appear before the Treasury Department in connection with any matter to which such attorney or agent gave personal consideration, or as to the fact of which he had actual personal knowledge while in the service of the Treasury Department, and likewise no such attorney or agent shall receive assistance of any one formerly in the service of the Treasury Department and having such personal knowledge.

6. United States ⇨113.

Term "personal consideration," within circular promulgated by Secretary of Treasury regulating appearance of agent or attorney before department, means such attention as would put attorney or agent in possession of facts use of which would be improper.

7. United States ⇨113.

Regulation of Secretary of Treasury pertaining to claimant's attorney or agent who acquired knowledge through connection with Treasury Department held intended to prevent moral wrong involved.

8. Appeal and error ⇐927(3).

On appeal from judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff's testimony must be given all favorable inferences.

9. Contracts ⇐123(1).

Contract between former internal revenue agent and taxpayer corporation, made shortly after agent's resignation, to aid in prosecution of claim against United States, held not contrary to law, public policy, or good morals (5 USCA §§ 99, 261).

At time former internal revenue agent resigned from treasury department, his investigation of taxpayer's income tax return had merely reached a preliminary stage, and had not reached point where he knew whether any additional tax would ever be claimed by government or whether corporation would have claim against the government. Contract with taxpayer corporation required former internal revenue agent to ascertain and determine whether or not additional tax liability asserted by government was proper or not.

10. Work and labor ⇐24(1).

In action for services rendered as income tax expert, variance held not to exist between evidence and counts in complaint based on reasonable value of services.

First count in complaint was for reasonable value of services performed at defendant's request. The second cause of action was substantially the same. Third count was to recover for work, labor, and services at their reasonable value. Evidence tended to show that agreement was to pay reasonable value of services rendered, and to establish reasonable value of such services.

11. Appeal and error ⇐999(1).

Whether breach of original contract engaging services of income tax expert changed obligation of expert was question for jury and not for appellate court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph P. Sproul, Judge.

Action by Floyd S. Day against the Laguna Land & Water Company and others. Judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

James Westervelt and Clarence A. Singer, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Biby & Biby and John E. Biby, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Action was brought by plaintiff against the defendant corporation and certain of its stockholders for the recovery of the reasonable value of services alleged to have been rendered as an income tax expert in resisting a claim of the government for additional income taxes for the years 1918 to 1922, inclusive, which services, it is alleged in the first count, resulted in a saving to the defendant corporation of the sum of $32,820.78, and in the second count a similar saving of $45,167.84. The case was tried before a jury. It appears that plaintiff was employed for several years by the government as an internal revenue agent and income tax auditor; that he was asked by his department to investigate the defendant corporation to see if the proper amount of income tax had been paid for the years 1918 to 1922, inclusive; that he first met the secretary of the corporation November 9, 1923, at which time plaintiff had already sent in his resignation to the government, effective November 30, 1923; that he began such investigation, which "had reached only the preliminary stage" when his resignation became effective and he was relieved by an agent named Sullivan, thereafter entering private practice. Subsequently, and on December 2 or 3, he was given the job of preparing the income tax return of defendant corporation for the year 1923. About January 28, 1924, the report of the agent Sullivan recommending the levy of additional taxes was shown plaintiff by the secretary of defendant corporation, with the result that he was employed, according to his testimony, to ascertain if they could "justly claim relief" from such additional tax, on a contingent basis of "no saving, no fee." Asked what he meant by "no saving," plaintiff answered: "No reduction in tax." It also appears that plaintiff told the secretary that he "could not appear before the department in person" to argue the case, as "I had just quit—having just quit—I had not obtained a permit to practice; that I could prepare the protest but that he, Mr. White, would have to appear in the conference and do the talking, arguing the matter as I might have presented it to him."

At the close of plaintiff's evidence a nonsuit was granted upon motion of defendant. The only reference to said motion and the action of the court thereon in the record before us is in the judgment, which recites that "after the plaintiff had rested his case counsel for said defendants moved the court to nonsuit the plaintiff and render judgment in favor of defendants upon the grounds following: * * * Said motion was thereafter argued and submitted to the Court for consideration, and due deliberation having been had thereon, the said motion was granted and judgment ordered in favor of said defendants and against said plaintiff," and adjudges that plaintiff take nothing by reason of his complaint and that defendants have judgment for their costs and disbursements. From such judgment plaintiff has appealed.

The points evidently argued most strenuously on the motion for nonsuit were: Variance between the allegations of the complaint and the evidence received in support thereof, and that the contract sued upon is prohibited by express mandate of the law as well as being contrary to the policy of express law, and is therefore void. Appellant contends: (1) That the contract is not prohibited by any mandate of law nor contrary to the policy of the law; (2) that it was error to admit any evidence of Treasury Department Circular No. 230; and (3) that there is no variance between the pleading and the proof.

[1] (1) Appellant urges that section 190, Revised Statutes of the United States (5 USCA § 99), which respondent, the defendant corporation, maintains made void the contract in question, is not applicable. Such section reads: "It shall not be lawful for any person appointed [after the 1st day of June, 1872] as an officer, clerk, or employee in any of the departments, to act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States which was pending in either of said departments while he was such officer, clerk, or employee, nor in any manner, nor by any means, to aid in the prosecution of any such claim, within two years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer, clerk, or employee." (Italics ours.) There is no question, in our opinion, but that the contract which plaintiff made required him to aid in the prosecution of a claim against the United States, viz., the claim of the defendant Laguna Land & Water Company that the report of agent Sullivan to the department concerning additional income tax liability of the corporation for the years 1918-1922 was erroneous in the three particulars mentioned in said defendant's protest filed with the department, and that such additional liability did not as a matter of fact exist. There is no question, either, that the employment of plaintiff was within the two years' period fixed by the statute, so if such claim was pending in the department at the time of plaintiff's employment therein the section would apply, but otherwise not.

[2, 3] Plaintiff testified that the local office of the department turned over to him the tax returns of the Laguna Land & Water Company for the years 1918 to 1922, inclusive, "and asked me to make customary investigation of their tax liability, that is, and see if they had paid the proper amount of tax; if not, to determine what it should have been." He also said that at the time his resignation became effective his work in the office of defendant corporation had reached only the preliminary stage—that "my investigation of their books had been only of a preliminary nature; I had not reached in that investigation the point where I knew if the corporation owed the government any money or not." It would seem that "such claim" could not by any means have been pending in the department while plaintiff was an employee and that the section cited did not prohibit the making of the alleged contract. Respondent says that each return filed by it "set forth a claim that the amount of tax shown to be due for each of said years was the correct amount due, and each and every other statement in said return material as a basis for the computation of the tax in question was a claim on the part of respondent that the facts stated were true." We must admit such to be the case, but that is not a "claim against the United States," within the meaning of said section, in our opinion, and no "such claim" under said section came into being until agent Sullivan's report and respondent's protest thereto were filed.

[4, 5] (2) Under such contention respondent also relies upon Circular No. 230, promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury under authority of section 3 of the act of July 7, 1884 (23 Stats. at L. 258, 2 Fed. Stats. Ann. [2d Ed.] p. 194, 5 USCA § 261). The circular so promulgated reads: "(5) Knowledge Through Connection with the Treasury Department. No attorney or agent shall be permitted to appear before the Treasury Department in connection with any matter to which such attorney or agent gave personal consideration, or as to the facts of which he had actual personal knowledge while in the service of the Treasury Department, and likewise, no such attorney or agent shall receive assistance from anyone formerly in the service of the Treasury Department and having such personal knowledge." Appellant contends that Congress, having already acted upon the subject of barring agents for claimants because of previous service in the department, and by inference, at least, saying that such officers, agents and employees as were not so barred could practice before the department or aid others so to do, and that the secretary could not enlarge the prohibitive feature of the act of Congress by extending it to matters to which such officers, agents, and employees gave "personal consideration" or to facts of which they "had actual personal knowledge while in the service" of the United States. It is to be observed that section 190, Revised Statutes (5 USCA § 99), prevents representation in the prosecution of "any claim" pending in any department while such officer was in the service, or in any way aiding such prosecution. It is also urged that the authority of the secretary was limited to "the recognition of agents, attorneys," etc., "before his department" and to qualifications so to appear, and does not extend to "disqualifying" agents because of any previous connection with the department or to prohibiting contracts for services "not before" the department. Respondent urges that the language of section 3 of said act of Congress, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to "prescribe rules and regulations governing the recognition of agents, attorneys, or other persons representing claimants before his Department," is a complete grant of power and is not added to or limited in any manner by the further provisions of the act. If the language stood by itself, we would agree with respondent, but the first paragraph is not complete with the language quoted, for following a comma after the word "Department" is the following: "And may require of such persons, agents and attorneys, before being recognized as representatives of claimants, that they shall show that they are of good character and in good repute, possessed of the necessary qualifications to enable them to render such claimants valuable service, and otherwise competent to advise and assist such claimants in the presentation of their cases." Something must have been intended by the language last quoted, and it would seem to be entirely unnecessary if Congress intended to confer the broad powers that could be inferred from that first quoted. We are of the opinion that by the language last quoted Congress intended to indicate the nature of the qualifications or disqualifications which the secretary was authorized to impose.

The language of the regulation is, in our opinion, broader in its prohibitive effect than merely applying to appearance "before" the department, as it prohibits such attorney or agent from aiding or assisting "another in any such matter"; and it would seem also that to sell knowledge acquired in a particular employment, to be used in a claim against the employer, which is the thing the regulation seems to be aimed at, would have such a close connection with the "good character" and "good repute" of such an agent, even though he had left the service, that it would be a proper subject of rule and regulation within the provisions of said act of July 7, 1884, even though the result might be to disqualify such agent from practicing before the department or aiding or assisting another so to do. We therefore conclude that the promulgation of circular No. 230 was within the authority of the secretary, and that the same covers a different and narrower field than section 190, Revised Statutes (5 USCA § 99), which makes the disqualification effective if the claim being prosecuted was pending in any of the departments, and whether it received the personal or any consideration of the agent, or whether it came to his knowledge or not, and apparently regardless of any moral question involved, while the regulation questioned seems to be based upon the moral phase alone, which appears to be authorized by said act. The admission in evidence of said circular, therefore, in our opinion was not error.

[6-9] What, then, is meant by "personal consideration"? The word "personal" would seem to mean something done by the attorney or agent, and we think the word "consideration" is not used as a synonym for "attention," which would include almost anything from slight notice to close scrutiny, but rather that it involves the idea of such attention as would put the attorney or agent in the possession of facts which it would be improper for him to use as against his employer. Certainly the mere fact that a claim was pending would not involve a moral question, unless the attorney or agent used such knowledge for the purpose of soliciting employment against his employer, and such a "fact," viz., knowledge of the pending of a claim in the department in which he had been employed, without more, is not the "actual personal knowledge of facts" that would prevent such agent from accepting unsolicited employment after leaving the service. In our opinion, as said before, the purpose of the regulation is to prevent the moral wrong involved in an agent's using information obtained about a case while employed in the department against his employer after leaving the latter's services. In the instant case, just what information did plaintiff have by reason of his "preliminary work" on the books of the defendant corporation? He knew when he was assigned such work that the government wanted him to verify the tax returns of the corporation for the years mentioned. He also probably knew that the corporation exchanged one million dollars of its capital stock as fully paid for certain leases, and that said corporation had purchased 2,770 acres of land prior to March 1, 1913, which it was subdividing and selling, all of which also appeared from a very cursory examination of agent Sullivan's report, which was shown him. He certainly knew that for income tax purposes the company was entitled to a valuation of said property as of March 1, 1913. Knowing that, and taking his testimony and giving it all inferences favorable to appellant's case—which we must do on a motion for nonsuit (Carter v. Canty, 181 Cal. 749, 186 P. 346)—he still had not reached a point when his resignation became effective where he knew that any additional tax would ever be claimed by the government, or that the corporation would ever have a claim against the government. Giving appellant's evidence such favorable consideration, and disregarding conflicts and unfavorable inferences, we cannot say that the contract in question was either contrary to law, public policy or good morals.

[10] (3) The first count in the complaint is for "the reasonable value of services performed by plaintiff at said defendants' re-

H. K. McCANN CO. v. WEEK.

Civ. 7454.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 9, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 8, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

1. Corporations ⇨249(1).

In suit by creditor to enforce stockholder's liability, stockholder cannot set up own claim against corporation as set-off against creditor's claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 438).

2. Corporations ⇨249(1).

In creditor's suit to enforce stockholder's liability, stockholder cannot set up own claim against corporation as "equitable" defense in nature of set-off against creditor's claim.

"Equity" is equality, as distinguished from expediency or individual solicitude.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Equitable," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Appeal and error ⇨1097(1).

To extent of matters before court on prior appeal of case, law of case is binding.

4. Corporations ⇨237.

In creditor's suit to enforce stockholder's liability, stockholder held liable for payment made by creditor for corporation after stockholder became stockholder.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by the H. K. McCann Company against E. R. Week, Jr. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Reversed, with directions.

Arthur L. Shannon and Winfield Dorn, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert L. McWilliams, of San Francisco, and F. B. Morrill, of Spokane, Wash., for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem.

The action is to enforce the statutory liability of defendant as a stockholder in a corporation known as the Luthy Company. For the purposes of the first branch of the case it may be conceded that plaintiff is a creditor, and that defendant, save and except for the defense hereinafter to be discussed, was liable to plaintiff in an amount proportionate to defendant's share of the issued stock of the corporation at the time of the creation of the indebtedness which is the foundation of the action.

However, in response to plaintiff's claim, defendant entered the plea that he, as well as quest and on its behalf and for its benefit, consisting of advice, preparation of documents and other services connected with and resulting in the saving to said defendant Laguna Land & Water Company of the sum of $32,-820.78," alleging that said defendant requested plaintiff to render such services and agreed to pay the reasonable value thereof, namely, $8,205.19. The second cause of action is substantially the same, except the saving is alleged to have been $45,167.84 and the reasonable value of the services rendered $22,583.92. The third count is to recover for certain work, labor, and services of the reasonable value of $100, but apparently all the evidence is on the first two causes of action and we fail to find any on the third. The testimony of plaintiff was that he told Mr. White "it was not reasonable for any man to take it upon a day's basis. If I were to save the corporation $50,000 or more as a result of two or three days' work it wasn't reasonable to place that value upon the number of hours it took; that that value should be placed upon the ability to do the work. He agreed with me and wanted to know the price I would make. I told him I thought the fairest thing was the contingent basis, no results—no pay," and that upon that basis he was employed. One expert witness produced by plaintiff fixed the reasonable value of the services at 25 per cent. of the amount saved, and another as $15,000 on the first cause of action and $5,000 on the second. Each count is apparently based on the reasonable value of the services rendered, based on the saving made, which is the contract proved, viewing the evidence in plaintiff's favor, as we must, and we fail to see any variance.

[11] Respondent assumes in its brief that the evidence shows a breach of the original contract under which Mr. White, secretary of the corporation, was to represent respondent before the department, in that an attorney was employed for that purpose; but the evidence is susceptible to the inference that this did not change the obligation of appellant under the agreement, and whether or not it did is a question the jury should determine and not an appellate court.

The motion for nonsuit was properly granted as to the third cause of action, but the issues on the first two causes should have gone to the jury.

The judgment as to the third cause of action is affirmed. As to the first and second causes it is reversed, appellant to recover his costs of appeal.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

being a stockholder, was likewise a creditor of the corporation, and that by reason of this fact he was entitled to set off against the claim of plaintiff the corporation's indebtedness to him. It might be well to note here that the claim of defendant is not that he is entitled to a set-off in its strictest statutory sense, but rather it is his contention that his defense is in the nature of an equitable defense in the nature of a set-off. It will be unnecessary to go minutely into the distinction suggested. It may be conceded that a right of equitable defense may exist where the provisions of the Code regulating and defining set-off or counterclaim would not apply. Without the detail of analysis we may at once approach the question involved.

The point to be determined is whether or not a stockholder of a corporation who is also a creditor can, in a suit by another creditor to enforce the stockholder's liability, set up the latter's claim against the corporation as any defense to the claim of the creditor either by way of set-off, equitable defense, or otherwise.

It may be here noted, however, that no issue of fraud, estoppel, waiver, or laches enters into the case.

It is passing strange that the question has never before been directly passed upon in this jurisdiction, and stranger still it seems to come up now on the eve of this state's abandonment of the old Stockholders' Liability Law.

The California statutes have been construed and applied in other jurisdictions. For instance, in Washington, on this same cause of action by the same plaintiff against the father of the present defendant, it was held that the creditor stockholder did have the right of set-off. McCann Co. v. Week, 139 Wash. 183, 246 P. 292, and on petition for rehearing before the court en banc in 141 Wash. 702, 251 P. 858. In noting this citation it may be stated that there was a strong minority dissent.

In New York exactly the opposite conclusion was reached and the Washington case referred to in this language: "The single reported decision we have been able to find that considered this precise question as to section 322 of the California Civil Code held a claim against the corporation might be set off by the stockholder. McCann Co. v. Week, 139 Wash. 183, 246 P. 292, affirmed 141 Wash. 702, 251 P. 858. Both appellate courts divided sharply on the question. The dissenting opinions therein appear to us to assert the correct view." Pacific, etc., Co. v. Opolinsky, 135 Misc. Rep. 265, 237 N. Y. S. 682, 686.

The text-writers on corporation law are almost in accord in holding that under the California statutes the right of set-off is accorded the stockholder creditor, though manifestly their conclusions result from independent reasoning based upon analogies in the general law of corporations. Such being the situation, we prefer to form our own conclusions independent of noncontrolling authority, and resting the same upon the decisions of our own state, which, though not determinative of the point in express language, nevertheless do firmly establish a background from which an easy solution may follow.

In the early case of Mokelumne Hill Canal & Mining Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 265, it is said: "It would seem, from a just and reasonable construction of the constitutional and statutory provisions upon this subject, that an individual corporator, in respect to his personal liability for the debts of the corporation, does not occupy the position of a surety, but that of a principal debtor. His responsibility commences with that of the corporation, and continues during the existence of the indebtedness. It is not in any sense contingent, but is declared to be absolute and unconditional. The remedial effect of these provisions, in which consists their only value, should not be impaired by construction." It is the last clause of the quotation that particularly commends the citation to study. And, obviously, the remedial effect of the provisions is to protect one extending credit to a corporation.

In Morrow v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. 383, 386, 1 P. 354, 355, we find this language: "As to the primary liability of the stockholders of the company for its debts we entertain no doubt. * * * The liability of the stockholder is, in our opinion, as distinct and separate from that of the corporation as it would be if the act had made no provision for any other liability than that of stockholders for the debts of the company."

And so running on through an unbroken line of decisions to the case of Williams v. Carver, 171 Cal. 658, 154 P. 472, wherein the court says that the stockholder's liability is no part of the property or assets of a corporation and the right of the creditor to pursue his claim against the stockholder is a personal right of the creditor.

The entire subject is exhaustively reviewed in the case of Ellsworth v. Bradford, 186 Cal. 316, 199 P. 335, 336. In that case we find the following principles adopted: That California is "one of the few states in which the liability of the stockholder is not collateral, but is original, and partakes of the nature of the liability of partners. The result is that an action at law lies 'directly against the shareholders as against partners on their joint contract.' * * * The limitation of the authority of the corporation to in any way enlarge or extend or renew the stockholder's statutory liability is declared in the decisions of this court holding the corporation powerless to extend such liability by a new promise, or by agreement extending the period of the statute of limitations, or by changing the form of the indebtedness."

In Winona Wagon Co. v. Bull, 108 Cal. 1, 40 P. 1077, 1079, the court adopts the following language from an Indiana case (Trippe v. Huncheson, 82 Ind. 307) as to the relation of the corporation to stockholders' liability: "The corporation has nothing to do with this liability, nor has it the right or power to represent its members as to this individual obligation. It is a matter between the creditors of a corporation and its members, not as corporations, but as individuals."

The respondent's urging the right of set-off or equitable defense is in accord with the foregoing. He contends that it is solely by reason of this detached and individual relationship between a creditor and the stockholder that the set-off should be allowed. The contention seems to be based mainly upon the reasoning of the recognized text-writers and of courts of other jurisdictions resting their decisions upon the text. While the writers found no California authority to support their conclusions, the method of reasoning was comparative. In many of the states throughout the country the stockholders' liability by statute was more in the nature of that of guaranty or secondary liability. In enforcing this liability and in attempting to support the varied legislation upon some legal theory the courts declared that the obligation of the stockholder was allied to the trust fund theory, and that, by reason of the liability of a stockholder being in the nature of the establishment of a trust fund, it would be inequitable to permit the stockholder to set off his own claim against the corporation. After arriving at this conclusion, all other theories seemed to be abandoned and the decisions followed along the trust fund theory alone. Thereafter this became the test. The text-writers, in academic discussion, argued that under the California statute, where there was no element of guaranty or suretyship, the trust fund theory was not applicable. The argument then proceeds to the effect that, the right of set-off being denied because the enforcement of the stockholders' liability created a trust fund, it would follow that, where the trust fund theory did not apply, the right of set-off must be allowed. And thereupon in bold letters these self-created authorities wrote Q. E. D.

Clark on Corporations (3d Ed.) pages 747, 748, presents the viewpoint of the authors as follows: "If it is sought to compel them [the stockholders] each to contribute a proportionate sum to a fund for the payment of all creditors pro rata, a setoff cannot be allowed. Where, however, an action is brought by a single creditor as may be done under some statutes, to enforce a several and original liability, for the sole benefit of the creditor suing, it is held anomalously, by the weight of authority, that upon equitable grounds the stockholder may set off a debt owing to him from the corporation." While a characterization of the weight of authority as anomalous might involve a contradiction of terms, yet it is obvious that a sum held by an individual to be devoted to a specific purpose may be a trust fund in as great a degree as a sum made up of many smaller sums similarly held.

[1] We need pursue the discussion no further. An analysis of the rulings of our own courts, already cited, indicate that a set-off, as here claimed, cannot be allowed. Incidentally we cite the Code section on counterclaim and set-off, section 438, Code of Civil Procedure. We also cite the case of Stevens v. Weisbaum, 87 Cal. App. 664, 262 P. 762, 764, wherein on a claim of one stockholder to set-off, not the stockholder-creditor's claim against the corporation, but only the proportion thereof, which was collectible against the plaintiff creditor who happened to be himself a stockholder, the court says: "As to the counterclaim asserted * * * there is no showing that the" amount "represented an indebtedness growing out of the same transaction, or that it bore any relation whatsoever to the employment of the" plaintiff. "It could not legally be set off against any judgment rendered in this action." In Kaye v. Metz, 186 Cal. 42, 198 P. 1047, 1049, we find this language: "In order to warrant a set-off, the debts must be mutual, and the principle of mutuality requires that the debts should not only be due to and from the same person, but in the same capacity."

[2] We may now pass to the claimed equities compelling the allowance of the claim of respondent, if not by way of legal set-off, then by way of equitable defense in the nature of a set-off. As respondent throughout answers every contention of appellant with the one word "equity," it might be well to consider the practical meaning of the word. While courts and writers are inclined to reach the heights of panegyric in framing an all-embracing definition of the term, yet, in the main, they meet in common agreement that "equity is equality." In every instance where principles of equity are sought to be applied, the idea of equality compels consideration of the rights of all parties concerned.

Equality must be distinguished from expediency or individual solicitude. Where a stockholder in a corporation, by advances or loans or payment of certain obligations of the latter, bolsters up the credit of the corporation or provides for its existence to the end that others might extend it credit, there surely can be no equality in delaying or withholding the demand of the creditors until the stockholder has been restored to his original position.

Adopting the thought of Bridges, J., in the Washington case, McCann Co. v. Week, 141 Wash. 702, 251 P. 858, let us suppose that A enters a mercantile establishment and says to the owner, B: "I am starting out C in business and I want you to extend to him credit for whatever he might order. Bear in mind that the solvency or credit of C is of no concern to you. I stand personally, primarily and directly liable to you for any indebtedness incurred by him. For the purposes of this credit you may forget C entirely and consider the transaction as between you and me." Accordingly B does extend credit to C. Then when he looks to A for payment, could it be held that the latter could defend against the claim of B successfully by showing that C owed A an amount greater than the claim of B?

We hold the trial court erred in allowing the defendant herein his set-off against the claim of appellant.

[3] Respondent contends, however, that, if such a strange and remarkable thing should happen that we hold the set-off not allowable, the judgment must be affirmed for another reason. He contends that there is no liability upon him as a stockholder for the all-sufficient reason that the debt or obligation sued on arose prior to the time that he became a stockholder in the corporation. This same case was before the Supreme Court, and the opinion of the court is found in H. K. McCann Co. v. Denny, 205 Cal. 147, 270 P. 190. Necessarily, to the extent of the matters before the court, the law of the case has been made. The matter was determined and a hearing in bank denied. If respondent has any quarrel with the holding, he might prevail upon the higher tribunal to change its views. Fortunately, or unfortunately, as the case may be, we can give no comfort to him.

Respondent, however, argues that all the Supreme Court had before it was the question of the statute of limitations as the same applied to the enforcement of a claim against stockholders on their statutory liability. Obviously, before the court could determine whether or not the statute had run, it must first determine when the cause of action arose. This is exactly what the court did, holding that, since the obligation of the corporation could not arise until plaintiff had paid the bills of the corporation under the agreements in evidence, upon such payment, for the first time the liability of the stockholders of the corporation by reason of such payment would arise. We think the decision makes the law of the case.

[4] The case was tried below upon an agreed statement of facts, from which it appears that some of these payments were made before defendant became a stockholder and some were made after. As to the latter respondent would be liable.

We might here note that the complaint was in two counts. The second count was disposed of in the opinion of the Supreme Court noted, and is out of the case entirely.

We do not feel that the record before us is such that we may order the entry of an exact judgment in the court below, but, from what has preceded and with the opinion of the Supreme Court determining other controverted points, it would appear that the further action of the trial court would be more or less perfunctory.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter its judgment pursuant to the views herein and in the opinion of the Supreme Court expressed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

115 Cal.App. 180
CORCORAN et al. v. WARD et al.

JENNINGS v. SAME.
Civ. 7834.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
June 25, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 25, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 24, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ⇨766, 767(1).

Failure to comply with rules respecting form of briefs may result in striking brief from file or dismissal of appeal.

2. Automobiles ⇨245(13).

Whether driver of defendant's truck, involved in head-on collision, was on wrong side of highway, held for jury.

3. Automobiles ⇨244(10).

Testimony of driver of defendant's truck, involved in head-on collision on highway curve, that he did not see other automobile until moment of impact, held sufficient to show negligence.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(37).

Testimony concerning marks upon highway and position and condition of cars after accident held for jury in resolving conflict respecting point of impact.

5. Evidence ⇨588.

Unless testimony respecting marks upon highway and position and condition of cars after accident cannot possibly be reconciled with testimony of prevailing party's witnesses, testimony is not "inherently improbable" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1844).

6. Evidence ⇨588.

Testimony of driver respecting place and manner of head-on collision held not inherently improbable (Code Civ. Proc. § 1844).

Appeals from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Actions by Marie F. Corcoran and another, and by Aleta Jennings, against J. M. Ward and another. From judgments in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

See, also, 300 P. 129.

Myrick & Deering and Scott, of San Francisco, and Maurice J. Rankin, of San Jose, for appellants.

Glenor, Clewe & Van Dine, of San Francisco, and D. T. Jenkins, of San Jose, for respondents.

SPENCE, J.

Two separate actions were brought to recover for personal injuries sustained by Marie F. Corcoran and Aleta Jennings, respectively, and these actions were consolidated for the purpose of trial. Judgment upon two verdicts for $30,000 each were entered, and appeals by defendants from both judgments are presented on one transcript.

[1] At the outset we deem it appropriate to state that appellants' brief contains no topical index and fails to present each point separately under an appropriate heading showing the nature of the question to be presented, as required by rule VIII of the Rules of the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal. These rules are designed for the assistance of the court in determining the questions presented on appeal as well as to guide opposing counsel in answering the points raised. Failure to comply with the rules may result in striking the briefs from the file or even dismissal of the appeal; and, if no such action is taken, complaint should not be made in the event that some point, hidden in the pages of a lengthy brief without an appropriate heading, is not discussed in the opinion. In the present case a reading of appellants' brief leads us to the conclusion that the main contentions are that the evidence was insufficient to show negligence on the part of appellants and that the verdicts were excessive, and we will proceed to a consideration of these contentions.

[2-6] The question of negligence in the present case was, in our opinion, a question of fact upon which the determination of the jury is conclusive. The accident happened late at night on June 15, 1928, upon a curve on the main highway at what is known as Dawson's Corners near Sunnyvale in Santa Clara county. This curve may be described as a sweeping slightly banked curve with an improved surface twenty feet in width. In approaching this curve traveling from San Jose toward San Francisco, the highway runs in a northerly direction and turns at the curve and proceeds in a westerly direction. Appellants' truck, which was heavily loaded, was traveling toward San Francisco with appellant Sweeney driving and his wife accompanying him. Respondents were traveling toward San Jose in a Chrysler automobile belonging to Mrs. Jennings' husband with Mrs. Corcoran driving. The lights on both cars were burning, but the two vehicles collided in a head-on collision about half way around the curve. From what has been said it follows that, in traveling upon their respective right sides of the highway in making the curve, appellants' car should have remained on the outer half of the road and respondents' car should have remained on the inner half of the road.

There was a sharp conflict in the evidence relating to the point of impact. Respondents tried the case upon the theory that their car traveled in the proper position at all times and that the collision was caused by the negligence of appellant Sweeney in driving the truck upon the wrong side of the highway. Appellants defended upon a similar theory, claiming that the truck traveled in the proper position and that the collision was caused by the negligence of Mrs. Corcoran in driving respondents' car on the wrong side of the highway. There was evidence to sustain either theory. It is conceded by appellants that Mrs. Corcoran's testimony sustained respondents' theory, but it is claimed that her testimony "is not sufficient to overthrow the overwhelming array of evidence to the contrary." We assume from the authorities cited that it is claimed that her testimony was inherently improbable and did not create a substantial conflict, for it is elemental that the testimony of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient proof of any fact in a civil case. Code Civ. Proc. § 1844.

There were only three eyewitnesses to the accident who testified to the facts surrounding it; Mrs. Jennings having lost her recollection of the events through the injuries received. These witnesses were Mrs. Corcoran, who testified for respondents, and Mr. Sweeney, one of the appellants, who was driving the truck, and Mrs. Sweeney, his wife, who testified for appellants. Further testimony bearing upon the question of negligence related to the position and condition of the cars after the accident, the marks upon the highway, and the location of various bits of wreckage. Referring to the eyewitnesses, the record shows that Sweeney was thoroughly discredited by his own testimony, and the jury was warranted in disregarding his entire version of the accident. In addition, it appears that, if the jury gave any credence to his testimony, such testimony was sufficient in itself to show an entire want of care on his part. He testified on several occasions that he was not aware that any other car was approaching until the moment of impact, and, when asked to tell how long a time elapsed between the time he saw the lights of the other car and the time of impact, he illustrated with a hand clap and said, "That quick." We may further add that on the trial Sweeney on several occasions illustrated his version of the positions of the cars at various times by using two small model automobiles in connection with diagrams of the scene of the accident. It is impossible to determine from the record just what motions he went through before the jury, and it may be as claimed by respondents that one of his illustrations involving the movement of the cars was entirely in accord with respondents' contentions.

From the discussion in appellants' brief it appears that appellants are endeavoring to prove that respondents' theory and Mrs. Corcoran's testimony in support of that theory were inherently improbable through the evidence relating to the marks on the highway and position and condition of the cars after the accident. Preliminarily we may state that the testimony tended to show that as a result of the collision the cars became enmeshed and the Chrysler was thrown to the right side of the truck; that the truck proceeded ahead along the highway in the general direction in which it was traveling before the accident, making a gradual turn to the right and running some distance off the outer edge of the highway before coming to a stop; that the Chrysler was either pushed backward ahead of the truck or dragged along at the right side of the truck until it became disentangled and stopped on the outer edge of the highway facing in the opposite direction from that in which it was traveling prior to the accident. The front tires of the Chrysler were torn off, and it is claimed by appellants that the marks on the highway were made by the metal rims of the Chrysler's front wheels. These marks were all on the outer half of the highway. The photographs introduced as exhibits showed that the front of the Chrysler was almost completely demolished; the greatest damage being done to the right front portion. The damage to the truck was all on the right front side. From these facts it is argued by appellants that the collision must have occurred on the outer half of the highway. On the other hand, respondents contend that, if the collision occurred on the outer half of the highway, as claimed by appellants, the Chrysler would have been entirely off the highway when dragged along on the right side of the truck. Respondents further point out that the testimony shows that one of the headlights of the Chrysler and a large amount of broken glass were found on the inner half of the highway, that some of the broken glass was found entirely off the inner edge of the paved portion of the highway, and that on the following day the ear drop worn by Mrs. Jennings was found in the dirt off the inner edge of the highway. All of this testimony was properly before the jury to be considered by them in resolving the conflict in the testimony of the various witnesses relating to the point of impact. The difficulty with appellants' argument relating to the marks on the highway is found in the fact that no satisfactory evidence was introduced to show whether the Chrysler was pushed backward in its original course after the accident, thereby making these marks, or whether the Chrysler was immediately thrown to the right side of the truck, making the marks as it was dragged along in this position. Although Sweeney testified that immediately following the impact the Chrysler moved backward in the direction from which it had come, he could not say whether it moved in that direction as much as one foot. On further examination he was asked: "Q. You don't know, so it may have started to swing to your right at the very moment of impact, as far as your recollection goes?" He answered: "I don't know." If we could assume that these marks started at the exact point of impact and indicated the position of the front wheels of the Chrysler at the very moment of impact, there would be some merit in appellants' contention, but we are not warranted in making these assumptions. It is also possible under the evidence to assume that these marks did not start at the point of impact, but were made after the Chrysler was thrown to the right side of the truck.

The complexity of forces operating on two rapidly moving vehicles in collision with one another often makes it exceedingly difficult to reconstruct the manner of the happening of the accident from testimony concerning the marks found upon the highway and the positions and condition of the cars after the accident. This is more particularly true when the collision occurs while the vehicles are rounding a curve. Unless the testimony in this regard cannot by any possibility be reconciled with the direct testimony of the witnesses for the prevailing party relating to the manner in which the collision occurred, it cannot be said that such direct testimony is inherently improbable. Although the case is not analogous on its facts, a somewhat similar contention to that of appellants was made in Kroell v. Lutz (Mo. App.) 210 S. W. 926, 928, where the court said at page 928: "It is urged that no combination of forces could have left the two cars in the respective positions they were left in, if the collision happened the way plaintiff's witnesses say it did, and hence we are asked to set aside the judgment because it rests wholly on testimony in conflict with well-known physical laws. But manifestly this is not the case. Bodies, when acted upon by different forces at different angles, move along a line called the resultant of all those forces; and the momentum of the two moving cars, the sudden impact and stopping of the front portions thereof, the swinging around or skidding of the heavy rear portions thereof, thus suddenly arrested in their forward movement, the interlocking and taking off of one wheel, and the resistance caused by ploughing up the asphalt, all done in an instant of time and with terrific force, are sufficient to present such a complexity of forces and resultants as to afford no idea of where the two cars would go or what they would do, and the only way to find out would be to survey them after they ceased movement." Under the evidence in the present case, we are unable to say that the testimony of Mrs. Corcoran was inherently improbable. In our opinion it created a substantial conflict in the evidence relating to the point of impact and the manner in which the accident happened and the implied finding of negligence on the part of appellants was amply sustained.

It is further asserted by appellants that the verdicts are excessive. This assertion is made, but less than one page of appellants' brief is devoted to the subject. A reading of the record discloses that any attempt to outline the frightful injuries received by the respondents would require several pages. Before the trial court and the jury, appellants' counsel did not attempt to minimize these injuries. In his opening statement to the jury he said: "With respect to the terrible injuries that these two women received, we will introduce no evidence whatsoever. We do not question in the remotest degree, the character, gravity, or severity of these injuries, they are terrible. * * *" Again, on motion for nonsuit, counsel stated: "We concede there is not a question in this case of their frightful injuries, they are terrible injuries. * * *" As counsel has merely asserted on this appeal that the verdicts are excessive without any adequate argument or any reference whatsoever to the record, we cannot believe that this point is seriously urged. However, we have examined the record, and are convinced that under the evidence neither verdict was excessive, and that both are amply sustained.

The judgments appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

sufficient to exercise discretion for avoidance of injury.

2. Negligence ⇨85(2).

Child is only required to exercise degree of care ordinarily exercised by minors of like age, mental capacity, and discretion.

3. Negligence ⇨136(29).

Capacity of child of 11 to exercise discretion for avoidance of injury held for jury.

4. Negligence ⇨122(6).

Until overcome, presumption that child was exercising due care for his own safety held "evidence," in accordance with which jury was bound to decide (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Evidence," see Words and Phrases.]

5. Automobiles ⇨244(55).

Finding that child of 11, struck by automobile while crossing intersection with traffic light in his favor, was not contributorily negligent held supported (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4).

6. Trial ⇨108½.

Counsel may ask each juror whether he is interested in any company insuring against liability for negligence.

7. Trial ⇨133(6).

In action for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, counsel's questioning jurors on their voir dire whether they owned any stock or bonds in company insuring motorists for negligence held not prejudicial error, in view of court's admonition.

The court instructed the jury that no insurance was an issue in the case, that no insurance company was a party, and that the jurors should ignore any reference to insurance.

8. Automobiles ⇨243(3).

In action for injuries sustained when struck by automobile, evidence that witness detected odor of liquor on automobilist's breath held competent.

9. Trial ⇨124.

That counsel asked witness whether he detected odor of liquor on breath of alleged negligent motorist was not misconduct.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1).

Verdict for damages cannot be set aside unless so plainly excessive as to show passion or prejudice.

115 Cal.App. 283

BARRETT v. HARMAN et al.
Civ. 7527.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 30, 1931.

1. Negligence ⇨85(2).

Defense of contributory negligence may be invoked in action on behalf of child of age

11. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1).

That amount awarded as personal injury damages may be larger than is ordinarily allowed in such cases is not basis for holding award excessive as matter of law.

12. Damages ⇨132(3).

$3,500 damages for concussion of brain, cutting of salivary gland, and numerous lacerations of face and scalp held not excessive.

13. Statutes ⇨74(1).

Statute imputing to automobile owner negligence of person operating automobile with owner's permission held not unconstitutional as unauthorized classification (Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 566; Const. art. 1, § 11).

Such statute, Civ. Code, § 1714½, as added by St. 1929, p. 566, does not violate Const. art. 1, § 11, providing that all laws of general nature shall have a uniform operation, as against contention that no reasonable basis existed for distinction as to owners of vehicles being operated with owner's permission, and those not so operated.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by Joseph Thomas Barrett, a minor, by Maria Barrett, his guardian ad litem, against Eva Harman and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Barry J. Colding, Theodore Hale, and Carroll B. Crawford, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Vincent W. Hallinan and James J. Roach, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The above action was brought by plaintiff, a minor, to recover damages for physical injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of an automobile by defendant Eva Harman. The complaint alleged also that the automobile was owned by defendant corporation, and was being operated by its permission. Defendants denied the allegations of negligence, and averred that plaintiff's negligence proximately contributed to his injuries. The jury returned a verdict against both defendants in the sum of $3,500, and, from the judgment entered thereon, they have appealed.

As grounds for the appeal, it is urged that the evidence shows as a matter of law that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; that by reason of the misconduct of plaintiff's counsel defendants were prevented from having a fair trial; that the verdict was excessive; and that the complaint failed to state a cause of action against defendant corporation.

Mission and Twenty-Second streets in San Francisco intersect, and at the place of intersection Mission street runs north and south, and Twenty-Second street east and west. The injuries complained of occurred at about 9:30 o'clock p. m. on October 11, 1929, while the plaintiff, a boy eleven years of age, was attempting to cross Mission street from the southeast to the southwest corners of the intersection mentioned. There were traffic signs at this corner consisting of red and green lights. According to the evidence, when plaintiff started to cross the signals stopping traffic on Mission street and allowing traffic to proceed on Twenty-Second street had been given. When he reached a point about midway between the corners of the intersection and while within the path marked out for pedestrians, defendant Harman, who was operating an automobile in a northerly direction along Mission street, disregarded the warning signals and drove into the intersection, striking the plaintiff and causing his injuries. It was also testified that another automobile was parked on the east side of Mission street a few feet south of the intersection, and that defendant Harman in approaching drove to the west of the same, entering the intersection at about the center of Mission street. Defendant Harman testified that she failed to see the plaintiff until he was struck, and there was testimony tending to prove that she had been drinking intoxicants shortly before the accident. Furthermore, there was evidence of her admission shortly after the accident that she was at fault. According to the plaintiff, before attempting to cross, he looked in both directions along Mission street, but saw no approaching automobile, and did not see defendant's car before the collision.

[1-5] The defense of contributory negligence may be invoked in an action by or on behalf of a child where the latter was of an age sufficient to exercise discretion for the avoidance of injury; but a child is not held to the same degree of care as an adult, and is only required to exercise that degree of care which is ordinarily exercised by minors of like age, mental capacity, and discretion. There is no precise age at which as a matter of law a child is to be held accountable for his actions to the same extent as one of full age, and the question as to the capacity of a child at a particular time to exercise care to avoid a particular danger is one of fact for the jury. Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 138 P. 712. And the rule has been applied where the child sought to be charged with contributory negligence was considerably older than the plaintiff in the present case. Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone, supra; Bowdoin v. Southern Pacific Co., 178 Cal. 634, 174 P. 664; Morris v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 468, 205 P. 1073; Schroeder v. Baumgarteker, 202 Cal. 626, 262 P. 740; Greeneich v. Knoll, 73 Cal. App. 1, 238 P. 163. The presumption is that the child was at all times exercising due care for its own safety (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4). Until overcome, the presumption was evidence in accordance with which the jury was bound to decide. Hatzakorjian v. Rucker-Fuller Desk Co., 197 Cal. 82, 239 P. 709, 41 A. L. R. 1027; Smellie v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. Sup.) 299 P. 529. Here the child was upon the street at a place where he had a right to be, and where pedestrians were expected to cross. He had looked in both directions, and had obeyed in every respect the traffic signals. The implied finding was against the plea of contributory negligence, and the evidence was amply sufficient to sustain the conclusion of the jury.

Counsel for plaintiff in his examination of several of the jurors on their voir dire asked the following questions: "Do you own any stocks or bonds in any insurance company insuring drivers of automobiles for negligence?" "Do you own any stocks or bonds in any insurance company?" "Have any of you owned any stocks or bonds in any insurance company insuring drivers of automobiles for negligence?" These questions are assigned as prejudicial misconduct.

[6, 7] While it has been held that questions of this character must not be asked for the purpose of informing the jury that the defendant is insured (Eldridge v. Clark & Henery Construction Co., 75 Cal. App. 516, 243 P. 43), nevertheless, it is well settled that it is proper for counsel to ask of each juror whether he is interested in any insurance company insuring against liability for negligence. Arnold v. California Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 420, 183 P. 171; Williamson v. Hardy, 47 Cal. App. 377, 190 P. 646; Murphy v. Shaffer, 58 Cal. App. 453, 208 P. 1003; Potter v. Driver, 97 Cal. App. 311, 275 P. 526; Dermer v. Pistoresi (Cal. App.) 293 P. 78. Moreover, the court instructed the jury that "no insurance is an issue in this case, and no insurance company is a party to this case, so we are not concerned with insurance at all, and the jurors will ignore any reference to insurance." There is nothing in the record which indicates bad faith in asking the questions, and the court's instruction was sufficient to remove any prejudicial effect upon the minds of the jurors. Nichols v. Nelson, 80 Cal. App. 590, 252 P. 739.

[8, 9] It is also complained that plaintiff's counsel was guilty of misconduct in intimating to the jury that defendant Harman was intoxicated at the time of the accident. A witness was asked if he detected the odor of liquor upon her breath, and answered in the affirmative, but the record discloses nothing more. This evidence was competent (Finn v. Sullivan [Cal. App.] 293 P. 639), and misconduct cannot be predicated upon the fact that the question was asked.

[10, 11] The testimony shows that plaintiff's head struck the pavement, causing concussion of the brain, the cutting of the salivary gland, and numerous lacerations of the face and scalp. He was confined to his bed for three weeks. A physician who treated him testified that there was a possibility of future ill effects from the concussion, and that the effects described by the child and his mother might have been caused by the injury. According to the plaintiff, he continues to suffer from dizziness and impaired sight, and his mother also testified to the same effect. The verdict of a jury on the subject of damages cannot be set aside unless so plainly excessive as to warrant the conclusion that it was the result of passion or prejudice (Perry v. Angelus Hospital Ass'n, 172 Cal. 311, 156 P. 449; Anstead v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 203 Cal. 634, 265 P. 487). There is no absolute rule for determining whether a verdict is excessive (Morgan v. Southern Pacific Co., 95 Cal. 501, 30 P. 601), and awards cannot be so held as a matter of law simply because the amount may be larger than is ordinarily allowed in such cases (James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 785, 103 P. 1082). As was said in Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 254, 116 P. 513, 520, "the only means of discovering the existence of passion and prejudice as influencing a verdict is by comparing the amount of the verdict with the evidence before the trial court. To say that a verdict has been influenced by passion and prejudice is but another way of saying that the verdict exceeds any amount justified by the evidence." The question in the first instance is for the trial court; and in considering an attack upon a verdict as excessive the reviewing court must treat every conflict in the evidence as resolved in favor of the respondent, and give him the benefit of every inference that can be reasonably drawn in support of his claim.

[12] It was held in Davis v. Renton, 99 Cal. App. 264, 278 P. 442, that an award of $5,000 for similar injuries was excessive. In that case, the court pointed out that it did not appear that the subsequent conditions described were due to the physical injuries received, and held that, under the evidence, the verdict was excessive. In the present case, there was evidence tending to prove serious after effects caused by the injury to the child's head; and we cannot say in view of the evidence that the injuries suffered were not of a permanent character, or that the verdict is so plainly excessive as to warrant the conclusion that it was the result of passion or prejudice.

[13] In addition to the allegations of negligence on the part of defendant Harman, it was alleged and admitted that defendant was the owner of the automobile, and that the same was being used by its permission. It is claimed that section 1714¼ of the Civil Code (St. 1929, p. 566), under which the action is maintained against the corporation defendant, violates the provisions of section 11 of article I of the Constitution that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation, and that the demurrer of this defendant to the complaint should have been sustained. The Code section imputes to the owner of a motor vehicle the negligence of any person operating the same with the owner's permission. No such rule applies to the owners of vehicles not so propelled, and it is claimed that there is no reasonable basis for the distinction. This contention is fully answered in Heron v. Riley, 209 Cal. 507, 289 P. 160, upholding the constitutionality of section 1714½ of the same Code, and requires no further discussion.

The conclusions of the jury appear to be fully sustained, and no error is shown which would justify a reversal of the judgment. The judgment is affirmed.

115 Cal.App. 67

PENN v. DYBA et al.
Civ. 713.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

June 17, 1931.

1. Quieting title ☞10(1).

In quiet title action, plaintiff must show title in herself; it being good defense to show only that plaintiff's title is defective.

2. Appeal and error ☞1071(1).

If plaintiff's title is successfully attacked in quiet title action, validity of judgment adverse to plaintiff would not be affected by erroneous finding that one defendant was owner.

3. Quieting title ☞44(4).

Deed from city treasurer, though furnishing prima facie evidence of title, held not conclusive in quiet title action.

4. Quieting title ☞44(3).

In quiet title action, finding that defendant had lien held supported by mortgage and trust deed admitted in evidence.

5. Appeal and error ☞1071(1).

In quiet title action, finding that no owner's name was mentioned in certificate of sale to plaintiff, if error, held harmless.

Plaintiff was grantee in a deed executed by the city treasurer in pursuance of sale to satisfy a street improvement bond issued on an assessment for the improvement of the street. The certificate of sale showed that the property was assessed to "unknown owner," so that no owner's name was mentioned in the certificate and the finding was literally true, the case was not tried on the theory that a personal demand upon the property owner was required, and the failure to make such demand was not an element contributing to the court's decision, so that the finding complained of, if erroneous, might be regarded as superfluous.

6. Quieting title ☞44(3).

In quiet title action by one holding deed from city, evidence supported finding notice to redeem did not remain upon door of house for reasonable time.

Plaintiff was grantee in a deed executed by the city treasurer in pursuance of a sale to satisfy street improvement bond, and it was contended that the notice of sale and application for deed was not affixed to the door of the house in such fashion that it would remain thereon for reasonable length of time and that it did not remain thereon for reasonable time. The testimony, though to some extent vague and indefinite respecting visit to the house during the thirty-day period succeeding the placing of the notice to redeem on the door of the house, was sufficient to support the finding.

7. Municipal corporations ☞581.

On sale by city to satisfy street improvement bond, there should be strict, literal compliance with statutory requirements respecting "posting" of notice to redeem (St. 1911, p. 762, § 74, as amended by St. 1921, p. 292, § 8).

The word "post" is defined as to affix to a post, wall, or other usual place for public notices, and the word "affix" means to fix or fasten in any way, to attach physically.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Affix" and "Post; Posting," see Words and Phrases.]

8. Municipal corporations ☞581.

On sale by city to satisfy street improvement bond, notice to redeem held not properly posted (St. 1911, p. 762, § 74, as amended by St. 1921, p. 292, § 8).

The testimony showed that the notice was fastened to the door by means of pins which were stuck through the paper at one side and found lodgment in a narrow crevice between the wood of the door and a metal door plate, and the opposite edge of the notice was inserted in a crack between the door and the door jamb and no attempt was made to fasten it there by means of any device.

9. Appeal and error ☞1050(1).

In quiet title action, admission of evidence which was purely preliminary, though erroneous if standing alone, held harmless.

The plaintiff claimed under deed from city treasurer in pursuance of a sale to satisfy street improvement bond, and the question objected to was whether witness went past house quite frequently and was most general and standing alone obviously subject to objection of irrelevancy, incompetency, and immateriality. However, the witness later testified that he went to the particular house involved in the action, described portions of house which he inspected, and did not see on property notice to redeem which plaintiff maintained was placed on front door.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Henry M. Willis, Judge.

Quiet title action by Laura E. Penn against Elizabeth Dyba and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

J. Everett Brown, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Adolph B. Rosenfield, of Long Beach, for respondent Hill.

JENNINGS, J.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants.

Upon conclusion of the trial of the issues herein presented, the court found that defendant Elizabeth Dyba was the owner of the real property, title to which is in dispute, and that she owned it subject to a mortgage lien of E. A. Hill and to the lien of a deed of trust held by Mox, Inc., which the court found was subordinate to the mortgage lien of E. A. Hill. Judgment was entered accordingly. No brief has been filed on behalf of Elizabeth Dyba or Mox, Inc., and for the sake of convenience E. A. Hill, in whose behalf a brief has been filed, will be styled respondent, and Elizabeth Dyba and Mox, Inc., will be referred to as defendants.

Appellant was the grantee in a deed executed by the city treasurer of the city of Los Angeles, in pursuance of a sale made by him to satisfy a street improvement bond issued upon an assessment for the improvement of a street. The complaint alleged a cause of action to quiet title. The defendants Elizabeth Dyba, Fidelity Mortgage Corporation, and Mox, Incorporated, appeared and answered, claiming an interest in each defendant superior and adverse to that of plaintiff. Respondent E. A. Hill answered denying that appellant was owner of the property and alleging ownership of a mortgage executed by defendant Elizabeth Dyba to respondent as mortgagee, which it was alleged created a lien right in respondent superior to the claim of appellant.

During the trial appellant introduced in evidence the deed executed to her as grantee by the city treasurer of the city of Los Angeles and rested her case. Evidence was then introduced on behalf of respondent and his codefendants, and at the conclusion of the trial the court made its findings and conclusions of law and rendered its judgment as above indicated in favor of respondent's claim of a mortgage lien superior to plaintiff's alleged ownership of the fee.

Appellant makes four contentions: (1) That the findings are not supported by the evidence; (2) that there is an irreconcilable conflict in the findings; (3) that the decision of the trial court is contrary to law; and (4) that the court erred in admitting certain evidence over appellant's objection.

[1, 2] It is first contended that the court's finding that Elizabeth Dyba is the owner and entitled to possession of the real property, title to which is alleged to be in appellant, is not supported by the evidence. During the trial of the action, no documentary evidence showing title in defendant Elizabeth Dyba was submitted. The only direct evidence relating to this feature of the case consists of the oral testimony of the witness Gustav Mox who testified that the defendant Elizabeth Dyba held title for the builder of the house on the premises; that the property was sold to one Fix in 1926 and that Fix sold it back to Elizabeth Dyba in December, 1926; that in July, 1927, Elizabeth Dyba deeded the property to one Wasson. This rather vague and uncertain testimony relative to the title of defendant Elizabeth Dyba is to some extent supported by a certain mortgage admitted in evidence executed on June 25, 1925, by Elizabeth Dyba who covenanted that she then had title in fee to the premises which are the subject of the present action. This mortgage by successive assignments finally became the property of respondent and furnishes the basis for the court's finding that respondent had a lien on the property superior to appellant's alleged title to it. Adopting the contention of appellant that the evidence hereinabove set forth is insufficient to sustain the court's finding that the defendant Elizabeth Dyba is the owner of the property will not avail anything to appellant, for appellant instituted the present action claiming title in herself and seeking to quiet her title against the claims of defendants. The burden was therefore upon her to show title in herself and the assertion of an interest by another who has no title furnishes no ground of complaint. And it is a good defense to an action of this character to show no more than that the title of the one seeking to have it quieted is defective. Williams v. City of San Pedro, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 44, 49, 94 P. 234; Kilfoil v. Warden, 46 Cal. App. 502, 189 P. 303. Therefore, if it be conceded that the court's finding that Elizabeth Dyba is the owner of the property is incorrect and lacking in evidentiary justification, nevertheless if appellant's title has been successfully attacked, the court's decision that appellant is not entitled to a decree quieting her title to the property is manifestly correct.

[3] The first finding of fact wherein the court found that appellant is not the owner of the property is also attacked because it is argued that the deed from the city treasurer furnished prima facie evidence of title in appellant. Here, again, if it be conceded that the deed under which appellant claims was prima facie evidence of title in appellant, nevertheless if it appears by satisfactory evidence that appellant's title is defective, the court's finding is obviously correct. Prima facie evidence is not conclusive evidence.

[4] Findings 3 and 4, wherein the court found that respondents and defendant Mox, Incorporated, have liens against the property by virtue of a mortgage executed by defendant Elizabeth Dyba and a trust deed executed by the same defendant in favor of Mox, Incorporated, are amply supported by the instruments themselves admitted in evidence by the trial court.

[5] It is urged that finding No. 8, to the effect that no owner's name was mentioned in the certificate of sale issued to appellant, is error since the certificate itself shows that the property was assessed to "Unknown Owner." Authorities are cited by counsel for appellant holding that the certificate of a superintendent of streets that the ownership of property subject to assessment is unknown to him is conclusive of the fact thus certified and that the necessity of a personal demand is thereby obviated. It may be conceded that appellant's contention that there was no necessity of personal demand is correct, but it does not follow therefrom that the court's finding that no owner's name was stated in the certificate was error. There was no contention that there was necessity for a demand and the decision of the court is not based upon the failure to make a demand. It is obvious that no owner's name was mentioned in the certificate and that therefore the court's finding was literally true. Since the case was not tried on the theory that a personal demand upon the property owner was required and the failure to make a demand is not an element contributing to the court's decision, the finding complained of, if it is subject to the objection made, may be regarded as superfluous and its inclusion is harmless.

[6] Paragraph 9 of the court's findings is attacked as lacking evidentiary support. The important feature of this particular finding and the feature which is the object of attack by appellant consists of the statement that the notice of sale and the application for a deed which the court found was placed on the front door of the house on the premises was not affixed to the door in such fashion that it would remain thereon for a reasonable length of time and that it did not remain on the door for a reasonable time. The evidence respecting this feature consists of the testimony of C. P. Warden, who described in detail the manner in which he placed the notice to redeem on the front door of the premises and the testimony of three witnesses who testified to visits made by them to the premises during the 30-day period preceding the execution of the deed to appellant by the city treasurer and to the fact that none of them saw upon the front door of the house the notice to redeem. The testimony of these witnesses, including that of the witness Warden, though it is to some extent vague and indefinite respecting visits made by them during the 30-day period succeeding the placing of the notice to redeem on the door of the house, lends sufficient support to the finding in so far as it is a finding of fact. There is bound up in this finding the determination by the court of a legal conclusion which is made the subject of a pronounced, separate objection by appellant which is hereinafter considered.

[7, 8] Complaint is also made that certain findings are irreconcilably conflicting. Close examination of the findings thus criticized discloses that the determination of this contention depends upon whether the trial court properly disposed of the principal legal problem presented in the case.

This problem, which is made the subject of vigorous argument by appellant, relates to the sufficiency of the posting of the notice to redeem by appellant and forms the basis of her separately stated contention that the court's decision is contrary to law. The Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) by virtue of whose provisions the proceedings were taken which finally resulted in the sale of the premises and the execution to appellant by the city treasurer of the city of Los Angeles of the deed on which appellant relies, provides in section 74 thereof (as amended by St. 1921, p. 292, § 8) that in case of unoccupied property a written notice stating that the property has been sold to satisfy the bond lien, date of sale, date, number, and series of the bond, the amount due, and the time when the right of redemption will expire must be posted in a conspicuous place upon the property at least 30 days before the purchaser applies for a deed. It was the trial court's decision that the evidence relative to the placing of the notice to redeem by appellant failed to show that it had been properly posted as contemplated by statute. The word "post" is defined in Webster's New International Dictionary (1929) as follows: "To affix to a post (as esp. formerly, before a sheriff's office or in some other public place) wall, or other usual place for public notices; to placard, as to post a notice." The word "affix" is thus defined in the same dictionary: "To fix or fasten in any way; to attach physically; as to affix a seal * * * to attach. * * *" In 31 Cyc. 965, the word "posting," used as a verb, is defined thus: "To attach to a post, a wall, or other usual place of affixing public notices; to advertise; to bring to the notice, or attention of the public by affixing to a post." It is then obvious that having in mind particularly the sense in which the word is used in the statute, the principal object to be attained is to bring to the attention of the owner the fact that he will be divested of title within a limited period of time unless the amount specified in the notice is paid and the property thus freed from the lien of the assessment. It is also to be borne in mind that we are here dealing with property assessed to an unknown owner and the statute is providing for a mode of conveying notice to such owner other than the usual method of personal service. In other words, it is a substitute for personal service and there should be strict and literal compliance with the statutory requirement. Black on Tax Titles, p. 422, § 343 (2d Ed.). The case of Hindle v. Warden, 50 Cal. App. 356, 195 P. 428, sufficiently illustrates the absolute and literal compliance with statutory requirements insisted upon by the courts in a case where service of a notice to redeem is permitted to be given by posting.

The evidence relative to posting the notice to redeem in the present action consisted solely of the testimony of a single witness, C. P. Warden, who described minutely and in detail the manner in which he placed the notice upon the front door of the house. It would unduly lengthen this opinion to incorporate in it the testimony of this witness. Suffice it to say, that the testimony shows that the witness fastened the notice to the door by means of pins which were stuck through the paper at one side of the notice and found lodgment in a narrow crevice between the wood of the door and a metal doorplate attached to it. The opposite edge of the notice was inserted in a crack between the door and the door jamb and no attempt was made to fasten it there by means of any device. If the object of the statute is the giving of notice and this central idea remains even when the owner is unknown and the information contained in the notice is permitted to be conveyed by the substituted method, then so flimsy and temporary an attachment as was here used should not be held to have attained the dignity of legal posting. The court's decision that the notice to redeem the property from the lien of the assessment bond was not posted in the manner contemplated by the statute was correct.

[9] Complaint is made that, over the objection of appellant, the court permitted the witness Mox to answer the following question: "Mr. Mox, did you go past that house quite frequently?" The question was most general and standing alone obviously subject to the objection of irrelevancy, incompetency and immateriality. An examination, however, of the testimony that followed the answer shows that the question was purely preliminary and that the witness later testified that he went to the particular house involved in the action, that he described the portions of the house which he inspected and that on his various visits of inspection he did not see upon the property the notice to redeem which appellant maintained was placed on the front door of the house. No prejudicial error was committed in permitting the question to be answered.

For the reasons hereinabove set forth, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

Civ. 4346.

July 3, 1931.

1. Sales 459.

2. Sales  472(3).

3. Principal and agent 3(3).

4. Money lent  l.

5. Principal and agent ⚙️3(3).

6. Appeal and error 🔑1071(5).

PLUMMER, J.

*For subsequent opinion see 10 P.2d 68.

On or about the 2d day of February, 1928, Hendley came to the plaintiff's office in the city of Sacramento and informed the plaintiff that a sight draft and bill of lading for automobiles, purchased by him from the Chevrolet Company in Oakland had been forwarded to the Bank of Yolo in the city of Woodland, and thereupon the plaintiff executed and delivered to Hendley the following draft:

"Pacific Finance Corporation

"No. 11102

"Sacramento, Calif. February 2, 1928.

"Pay to the Order of Bank of Yolo $4610.00 Four Thousand Six Hundred ten Dollars In payment of sight draft Automobiles Purchased for account of J. T. Hendley To Pacific Finance Corporation, Pacific Finance Building, Los Angeles, California, Harry G. McClory, For Pacific Finance Corporation."

Hendley took this draft to the Bank of Yolo, or rather, after returning of Woodland, sent the draft, together with a deposit slip, to the Bank of Yolo, which honored the draft and passed the sum mentioned therein to the credit of Hendley. Hendley thereafter, by means of checking against his account, drew out of the bank of Yolo all of the sum of money thus placed to his credit, and did not pay the Chevrolet Company of Oakland for the shipment of cars. Thereafter, and on or about the 5th day of March, 1928, Hendley appeared in the city of Sacramento at the office of the plaintiff and stated that a certain other sight draft and bill of lading for cars shipped to Woodland for the Chevrolet Company, on account of his orders, was in the Bank of Yolo, whereupon the plaintiff executed and delivered to the defendant a certain other draft in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Pacific Finance Corporation

"No. 11111

"Sacramento, Calif., March 5, 1928

"Pay to The order of Bank of Yolo $2323.51 Two Thousand three hundred twenty-three & 51/100 Dollars In payment of Sight Draft Automobiles Purchased for Account of J. T. Hendley To Pacific Finance Corporation, Pacific Finance Building, Los Angeles, California, Harry G. McClory, For Pacific Finance Corporation."

Hendley either took or sent this draft to the bank at Woodland, whereupon it was honored and the amount thereof placed to the credit of Hendley. Hendley afterwards checked out all the money represented by this draft. At the time of the honoring of this draft by the Bank of Yolo, the Bank of Yolo had in its possession a draft and bill of lading from the vendors of the automobiles purchased by Hendley. This draft was not paid. The record shows that no bill of lad-ing with sight draft attached, representing the first item herein mentioned, for which the draft of February 2, 1928, was intended as payment, ever came into the hands of the Bank of Yolo. The sight draft and bill of lading giving rise to the draft of March 5, 1928, which we have set forth, were returned to the vendors of the automobiles.

Upon the part of the appellant, it is contended that the Bank of Yolo was under obligation to apply the money, represented by the plaintiff's draft, in payment of the sight draft forwarded by the Chevrolet Company, and, not having such draft in its possession, either to ascertain the whereabouts of the same or place the money to the credit of the plaintiff as a depositor. That in the second case it was the duty of the bank to pay the sight draft drawn by the vendors of the automobiles, and deliver the canceled draft, together with the bill of lading, to Hendley, to be forwarded by him to the plaintiff at its office in Sacramento.

The record shows that on several former occasions when automobiles had been purchased, a representative of the plaintiff by the name of McClory always accompanied Hendley to Woodland, personally delivered the plaintiff's draft in payment of the draft drawn by the vendors of automobiles, taking up the canceled draft and the bill of lading. This had only been done when the sight draft and bill of lading of the vendors were forwarded through the bank of Woodland.

The respondent's theory of this case, and the one adopted by the court, is that the relationship established between the plaintiff and Hendley was that of debtor and creditor; that while the transactions were carried out in such form as to place the title of the automobiles in the Pacific Finance Corporation, that the money represented by the drafts was simply so much money paid for the uses and purposes of Hendley, at Hendley's instance and request, thus constituting a loan and creating the relationship of debtor and creditor, and that, when the drafts were placed in the possession of Hendley, he had a property interest therein, in that it was delivered to him to be applied for his uses and purposes in the purchase or in payment, rather, of automobiles ordered by him from the manufacturers.

On the part of the appellant, it is contended that it is simply buying automobile paper, is not loaning money, and that the relationship of debtor and creditor does not exist. It is further contended that, when Hendley went to the Bank of Yolo in Woodland, he was simply acting as the agent of the plaintiff without any property interest in the drafts, and that the bank had no authority whatever to give him credit for the moneys represented by the drafts.

While the conditional contracts of sale entered into between the plaintiff and Hendley provided for the retention of title by the plaintiff, the whole purpose and intendment of the transaction, as disclosed by the record, was to the effect that the automobiles should be placed in the salesroom conducted by Hendley in the city of Woodland, and the automobiles thereafter sold to the general public.

[1, 2] Two propositions of law appear to be so well settled that we need do nothing more than cite the cases where the propositions have been involved: First. That conditional sales contracts are valid, and the title to automobiles may in this manner be retained and vested either in the vendors or those who take title from the original vendors, by taking up the bill of lading with a sight draft attached, and then executing a conditional sales contract with the dealer. Mohr v. First National Bank, 69 Cal. App. 756, 232 P. 748; Arena v. Bank of Italy, 194 Cal. 195, 228 P. 441; Bonestell v. Auto-Motive Finance Corp., 69 Cal. App. 719, 232 P. 734. Second. That whenever a finance company, having taken title from the original vendors, shippers, or manufacturers of automobiles, enters into a conditional contract of sale with a dealer, "floors" the cars for him, that is, places them in the dealer's salesroom for sale to the public, and sales are thereafter made by such dealers to the public, the persons purchasing from the dealer obtain a valid title to the cars so purchased. General Securities Corp. v. Reo Motor Car Co., 91 Cal. App. 16, 266 P. 576; Rapp v. Fred W. Hanger Motors Co., 77 Cal. App. 417, 246 P. 1067.

[3] What the transaction really was between the Finance Company and Hendley is best shown by the testimony of the witness McClory, the manager of the plaintiff's branch office in Sacramento. We give it in the form of questions and answers. After stating that he had a transaction with Hendley in Sacramento on February 2, 1928, this witness testified:

"Q. Mr. McClory, will you tell us what the transaction was that you had on that date? A. Mr. Hendley came to me and said he had a sight draft against him for some $4,610 through the bank and asked me to pay for the cars.

"Q. Through which bank? A. The Bank of Yolo at Woodland, and asked me to pay for the cars. I gave him a draft and he signed a flooring contract and he gave me a check for what we call his portion, so we issued the draft made payable to the Bank of Yolo, with the notation, 'Payment of sight draft.' Also, Mr. J. T. Hendley's name on it, and he left the office."

The witness, after stating that he had a transaction with Hendley on March 5, 1928, testified as follows:

"Q. What was that transaction, Mr. McClory? A. Mr. Hendley came to me and said that there was a sight draft drawn against him by the Chevrolet Motor Company, through the Bank of Yolo, at Woodland, and told me that he wanted to pay for those cars and then put them on a wholesale (retail) contract to him, which was done."

The record shows that this contract was never fully filled out, but was only signed in blank by Hendley.

"Q. Mr. McClory, on account of the two sums in this, or take it, on account of the sum mentioned in the first draft of February 2d, were you repaid any of those moneys by Mr. Hendley? A. Yes.

"Q. How much; what was the total amount that the Pacific Finance Corporation was repaid by Mr. Hendley on account of that first draft on February 2, 1928? A. He gave us, as I recall, $610."

After refreshing his memory the witness testified that the total sum paid back was $1,315.

"Q. Now, you understood what Mr. Hendley was going to do with these automobiles? A. Well, in the course of his business, yes.

"Q. What was he going to do with them? A. Sell them.

"Q. Where? A. In Woodland.

"Q. He had an agency for both the Nash and Chevrolet automobiles? A. That's right.

"Q. And you gave him that draft for the purpose of enabling him to floor those cars in his place of business, didn't you? A. That's right.

"Q. To exhibit them to the general public, for sale? A. That's right.

"Q. And you knew that he was in the automobile business for the profit that he would make? He bought them at a certain figure from the Chevrolet people and from the Nash distributors, at what they call the wholesale price, and then he sold them to the general public at retail prices; is that correct? A. That's correct.

"Q. And you knew and understood that that was the nature of his business? A. Yes.

"Q. And out of the profit that he made on the cars, or the purchase price that he received for the cars, he had to pay you what you advanced to him plus a certain rate of interest which you charged him. What was the rate of interest which you charged Mr. Hendley? A. One per cent a month.

"Q. You charged him one per cent a month; then you advanced this money to Hendley for the purpose of enabling him to floor these cars in his place of business, in Woodland? A. Yes."

Mr. McClory further testified that the plaintiff did not lend money; that it is in the business of buying retail contracts; and then further testified:

"Q. The only profit that you get in a deal such as you made with Mr. Hendley in this case is the interest that you charge him, at the rate of one per cent a month? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That is your only profit? A. That is all.

"Q. And Hendley comes to you, if he had an order for cars * * * he comes to your office and tells you that he has made that order, and tells you that he has got to lift that sight draft, and you ask him how much it is, and he tells you; that includes the freight plus the wholesale price of the cars from the distributors, doesn't it? A. He paid the freight separately.

"Q. He paid the freight separately. But he comes into you and tells you that he has ordered certain automobiles from the Chevrolet people in Oakland, the distributors, and he tells you that he has ordered certain cars from the Nash distributors in San Francisco, and you ascertain from him the wholesale price for those cars, for the shipment, don't you? A. That is right.

"Q. Then you asked Mr. Hendley to make a deposit with you for a portion of that purchase price. In this case you say it is $610, isn't that correct? A. We ask him to make that portion as a down payment after we pay for the cars.

"Q. After you pay for the cars? A. Yes."

The witness further testified that Mr. Hendley came to him and said he had a sight draft against him for $4,610 through the bank, and asked him to pay for the cars.

"Q. Through which bank? A. The Bank of Yolo at Woodland, and asked me to pay for the cars. I gave him a draft and he signed a floor contract and he gave me a check for what we call his portion, so we issued the draft made payable to the Bank of Yolo, with the notation 'Payment of sight draft,' also Mr. J. T. Hendley's name on it, and he left the office."

The witness further testified that he did not accompany Hendley to the Bank of Yolo, in relation to either one of the transactions herein referred to, by reason of the fact that his business at said time called him elsewhere.

The testimony in relation to the second draft was in substance identical with the testimony relating to the first draft, showing that both transactions were identical in legal effect.

Irrespective of the designation or name given to these transactions by the respective witnesses, there is no escape from the conclusion that in both instances the plaintiff was advancing money for the uses and purposes of the defendant. The taking of title to the automobiles from the vendors or distributors in Oakland and San Francisco was only a method of securing the repayment of the moneys laid out or expended in the purchase of the sight drafts drawn by the vendors or distributors, and that, as the money was advanced for the uses and purposes of Hendley, the relationship of debtor and creditor immediately came into being. The drafts were drawn at the instance and request of Hendley to pay for cars that he had ordered, with the full intent and understanding of all of the parties that the cars should be placed upon the floors of his salesrooms in Woodland and disposed of at retail to the general public. The conditional contract entered into between Hendley and the plaintiff constituted only a form of security as between them, and would enable the plaintiff to take possession of all of the cars not theretofore sold to the general public by Hendley. While the legal title to the cars, by reason of taking up bills of sale and sight drafts, when such is done, vests title in the Finance Company, a general property interest, nevertheless, remains in the dealer who has ordered the cars, and who has been allowed to take possession thereof for the purpose of making sales. In the case at bar, it appears that Hendley paid at least a portion of the purchase price, and also paid the freight on the shipments separately.

[4] While not within the meaning of the word "loan," as used by the layman, when Hendley asked the plaintiff to pay for the shipment, and the plaintiff delivered to Hendley its draft in payment thereof, it was, in legal effect, the advancement of money for the uses and purposes of Hendley, and upon his implied promise to repay the same, and the method of doing so was by means of a conditional contract of sale and purchase of the automobiles entered into between the parties, which is none other than a loan of money carried out in the manner calculated to secure repayment to the one advancing the money. The fact that no money actually passed from the Finance Company to Hendley does not change the character of the transaction. A loan when money is passed is thus defined in 38 C. J. 126: "A contract by which one delivers a sum of money to another, and the latter agrees to return at a future time a sum equivalent to that which he borrows; the delivery by one party and the receipt by the other party of a given sum of money, upon an agreement, express or implied, to repay the sum loaned, with or without interest. If such is the intent of the parties the transaction will be considered a loan without regard to its form." The testimony shows conclusively that it was the intent of the parties that the original sum of money advanced should be repaid, with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month; that the parties did not intend, and never intended, that possession of the automobiles should be taken by the Finance Company and retained or dealt with as their property, but that title there-to should only be vested in the Finance Company for the purpose of insuring repayment, with interest, of the money advanced. Money advanced is essentially a loan. Puget Sound Telephone Co. v. Telechronometer Co. of America, 130 Wash. 468, 227 P. 867; Savings Bank of San Diego v. Barrett, 126 Cal. 413, 58 P. 914. See, also, In re Grand Union Co. (C. C. A.) 219 F. 353, where the transfer of piano leases were involved and the transaction very similar to the transfer of automobile paper. The full face value of the piano leases was not paid. In the present case, the testimony shows that Hendley was required to pay at least a part of the purchase price of the automobiles. In the first transaction, he was required to advance the sum of $610.

That transactions such as we are considering here are in legal effect a form of loan further appears from the case of In re American Fibre Reed Co. (D. C.) 206 F. 309.

[5] On the part of the appellant, as we have stated, it is contended that when Hendley went to the Bank of Yolo with the drafts which we have mentioned, he was acting as the agent of the plaintiff, and that the defendant was put upon notice and should have inquired into the limited powers of Hendley as such agent, and that the transaction was not a loan, and, therefore, the claim that Hendley had no interest whatever in the moneys represented by the drafts. In this particular, our attention is first called to the case of Bowles v. Clark et al., 59 Wash. 336, 109 P. 812, 813, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 613. In that case, it appears that Clark, who was the appellant in the action owned certain real property in Seattle; that Fraser was the manager of a concern called the Enterprise Plumbing Company, and, as such manager, contracted with Clark to furnish certain materials. It appears that Fraser had no credit; that between $65 and $70 worth of materials additional were required to complete the work contracted to be performed by Fraser; that Clark gave a check for the sum of $70, payable to the Bowles Company, and Fraser took the check, delivered it to the respondent, and, instead of buying the necessary supplies, had his own account with the Bowles Company credited with a portion of the money represented by the check, and the supplies were obtained by Fraser from the Bowles Company on credit, and, not being paid for, the Bowles Company filed a lien on the property owned by Clark. Upon the trial, the question was presented as to whether Bowles Company should or should not have credited Clark with the whole sum instead of crediting Fraser with the amount of his indebtedness. It was held in that case that Fraser was simply the agent of Clark, had no interest in the check, and Clark should have been credited with the entire amount. Had Fraser possessed an interest in the check, we think the opinion in the case shows that the decision would have been different. We quote the following from the opinion: "Having a duty then to account for the check, the question remains: Did it so account when it appropriated it to Fraser's use? It seems to us that it did not. It is true that Fraser was the appellants' agent for a special purpose, and it is true also that the respondent, since it was not informed of the special limitations upon his powers, had the right to assume that his powers were such as the circumstances surrounding the transaction made them appear to be. But we think it too much to say that these circumstances were of such a nature as to warrant the belief that the property in the check was the property of Fraser. The check itself contained a distinct warning to the contrary. It was made payable to the respondent, a stranger to the drawer, and not to Fraser, and it is not reasonable to suppose that Fraser would have accepted payment of an obligation due himself in a form which he could not use without the consent and co-operation of a third person."

The court then takes up the fact that the parties all knew that Fraser had no credit, and that no one would deal with him without making further inquiries. Several cases are cited by appellant which uniformly hold that where an agent of the drawer takes a check to the bank, drawn payable to the bank, and the bank credits the agent with the amount represented by the check or draft, instead of placing the same to the account of the drawer, the bank is liable. Sims v. U. S. Trust Co., 103 N. Y. 472, 9 N. E. 605; Apostoloff v. Levy, 186 App. Div. 769, 174 N. Y. S. 828; Bjorgo v. First National Bank of Emmons, 127 Minn. 105, 149 N. W. 3, L. R. A. 1915B, 287. In all of these cases, as we have stated, the question of agency was involved, and not that of ownership in and to the check or draft, or in the proceeds to be derived therefrom.

The respondent calls our attention to the case of Armstrong v. American Exchange National Bank of Chicago, 133 U. S. 433, 10 S. Ct. 450, 33 L. Ed. 747, where it was held that drafts similar to those involved in this transaction gave a property interest to the one to whom the drafts were delivered. In that case, however, the telegrams passing between the parties so distinguish it from the circumstances here involved that we do not cite it as an authority.

In the case of Bank of Venice v. Clapp, 17 Cal. App. 657, 121 P. 298, the distinction is drawn between one who has an interest in a check made payable similar in form to those involved here, and where the person presenting the check is only an agent, and it is there held that a bank in paying such a check is relieved from liability. The case of Bank of Venice v. Clapp, supra, supports in every particular the conclusion of the trial court in this action. The face of the draft involved herein shows that Hendley had a property interest therein, and that the money was being advanced by the plaintiff to pay for automobiles purchased by him.

Other questions are presented for our consideration, but they are not of such importance as to require their being set forth in this opinion.

[6] The findings necessary to support the judgment appearing to be sufficiently sustained, the fact that findings unnecessary to support the judgment are not sufficiently sustained is immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: PRESTON, P. J.

---

HOFSTEDT v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
Civ. 4190.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

June 17, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 17, 1931.

1. Railroads Ⓒ304.

Violating county ordinance forbidding railroad to block crossing by freight train, with which automobile collided, for over five minutes, held negligence per se.

2. Railroads Ⓒ345(3).

In motorist's action involving collision with freight train, proof of existence and violation of county ordinance forbidding railroad to block crossing for over five minutes held properly admitted, although not specially proved.

Proof of existence and violation of ordinance in question was properly admitted, since it appeared that complaint, to which only a general demurrer was filed, alleged in general terms two distinct acts of negligence, one allegation being that train was operated negligently in that it was stopped and was blocking highway, and second allegation being that train was without lights or warning signals, and therefore proof of violation of ordinance was mere evidence of negligence, as charged in first allegation.

3. Appeal and error Ⓒ891.

In negligence case, involving violation of county ordinance, filing ordinance as evidence in Court of Appeal held discretionary and authorized by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a).

4. Railroads Ⓒ350(15).

Whether motorist was contributorily negligent in hitting unlighted freight train, violating county ordinance by standing twenty minutes on crossing, held for court in trial without jury (St. 1923, p. 546, § 99).

It appeared that regular sidetrack was thought to be too short for train in question, which was accordingly placed on spur track leading to warehouse, and that headlights of locomotive were extinguished, and no lanterns or other lights displayed while trainmen waited for another train to pass; that plaintiff motorist knew spur track was seldom used, and that he was not traveling at excessive speed; that plaintiff's headlights were adjusted to conform to California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 546, § 99), so as to throw rays of light on surface of highway, and therefore at a distance rays would strike highway beneath box cars, which would not be disclosed by legally adjusted headlights until automobile was quite close; and that plaintiff, when three hundred feet from crossing, had met and passed another automobile coming from direction thereof, which would naturally lead to conclusion that crossing was open.

5. Railroads Ⓒ348(6).

Evidence supported finding that motorist was not contributorily negligent in colliding with unlighted freight train, violating county ordinance by standing twenty minutes on crossing.

6. Negligence Ⓒ65.

As regards contributory negligence, each case rests upon its particular facts.

7. Negligence Ⓒ56(1).

Negligence, to be actionable, must proximately cause accident.

8. Railroads Ⓒ348(2).

Evidence warranted finding that railroad's violating county ordinance, by allowing freight train to stand twenty minutes on crossing, proximately caused motorist to collide with unlighted train (St. 1923, p. 546, § 99).

It appeared that blocking of crossing by freight train in question for more than five minutes, contrary to county ordinance, contributed to cause of accident, since violation thereof constituted negligence per se, and evidence also showed that driver of another automobile, after waiting fifteen minutes at crossing, turned around and started back in hope of finding another crossing, and that plaintiff, when three hundred feet from crossing, met and passed the other automobile which misled him into believing that crossing was open.

9. Railroads ⇨337(2).

Whether blocking of crossing by train creates mere condition, and is not proximate cause of collision, depends on particular circumstances.

10. Railroads ⇨350(32).

Where facts are conflicting on question whether railroad's negligence in blocking crossing was proximate cause of accident, question is for jury, or for court in juryless trial.

11. Appeal and error ⇨999(3), 1008(1).

Determination by jury or by court, in juryless trial, that railroad's negligent blocking of crossing proximately caused accident, will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by James A. Hofstedt against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin & Diepenbrock, of Sacramento, for appellants.

F. M. Ostrander, of Merced, for respondent.

R. L. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment for damages for personal injuries, which were sustained by the plaintiff when his automobile ran into a freight train which blocked the highway crossing, where the cars stood upon a sidetrack.

On the night of June 3, 1928, the defendant's freight train, consisting of a long string of cars to which an engine was attached, was stationed on a spur track adjacent to the main line in the outskirts of Dos Palos, awaiting the passing of another train. It was about 3 o'clock a. m. The headlight of the engine was not burning. A crew of men was in charge of the train. It had been standing on this sidetrack for twenty minutes. During this time the crossing was entirely blocked, contrary to the provisions of a county ordinance. The train was not cut for the crossing. There were no street lamps in the immediate vicinity. No train employee or lanterns were stationed at the crossing to give warning of the blockade. The spur track described an arc westerly as it left the main line and ran to a warehouse some distance away. The highway extended parallel with the main line of the railroad and crossed this spur track in the suburb of Dos Palos. The roadway had a graveled surface. The plaintiff was familiar with this crossing, having frequently traveled that way. He was employed by the Standard Oil Company near that station. Just prior to the accident, he was driving his automobile southerly along the highway parallel with the main line track, for the purpose of going to work. His headlamps were lighted. They had been inspected shortly before the time of the accident, and had been found to be in good condition. As he reached a point in the vicinity of the crossing, he was traveling about thirty-five miles an hour. He was not aware of the proximity of the crossing. Neither the headlight of the engine or other lights were displayed along the train. He failed to see the freight cars in the darkness.

When the plaintiff reached a point three hundred feet from the train which blocked the crossing, he passed another machine coming from the direction of the train. This machine was driven by Vernon Malm, and contained several other occupants. They had attempted to pass the crossing some time before the plaintiff arrived. They discovered the train before they reached the crossing. Their attention was attracted to it by the light from the headlamp of the engine shining upon the warehouse. Almost immediately after their arrival at the crossing this headlight was turned out, leaving the train in darkness. After waiting at the crossing for some time, they turned their machine about and retraced their course to find another crossing. When they reached a point about three hundred feet from the barricaded crossing they passed the plaintiff's car going toward the train. They anticipated his ignorance of the presence of the train at the crossing and attempted to warn him, but he failed to hear them. After the plaintiff passed the glare of the headlamps of the passing machine he was within about sixty feet of the track before he first saw the box cars which blocked his course. He immediately applied his brakes with full force. On account of the graveled surface of the roadway and the rapid speed of his machine, he was unable to avoid a collision. In attempting to prevent a head-on collision he turned his machine up the track, but ran into the cars and sustained injuries thereby. Suit was brought against the railroad company. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury. A judgment for damages was rendered against the defendant in the sum of $857.50.

The appellant contends that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence; that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and that the court erred in admitting evidence of the violation of a county ordinance prohibiting railroad trains from blocking a highway crossing for a period of time in excess of five minutes, without the ordinance having been specially pleaded in the complaint.

[1] It is conceded the freight train completely blocked the crossing for a period of at least twenty minutes. This was in violation of a Merced county ordinance, which provided that it was unlawful for any railroad company to block any highway crossing in the county with passenger or freight cars for a period of time in excess of five minutes. The violation of this ordinance, therefore, constituted negligence per se on the part of the appellant. 19 Cal. Jur. 632, § 65; Houston B. & T. Ry. Co. v. Price (Tex. Civ. App.) 192 S. W. 359; Fife v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 174 Mo. App. 655, 161 S. W. 300; Jarrell v. New Orleans & N. E. Ry. Co., 109 Miss. 49, 67 So. 659.

[2, 3] The appellant contends that the court erred in permitting proof of the existence and violation of this county ordinance, for the reason that it was not specially pleaded in the complaint. We think not. Upon application therefor, the respondent was permitted, over the objection of the appellant, to file a duly authenticated copy of the ordinance, upon the hearing of the cause in the District Court of Appeal. The right to file this ordinance as evidence in the District Court of Appeal is discretionary and is authorized "in the interest of justice" by the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was not error to permit evidence of negligence in blocking a public highway with a freight train in violation of a county ordinance, without first specially pleading the ordinance. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663, 669, 98 P. 1063, 1066, 16 Ann. Cas. 1061; Opitz v. Schenck, 178 Cal. 636, 174 P. 40; Andreen v. Escondido Citrus Union, 93 Cal. App. 182, 187, 269 P. 556; 2 McQuillin's Municipal Corporations (2d Ed.) 992, sec. 998; 16 Ann. Cas. note, page 1064. In the Cragg Case, above cited, it is said: "The cause of action here alleged was not [founded upon] a violation of the ordinance, but [upon] the negligence of the defendant, and the ordinance was simply evidence offered to show such negligence. Under our system of pleading, it is both unnecessary and improper to plead the evidence relied on to establish the ultimate facts essential to a cause of action."

The negligent blocking of the crossing was alleged in the complaint in general terms, as follows: "Said train was being operated carelessly and negligently, in that it was stopped and was blocking the public highway. * * *" Proof of the fact that this obstruction of the highway was prohibited by a county ordinance is mere evidence of the negligence charged. It is true that the complaint also charged another separate element of negligence by adding to the preceding allegation the following language, to wit: "And was without lights or warning of any sort or nature to advise travelers upon said highway at said switch crossing that said train was so stopped and blocking said crossing." This latter paragraph in nowise changes the application of the foregoing rule, with respect to pleading an ordinance when it is relied upon as mere evidence of negligence. The complaint alleges two distinct acts of negligence. The first consists of blocking the crossing by means of freight cars. The violation of an existing ordinance is proof of this alleged negligence. The other specific charge of negligence was the failure of the defendant to warn travelers along the highway of the presence of the train by means of lights or otherwise. A general demurrer to the complaint only, was filed. There was no error in admitting evidence of the violation of the ordinance under the circumstances of this case, without requiring the ordinance to have been specially pleaded.

[4, 5] The question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence was a problem for the determination of the trial judge, under the circumstances of this case. We are of the opinion there is ample evidence to support the findings of the court that, "plaintiff was exercising due care and caution and was not guilty of contributory negligence." The plaintiff was not running his automobile at an excessive rate of speed. His headlights were in good condition. He knew this spur track was seldom used. He had no reason to anticipate that it would be used on this occasion for the stationing of a freight train. Much less could he have anticipated it would be used as a sidetrack for a long freight train so as to completely block the crossing of the highway for a period of twenty minutes or more. This spur track was used on this occasion only because the regular sidetrack was thought to be too short for the long string of cars. It was dark. The headlight of the engine was extinguished so that the train was left in utter darkness. No lantern was displayed as a warning along the train or at the crossing. The plaintiff had just met and passed another automobile three hundred feet from the crossing, coming from the direction of the train. This approaching machine would naturally lead one to conclude that the crossing was open. A reasonable person would not assume this passing machine had run unscathed through a solid barricade of box cars. The plaintiff's headlights were necessarily adjusted to conform to the requirements of the California Vehicle Act so as to throw the rays of light down upon the surface of the highway. At a distance, the rays of light from his lamps would strike the highway beneath the box cars which stand some three feet above the surface of the track. The box cars would not be disclosed by legally adjusted headlights until the machine was reasonably close to the track.

It is true that the plaintiff admitted that "I did not remember that there was a railroad there; I had forgotten about the spur track at that time." It seems only fair to assume, in support of the judgment, that he meant he did not realize that he was then in the immediate vicinity of the crossing. It may not be reasonably said that one, at his peril, must recall and correctly register in his mind the relative locations of every physical object along a highway. Common knowledge teaches us that physical objects and visible landmarks are located in the minds of men with relation to other objects. Without the aid of other recognized landmarks, it is exceedingly difficult to accurately catalogue and locate, in the darkness, well-known objects along the highway. In the darkness, one may recall that a certain crossing or object exists, but he may be greatly deceived as to its exact locality. It is therefore not strange that the plaintiff failed to realize that he was in close proximity to this particular crossing. Moreover, it was a mere service track leading to a warehouse belonging to the Standard Oil Company. It was seldom used for any purpose. The plaintiff's mind would naturally not be impressed with the same degree of danger at this particular crossing which he should recognize with respect to a crossing over a main traveled railway track.

It is true that a visible railroad track is itself a warning of danger. But it is equally true that a railroad track which is invisible on account of darkness or because it is otherwise concealed from view, is not a warning of danger, unless one knows just where to look for it. It is only when one observes, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have observed, a railroad track, or when one knows that it is in a particular place and identifies the locality, that it becomes a warning of danger. Under the circumstances of this case, it may well be said in the language of the court in the case of Gregoriev v. N. W. Pac. R. R. Co., 95 Cal. App. 428, 433, 273 P. 76, 78: "Considering all of the circumstances attending the accident, especially those relating to the physical conditions present at the scene thereof, that respondent's failure to observe the railroad track was not due to a lack of exercise of ordinary care on his part."

In that case the driver of an automobile suddenly came upon a railroad track which ran through an orchard and was partially concealed thereby. Under the circumstances of the present case it seems reasonable to believe the plaintiff was deceived by the utter darkness in which the stationary train was enveloped; by the passing of the Malm automobile within three hundred feet of the train, which indicated an open crossing, and by the fact that the rays of his headlights which were adjusted, as required by law, did not disclose the box cars until his machine was within sixty feet of them. At least, it appears that the facts of this case would justify reasonable minds in differing as to whether the plaintiff acted with due caution in approaching this service track under the circumstances. It is appropriately said in the case of Philadelphia & Reading Ry. Co. v. Dillon, 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 247, 114 A. 62, 64, 15 A. L. R. 894: "A traveler on a highway by day or night may expect that it will not be obstructed unlawfully or in such manner as to cause him injury while he himself is in the exercise of due and reasonable care, and what is such care depends on the circumstances of each case."

We are persuaded the record will not warrant this court in holding that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

In support of its contention that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence which bars him from a recovery of damages in this case, several cases are cited, in each of which specific acts or omissions on the part of the injured parties are recited as a basis for holding that they were guilty of contributory negligence. In each of these cases, the conclusions of the courts are based upon facts which do not exist in the present record. In the case of Orton v. Penn. Ry. Co. (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 36, 37, in holding the plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence the court said: "The headlights on his automobile were burning brightly, and it must be presumed that they complied with the statute and were of sufficient strength to disclose the cars across the track at a distance of 200 feet from them."

In that case there was evidence that headlights similar to those on the plaintiff's automobile, under the same circumstances which existed at the time of the accident, would actually disclose the freight cars at the crossing one hundred and sixty-five feet away. There is no such evidence in the present case. There would be no excuse for not stopping an automobile within a distance of one hundred and sixty-five feet. Nor does the California statute require headlights on an automobile which will disclose objects on the highway two hundred feet distant. The appellant is mistaken when it assumes that our California Vehicle Act requires any such test. Nowhere in our California Vehicle Act is it provided that headlights are required which will disclose objects on the highway at any specified distance. The language of section

99 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 546), is misconstrued by the appellant. It merely provides, in effect, that when it is so dark that an object cannot be seen on the highway at a distance of two hundred feet, then automobiles must turn on their headlights. This section reads in part: "* * * During the period from a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise and at any other time when there is not sufficient light to render clearly discernible a person, vehicle or other substantial object on the highway at a distance of two hundred feet ahead [a vehicle], shall be equipped with lighted lamps and lighted headlights as herein respectively provided. * * *

In Yano v. Scott Briquet Co., 184 Wis. 492, 199 N. W. 48, in which the plaintiff was held to be guilty of contributory negligence, he was running his automobile contrary to the requirements of the law, with headlights so dim he could not see a distance of more than twenty feet ahead of his machine.

In the case of Allison v. Chicago, M. & St. Paul Ry. Co., 83 Wash. 591, 145 P. 608, the plaintiff was running his machine only fifteen miles an hour, and could have stopped it within a distance of a very few feet. The evidence there showed that his headlights would actually disclose the obstructing cars at a distance of one hundred feet.

[6] In the case of Farmer v. New York, N. H. etc., Co., 217 Mass. 158, 104 N. E. 492, the plaintiff recklessly drove his machine on a stormy night with the curtains down and the windshield up, without slackening his speed, directly into the car which barred his way. Each of these cases relied upon by the appellant as authority for the assertion that the plaintiff in the present case was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, may be easily distinguished from the case at bar. Each case must be determined upon its particular facts.

[7] Finally, it is asserted the defendant railroad company is not guilty of negligence which proximately caused the accident. We have held that the violation of the Merced county ordinance, with respect to the blocking of highway crossings, constitutes negligence per se. It is true that all negligence is not actionable. In the present case the blocking of the crossing must not amount to negligence only, but it must have also been the proximate cause of the accident, to render the defendant liable for the damages which resulted therefrom. We have held that the evidence is ample to support the finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Assuming that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, it then necessarily follows that the cause of the accident was the unlawful blocking of a crossing. Knowing that this highway was used by vehicles, the defendant should have anticipated that a machine might attempt to pass the crossing at any moment. It appears to have been an unreasonable use of the spur track to block the crossing for a period of more than twenty minutes, extinguish the headlight of the engine, and leave the train in utter darkness with nothing to warn the drivers of passing vehicles of the presence of the train. It would have been a reasonable precaution for the train crew to have cut the string of cars so as to open the crossing for vehicles. The extinguishing of the headlight on the engine was an act which aggravated the negligence of the defendant.

[8] It is contended that the blocking of the crossing for more than five minutes, which is prohibited by the Merced ordinance, is unimportant. Aside from the fact that the defendant is charged with negligence as a matter of law for violating this ordinance, the continuation of the blocking of the crossing caused the driver of the Malm machine to return. This misled the plaintiff into believing that the highway was open. The headlight was evidently turned out soon after the train was run upon the sidetrack, for Malm arrived before it was extinguished. He waited at the crossing fifteen minutes before he turned back to find another crossing. The blocking of the crossing for a considerable length of time, therefore, did contribute to the cause of the accident.

[9-11] It is contended that the blocking of the crossing for an unlawful period of time created a mere condition, and was not the proximate cause of the accident. In support of this assertion, the appellant relies on the cases of Orton v. Penn. Ry. Co. (C. C. A.) 7 F.(2d) 36, and Gilman v. Central Vt. Ry. Co., 93 Vt. 340, 107 A. 122, 16 A. L. R. 1102. The determination as to whether the violation of a statute or ordinance prohibiting the blocking of a crossing creates a mere condition, and that it is not the proximate cause of the accident, depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. Where there are conflicting facts regarding the question as to whether the negligence of the railroad company in blocking the crossing became the proximate cause of the accident, it becomes a problem for the decision of the trial court or the jury, and a determination that it was the proximate cause of accident will not be disturbed on appeal.

In the case of Gilman v. Central Vt. Ry. Co., which is relied upon by the appellant, there was a steep, slippery grade which had been recently oiled, descending to the blockaded track. This dangerous condition of the street caused the plaintiff to lose control of his automobile. He was unable to stop his machine, and therefore ran into the freight car at the crossing. The railroad company was not to blame for the slippery condition of the street, nor for the apparent defective condition of the plaintiff's brakes. The proximate cause of the accident in that case was the condition of the street, and not the blocking of the crossing. The violation of a statute prohibiting a train from blocking a crossing for a period of time in excess of five minutes, under such circumstances, was not involved in that case. The accident would have occurred regardless of the length of time the crossing was blocked.

In the case of Orton v. Penn. Ry. Co., supra, relied upon by the appellant, the cause was reversed on the ground that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. In that case it appears that the plaintiff's headlights actually disclosed the presence of the freight cars at a distance of one hundred and sixty-five feet from the crossing. The statute required automobiles to be supplied with headlamps which would disclose objects on the highway at a distance of two hundred feet. There appears no reasonable excuse in that case for the plaintiff's failure to see the freight cars in time to have avoided the accident.

The other railroad crossing cases, cited by the appellant as authority for the assertion that it was not guilty of negligence which proximately caused the accident, are similarly distinguishable from the case at bar.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

PER CURIAM.

The defendant was convicted in the superior court of Merced county of a felony, to wit, grand theft.

The transcript on appeal was filed in this court May 26, 1931. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellant. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on July 1, 1931. No appearance was made for appellant at the time the case was called for hearing. Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code the judgment and the order are affirmed.

115 Cal.App. 63

In re ZILKE'S ESTATE.

FREYER et al. v. SAN FRANCISCO PROTESTANT ORPHANAGE
SOCIETY et al.
Civ. 7895.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
June 17, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 17, 1931. Hearing
Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 13, 1931.

1. Wills §489(6).

It appearing no orphans' home bearing name of legatee existed and that there were seven orphans' homes in city, latent ambiguity arose, which might be removed by extrinsic evidence.

2. Wills §440.

No extrinsic evidence being offered to remove latent ambiguity respecting identity of legatee, court could look to will alone to ascertain testator's intention, thus rendering question of propriety of decree of distribution one of law (Civ. Code § 1318).

3. Wills §529.

If bequest is to orphans' "homes" of city, distribution equally to all orphans' homes in city would be proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Home," see Words and Phrases.]

4. Wills §105.

Bequest to "Offens home" of city, there being no institution named "Offens" or "Orphans'" home of city, did not support decree in favor of all orphans' homes, or any particular orphans' home, in city, absent extrinsic evidence of testator's intention.

This was so since decree distributing estate to all orphans' homes in city was based upon speculation and conjecture as to testator's intention.

115 Cal.App. 323

PEOPLE v. FORD.
Cr. 1153.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 1, 1931.

Criminal law §130(4).

Conviction will be affirmed where no brief is filed and no appearance made for appellants (Pen. Code, § 1253).

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Clarence Ford was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Argyle Campbell, of Monterey, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

5. Wills ⇨464.

Misspelling and grammatical inaccuracies are ordinarily immaterial, provided intention appears.

6. Wills ⇨448.

Construction may not be based on conjecture respecting testator's unexpressed intention in order to avoid intestacy.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Edward J. A. Zilke, also called Ed Zilke, deceased. From a final decree distributing the entire estate in equal shares to the San Francisco Protestant Orphanage Society and others, Louise Freyer and others, heirs at law and next of kin of deceased, appeal.

Reversed.

William L. Southwell and Walter Loewy, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

D. C. Murphy, of San Francisco, for respondent Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum.

H. U. Brandenstein, of San Francisco, for respondent Pacific Hebrew Orphan Asylum and Home Society.

C. W. Slack, of San Francisco, for respondent San Francisco Protestant Orphanage Society.

J. S. Hutchinson, of San Francisco, for respondent San Francisco Ladies' Protection and Relief Society.

J. W. Henderson, of San Francisco, for respondent McKinley Orphanage.

Elliott McAllister, of San Francisco, for respondent Maria Kip Orphanage.

W. E. Cashman, of San Francisco, for respondent Golden Gate Orphanage.

SPENCE, J.

Appellants are the sister and the several nephews and nieces of the deceased. Respondents are seven orphan asylums of the city and county of San Francisco. This appeal is taken upon a bill of exceptions from that portion of the decree of final distribution which distributed the entire estate in equal shares to the seven respondents.

The olographic will of the deceased, which was duly admitted to probate, read as follows:

"When I am dead I wont everyting to go to Offens home of San-Francisco. You find everyting in box 3608 Humbolt Bank. This is my last Will.

"March 20, 1927. Edward J. A. Zilke."

Upon the hearing of the petition for distribution, it was stipulated that appellants are the heirs at law and next of kin of the deceased and "that the following organizations are orphan asylums and that said orphan asylums and each of them are situate in the City and County of San Francisco—(naming the seven respondents)." No further evidence on the subject was offered, and the decree was entered as above indicated. In the briefs, it is assumed by the parties that there is no institution, association, or corporation bearing the name "Offens home of San-Francisco" or "Orphans' Home of San Francisco," and it is further assumed that the seven respondents conduct all of the orphans' homes in San Francisco. We find no evidence in the record to justify these assumptions, but, even if these facts be conceded, we are still of the opinion that the decree must be reversed.

[1, 2] If it appeared that there was no institution bearing the name used in the will, and that there were seven institutions conducted as orphans' homes in San Francisco, a latent ambiguity arose, which ambiguity might have been removed by other evidence. In Taylor v. McCowen, 154 Cal. 798, the court at page 802, 99 P. 351, 353, quoted with approval the following language from Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 210, 6 S. Ct. 617, 710, 29 L. Ed. 860: "It is settled doctrine that, as a latent ambiguity is only disclosed by extrinsic evidence, it may be removed by extrinsic evidence. Such an ambiguity may arise upon a will, either when it names a person as the object of a gift, or a thing as the subject of it, and there are two persons or things that answer the name or description; or * * *." No evidence was offered to remove the ambiguity in the present case, and we are compelled to resort to the terms of the will alone in an effort to ascertain the intention of the testator. Civ. Code § 1318. Under these circumstances, the question of the propriety of the decree is solely a question of law. Estate of Langdon, 129 Cal. 451, 62 P. 73.

[3-5] It is a statutory rule of construction that "The words of a will are to be taken in their ordinary and grammatical sense, unless a clear intention to use them in another sense can be collected, and that other can be ascertained." (Civ. Code, § 1324.) If the will had provided that the estate should go to the orphans' "homes" of San Francisco, we do not doubt that the decree entered would have been proper, assuming, of course, that respondents represented all of the institutions falling in that class. See Estate of Pearsons, 113 Cal. 577, 45 P. 849, 1062, and Estate of Pearsons, 125 Cal. 285, 57 P. 1015. The will, however, provided that the estate should go to the orphans' "home" of San Francisco. Counsel for respondents state that "The case turns solely on the importance of the omission of the letter 's' from the word 'home'," and that such omission is "frail ground indeed for the argument that the will should be invalidated and the charities deprived of the testator's intended benefaction." But who can say from the terms of the will that the letter "s" was not intentionally omitted and that the testator did not have a particular home in mind as the recipient of his benefaction? This appears to be quite probable when we consider that the testator employed a capital letter at the beginning of the word "Offens," which may be some indication that he was endeavoring to employ the name of some one institution. In any event he used the singular and not the plural, and we are of the opinion that the language used is insufficient to support a decree in favor of all orphans' homes or in favor of any particular orphans' home, in the absence of some evidence other than the will itself to show what the testator's intention was. The situation before us is much the same as though the testator had provided in his will that his entire estate should go to his "niece" and the court had distributed the estate to all of his "nieces" solely upon the showing that there was more than one person answering that description. In such case, it is clear that the decree could not stand. It is true, as contended by respondents, that misspelling and grammatical inaccuracies in a will are ordinarily of no consequence, but this rule is properly qualified in the citation quoted by respondents as follows: "Grammatical inaccuracies are immaterial, *provided the intention appears * * **" (Italics ours.) 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 20.

[6] It may be that the testator intended to leave his property in equal shares to all orphans' homes in San Francisco as a class, or, on the other hand, it may be (and it appears more likely) that he intended a bequest to some particular orphans' home. Whatever his actual intention may have been, he failed to express it with reasonable certainty, and it is impossible to ascertain it from the will itself. Upon the record before us, the decree is based upon speculation and conjecture as to what his intention was. As was said in Estate of Hoytema, 180 Cal. 430, at page 432, 181 P. 645, "Courts are not permitted, in order to avoid a conclusion of intestacy, to adopt a construction based on conjecture as to what the testator may have intended, although not expressed." And again on page 433 of 180 Cal., 181 P. 645, 646, "Only through speculation and conjecture may the construction contended for by appellants be confirmed. And this cannot be countenanced in view of the cardinal rule to the effect that in the interpretation of wills it is not the probable intent which may have existed in the mind of the testatrix which prevails, but only that which is expressed in the language of the will."

For the foregoing reasons, the portion of the decree appealed from is reversed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

115 Cal.App. 256

SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. GRANGERS' BUSINESS ASS'N.

Civ. 7640.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

June 29, 1931.

1. Carriers ⇐100(1).

In absence of ambiguity, language of contract between warehouseman and carrier regarding demurrage governs its interpretation (Civ. Code §§ 1638, 1639).

2. Warehousemen ⇐10.

Contract between warehouseman and carrier held to require warehouseman to comply with rules regarding cars handled for its account, and prompt payment of all charges irrespective of whom they were to accrue against.

The agreement stated in substance that warehouseman agreed that, with respect to all cars handled for its account, warehouseman would fully observe and comply with rules and would make prompt payment of all demurrage charges accruing thereunder.

3. Principal and agent ⇐136(3).

Agent signing his own name when he intends to bind principal becomes liable on contract.

4. Carriers ⇐100(1).

Warehouseman held liable for demurrage as principal and not as agent for consignees and consignors, where contract purported to be with warehouseman as principal.

5. Carriers ⇐100(1).

Where terminal tariff provided that carrier assumed duty of loading and unloading, but delay was due to warehouseman having exclusive control of matters causing delay, warehouseman held liable for demurrage (Civ. Code §§ 3517, 3528).

Although terminal tariffs provided that carrier assumed duty to exclusion of every one else of loading and unloading all grain at warehouse, and reserved to itself the exclusive privilege of charging therefor, carrier had contracted with third party to do unloading, and such third party in turn had employed warehouseman to do the work.

6. Carriers ⇐196.

In action for demurrage, evidence showed warehouseman received notice of arrival of cars as required by tariffs.

7. Carriers  196.

In action for demurrage, evidence held not to show that demurrage commenced before expiration of free time.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by the Southern Pacific Company against the Grangers' Business Association. From the judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

William P. Hubbard, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. A. Jones, of San Francisco, for respondent.

GRAY, Justice pro tem.

[1] The operator of a public warehouse, engaged in warehousing, cleaning, and storing grain for shippers, appeals from a judgment in favor of a common carrier for demurrage on cars consigned to such shippers in its care. This judgment is based upon the following agreement between the parties: "Being fully acquainted with the terms * * * of the average basis for settling for detention to cars as set forth in * * * the car demurrage rules * * * and being desirous of availing ourselves of this alternate method of settlement * * * we * * * agree * * * (1) that with respect to all cars * * * handled for * * * our account * * * we will fully observe and comply with * * * said rules and (2) will make prompt payment for all demurrage charges accruing thereunder. * * * (Italics and numerals ours.) The separate and distinct obligations to be performed by appellant, as promisor, definitely and unambiguously expressed, were two-fold: (1) The compliance with the rules as to cars handled for its account, and (2) the prompt payment of all charges, accruing, irrespective of whom they were to accrue against. In the absence of any ambiguity, the language of the contract is to govern its interpretation. Civ. Code §§ 1638, 1639.

[2] By an unwarranted blending of these two distinct promises, appellant argues that, as it promised to pay demurrage charges, accruing on cars handled for its account, and, as the cars were handled for the account of consignors and consignees, who shipped their grain in these cars, in care of appellant, no liability on its part arose. The fallacy of this argument consists of forceably merging two distinct and separate promises into one, contrary to the express terms of the contract, and thereby creating a new qualified promise, not contemplated by the parties, in lieu of two distinct promises, assumed by them. Furthermore, since appellant's business consisted exclusively of warehousing cars consigned to others, in its care, no liability could ever arise under such interpretation, which would therefore violate section 1643 of the Civil Code requiring such interpretation as will make the contract operative and capable of being carried into effect. Appellant's citations, denying liability for demurrage of persons other than consignor or consignee, are not in point because in those cases there was no such contractual assumption of liability as we find in the instant case. If the case entitled In re Tidewater Coal Exchange (D. C.) 292 F. 225, holds, as appellant contends, that, in the absence of ambiguity, the intention of the parties may be ascertained by extrinsic evidence, it is contrary to section 1638 of the Civil Code.

[3, 4] To escape liability under the agreement, appellant argues that the agreement was entered into by appellant solely for the benefit of, and as agent for, all consignees and consignors who should use its warehouse or ship their cars in its care; that this fact was known to respondent; and that the agreement was intended to bind appellant, as such agent, and was entered into with the object of enabling such consignees and consignors to average their demurrage. "The rule has been long and continuously settled that an agent who signs his own name instead of that of the principal when he intends to bind the latter, becomes himself liable, the contract being considered his own. This is true where he * * * is known to be or avowedly acts as such * * * No person in making a contract is considered to be the agent of another, unless he stipulates for his principal by name, stating his agency in the instrument which he signs. To exclude the personal liability of an agent, who signs his own name, an intention to bind the principal must appear upon the face of the instrument for although parol evidence is admissible to show that the parties also intended the principal to be bound, it is not admissible to show that they intended the agent not to be bound." 1 Cal. Jur. 819. "To exclude the personal liability of an agent who signs a contract in his own name, the capacity in which he signs must appear upon the face of the instrument. If, upon the face of the instrument, the agent signs his own name only, without referring to any principal, then he will be held bound personally although he was known to be or avowedly acted as agent." Ibid, p. 821. Here the correspondence preliminary to the execution of the contract clearly shows that appellant was acting as principal. But, ignoring this fact, still appellant is liable because the contract purports to be with appellant, as principal, without any mention of its alleged agency, or any other statement from which an inference of agency can be drawn.

[5] Appellant next argues that as the terminal tariff provides that respondent assumes the duty, to the exclusion of everybody else, of loading and unloading all grain at the warehouse, and reserves to itself the exclusive privilege of charging therefor, it assumed all responsibility for any delay, and therefore cannot charge demurrage for delay. While it is true that the tariff so provided, yet, in practice, appellant actually ordered the placing of the cars at its warehouse and unloaded them. Therefore, the delay, if any, was due to appellant, who had exclusive control of the matters which caused such delay. This conclusion is not changed by the fact that respondent had contracted with a third party to do such unloading and such third party in turn employed appellant to do this work. To hold that respondent could not charge for such delay, would be to permit appellant to profit by its fault (Civ. Code, § 3517) and would give greater effect to the form of the unloading arrangements than to their substance. Civ. Code, § 3528.

[6] The tariff provides: "Notice of arrival shall be sent or given consignee or party entitled to receive same by this railroad's agent in writing or, in lieu thereof, as otherwise agreed to in writing by this railroad and consignee" within the time and in the form therein provided. Respondent's witness testified that when the cars arrived in the yard, the required information was written either in a book of one consignee to which appellant had access, or in a book of appellant, as to other consignees and, after sampling by appellant, the cars were moved and placed at appellant's order. Appellant does not claim that it did not receive actual notice, but merely that it was not in the technical form required. But the above testimony shows a literal compliance with the first part of the above-quoted rule, because the notice in the book was written and was given but not sent, either to consignee or appellant, who was the party entitled to receive the same. Since the cars were not moved until so ordered by appellant, after the entry of its arrival in the book, the purpose of the notice was accomplished because the starting time of the demurrage commenced only after appellant was notified.

[7] Relying upon an obviously inadvertent statement of one of respondent's witnesses, which is not in accord with other portions of his testimony, appellant claims that the demurrage, as calculated, commenced before the expiration of the "free time." However, appellant stipulated to the correctness of an exhibit, attached to the complaint, which shows that demurrage was assessed after the expiration of "free time." Another of respondent's witnesses testified that the demurrage was figured only after such expiration.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SPENCE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

115 Cal.App. 210

BANK OF AMERICA OF CALIFORNIA v.
GRANGER et al.

Civ. 7823.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

June 26, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 25, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 24, 1931.

1. Reformation of instruments ⇨17(1).

As regards reformation, that no mistake was made in use of word or phrase in name of guarantee held not controlling where intention was guarantee should be another entity (Civ. Code, §§ 3399-3401).

2. Reformation of instruments ⇨45(16).

Evidence showed object in making guaranties was to secure certain bank, by whatever name known and whether it was entity or branch of another bank, for loans to corporation, though guarantee named was extinct by consolidation and merger (Civ. Code §§ 3399-3401; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652, § 31a).

3. Reformation of instruments ⇨45(16).

Evidence held to show intention guaranties should protect payee of each note as and when written, though guaranties mistakenly named, as guarantee, bank extinct by consolidation and merger (Civ. Code §§ 3399-3401; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652, § 31a).

4. Banks and banking ⇨67.

Guaranties held transferable to bank succeeding guarantee bank by consolidation and merger (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652, §§ 31a, 31b).

5. Guaranty ⇨36(2).

Guaranties held to cover past loans, where they expressly so stated.

6. Guaranty ⇨16(4).

Delaying enforcement of collection of prior loan held good consideration for guaranties covering past and future loans by bank (Civ. Code § 1606).

7. Guaranty ⇨45.

Demand held unnecessary as condition precedent to enforcing guaranties of repayment of loans (Civ. Code § 2807).

8. Appeal and error ⇨878(2).

On plaintiff's appeal, defendant not appealing could not attack finding that plaintiff made demand before suing on guaranties.

9. Guaranty ⇨16(1).

Subsequently making loan held sufficient consideration to support guaranties covering past and future loans.

10. Guaranty ⚡25(1).

Written guaranty imports consideration.

11. Guaranty ⚡16(1).

Return of guaranty to guarantor when he executed second guaranty in larger amount held a consideration for latter.

12. Frauds, statute of ⚡119(1).

In action on guaranties, statute of frauds held not to prevent reformation, where wrong bank was inserted as guarantee by mistake (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

13. Reformation of instruments ⚡20.

If guarantors knew that name of bank, extinct through consolidation, was inserted as guarantee, and intended thus to execute guaranties, though knowing insertion was caused by mistake of lending bank, that would not prevent reformation in action on guaranties (Civ. Code § 3399).

14. Reformation of instruments ⚡44.

In action on guaranties, where plaintiff contended wrong name of guarantee was inserted by mistake, excluding questions to guarantor as to what he intended with respect to name of guarantee, and whether he knew exact name of institution at time of signing, held error (Civ. Code § 3401).

Such rulings were erroneous since very issue before court was that of ascertaining, among other things, what were intended to be legal consequences of guaranties involved, and issue could not be properly determined until all such matters were gone into and evidence was fully before court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by the Bank of America of California against F. B. Granger and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for respondent Haynes.

Cross & Brandt, of San Francisco, for respondent Granger.

True Van Sickle, of Oakland, for respondent Thomas.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiff sued to recover on certain alleged guaranties. The trial court made findings in favor of defendants, and from a judgment entered thereon the plaintiff has appealed.

On April 26, 1927, and for some time prior thereto, the Fernwood Lumber Company, a corporation, was transacting a lumbering business near Arcata in Humboldt county. The defendants were directors of that company. The First National Bank of Arcata, doing a banking business at Arcata, financed the lumber company and that company obtained all of its loans from that bank. On December 5, 1927, the lumber company obtained $3,000 and executed a demand note to the bank in that sum. That note was secured by a deed of trust under the same date. On March 3, 1928, the lumber company received from the bank the sum of $4,500 and executed its note payable August 1, 1928. That note was unsecured. On May 11, 1928, the lumber company received another loan in the sum of $3,500 and executed a note payable October 1, 1928.

On April 23, 1927, United Bank & Trust Company of California consolidated with French American Bank to form United Bank & Trust Company; on December 10, 1927, Security Bank & Trust Company purchased First National Bank of Arcata; on February 4, 1928, United Bank & Trust Company merged with Security Bank & Trust Company to form a merged corporation known as Security Bank & Trust Company; on March 31, 1928, Humboldt Bank and Security Bank & Trust Company consolidated to form United Security Bank & Trust Company; and on November 28, 1928, United Security Bank & Trust Company consolidated with Bank of America to form Bank of America of California.

When the lumber company asked for the loan evidenced by the promissory note dated March 3, 1928, it was informed that it would be necessary for the lumber company to give the bank further security. The manager of the lumber company communicated that fact to the defendant F. B. Granger, and on March 1, 1928, at his residence at San Leandro he executed a written guaranty, in the sum of $5,000, in favor of United Bank & Trust Company of California. It contains approximately 700 folios and among others a covenant as follows: " * * * The undersigned hereby guarantees the payment in United States gold coin to said bank of any and all sums of money which the said bank may have heretofore or may hereafter advance or loan to said corporation. * * *" After said written guaranty was delivered to the bank at Arcata the bank made the loan of $4,500 and received the promissory note dated March 3, 1928. Another guaranty in the sum of $5,000 was executed and delivered by M. Haynes on February 29, 1928. Another guaranty was executed by the defendant El. J. Thomas on March 19, 1928. The last-named instrument was in the sum of $8,000.

The plaintiff pleaded its case in three counts. In the first count it pleaded the execution and amount due on three promissory notes and the guaranty executed by the defendant M. Haynes. In the second count it pleaded the same facts except to set up the guaranty executed by the defendant F. B. Granger. In the third count it pleaded the same facts as the first count except to set forth the guaranty executed by the defendant E. J. Thomas. In each count there was inserted a paragraph as follows:

"That said contract of continuing guaranty was executed upon a printed form theretofore in use by said United Bank and Trust Company of California, all of the assets and properties whereof had by consolidation and merger, as hereinbefore alleged, become the property of Security Bank and Trust Company; that upon said form the name of the obligee therein was 'United Bank and Trust Company of California'; that by reason of inadvertence and mutual mistake of the parties to said agreement the name printed upon said form remained unchanged; that said contract was made by and between Security Bank and Trust Company and said defendant, M. Haynes, and that the name of the obligee therein was understood by said parties to be Security Bank and Trust Company and it was intended by the said parties thereto that the said printed form should be changed to conform thereto."

The trial court made a finding negating said allegations. The plaintiff contends that that finding is not sustained by the evidence. The court found that since the commencement of the action the trust deed theretofore executed by Fernwood Lumber Company has been foreclosed and that the first note has been paid off and that the second note was paid down to $3,737.44 and that on said second note there was due $189.34 as interest and accruing interest from October 28, 1929. As to the amounts due on the notes the parties do not quarrel about the findings made by the court. The entire controversy arises over the findings on the subject of the rights, if any, of the plaintiff growing out of said guaranty.

Before discussing the evidence given at the trial it may be stated that no one of the defendants had any personal loans. Except as herein mentioned, the Fernwood Lumber Company had no loan from any of the institutions herein named; and at no time was any question presented as to whether a loan should be obtained from an institution other than the one represented by Mr. Sorenson, who at all times was the cashier of the bank located at Arcata and the local representative of the entity of which that bank might at any time be a part. The defendant Mr. E. J. Thomas was president of the Fernwood Lumber Company and the principal actor in transacting the business of financing it. He testified that he executed as president each of the three notes. He did so to secure loans from the bank. In transacting the business in the first instance he held conversations with Mr. Sorenson. At times he was referred by Mr. Sorenson to the head bank located at New Montgomery and Market streets in San Francisco. After the first note had been executed, Mr. Sorenson asked Mr. Thomas for a continuing guaranty and on March 19, 1928, he signed one. At that time the company was doing business with the United Bank & Trust Company. After talking to Mr. Sorenson regarding a loan and after Mr. Sorenson had asked for the guaranty, it was Mr. Thomas' intention to give the bank—whatever its name was—such a guaranty as Mr. Sorenson requested. At the time he executed his guaranty it was his understanding that the name of the bank was United Bank & Trust Company. The witness Haynes testified that Mr. Thomas came to his office and discussed the needs of the Fernwood Lumber Company. At that time Mr. Thomas stated to him the substance of the conversation which he had held with Mr. Sorenson and that the latter required the execution of the guaranty. Mr. Haynes signed and when he did so it was his intention to sign the document for the United Bank & Trust Company. In stating that it was his intention to sign the guaranty for the United Bank & Trust Company the witness testified that it was his understanding that such was the name at that time of the bank of which Mr. Sorenson was the manager at Arcata. The witness further testified that at no time did he know the facts regarding the formation or merger of any of the banks. Mr. Granger testified that he knew that the Fernwood Lumber Company was doing business with the bank at Arcata. At the time he signed the guaranty it was his understanding that he was making his agreement with United Bank & Trust Company, the name called for in the paper. The witness testified that Mr. Thomas, the president of the company, was the one that was doing the business. Sometimes he was in San Francisco and sometimes in Arcata. But the witness was at San Leandro and did not have any active part in the transactions of it. He said he understood that the bank named in the guaranty signed by him was located at New Montgomery and Market streets in San Francisco. Being again pressed as to whether it was his understanding that at the time he signed he was doing business with the bank located at New Montgomery and Market streets (United Bank & Trust Company), the witness asked to see the document and then he read from the face United Bank and Trust Company of California. The witness in a later passage in his testimony again confused the two names. Before any of the guaranties were signed the witness and Mr.

Thomas called at the bank at New Montgomery and Market streets and there interviewed Mr. McBride and discussed with him the making of the guaranties. After the guaranties had been executed and some time in 1929 the witness again called on Mr. McBride and attempted to negotiate a settlement of the witness' pro rata of the loan so received. The first time the witness went to the bank he met Mr. Duffy. Mr. Thomas went with him. Later they went again or Mr. Thomas went alone. This was before the guaranties were signed. Mr. Sorenson testified as to his official connection with the bank at Arcata. He testified that he received some of the documents from the head office in San Francisco, which was located at New Montgomery and Market streets. The second loan was approved by the head office. The Thomas guaranty was signed in his presence. The Haynes guaranty he did not see until it had been executed and was forwarded to him. At the time the loan was made on December 5, 1927, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Haynes were present. When the question came up for further loans, the witness referred the officers of the Fernwood Lumber Company to the bank in San Francisco. That conversation was held with Mr. Thomas and the witness directed him to call on Mr. Duffy. Mr. Duffy sent to the witness three guaranties in the sum of $8,000 each. It was one of them that was signed by Mr. Thomas in the presence of the witness. Mr. Thomas volunteered to forward one to Mr. Granger and one to Mr. Haynes. But those two instruments were not signed. Those documents had been forwarded to the witness by Mr. Duffy because the bank did not consider itself secured. He sent Mr. Thomas to the bank located at New Montgomery and Market streets, but did not specially send him to Mr. Duffy. The guaranty signed by Mr. Haynes on February 29, 1928, was prepared and executed and thereafter was forwarded to the bank at Arcata. The one signed by Mr. Granger was received by the bank about March 12, 1928. The one signed by Mr. Thomas was signed on March 19, 1928, in the presence of the witness. The witness testified that he never heard there was a mistake in the form of the guaranty. The first loan made was made by the First National Bank of Arcata, the second loan was made by Security Bank & Trust Company, and the third loan was made by United Security Bank & Trust Company.

[1,2] The first note was payable to the First National Bank of Arcata. The name of the bank was erased by some unauthorized person and United Security Bank & Trust Company was written in. The second note was made payable to Security Bank & Trust Company. The third note was made payable to United Security Bank & Trust Company. It is not claimed that any one of the notes contained an error as to the payee. All three of the guaranties as written were in favor of United Bank & Trust Company of California. That corporation consolidated with the American Bank to form United Bank & Trust Company on April 23, 1927—about eight months before the first note was written. But, according to the terms of our statute, United Bank & Trust Company of California upon the completion of the consolidation becomes extinct. Bank Act, § 31a (see Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652, p. 153 et seq.). The question to be reviewed in this court is whether or not the contracting parties were consciously making these formal guaranties in favor of an extinct corporation or did they make a mistake. The respondents point to the foregoing evidence and stress the fact that no single person testified that a mistake was made in the use of any single word or phrase. But that fact is not controlling. F. P. Cutting Co. v. Peterson, 164 Cal. 44, 127 P. 163. At page 47 of 164 Cal., 127 P. 163, 164, the court said: "The fact that the parties used the very words which they intended to use is not always sufficient cause for refusing relief of this character. There may be no mistake as to the words used or to be used, and at the same time there may have been a mutual mistake as to some other matter or fact, affecting the meaning or application of the words, and by reason thereof the contract may not truly express the real intention of both parties; and in that case it may be revised and reformed at the instance of the aggrieved party and enforced accordingly, although the words were carefully chosen." Our statute provides: "When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of one party, which the other at the time knew or suspected, a written contract does not truly express the intention of the parties, it may be revised on the application of a party aggrieved, so as to express that intention, so far as it can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons, in good faith and for value." Civ. Code, § 3399. "For the purpose of revising a contract, it must be presumed that all the parties thereto intended to make an equitable and conscientious agreement." Civ. Code, § 3400. "In revising a written instrument, the court may inquire what the instrument was intended to mean, and what were intended to be its legal consequences, and is not confined to the inquiry what the language of the instrument was intended to be." Civ. Code, § 3401. Quoting again from F. P. Cutting Co. v. Peterson, at page 49 of 164 Cal., 127 P. 163, 165: "It is apparent from this evidence that the object to be secured by the clause in question was to put Peterson on an equal footing with other dealers in canned tomatoes, in case the association's opening prices and the general market prices thereby fixed should be less than those named in the contract." So in this case, from the evidence it is apparent that the object in making all three of the guaranties was to secure the bank at Arcata (by whatever name it should be known and whether it was an entity or a branch of some other bank) for loans to Fernwood Lumber Company. Dolvin v. American Harrow Co., 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 840 note. To hold otherwise is to hold that the bank officials were consciously making loans to a failing concern and instead of taking real security were taking guaranties in favor of a corporation extinct.

[3, 4] Again, looking back over the evidence hereinabove set forth, it is perfectly clear that no one of the parties at any time for any reason intended otherwise than that each guaranty should protect the payee of each note as and when written. The plaintiff contends that the first note became the property of the Security Bank & Trust Company when that company purchased the First National Bank of Arcata; and that by the acts of consolidation or merger the note became the property of the plaintiff. It also contends that the plaintiff had by the acts of consolidation and merger become the owner of the three guaranties and that it is entitled to sue on them. Bank Act, §§ 31a and 31b (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 652). See, also, 5 C. J. 948. The defendant Granger contends that the plaintiff has no such right because in terms the guaranties did not contain any word or words expressly extending their terms to this plaintiff. As we understand him, he contends that the documents were not transferable. In this contention we think he is clearly in error. The plain language of the sections of the Bank Act is to the contrary. Furthermore, since the enactment of our Civil Code the common-law rule regarding the assignment of a guaranty has been materially modified. Refos v. Mardis, 18 Cal. App. 276, 122 P. 1091; 28 C. J. 942, 1011.

[5-8] On September 25, 1930, the plaintiff filed an amendment to its second amended complaint. The findings were filed the next day and contained findings on the issues so raised. The defendant Haynes states that the amendment was filed without an order or permission from the court and without knowledge or consent of the defendant Haynes. Such facts do not appear from the record before us. The same defendant contends that the guaranties did not cover loans that had been made prior to the execution of the guaranties. By the express language contained in those documents they did. By delaying its hand in enforcing the collection of the prior loan the bank suffered a prejudice which constituted a good consideration for the guaranties. Civ. Code, § 1606. The same defendant claims that no demand was made and that there was no proof to the contrary. No demand was necessary (Civ. Code, § 2807), and besides the trial court found that a demand was made and the defendant has not appealed.

[9-12] Both defendant Haynes and defendant Thomas claim there was no consideration to support their guaranties. The former executed his guaranty on February 29, 1928. The bank made the second loan on March 3, 1928. That act was a sufficient consideration. Civ. Code, § 2793. The defendant Thomas executed his guaranty on March 19, 1928. When he promised to do so and whether before that date, and if so, how long, does not appear. But a written guaranty imports a consideration and the record does not show there was none. Furthermore, the third loan was made May 11, 1928, and, by its terms, his guaranty extended to loans theretofore and thereafter to be made. In none of these statements are we taking into consideration the first loan for, as appears above, that loan has been repaid. Furthermore, the defendant Thomas had theretofore executed yet another guaranty in the sum of $5,000, which was returned to him when he executed the second one. That act also constituted a consideration. These two defendants made the further claim that the guaranties could not be reformed because of the provisions of the statute of frauds. Grant v. Naylor, 4 Cranch, 224, 2 L. Ed. 603. But since the enactment of section 1856, Code of Civil Procedure, that decision is not controlling in this kind of an action. Key v. Vidovich, 58 Cal. App. 710, 714, 209 P. 375.

[13] The defendant Thomas contends that the defendants knew whom they were guaranteeing and that they intended to guarantee only the United Bank & Trust Company of California. We do not think that is the record. However, for the purposes of this decision, assuming such to be the record, then the only effect is to rest the case on a harsher clause contained in our statute. There is certainly no evidence that the plaintiff or its predecessors in interest actually intended to obtain guaranties running in favor of a corporation extinct. Addressing itself to a similar contention in the case of F. P. Cutting Co. v. Peterson, supra, on page 50 of 164 Cal., 127 P. 163, 165, the court said: "If they had declared that they did not then expect that the price list would be printed, and that they approved the wording with that idea, it would be a virtual confession that they believed that the guaranty would be nugatory and intended to perpetrate a fraud upon the defendant if a lower price was fixed by the association without printing the price list. The mistake would then come within the class of mistakes described in section 3399 as 'a mistake of one party, which the other at the time knew or suspected.'" The point is without merit.

[14] While the witness Granger was being examined by the plaintiff he was asked: "What was your intention with respect to the name of the bank to which that guaranty was running at the time you signed it?" Again, he was asked: "Did you know at the time you signed this agreement the exact name of the institution?" To those questions objections were interposed and the objections were sustained. These rulings were erroneous. The very issue before the court was that of ascertaining, among other things, what were intended to be the legal consequences of the several guaranties. Civ. Code, § 3401. That issue could not properly be determined until all such matters were gone into and the evidence was fully before the court.

For the reasons hereinabove indicated the judgment is reversed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 194

CORVELLO v. BAUMSTEIGER.

Civ. 7548.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

June 26, 1931.

1. Automobiles ⇨244(36).

Finding that negligence of driver in backing truck down street was proximate cause of collision with trolley and injuries sustained by trolley passenger held supported.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1002.

Where evidence is substantially conflicting, jury's conclusion will not be disturbed.

3. Trial ⇨234(4).

Instruction concluding with formula that if jury find specified proposition established, verdict should be for particular party, should show circumstances which must concur to warrant verdict.

4. Trial ⇨219.

Instruction concluding with formula that if jury find specified proposition established, to find for particular party, need not contain definition of each legal term used therein.

In such case it is sufficient if the jury be instructed elsewhere as to the meaning of the legal terms.

5. Automobiles ⇨246(22).

Instruction that if negligence of truck driver was one of causes proximately contributing to accident, jury should find for trolley passenger, held not defective in not defining negligence.

The court fully and correctly defined the term "negligence" in other instructions, and further instructed jury not to select a single instruction or portion of an instruction, but to consider all of the instructions in determining any issue in the case.

6. Automobiles ⇨168(1).

Driver must keep truck under such control as to enable him to avoid collision if possible by exercise of ordinary care.

7. Trial ⇨253(4).

Negligence instruction in trolley passenger's action against truck driver held not objectionable as excluding from jury's consideration negligence of railway company.

Instruction was to the effect that in backing the truck down the street, driver was bound to operate his truck in careful and prudent manner, and required to use his senses of sight and hearing, and to keep proper lookout for approaching street cars and to keep his truck under such control as would enable him to avoid a collision with a street car if by the exercise of ordinary care on his part such collision could have been avoided, and if he failed so to do and his failure to do so was proximate cause of accident, then passenger was entitled to verdict.

8. Negligence ⇨61(1).

To render person liable, it is sufficient that his negligence, concurring with one or more efficient causes other than injured party's fault, is proximate cause of injury.

9. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1).

Verdict for damages cannot be vacated unless so excessive as to show passion or prejudice.

10. Appeal and error ⇨1004(1).

That personal injury damages may be larger than is ordinarily allowed, does not disclose excessiveness as matter of law.

11. Damages ⇨132(6).

$10,000 damages for fractures of both bones of lower leg, causing injured leg to be shorter than the other, held not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Fred Corvello against S. V. Baumsteiger. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Maurice J. Bleuel, of Oakland (Benoni H. McClure, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The above action was for the recovery of damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence.

The Market Street Railway Company maintains a double-track cable railway along Castro street in San Francisco. On September 14, 1929, it was operating a street car in a northerly direction thereon, and plaintiff was a passenger in the car. At a point between Elizabeth and Twenty-Third streets, which intersect Castro street, a collision occurred between the car and an automobile truck, operated by defendant S. V. Baumsteiger, and as a result plaintiff was injured. A jury returned a verdict against said defendant in the sum of $10,000, and from the judgment entered thereon he has appealed.

It is contended that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence, that the trial court erred in giving certain instructions, and that the verdict is excessive.

The cable car, which was about 30 feet in length, was open in the front and rear. The seats in the open portions were constructed lengthwise of the car, and the plaintiff with other persons was seated on the rear outside seat facing east. The truck mentioned was a two-ton Garford truck about 19 feet in length and over 6 feet wide. The defendant was the owner of a second truck, which had become stalled on the east side of Castro street at a point from 100 to 200 feet south of Twenty-Third street, and his purpose in going to the scene of the accident was to remove the second truck. He drove the truck first mentioned west along Twenty-Third street and crossed the railway tracks at the intersection of this street with Castro street where it stopped. He then looked south along Castro street and saw about two blocks away the approaching car, on which the plaintiff was riding. He then backed his truck across the car tracks in a southeasterly direction, his intention being to back the same along the east side of Castro street to the point where the second truck was standing. When he had crossed the railway tracks a second time, he looked to the south and again saw the approaching car, which was then south of but near Elizabeth street. The distance between the northerly curb line of the latter street and the southerly curb line of Twenty-Third street, according to the evidence, was about 258 feet. Defendant then proceeded to back the truck south along the east side of Castro street, and at a point about 35 feet south of Twenty-Third street the rear left end of the truck came in collision with the portion of the car on which the plaintiff was seated. According to the evidence the stanchions, seat, and the rear of the car were broken by the impact. The car continued its course for about 35 feet, and the rear wheels of the truck when the same stopped rested upon the railway track. According to several witnesses—and the condition of the car supports their testimony—the front and closed portions of the car had passed the truck before the collision; and it was also testified by the plaintiff, another passenger, and the conductor of the car that the truck was suddenly backed against the car. An automobile was parked about 50 feet south of Twenty-Third street, the owner of which, seeing the danger, sought to warn the defendant by sounding his horn. Another witness testified that the car bell was sounded as the car left Elizabeth street and again about 40 feet south of the point of collision. Defendant admits that he heard the horn and also a sound resembling that made by the bell of a street car. He claims, however, that he stopped immediately, but too late to avoid the accident; but, according to the owner of the automobile, defendant when the horn sounded turned the rear of the truck towards the railway track, and in so doing struck the passing car. No reason appears why defendant, instead of attempting to operate his truck on the east side of Castro street, did not after first crossing the intersection proceed south to Elizabeth street and thence north on his right-hand side of Castro street, which course would have been in accordance with the provisions of the statute (California Vehicle Act, Stats. 1929, p. 540). There was testimony that the car stopped when the collision occurred and then started forward, and that this movement was the cause of the damage. There was, however, other evidence sufficient to sustain a contrary finding.

[1, 2] While the record discloses some evidence tending to sustain defendant's contention that the railway company was negligent, the evidence strongly supports the conclusion that defendant's negligent operation of the truck was at least a proximate cause of the injuries received by the plaintiff. There was a substantial conflict in the evidence in this respect, and different inferences might reasonably be drawn from the circumstances of the accident. Where such is the case, the conclusions of the jury cannot be disturbed. 2 Cal. Jur., Appeal and Error, §§ 543, 549.

The instructions of which defendant complains are as follows:

"If you believe from the evidence that the negligence of the defendant Baumsteiger was one of the causes which proximately contributed to the accident then I instruct you that you must find for the plaintiff."

"In backing the truck in question on 23rd street and down Castro street in a southerly direction, if you find that the truck was so backed, its driver, the defendant, Mr. Baumsteiger, was in law bound to operate his truck in a careful and prudent manner. In so backing, if you find he did, under the law he had to use his senses of sight and hearing. He had to keep a proper look-out for approaching street cars and to keep his truck under such control as would enable him to avoid a collision with a street car, if by the exercise of ordinary care on his part such collision could have been avoided, and if you find from the evidence he failed so to do, and that his failure to do so was the proximate cause of the accident, then the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict against defendant."

[3-5] It is contended that in the first instruction there was no attempt to define "negligence," and that the jury might therefore have concluded that the defendant was negligent as a matter of law.

It is the rule that where an instruction concludes with the formula that if the jury find the proposition therein recited to have been established, their verdict should be for a particular party, the instruction should in itself show all the circumstances which must concur to warrant such a verdict (Pierce v. United Gas & Elec. Co., 161 Cal. 176, 118 P. 700; Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Paraffine Paint Co., 188 Cal. 184, 204 P. 1076); but it is not necessary that the instruction contain a definition of each legal term used therein. It is sufficient if the jury be instructed elsewhere as to the meaning of such terms. In the case at bar negligence was fully and correctly defined in other instructions given by the court, and they were also told "not to select a single instruction or portion of an instruction but to consider all of the instructions in determining any issue in the case."

[6-8] It is objected that the second instruction was defective in that it omitted all reference to any conduct on the part of the employees of the railway company which would make the latter solely liable to the plaintiff, and erroneously stated that the operators of vehicles upon public streets must under all circumstances conduct themselves so as to avoid collisions. Such, we think, was not the meaning of the instruction, as the jury was told in effect that it was the duty of the driver to keep his truck under such control as to enable him to avoid a collision "if by the exercise of ordinary care on his part such collision could have been avoided." This was a correct statement of the law. Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125; Benjamin v. Noonan, 207 Cal. 279, 277 P. 1045.

The remaining portion of the instruction, viz., "If you find that he failed to do so, and that his failure to do so was the proximate cause of the accident, then the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict against the defendant," did not have the effect claimed by defendant. This instruction did not exclude from consideration the negligence, if any, of the railway company; but properly told the jury that a finding that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury would justify a verdict in favor of the latter. To render a person liable he need not be the sole cause of an injury, as it is sufficient that his negligence, concurring with one or more efficient causes other than the plaintiff's fault, is the proximate cause thereof. 45 Cor. Jur., Negligence, § 485, p. 920. Under such circumstances each is and both are the proximate cause of the injury. Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134.

The testimony shows that plaintiff received comminuted fractures of both bones of the lower leg, the bones protruding through the flesh, which was badly lacerated, and that his injuries were very painful. According to a physician, the usual course of treatment was followed, but the bones are not in correct alignment and he is still under treatment. The injured leg is shorter than the other, and this condition will probably be permanent. To straighten the bones another operation will be necessary in the future, and as a result the plaintiff will be confined for about ten weeks. Plaintiff incurred liabilities for hospital expense in the sum of $328.75, and physicians' services in the further sum of $1,000. In addition, the physician testified that a second operation will cost $500, and that the charges named are reasonable.

[9-11] The verdict of a jury for damages cannot be set aside unless so plainly excessive as to warrant the conclusion that it was the result of passion or prejudice. Perry v. Angelus Hospital Ass'n, 172 Cal. 311, 156 P. 449; Anstead v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 203 Cal. 634, 265 P. 487. There is no absolute rule by which to determine whether it is excessive (Morgan v. Southern Pacific Co., 95 Cal. 501, 30 P. 601), and it cannot be so held as a matter of law simply because the amount may be larger than is ordinarily allowed in such cases (James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 785, 103 P. 1082). As the court said in Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 254, 116 P. 513, 520, "the only means of discovering the existence of passion and prejudice as influencing a verdict is by comparing the amount of the verdict with the evidence before the trial court. To say that a verdict has been influenced by passion and prejudice is but another way of saying that the verdict exceeds any amount justified by the evidence." The question in the first instance is for the trial court, and in considering an attack upon a verdict as excessive the reviewing court must treat any conflict in the evidence as resolved in favor of the respondent, and give him the benefit of every inference that can reasonably be drawn in support of his claim.

In Reneau v. Hirsch, 88 Cal. App. 1, 262 P. 1100, 1102, while the plaintiff's leg was almost entirely severed in the accident, the same was by treatment restored to approximately 80 per cent. of its normal condition, and a verdict for $18,000 for physical injuries, in addition to an award for medical and hospital expenses and for loss of time, was upheld. The court said: "The award of damages made by the jury, and sustained by the trial court, is large, but when the extent and character of the injuries received by respondent and the intense pain and suffering that he endured for so long are all considered, we think the award is not at all disproportionate to the compensation reasonably warranted by the facts." See, also, Harju v. Market Street Ry. Co. et al. (Cal. App.) 299 P. 788.

We are of the opinion that the evidence in the present case reasonably justified the award made by the jury, and that the contention that it was the result of passion or prejudice cannot be sustained.

The verdict on the other issues is also fully supported, and the record discloses no error which warrants the conclusion that the same resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

---

---

EDWARDS v. JENKINS et al. *
Civ. 7420.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

June 30, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1931. Hearing
Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1931.

1. Torts ☞ 1.

"Tort" is civil wrong.

"Tort" is a civil wrong, and wrongful intent is one of its essential elements when act is not done wrongfully or in want of due care and diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Tort," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Brokers ☞ 35.

Where brokers had sufficient stock to cover holdings of all customers and performance of customer's demand for delivery was made impossible through no fault of brokers, brokers held not guilty of conversion.

Evidence disclosed that delivery at time of demand was made impossible through no fault of brokers; that at all times brokers recognized the property of the customer in the stock and at no time asserted any interest therein adverse to the customer.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by B. F. Edwards against Reginald C. Jenkins and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

S. Laz Lansburgh, of San Francisco (S. Joseph Theisen, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Sloss & Ackerman and Ackerman, Wayland & Mathews, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

Plaintiff sued for the conversion of 500 shares of the preferred stock of the Julian Petroleum Corporation. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was entered for defendants. Plaintiff appeals on typewritten transcripts.

The defendants, who were sued under fictitious names, were the San Francisco representatives of a stock brokerage firm doing business under the name of Logan & Bryan, with its principal office in the city of New York. On March 14, 1927, plaintiff directed the defendants to purchase for him 500 shares of preferred stock of the Julian Corporation which, he testified, he directed them to hold, "that it was a matter of speculation, that I would sell it on quick notice * * * I did not intend to take delivery of it at the time." The stock was purchased according to these directions on March 15th, and plaintiff paid the full purchase price. On May 4, 1927, defendants addressed a letter to all their customers holding Julian stock, including the plaintiff, notifying them that, as they did not care to execute any further orders in this stock, they awaited instructions to deliver. On the following day plaintiff appeared at defendants' San Francisco office in response to this notice and was told that his stock had not been returned from the clearing house but that defendants would send or mail it to his office. On May 7th plaintiff again appeared and demanded delivery of the stock. He was told that the certificates had been sent to the main office of the Julian corporation in Los Angeles and should have been returned at that time, but they would be able to make delivery on May 9th.

The letter of May 4th was prompted by rumors in the stock market that Julian stock was overissued. The defendants had in their possession certificates covering 4,645 shares. On May 2, 3, and 4 they sent to the transfer office in Los Angeles certificates covering 1,740 to test the validity of the certificates which they held. As a result of the letter of May 4th, customers took up over 2,000 shares so that, at the close of business on May 5, defendants held 2,385 shares including the 500 owned by plaintiff. When plaintiff appeared at defendants' office at 11 a. m. of that day, defendants had in their "box" a block of 505 shares which could not be segregated to give plaintiff an even 500 shares. This was explained to him and he agreed to return on the following day when the transferred certificates were expected from Los Angeles. On May 7th he again appeared, but, as these certificates had not been received, he was directed to return on Monday, May 9th. At the close of business on May 6th trading in Julian stock was suspended. On May 9th the federal court restrained further transfers of Julian stock, but prior thereto the defendants had received 590 shares duly transferred to their nominee. Plaintiff refused to accept delivery of his stock at that time and on the same day commenced this proceeding. When demand was made upon defendants for delivery of the stock, its value was nil.

The foregoing statement is substantially in accord with the very general findings of the trial court. Some evidence was offered by plaintiff which would tend to establish a case more favorable to him upon the facts, but, as we are satisfied that the findings are supported by substantial evidence, it would serve no purpose to discuss the conflicting stories of the transactions.

The appellants have failed to make out a case of conversion. In 26 Ruling Case Law, page 1098, conversion is defined as "any distinct act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of or inconsistent with his rights therein. * * * The act must be essentially tortious." In the early case of Rogers v. Huie, 2 Cal. 571, 572, 56 Am. Dec. 363, the Supreme Court approved the following quotation from Lord Mansfield in 3 Stephen's N. P.: "A mere wrongful asportation of a chattel, does not amount to a conversion, unless the taking or detention of the chattel is with intent to convert it to the taker's own use, or that of some third person, or unless the act done has the effect of destroying or changing the quality of the chattel." In Steele v. Marsicano, 102 Cal. 666, 670, 36 P. 920, 921, the Supreme Court said: "A demand of the property, and a refusal to redeliver it, do not, of themselves, constitute conversion. They are merely evidence from which a conversion may be established. * * A refusal is not evidence of conversion, unless the party had it in his power at the time to deliver up the goods"—citing Kelsey v. Griswold, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 436; Johnson v. Couillard, 4 Allen (Mass.) 446. In the Johnson Case the court emphasized the necessity of a showing that at the time of the demand and refusal the defendant "had it in his power to give up the property."

The application of these general rules to the operations of a stock broker is explained in 9 Corpus Juris, page 543, where it is said: "Where a broker buys stock for a client, it is his duty to deliver the same to him on demand on payment or tender of the sum due him thereon, and the refusal of such a demand constitutes a conversion. But until there is a demand and payment or tender by the client, the broker has the right to retain the stock in his own name, unidentified and unseparated; * * * provided he keeps at all times in his possession or under his control an equal amount of similar stock. * * Unless he has especially agreed to do so, the broker is not bound to keep the identical shares bought for the client separate from the mass of other stock; it is sufficient if he keeps on hand an equal number of the same kind."

The text is merely a concise statement of the accepted rule and of the common practice of stock trading. The circumstance that in this case appellant had paid in full for his stock and that in many of the cases cited the stock was bought on margin is one that does not alter the application of the rule. Here the evidence is that respondents did not own any of the Julian stock held by them; it was all carried by them for their customers. It is undisputed that at all the times referred to they had in their possession or under their control sufficient shares of stock to cover the holdings of all their customers, though these shares were not always segregated in certificates to meet the exact demand of each owner. It is also undisputed that the action of respondents in sending certain certificates to the corporation office for transfer was in accord with the usual and customary practice of brokers doing business in the vicinity, and that the delay in returning these transferred certificates to San Francisco was through no fault of respondents.

[1, 2] The unescapable conclusion from the evidence is that the only reason why appellant's demand for delivery of the stock was not complied with was that delivery at the time was made impossible through no fault of the respondents. There was not at any stage of the transaction an assertion of dominion over the stock by the respondents nor a denial of any rights of the appellant therein. Thus all the technical points argued in the brief fall before the fundamental principle that conversion is "essentially tortious" and that to recover the plaintiff must prove a "tort." But a tort is a civil wrong, and a wrongful intent is one of its essential elements when the act is not done unlawfully or in want of due care and diligence. In 26 Ruling Case Law, page 757, it is said that a cause of action in tort will lie whenever one person does damage to another "willfully and intentionally, without just cause or excuse"; when the act is a distinct legal wrong; and when the act is not done with any intent to produce harm, but is one which, in the exercise of due diligence and skill, might have been foreseen and prevented. When the action is based upon the first element mentioned, willful wrong, as is the case here, intention is essential and becomes a question of fact for the court or jury. Here the trial court found, in the language of respondents' answer, that delivery at the time demanded was impossible, that at all times the respondents recognized the property of appellant in the stock, and at no time asserted any interest therein adverse to appellant. These findings, taken with the findings that there was no willful wrong and no wrongful intent, are conclusive.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.;
SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 275

RAINBOW PETROLEUM CO. v. UNION DRILLING & PETROLEUM CO.

Civ. 6815.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division Two. California.

June 29, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1931.

1. Bailment ⇨9.

One letting to another secondhand oil well drill pipe which hirer inspected held not to have impliedly warranted quality (Civ. Code, §§ 1764, 1766).

It appeared that, at signing of contract, hirer's representative agreed, for consideration, to hire and pay for use of certain pipe and, upon expiration or earlier termination of agreement, to return all there-of or to pay specified rate for pipe or equipment not so returned. Pipe was secondhand and had been used in various wells, of which hirer's representative was informed.

2. Bailment ⇨14(1).

Hirer of pipe, agreeing to return or pay specified rate for pipe not returned, held responsible for pipe lost in oil well, regardless of negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wilber F. Downs, Judge.

Action by the Rainbow Petroleum Company against the Union Drilling & Petroleum Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Newby & Newby and Dee Holder, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William H. Cree and E. P. Mulholland, both of Long Beach, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

In an action upon a contract in writing for the rental of personal property consisting of oil well drill pipe, judgment was awarded the plaintiff, from which the defendant appealed.

[1, 2] It is admitted that the plaintiff and respondent rented and delivered to the appellant certain piping for drilling purposes, that the same was so used, and that with slight exceptions it was returned to the lessor. By the terms of a written contract between the parties it was agreed that appellant should pay a per diem rental for use of the pipe, and that it would compensate respondent for any portions not returned. Upon the institution of this action for agreed rental and the value of missing pipe the defendant for the first time complained of defects alleged to have interfered with the success of its project and to have caused the loss of a portion of the pipe. Such defense was founded upon an asserted implied warranty by the bailor. It affirmatively appeared that in drawing the pipe from great depth it parted, leaving the lost section in the ground. It was secondhand pipe, which had theretofore been used in various wells, of which the hirer was informed. A representative of the latter called at respondent's premises to inspect the pipe, and according to the testimony was advised that little was known as to its condition except as to the use to which it had been devoted, and that "if they wanted to rent it, it was up to them"; that he should "take whatever pipe he wanted out of the pile." Said representative, the superintendent of appellant's drilling operations, testified: "I inspected it as carefully as I could; I threaded it, some places where it wasn't taking, and the collars were pretty thin, still weakened."

The respondent was not the manufacturer, and made no representations as to quality equal to samples exhibited. A mere contract of sale does not imply a warranty. Civ. Code, §§ 1764, 1766. We think the instant case is controlled by those principles applied and supported by a wide range of authorities to the sale of an automobile in Lamb v. Otto, 51 Cal. App. 433, 197 P. 147, wherein it was held that there is no implied warranty on the sale of secondhand machinery; that the buyer having purchased after an examination of the property will, in the absence of any representations by the seller, be held to have purchased entirely upon his own judgment. To the same effect is Alexander v. Stone, 29 Cal. App. 488, 156 P. 998. At the signing of the contract here in question appellant agreed for a consideration, part of which was then paid, to hire and to pay for the use of five thousand feet of four-inch pipe, and upon the expiration or earlier termination of the agreement to return all thereof, or to pay at a specified rate for pipe or equipment not so returned. We find no reversible error in the particulars asserted by appellant. Argument as to the absence of negligence upon its part, in view of the contract mentioned, becomes immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 93

AHERN et al. v. TULARE LAKE CANAL CO.
et al.

Civ. 157.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

June 18, 1931.

1. Corporations ⇨123(1).

As between parties, blank indorsement of stock certificate together with oral agreement of pledge is sufficient to create pledge.

This is true, notwithstanding no transfers of stock or memorandum respecting the transaction are made on the books of the corporation.

2. Corporations ⇨123(12).

Cancellation of stock certificate did not effectually extinguish lien of pledge of stock and when by redemption pledgor again came into ownership, original pledge lien was restored.

3. Corporations ⇨149.

Attaching creditor does not stand in position of bona fide purchaser for value of stock certificate as against pledgee.

Attaching creditor has in fact parted with nothing of value, but has merely instituted an action in which he utilizes provisional remedy of attachment for purpose of rendering more secure judgment which he hopes to obtain.

4. Attachment ⇨178.

Attachment lien attaches only to debtor's interest in property at time of levy.

5. Corporations ⇨149.

Facts held to show that one purchasing debtor's stock at execution sale purchased without notice of prior pledge lien thereon.

Facts disclosed that the stock certificate issued to the debtor carried on its face an indorsement entitled "irrevocable stock power" containing statement that debtor had for value received sold, assigned, and transferred stock to pledgee. The indorsement contained an assignment in blank and carried the signatures of the individuals composing the debtor partnership, and there was further recognition of the pledge contained in the letter addressed by the debtor to the pledgee, and subsequently another certificate representing the same stock was issued to pledgee as pledgee, and memorandum to this effect was contained in the books of the corporation issuing the stock, and this was prior to the date of the execution sale.

Appeal from the Superior Court, Kings County; K. Van Zante, Judge.

Action to enforce delivery of stock certificate brought by W. J. Ahern and another, copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Ahern Motor Company, against the Tulare Lake Canal Company and others. From the judgment, defendant Standard Oil Company of California appeals.

Reversed.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and A. W. Carlson, all of Fresno, for appellant.

A. C. McClellan, of Corcoran, for respondents.

Wallace Sheehan, of San Francisco, for defendant Tulare Lake Canal Co.

JENNINGS, J.

The present action was instituted by respondents to enforce delivery of a certain stock certificate No. 187, representing 948 shares of the preferred stock of the Tulare Lake Canal Company, a corporation, or, in case delivery of said stock certificate should not be had, to recover the value of the shares of stock in said corporation represented by said stock certificate. Respondents' claim to the ownership of the stock is based upon a judgment recovered by them on March 3, 1928, in an action instituted by said respondents against the copartnership of Turner & Von Glahn. This prior action was begun on January 25, 1928, and on said date a writ of attachment was issued out of the superior court of Kings county against the property of the defendants therein, and was directed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. On January 26, 1928, the said sheriff executed the writ of attachment by levying upon all right, title, and interest of the defendant partnership in and to 948 shares of the preferred stock of Tulare Lake Canal Company. Subsequent to the recovery of judgment in said action and on March 29, 1928, an execution was issued out of the superior court of Kings county directed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., and on April 5, 1928, the said sheriff, in pursuance of the writ of execution thus issued, levied upon all right, title, and interest of the partnership of Turner & Von Glahn in and to 948 shares of preferred stock of the Tulare Lake Canal Company, which stock was represented by certificate No. 187, and thereafter on April 18, 1928, sold at public auction the interest of the copartnership of Turner & Von Glahn in and to the said 948 shares of stock represented by certificate No. 187. At the execution sale, respondent purchased the interest of the partnership of Turner & Von Glahn in the said 948 shares of stock of Tulare Lake Canal Company represented by certificate No. 187. The Standard Oil Company of California, appellant herein, filed an answer in the present action alleging that at the time of the execution sale it was, and for a long time prior thereto had been, the pledgee of the said 948 shares of preferred stock of the Tulare Lake Canal Company, said stock having been pledged to secure an indebtedness of more than $7,000 from the copartnership of Turner & Von Glahn to appellant. The Tulare Lake Canal Company also filed an answer alleging that it had no interest in the respective claims of respondent and appellant to said shares of stock, and agreeing at all times to abide by the decision of the court as to the ownership thereof and to transfer the certificate representing said shares of stock, pursuant to the order of the court. The copartnership of Turner & Von Glahn, and the individuals composing the partnership, made no appearance in the action, and judgment went against them by default.

During the trial of the action and after respondent had rested its case, the Tulare Lake Canal Company moved for a nonsuit as to said corporation, and the motion was granted by the court.

For the sake of convenience, the copartnership of Turner & Von Glahn will hereinafter in this decision be referred to as "the partnership," and the Tulare Lake Canal Company as "the corporation."

The record herein presents the following state of facts in addition to those hereinabove recited: On March 25, 1925, the partnership was indebted to appellant in the sum of approximately $7,000. The partnership then owned 948 shares of preferred stock of the corporation, represented by a stock certificate No. 174. To secure the payment of the indebtedness the partnership on said date delivered to appellant said certificate No. 174, which certificate was thus indorsed on the back thereof:

"Certificate for 948 shares of the capital stock Tulare Lake Canal Company. Issued to W. F. Turner and E. C. Von Glahn. Date March 4th, 1925.

"Endorsed: For Value Received _____ hereby sell, assign and transfer unto _____ shares of the capital stock represented by the within certificate, and do hereby irrevocably constitute and appoint _____ attorney to transfer the said stock on the books of the within named corporation with full power of substitution in the premises. Dated _____ 19—. In the presence of _____,

"W. F. Turner.

"E. C. vonGlahn."

Certificate No. 174, thus indorsed, was then sent to the San Francisco office of appellant. No transfer to appellant as pledgee or otherwise was made on the books of the corporation, nor was any memorandum made of the transaction by the corporation. On October 14, 1925, the 948 shares of stock represented by certificate No. 174 were sold for nonpayment of assessments theretofore levied against said stock, appellant having theretofore received no notice of such assessments or of the sale. At the sale the stock was sold to an employee of the corporation for the sum of $66.66 and thereupon a certificate numbered 176, representing the 948 shares of the preferred stock of the corporation, was issued to the buyer. Subsequently, and at a time prior to August 2, 1927, the partnership redeemed the said 948 shares of stock by paying the sum of $396.48, which money was obtained by the partnership from the respondent. Thereupon, and on August 2, 1927, certificate No. 176, theretofore issued by the corporation to the purchaser at the sale for delinquent assessments, was canceled and a new certificate No. 182, representing 948 shares of preferred stock of the corporation, was issued to the partnership. This certificate No. 182 was not, however, delivered to the partnership but was sent to the superintendent of the corporation in Kings county to be held by him until the partnership should surrender and deliver over to him the original certificate No. 174. Attached to the face of certificate No. 182 was the following indorsement:

"Irrevocable Stock Power. Issued Aug. 2, 1927 Know all men by these Presents, That Turner and Von Glahn, For Value received, have bargained, sold, assigned and transferred, and by these presents do bargain, sell, assign and transfer unto Standard Oil Company of California Nine Hundred and forty-eight (948) Shares of the Preferred Capital Stock of the Tulare Lake Canal Company standing in our name on the books of the said Tulare Lake Canal Company represented by Certificate No. 182.

"And do hereby constitute and appoint _____ our true and lawful Attorney Irrevocably, for us and in our name and stead but to _____ use, to sell, assign, transfer, and make over all or any part of the said stock, and for that purpose to make and execute all necessary acts of assignment and transfer thereof, and to substitute one or more persons with like full power, hereby ratifying and confirming all that the said Attorney or Its substitute or substitutes shall lawfully do by virtue hereof.

"In Witness Whereof, we have hereunto set our hand and seal at ——— the ——— day of ——— 19—.

"Signed, Sealed and Delivered in the presence of F. P. Warner, H. W. Roche.

"E. C. Von Glahn [Seal.]

"W. F. Turner."

On December 21, 1927, W. F. Turner and E. C. Von Glahn executed a promissory note in an amount of $7,068.79 in the usual form, payable 5 years after date to appellant, and on said date addressed the following communication to appellant:

"December 21, 1927.

"Standard Oil Company of California, 225 Bush Street, San Francisco, California.

"Gentlemen: Referring to our note in your favor of even date herewith, in the sum of Seven Thousand Sixty Eight & 79/100 Dollars to secure which we have pledged with you Nine Hundred and forty-eight (948) shares of preferred capital stock of Tulare Lake Canal Company, this is to advise you that in addition to this indebtedness to you we owe other unsecured creditors about $21,700. Despite the fact that the maturity of this note as expressed on its face is five (5) years from its date, we agree that in the event of any payments to these other unsecured creditors we will make an equal pro rata payment to you.

"From time to time assessments and other charges are levied upon this stock which we have pledged with you. We also agreed to keep these assessments paid and preserve the stock in good standing.

"Upon any breach of the above agreement, the Note shall become due and payable at your office.

"Yours truly,

"Von Glahn & Turner

"By W. F. Turner

"E. C. Von Glahn

"Witness

"E. Pederson

"A. Pederson.

"Witness

"E. P. Warner,

"H. W. Roche."

On January 2, 1928, the partnership addressed a letter to appellant advising appellant that an assessment had been levied against the stock of the corporation owned by the partnership, that the partnership was unable to meet the assessment, and stating that if appellant wished to pay the assessment the partnership would make a note for the amount thus advanced. The amount of this assessment was $94.80, and was paid by appellant to the corporation. The individuals composing the partnership, on January 4, 1928, executed a promissory note for $94.80, payable one day after date. On January 25, 1928, respondent herein filed a suit in the superior court of Kings county against the partnership, and on the same day a writ of attachment was issued out of the superior court directed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, by virtue of which writ the said sheriff, on January 26, 1928, levied upon any shares of the capital stock of the corporation belonging to the partnership. Judgment was recovered against the partnership in this action on March 15, 1928, and subsequently on March 29, 1928, a writ of execution issued out of the superior court of Kings county directed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. On March 19, 1928, certificate No. 182 was canceled and certificate No. 187, representing the same 948 shares of stock owned by the partnership was issued by the corporation to appellant as pledgee, and a notation to this effect was entered in the books of the corporation. On April 5, 1928, the writ of execution was levied by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco upon all right, title, and interest of the partnership in and to the 948 shares of stock in the corporation represented by certificate No. 187, and on April 18, 1928, the said sheriff issued a certificate of sale conveying to respondent as purchaser all right, title, and interest of the partnership in and to the preferred stock of the corporation represented by certificate No. 187.

At the conclusion of the trial in the present action, the court found that on January 25, 1928, the date on which the prior action was instituted by respondent against the partnership, and at the time of the levy of the writ of attachment on the stock of the corporation, the partnership of Turner & Von Glahn owned the said 948 shares of preferred stock of the corporation free and clear of any pledges, liens or assessments and that by virtue of the levy of the writ of attachment and by virtue of the subsequent levy of the writ of execution and the purchase by respondent at the execution sale, respondent became the owner of said 948 shares of stock free and clear from the asserted pledge lien of appellant. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of respondent for the delivery of the certificate representing the 948 shares of stock or for its value, which was found by the court to be $3,849.05, in lieu of failure of appellant to deliver the stock certificate to respondent.

It is appellant's contention that the court erred in finding that respondent became the owner of the 948 shares of stock in the corporation free and clear from the alleged pledge lien through its purchase of the stock at the execution sale in the prior action brought by respondent against the partnership. It is obvious, therefore, that the single question presented for determination herein is whether or not there was a valid subsisting pledge of the stock which was in existence at the time it was sold by the sheriff on the writ of execution. Included in this question, however, are a number of elements which require consideration.

[1] It is first contended by respondent that there was no valid pledge of the stock on March 25, 1925, for the reason that no transfer of it was made on the books of the corporation, nor was any memorandum evidencing the transaction made on the books of the corporation. The evidence pointing to the pledging of the stock on March 25, 1925, consists of the testimony of the witness F. P. Warner, and the indorsement appearing on the back of certificate No. 174 hereinabove set out. It will be observed that the indorsement is not dated and is in blank, but that it bears the signatures of the individuals who composed the partnership. This evidence indicates that it was the plan and intention of the partnership to make a pledge of its stock to appellant to secure the payment of the indebtedness of said partnership to appellant. As between the parties themselves, the blank indorsement of the stock certificate, together with the oral agreement of pledge, was sufficient to create the pledge, notwithstanding no transfer of the stock or memorandum respecting the transaction was made on the books of the corporation. Powers v. Pacific Diesel Engine Co., 206 Cal. 334, 274 P. 512; Security, etc., Bank v. Imperial Water Company No. 1, 183 Cal. 488, 192 P. 22; Seymour v. Salsberry, 177 Cal. 755, 171 P. 938; Northwestern Portland Cement Co. v. Atlantic Portland Cement Co., 174 Cal. 308, 163 P. 47; Hall v. Cayot, 141 Cal. 13, 74 P. 299; Spreckels v. Nevada Bank, 113 Cal. 272, 45 P. 329, 33 L. R. A. 459, 54 Am. St. Rep. 348; American Trust & Banking Co. v. Union Security Co., 43 Cal. App. 126, 184 P. 508.

In the above-cited decisions, it is clearly recognized that not only is a pledge of corporate stock, where there has been no transfer or memorandum of the transaction made in the books of the corporation, valid as between the parties, but that such pledge is likewise valid against everyone except a bona fide purchaser of the stock without notice of the pledge. We may therefore take it as established that a valid pledge of the stock in dispute was made on March 25, 1925, notwithstanding the absence of any transfer or memorandum relating to the transaction in the books of the corporation.

[2] It is, however, contended by respondent that even though it be conceded that a valid pledge of the stock was made on the above-mentioned date, nevertheless, the lien of the pledge was extinguished when the shares of stock thus pledged were sold for delinquent assessments and a new certificate No. 176, representing the same shares of stock, was issued to the purchaser on October 14, 1925. In opposition to this contention, appellant maintains that when the partnership, which originally owned the stock, redeemed it by paying the assessments theretofore levied against it, the lien of appellant's pledge was then restored. The contention of appellant in this connection appears to be well founded. Respondent argues that when certificate No. 174 was canceled through the sale of the stock for delinquent assessments, and a new certificate No. 176 was issued, nothing remained upon which the pledge could operate, but it must be remembered that the certificate was merely evidence of the ownership of the stock, and that the stock itself was the subject of the pledge. Green v. Cavalier (Cal. App.) 290 P. 548. The mere cancellation of the certificate did not effectually and for all time destroy and extinguish the lien of the pledge, and when by redemption the partnership again came into ownership of it, the original pledge lien was restored. This doctrine was enunciated in the case of Jensen v. Duke, 71 Cal. App. 210, 234 P. 876. The case cited relates to real property, and the effect upon a mortgage lien of a sale of the incumbered property under a senior deed of trust, but the reasoning on which the decision is based is as applicable to personal property as it is to realty. It was there said that the lien of the mortgage was admittedly extinguished by the sale of the property under the trust deed, but held that when the land came into ownership of the mortgagor, the lien of the mortgage theretofore extinguished was revived.

[3-5] It is nevertheless contended that at the time the prior action was instituted by respondent herein against the partnership and the writ of attachment issued, respondent had no knowledge of the existence of the alleged pledge lien, and therefore stood in the position of a purchaser for value without notice of the lien, and that the equity of respondent was superior to that of appellant. It cannot be successfully maintained that an attaching creditor stands in the position of a bona fide purchaser for value. He has, in fact, parted with nothing of value, but has merely instituted an action in which he utilizes the provisional remedy of attachment for the purpose of rendering more secure the judgment which he hopes to obtain. An attachment lien attaches only to the debtor's interest in the property at the time of its levy. 3 Cal. Jur., p. 483; National Bank v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 157 Cal. 573, 576, 108 P. 676, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 21 Ann. Cas. 1391. In National Bank v. Western Pacific Ry. Co., supra, it was held that the purchaser for value of stock in a corporation, which was not transferred on the books of the corporation at the time of an attachment levy in a suit brought by a creditor of the seller, may compel a transfer upon the books of the corporation and the issuance of a certificate for the stock free from the attachment lien. The evidence is clear and conclusive that, at the time of the sale of the stock under the writ of execution, respondent was apprised of appellant's lien. Respondent cannot, therefore, be held to occupy the position of a bona fide purchaser of the stock without notice at the execution sale.

Even though it be conceded that the lien of the pledge was entirely and forever extinguished by the sale of the stock on October 14, 1925, for delinquent assessments levied against it, and that the pledge lien was not revived by the subsequent redemption of the stock by the partnership, it must not be overlooked that the new certificate No. 182, issued to the partnership upon its redemption of the stock, carried on its face an indorsement entitled "Irrevocable Stock Power," which indorsement contains the statement that the partnership had for value received sold, assigned, and transferred to appellant the 948 shares of stock in the corporation represented by certificate No. 182; that this indorsement contained an assignment in blank and bears the signatures of the individuals composing the partnership. This certificate was issued on August 2, 1927, and was delivered to the agent of the corporation, to be retained by him until the original certificate No. 174 should be surrendered. Here, then, we have an unequivocal recognition by the partnership, of the pledge. There is further recognition of the pledge contained in the letter of December 21, 1927, addressed by the partnership to appellant, which letter accompanied the note for $7,068.79, executed on the same date. Finally, it is to be remembered that on March 19, 1928, certificate No. 187, representing the same 948 shares of stock originally owned by the partnership, was issued to appellant as pledgee and a memorandum to this effect is contained in the books of the corporation. This date was prior to the date of the execution sale, which took place on April 18, 1928. It cannot therefore be successfully maintained that, at the time the stock of the partnership was sold under execution, respondent purchased the stock without notice of the prior pledge lien of appellant.

For the reasons hereinabove stated, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

115 Cal.App. 387

PEOPLE v. BETTENCOURT.

Cr. 1157.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 8, 1931.

1. Criminal law ⇨808½.

Instruction on reasonable doubt in language of statute with certain minor verbal differences held not erroneous (Pen. Code, § 1096).

Court instructed jury on subject of reasonable doubt, in language of Pen. Code, § 1096, with exception that in giving instruction it omitted the letter "a" in the expression, "it is not a mere possible doubt," and also it omitted the words "possible or," so that clause as given to jury read, "and depending on moral evidence, is open to some imaginary doubt," instead of reading, "possible or imaginary doubt."

2. Criminal law ⇨829(12).

Refusal of instruction on subject of remoteness of certain testimony, covered by instruction given on subject, held not error.

3. Intoxicating liquors ⇨226.

Testimony respecting surrounding circumstances relating to place and frequency of visitors was admissible in prosecution for maintaining liquor nuisance.

4. Criminal law ⇨369(6).

Evidence as to prior sales of liquor was admissible to show character of place and purpose of defendant in maintaining same.

5. Intoxicating liquors ⇨236(9).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for maintaining liquor nuisance.

6. Intoxicating liquors ⇨143.

Fact of keeping place for sale of intoxicating liquor, rather than number of sales, characterizes place as "nuisance."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Nuisance," see Words and Phrases.]

7. Criminal law ⇨683(1).

That testimony of one of witnesses was given on rebuttal during introduction of main portion of case presented by people presented no ground for reversal.

It did not appear that defendant was prejudiced by virtue of such fact or that he asked for or desired to introduce any testimony contradictory to that of witness, nor did it appear that defendant asked for or desired any additional time in which to counteract testimony so introduced.

8. Criminal law ⇨683(2).

Admitting testimony of witness on rebuttal was within discretion of trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; H. S. Gans, Judge.

Joseph J. Bettencourt was convicted of maintaining a nuisance, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

James T. Matlock, of Red Bluff, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PLUMMER, J.

The defendant was convicted of the crime of maintaining a nuisance, to wit, a place where alcoholic liquors are unlawfully kept for sale. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the order denying the motion for new trial, and also from the judgment of conviction.

[1] The first point made for reversal is that the court erred in its instructions on the subject of reasonable doubt, in that it did not give to the jury the instruction found in the case of Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711. This contention is partly true, but it overlooks the fact that section 1096 of the Penal Code sets forth the language that should be used in instructing the jury upon the subject of reasonable doubt, and no other instruction is requisite. The court gave to the jury all of the section referred to, but in so doing omitted the letter "a" in the expression, "it is not a mere possible doubt," so that the instruction in this particular reads, "it is not mere possible doubt." Also, the court in quoting the section omitted the words "possible or," so that the clause as given to the jury read as follows: "and depending on moral evidence, is open to some imaginary doubt," instead of reading, "possible or imaginary doubt." These verbal errors could have no possible influence upon the minds of the jurors. The intent and meaning of the instruction as given by the court is, in substance, just exactly as set forth in the section of the code. We think it would require more mental acumen than that possessed by the average juror, or even by court or counsel, to appreciate any difference in the legal effect of the expression, "it is not a mere possible doubt," and "it is not mere possible doubt." The same is true of the expression as to "imaginary doubt" or "possible imaginary doubt." While the definition of "reasonable doubt" found in the Webster case sounds a trifle more learned than the precise language used by the Legislature in framing section 1096 of the Penal Code, the wording of the section must be held as authoritative.

[2] The appellant next objects to the failure of the court to give an instruction proposed by him on the subject of remoteness of certain of the testimony. A reference to the instruction given by the court to the jury shows that the contention of error in this particular is untenable for the reason that the court clearly instructed the jury on that subject, and was under no obligations to repeat the instruction already given, even if the instructions proposed by the appellant were not otherwise objectionable, as being argumentative, and also an instruction trespassing upon the rights of the jury as being an instruction upon the weight of the evidence.

[3] It is next insisted that the testimony is insufficient to sustain a conviction, the basis being that most of the testimony relates to sales prior to the 29th day of January, 1931, and are more or less remote. Only in one instance does the defendant deny the sale, that being in relation to the alleged sale of a bottle of gin. The record shows that the defendant maintained a home at the place mentioned in the information; that other persons had been engaged in the unlawful manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors at that place, and that the defendant himself had previously been arrested for a liquor violation, the testimony as to the defendant's previous violation of the liquor laws having been introduced by himself. The testimony of the different witnesses relative to the sales of liquor by the defendant extended over a period of approximately nine months. Three different witnesses testified as to the purchase of liquor, at the place in question, one of the witnesses testifying that he purchased liquor there a number of times; that he first purchased liquor of some woman at the place in question, and later purchased liquor from the defendant. The testimony of the witness Pieper is sufficient, if accepted by the jury, to show that he had sold him a bottle of intoxicating liquor at the place mentioned in the information, on or about January 29, 1931. Witnesses R. W. DeVaney and H. N. Hobart related to the purchase of intoxicating liquors from the defendant at times preceding the 29th of January, 1931. Other witnesses testified as to the surrounding circumstances relating to the place and the frequency of visitors thereto. That this testimony is admissible is sustained by the following cases: People v. Medalgi, 94 Cal. App. 543, 271 P. 552; People v. Locurto, 97 Cal. App. 185, 275 P. 462; People v. Lamanuzzi, 92 Cal. App. 775, 268 P. 1082. Other cases might be cited, but these are sufficient.

[4] Evidence as to prior sales of liquor is admissible to show the character of the place and the purpose of the defendant in maintaining the same. See cases cited, also: People v. Frankovich, 64 Cal. App. 184, 221 P. 671; People v. Avila, 78 Cal. App. 415, 248 P. 693.

[5] No effort is made to show that the liquor purchased by the respective witnesses was not fit for beverage purposes, and did not contain more than the lawful alcoholic content. The case appears to have been tried upon the theory that the liquor was of the character proscribed by the Volstead Act, and the only questions presented to the jury were as to actual sales and the maintenance of a place for conducting such business. Under such circumstances we think the testimony inroduced is sufficient under the authority of People v. Rousseau, 100 Cal. App. 245, 279 P. 819.

[6] Again, it is not the number of sales, but the fact of keeping a place for the sale of intoxicating liquor, that characterizes a place as a nuisance. People v. Mehra, 73 Cal. App. 162 [and cases cited on page 167], 238 P. 802.

[7, 8] That the language used by the witnesses in describing the liquor purchased is sufficient to show its unlawful character is supported by the cases of People v. Silva, 67 Cal. App. 351, 227 P. 976; People v. Mueller, 168 Cal. 521, 143 P. 748, L. R. A. 1915B, 788, and People v. Gray, 67 Cal. App. 549, 228 P. 358. That the testimony of one of the witnesses was given upon rebuttal during the introduction of the main portion of the case presented by the people furnishes no ground for reversal. It was within the discretion of the trial court, and it does not appear that the defendant was prejudiced thereby, or that the defendant asked for or desired to introduce any testimony contradictory of the testimony of such witness. Nor does it appear that the defendant asked for or desired any additional time in which to counteract the testimony so introduced.

A careful reading of the transcript fails to disclose any error upon which a reversal could be predicated. It therefore follows that the order and judgment of the trial court must be, and they are hereby, affirmed.

I concur: PRESTON, P. J.

115 Cal.App. 324

PEOPLE v. WY SING.

Cr. 1159.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

July 1, 1931.

Criminal law ⇨1130(4).

No brief having been filed for accused on appeal, nor appearance made on his behalf, conviction was affirmed (Pen. Code, § 1253).

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

Wy Sing was convicted of violating an act regulating the sale, possession, distribution, and use of habit-forming narcotic and other dangerous drugs and substances, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

D. P. Eicke and C. P. Rendon, both of Stockton, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM.

The defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of San Joaquin county of a felony, to wit: Violation of "An act to regulate the sale, possession, distribution and use of habit forming, narcotic and other dangerous drugs and substances, and providing penalties for the violation thereof," approved May 4, 1929 (St. 1929, p. 380), and acts amendatory thereof.

The transcript on appeal was filed in this court May 12, 1931. No brief has been filed in behalf of appellant. The cause was regularly placed on the calendar for oral argument on July 1, 1931. No appearance was made for appellant at the time the case was called for hearing. Pursuant to the provisions of section 1253 of the Penal Code, the judgment and the order are affirmed.

115 Cal.App. 289

PEOPLE v. LAVINE et al.

Cr. 2023.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

June 30, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 11, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 30, 1931.

1. Criminal law ⇨13.

Provision of statute respecting extortion by threatening to expose secret held not so uncertain or indefinite as to impair validity (Pen. Code § 519, subd. 4).

2. Threats ⇨1(1).

"Secret" referred to in extortion statute must be unknown to general public or some particular part thereof, must concern some matter of fact, and must affect threatened person in way unfavorable to reputation or to some other interest (Pen. Code § 519, subd. 4).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Secret," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Threats ⇨5.

Indictment charging extortion held sufficient (Pen. Code § 519, subd. 4).

Indictment charged that on or about certain date defendant unlawfully obtained certain personal property from person named and three others named, and others with consent of such persons, induced by wrongful use of force and fear on part of defendant by threat to expose certain secret affecting such named persons and others.

4. Threats ⇨8.

Statute respecting punishment for attempt to commit crime held inapplicable to attempt to commit extortion (Pen. Code § 524, as amended by St. 1929, p. 435, and § 664).

Pen. Code § 524, as amended by St. 1929, p. 435, provides that every person who attempts by means of threat, such as is specified in section 519, to extort money or other property from another is punishable by imprisonment as specified.

5. Indictment and information ⇨190.

Jury held authorized to find defendant guilty of attempt to commit extortion, although indictment charged extortion without any further reference to attempted extortion (Pen. Code, § 524, as amended by St. 1929, p. 435, and § 1159).

6. Criminal law ⇨739(4).

Court properly advised jury to find for people on pleas of prior acquittal and once in jeopardy, where there was no evidence supporting them.

7. Criminal law ⇨185.

Where jury in extortion prosecution failed to agree and was discharged, cause could lawfully proceed to second trial under same indictment, resulting in conviction of attempted extortion (Pen. Code § 519, subd. 5, § 1159).

Defendant claimed that charge of extortion was abandoned by prosecution and that discharge of jury without verdict, after case had been submitted to them on theory of prosecution for attempted extortion, amounted to acquittal of main charge of extortion, but at all times charge against defendant as set forth in indictment was charge of extortion, and it was only by virtue of such charge, supplemented by provisions in Pen. Code § 1159, that any verdict of attempted extortion could have been rendered.

8. Criminal law ⇨507(4).

If witness in extortion prosecution was merely a feigned accomplice working out of district attorney's office, it was unnecessary that he be corroborated (Pen. Code § 1111).

9. Criminal law ⇨622(1).

In prosecution for extortion, court did not abuse discretion in denying application of defendants for severance of trials.

10. Criminal law ⇨829(1).

Requested instructions covered by instructions given, so far as correct, held properly refused.

11. Threats ⇨1(1).

Crime of attempted extortion depends upon acts, mind, and intent of person threatening, and not upon result upon person to be coerced (Pen. Code, §§ 518, 519, 524, as amended by St. 1929, p. 435).

YORK, J., dissenting.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. Rey Schauer, Judge.

Morris Lavine and another were convicted of an attempt to commit the crime of extortion, and they appeal.

Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck, of Los Angeles, for appellant Lavine.

Rush & Beirne and William B. Beirne, all of Los Angeles, for appellant Johnson.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Frank W. Stafford, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

CONREY, P. J.

By indictment presented on the 13th day of March, 1930, the defendants were accused of the crime of extortion, in violation of section 518 of the Penal Code, committed as follows: It was charged that on or about March 10, 1930, the defendants did wilfully, unlawfully, and feloniously obtain certain personal property, to wit $75,000, of currency, etc., from one Charles H. Crawford, and three other persons named, and other persons to the grand jury unknown, with the consent of said persons; which said consent was then and there induced by the wrongful use of force and fear by and on the part of said defendants, to wit, by a threat then and there made and communicated to said four above-named persons and other persons, verbally by said defendants, to expose certain secrets affecting said named persons, and other persons to the grand jury unknown, and each of them; said personal property in money being then and there the property of Charles H. Crawford, etc. The appearances and pleadings of the defendants in the trial court, and likewise in this court, are distinctly separate and apart one from the other. There have been two trials of the action, the first trial having resulted in a disagreement and discharge of the jury. On July 4, 1930, the second trial was concluded by separate verdicts whereby each defendant was found "guilty of attempted extortion, a felony, being an attempt to commit the crime of extortion, a felony, as charged in the indictment." The appeals of the defendants are from the several judgments and from the orders denying their motions for a new trial of the action.

Point one (Lavine brief), is that subdivision 4 of section 519 of the Penal Code, which forms the only basis for the prosecution and constitutes the charging part of the indictment, is void for such uncertainty and indefiniteness that it is unintelligible. Point two is stated as follows: That the indictment embodying the language of section 519, subdivision 4, Penal Code, and nothing more, is insufficient to sustain a conviction.

The crime of extortion is defined by section 518 of the Penal Code as follows: "Extortion is the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right." Section 519 of the Penal Code reads as follows: "What threats may constitute extortion. Fear, such as will constitute extortion, may be induced by a threat, either:

"1. To do an unlawful injury to the person or property of the individual threatened, or to any relative of his, or member of his family; or,

"2. To accuse him, or any relative of his, or member of his family, of any crime; or,

"3. To expose, or impute to him or them any deformity or disgrace; or,

"4. To expose any secret affecting him or them."

Comparing the indictment with the foregoing provisions of the Penal Code, it appears that the defendants were charged with the crime of extortion committed by threatening to expose "certain secrets" affecting the named or described persons. In other words, the charge is that the crime was committed by means of threats of the kind described in subdivision 4 of said section 519. Point two rests upon the further claim that the indictment did not conform to other provisions concerning indictments, as found in sections 952 and 957 of the Penal Code. It is provided in section 950 that an indictment must contain, besides the title, etc., "2. A statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." Section 951, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1043) provides that an indictment or information "may be in substantially the following form." The form prescribed requires that the indictment shall accuse the defendant of the crime (giving the name thereof), in that on or about a stated day and within the named county the defendant "(here insert statement of act or omission, as for example, 'murdered C. D.')." Section 952 (as amended in 1929 [St. 1929, p. 303]) reads as follows: "In charging an offense, each count shall contain, and shall be sufficient if it contains in substance, a statement that the accused has committed some public offense therein specified. Such statement may be made in ordinary and concise language without any technical averments or any allegations of matter not essential to be proved. It may be in the words of the enactment describing the offense or declaring the matter to be a public offense, or in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is accused. In charging theft it shall be sufficient to allege that the defendant unlawfully took the labor or property of another." Section 959, as amended in the year 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1041), provides that the indictment "is sufficient if it can be understood therefrom." Here follow five subdivisions, which relate to certain formalities of averment, none of which touch the matter of description or name of the crime, or statement of the acts by means of which the offense was committed. The amendment of the section in the year 1927 consisted of the omission of two subdivisions, which in substance are covered by the second subdivision of section 950 and by section 960. It is provided by section 960, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1065) that "No indictment, information, or complaint is insufficient, nor can the trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon be affected by reason of any defect or imperfection in matter of form which does not prejudice a substantial right of the defendant upon the merits."

In this action, each of the defendants demurred to the indictment upon various grounds, which include the objections which are before us for consideration at this time. The demurrers having been overruled, defendants entered their pleas of not guilty. On May 10, 1930, a mistrial having been declared and the jury discharged, the cause came on for the second trial on June 23, 1930. Defendant Lavine moved for a continuance, which was denied. Defendant Johnson moved for severance, which was denied. Defendants entered pleas of "former acquittal" and "once in jeopardy." Each defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the court, which objections were overruled. Each defendant objected to the introduction of any testimony, and these objections were overruled. The objections of defendant Johnson to the introduction of any evidence were made on the following grounds: "First, that the court is without jurisdiction to try the case on the ground that the statute on which the information is founded, is unconstitutional; second, that the defendant Johnson has been once acquitted on the charge set forth in the indictment; third, that the defendant Johnson has been once in jeopardy of the crime charged in the indictment; fourth, that there is an appeal pending in the District Court of Appeal of the state of California on behalf of the defendant Lavine and that this court is without jurisdiction to try the defendant Johnson jointly with the defendant Lavine because of the fact that that appeal is pending. I further object to the introduction of any evidence in this case upon the ground that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense." Defendant Lavine made the same motions, based on the same grounds as those above stated. The objections were overruled, and the case proceeded to trial. We find no argument made relating to the so-called appeal of Lavine, which apparently was an attempt to appeal from a nonappealable order.

[1, 2] In relation to point one, supra, we are of the opinion that the provisions of section 519, subdivision 4 of the Penal Code, are not so far uncertain or indefinite as to impair their validity. General terms may be used in a statute to describe things according to the common understanding of such terms. The word "secret" as used in section 519, in connection with the other words and phrases of the section, is definitely clear in its meaning. By reasonable construction it thus appears that the thing held secret must be unknown to the general public, or to some particular part thereof which might be interested in obtaining knowledge of the secret; the secret must concern some matter of fact, relating to things past, present, or future; the secret must affect the threatened person in some way so far unfavorable to the reputation, or to some other interest of the threatened person, that threatened exposure thereof would be likely to induce him through fear to pay out money or property for the purpose of avoiding the exposure.

[3] In relation to point two, we are of the opinion that the indictment, charging the offense in the terms which we have described in the first paragraph hereof, is sufficient to constitute a charge of commission of the crime of extortion. The language used in the indictment was reasonably sufficient to give the defendants notice of the offense of which they were accused.

Point three (Lavine brief) is that defendants could not legally be found guilty of "attempted extortion" when the charge was laid exclusively under section 518 of the Penal Code, relating to the crime of extortion. There are provisions of the Penal Code dealing generally with the subject of attempts to commit crimes. There are also provisions dealing with attempts to commit particular kinds of crimes. Section 664 reads in part as follows: "Attempts to commit crimes, how punishable. Every person who attempts to commit any crime, but fails, or is prevented or intercepted in the perpetration thereof, is punishable, where no provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempts, as follows:

"1. If the offense so attempted is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for five years, or more, or by imprisonment in a county jail, the person guilty of such attempt is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, or in a county jail, as the case may be, for a term not exceeding one-half the longest term of imprisonment prescribed upon conviction of the offense so attempted. * * *" The penalty for committing the crime of extortion by means of any threat such as is mentioned in section 519, is made punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years. (Pen. Code, § 520.)

[4, 5] But since there are provisions made by law for the punishment of the crime of attempting to commit extortion, it follows that the provisions of section 664 have no application in the case now before us. Section 524 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1929, reads as follows: "Attempts to extort money or property by means of threats. Every person who attempts, by means of any threat, such as is specified in section 519 of this code, to extort money or other property from another is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail not longer than one year or in the state prison not exceeding five years, or by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment." (St. 1929, p. 435.) Comparing section 520 with the amended section 524, we have the curious instance of a penalty provided for the mere attempt to commit a crime, which penalty may be more severe than the extreme limit of penalty for successful commission of the crime itself. Under the provisions of section 524, as it existed prior to the amendment of 1929, the same description of attempted extortion was punishable only as a misdemeanor. This recent legislation amending section 524 lends some force to the contention of appellants that the crime of attempted extortion is not included within an indictment charging the completed crime of extortion, and that therefore an indictment charging extortion will not support a verdict of guilty of attempted extortion. There is, however, another section of the Penal Code which destroys the force of such contention. Section 1159, Penal Code, reads as follows: "Jury may convict of a lesser offense or of an attempt. The jury may find the defendant guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged, or of an attempt to commit the offense." In substance, the argument of appellants is that section 1159 was not intended to authorize conviction of a greater crime under an indictment charging a lesser crime; that when tested by the present provisions of section 524, as compared with section 520, the crime of attempted extortion has become a greater crime than would be the crime of successful extortion. Nevertheless, we think that this piece of logic does not cover the subject completely. The plain meaning of section 1159 is emphasized by the headnote thereof, which can mean nothing other than that the right of the jury to find a defendant guilty of attempt to commit the crime charged, does not depend upon any construction of the phrase "lesser offense." As to the persuasive force of such headnotes, see 23 Cal. Jur., p. 772, and cases cited. We conclude that the jury was authorized to find the defendant guilty of attempt to commit the crime of extortion, although the indictment charged extortion without any further words of reference to attempted extortion.

[6] Point four (Lavine brief) relates to the action of the court in advising the jury to find for the people on the pleas of "prior acquittal" and "once in jeopardy." Since there was not before the jury any evidence in support of those pleas, there could be no error in the jury's verdict, or in the advice from the court relating thereto.

[7] The real contention underlying point four is that the court erred in excluding evidence offered by the defendants to support their special pleas. Hereinabove, we have indicated the proceedings which took place at the first trial of the action, at which time the jury, having failed to agree upon a verdict, was discharged. The pleas of "former acquittal" and "once in jeopardy" are entirely based upon conditions arising out of the fact that at the first trial the case was submitted to the jury on the theory of a prosecution for attempted extortion, and not as a case of extortion. In other words, defendants claim that the charge of extortion was abandoned by the prosecution, and that the discharge of the jury without a verdict after the case had been thus submitted to them, in effect amounted to an acquittal of the main charge of extortion. It must be held in mind, however, that at all times the charge against the defendants, as set forth in the indictment, was a charge of extortion. It was only by virtue of this charge, supplemented by the provisions of the Penal Code (section 1159 in particular), that any verdict of attempted extortion could have been rendered in this action. We think that there is no valid reason for asserting that this cause could not lawfully proceed to a second trial under the same indictment. We are further of the opinion that at such trial the said pleas of "former acquittal" and "once in jeopardy," were entirely without foundation.

[8] Point five (Lavine brief) is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, "and herein insufficient corroboration." The argument in support of this claim does not give us a direct statement of the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient. In a general way, however, we gather from the statements of counsel that they are insisting that the evidence does not show what the secret was which the defendants were threatening to expose; and that the evidence of the witness Berman was not corroborated as required by law. It is conceded, however, that if Berman was merely a feigned accomplice "working out of the district attorney's office" he did not need to be corroborated as required by section 1111 of the Penal Code. In that connection they submit to the court, "that this man and his career of crime is so well known in this community that no one, not being a congenital idiot, would believe anything he said under oath or otherwise." Unfortunately for the contention of counsel it happens that the jury, if it chose to believe any statements of Mr. Berman, acted within the scope of its rights and powers. We are further of the opinion that the evidence concerning the nature or description of the secrets, involved in the threats made by the defendants, was sufficiently definite and certain to support the verdict as rendered.

[9] Under the head of "divers and sundry rulings" depriving defendants of a fair trial, we find the appellants claim that the court erred as to each of them, in denying their applications for severance of their trials; that the court erred in admitting and in refusing to strike out certain evidence relating to accusatory statements made in the presence of defendant Lavine. We find neither abuse of discretion nor error in these rulings of the court.

[10] It is contended by defendant Lavine that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury certain requested instructions quoted on pages 132, 135, and 136 of his brief. (The instructions have not been numbered, as they should have been, in the transcript.) In the instructions given by the court to the jury they were informed, among other things, that in order to constitute the crime of attempt to commit the crime of extortion alleged in the indictment, as to each defendant, it was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove to the satisfaction of the jury and beyond a reasonable doubt, each of certain described elements. These elements as stated in the instructions (Clerk's Trans., p. 95) are definitely confined and limited to an intention and attempt to extort money or other valuable property from the person threatened, by means of a threat to expose a secret affecting the person threatened, or affecting a relative, or member of his family. In relation to circumstantial evidence, the court instructed the jury as follows: "If the evidence relating to any circumstance in this case is, in view of all the evidence, reasonably susceptible of two interpretations, one of which would point to the guilt of the defendant and the other of which would admit of innocence, then it is your duty in considering such evidence to adopt that interpretation which will admit of defendant's innocence and reject that which would point to guilt." We are satisfied that the instructions given to the jury very fully and fairly stated the law of the case; and particularly that they sufficiently covered the matters included in the said requested instructions, in so far as said requested instructions were correct in their statements of the law.

On reading the brief filed on behalf of appellant Johnson, we find that the assignments of error, although framed in different language, are in their substance, and in their principal elements, the same points relied upon by her codefendant. As to the propositions thus duplicated in the briefs, we have endeavored to give them appropriate attention in the foregoing paragraphs.

[11] Appellant Johnson further contends that the court erred in instructing the jury that in attempted extortion the crime depends upon the acts, mind, and intent of the person threatening, and not upon the effect or result upon the person to be coerced; and in instructing the jury that in the crime of attempted extortion a person may be guilty of an attempt to commit the crime of extortion though he does not, as he intends, produce fear on the part of the person from whom he attempts to extort money. We think that there was no error in the giving of these instructions. In the case entitled In re Magidson, 32 Cal. App. 566, 163 P. 689, 690, the court had under consideration certain evidence relating to a charge of attempt to receive stolen property. In holding that the evidence was sufficient to establish probable cause for the order of commitment, the court said: "There certainly existed the two elements of an attempt, namely, the intent to commit the crime and a direct ineffectual act done toward its commission. The case falls within the spirit and reasoning of the appellate decisions in this state." The rule thus stated was applied to evidence which showed that, notwithstanding the criminal intent, the actual circumstances were such that the attempt could not possibly have succeeded, since the stolen property which the accused sought to remove had been previously discovered and removed by the police. The court reviewed extensively earlier decisions of the Supreme Court and Courts of Appeal of this state, as well as decisions of other states bearing upon the subject.

In People v. Gardner, 144 N. Y. 119, 38 N. E. 1003, 28 L. R. A. 699, 43 Am. St. Rep. 741, where a defendant was convicted of an attempt to commit the crime of extortion, it was held that the acts proved were plainly sufficient to constitute an attempt to commit the crime of extortion, although in fact the defendant did not succeed in inspiring any fear in the mind of the threatened person. The court said: "The condition of Mrs. Amos' mind was unknown to the defendant. If it had been such as he supposed, the crime could have been, and probably would have been, consummated. His guilt was just as great as if he had actually succeeded in his purpose. His wicked motive was the same, and he had brought himself fully and precisely within the letter and policy of the law. This crime as defined in the statute depends upon the mind and intent of the wrongdoer, and not on the effect or result upon the person sought to be coerced." We think that the foregoing is a correct statement of the law which should apply here. We are further of the opinion that the conviction of the defendants is based upon a record which is free from prejudicial error.

The judgments, and also the orders denying motions for new trial, from which the defendants have appealed, are, and each of them is, affirmed.

I concur: HOUSER, J.

I dissent: YORK, J.

---

---

PARKER v. BOARD OF DENTAL EXAMINERS OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA
et al.*

Civ. 7544.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

June 23, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 23, 1931. Hearing
Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 20, 1931.

1. Physicians and surgeons ☞2.

Purpose of act regulating practice of dentistry is to insure skill and proficiency in practice of profession (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048).

2. Physicians and surgeons ☞6(2).

Statute regulating dentistry, if construed as prohibiting unlicensed person from managing purely business affairs of dental office, would be unconstitutional (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048, §§ 11 (5), 13).

Dental Act, Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048, § 11 (5), declares that practice of dentistry shall include one who manages or conducts as manager, proprietor, or otherwise, a place where dental operations are performed. Section 13 defines unprofessional conduct to include aiding or abetting any unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully.

3. Statutes ☞219.

Interpretation, by dental board and its legal adviser, of ambiguous portion of statute regulating practice of dentistry for long period of years, is entitled to weight.

4. Physicians and surgeons ⚭6(2).

One charged with aiding and abetting unlicensed person to practice dentistry could rely on interpretation placed on ambiguous regulating statute by dental board and its legal adviser for long period (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048, §§ 11 (5), 13).

5. Physicians and surgeons ⚭4.

License to practice dentistry can be granted to human being only, not to corporation (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048).

6. Physicians and surgeons ⚭6(2).

Statute declaring it unprofessional for licensed dentist to aid "unlicensed person" to practice dentistry refers only to dentistry which licensed person might practice (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048, §§ 11 (5), 13).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Unlicensed Person," see Words and Phrases].

7. Physicians and surgeons ⚭6(2).

One receiving dividends on trust certificates issued by corporation leasing offices to dentists held not engaged in "practicing dentistry" (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048, §§ 11 (5), 13).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Practicing Dentistry," see Words and Phrases.]

8. Physicians and surgeons ⚭6(2).

Practicing dentistry under name "Painless Parker Dentist" held not to sustain charge of practicing dentistry under assumed or fictitious name, in view of decree authorizing use of such name (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048, §§ 11 (5), 13).

9. Physicians and surgeons ⚭6(2).

Promulgation of system for studying and teaching dentistry, held not to constitute "practice of dentistry" (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 2048, §§ 11 (5), 13).

10. Witnesses ⚭293½.

Action of dental examiners in requiring witnesses to testify, over objection that testimony might incriminate witnesses, and purporting to grant immunity from prosecution, held error (Pen. Code, § 1324, repealed by St. 1917, p. 291; Const. art. 1, § 13).

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Painless Parker against the Board of Dental Examiners of the State and O. E. Jackson and others, as members of such Board, to set aside an order of the Board suspending petitioner's license to practice dentistry. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed, with instructions.

See also 291 P. 421.

Harry Keyser and John C. Stevenson, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jesse W. Carter, of Redding, and Annette A. Adams, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

This is an appeal from a judgment affirming an order of the dental board suspending petitioner's license to practice dentistry.

The petitioner was tried by the dental board upon an information framed in four counts charging unprofessional conduct. The first count charged petitioner with aiding and abetting the corporation Painless Parker Dentist to practice dentistry unlawfully. The second count charged him with aiding and abetting an unlicensed person to participate in the profits of dental offices. The third count charged the use of an assumed and fictitious name—"Painless Parker Dentist," a corporation. The fourth count charged the use of an assumed and fictitious name—"E. R. Parker System." The dental board found petitioner guilty on all four counts and suspended his license to practice for a period of five years.

"Painless Parker Dentist" was incorporated by articles filed with the secretary of state August 4, 1915. The amount of the subscribed corporate stock was $30 divided into three shares of $10 each. Its designated purposes were "to conduct, own, operate and control dental offices" to manufacture, buy, and sell dental creams, dental apparatus and supplies. E. R. Parker, one of the incorporators, changed his name to "Painless Parker" by decree of court and served as manager and chief surgeon of this corporation. Associated Dental Supply Company was incorporated by articles filed September 1, 1915. The general purposes of this corporation seem to have been the dealing in all kinds of dental supplies and similar merchandise. The petitioner was not a stockholder or incorporator of this corporation. The conduct of the business down to the date of the hearing before the dental board in August, 1929, has been a gradual lessening of the functions of the former corporation and a consequent increase in the functions of Associated Dental Supply Company until the latter secured practically full control of the business and financial operations. Fourteen dental offices were operated in this state by "dentists using the E. R. Parker System." These offices were owned, or leased, by the Associated Dental Supply Company, which in turn had some arrangement with the Painless Parker Dentist Corporation whereby these offices were "leased" to the latter but all the money taken in by these offices was paid directly to the Associated Dental Supply Company. Throughout this period (or at least for the last eight or ten years before the hearing) the Associated Dental Supply Company dealt directly with the managers of the local offices, who in turn deposited all their receipts to the credit of that corporation. The Painless Parker Dentist Corporation has never paid a dividend, has no assets, and no funds on hand. So far as we can ascertain from the record, it has never organized or operated as a corporation, has not, either directly or indirectly, assumed or exercised any control over any of the offices operated by the petitioner or over any of the licensed dentists employed therein; but has simply been used by Painless Parker the individual as his "alter ego" in his conduct of these dental offices, the principal use made of the corporation being the use of the term "Painless Parker Dentist" upon the doors, windows, and letterheads of the petitioner. When this practice was discontinued and the term "Dentists using E. R. Parker System" was adopted does not appear from the evidence. But it does appear without any contradiction that the corporation, as such, has not functioned in the direct management or control of any of these dental offices and has not represented itself as a corporation practicing dentistry but has confined its activities to the appointment of petitioner as its manager, who, in turn, did manage the offices for the benefit of the Associated Dental Supply Company.

In the first count it was alleged that "between the 4th day of August, 1915, and the 31st day of May, 1929," the petitioner did aid and abet an unlicensed person to practice dentistry "by permitting, allowing and authorizing said corporation (Painless Parker Dentist) to conduct, own, operate, and control dental offices throughout the state of California, where dental operations were performed, and carry on the practice of dentistry therein." The basis of the charge is found in the provisions of section 11 of the Dental Act (Deering's General Laws 1923, Act 2048), which declare the practice of dentistry to include one "(5) who manages or conducts as manager, proprietor, conductor, or otherwise a place where dental operations are performed." By section 13 of the act unprofessional conduct is defined to include "aiding or abetting any unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully."

[1, 2] In support of the judgment the respondents argue that any transaction within the purview of subdivision 5 of section 11 of the act constitutes the practice of dentistry; that a corporation may not be licensed to practice dentistry; that any licensed dentist who aids a corporation in the performance of any of the acts mentioned in subdivision 5 is aiding an "unlicensed person" to practice. The appellant argues that the provisions of that subdivision are unconstitutional in so far as they purport to prohibit an unlicensed person from managing the purely business or economic affairs of a dental office, and that the term "unlicensed" dentist refers only to a natural person who might be licensed under the act and not to a corporation owning or operating a dental office.

Bearing in mind that "the ultimate purpose of the Dental Act is to bring about and insure skill and proficiency in the practice of the profession" (Jacobs v. Board of Dental Examiners, 189 Cal. 709, 714, 209 P. 1006, 1008), it must be manifest that, if the quoted provisions of the act mean what the respondents contend that they mean, they are unconstitutional as placing unreasonable restrictions upon the conduct of a lawful business—restrictions which are not referable to the regulatory police powers of the state. State v. Brown, 37 Wash. 97, 79 P. 635, 637, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798; Liggett Co. v. Baldridge, 278 U. S. 105, 49 S. Ct. 57, 73 L. Ed. 204. In the Brown Case the Supreme Court of Washington had under consideration the provisions of section 8 of the dental act of that state (Laws 1901, p. 317), which declared it to be a misdemeanor to "own, run, operate or cause to be operated, or manage a dental office." In holding that portion of the act unconstitutional the Washington court said that "to own and manage property is a natural right, and one which may be restricted only for reasons of public policy, clearly discernible." "But," said the court, "we are unable to say or perceive that the health, moral, or physical welfare of the public, or any of the personal or property rights of its individuals, are endangered by the ownership and management of a dental office, so long as those employed therein to do the actual dentistry work are qualified and licensed as by law required."

In the Brown Case the court gave the illustration of the widow of a licensed dentist who assumed control and management of the business of the office, and who, though she employed none but licensed dentists to perform the dental work, would be chargeable under the strict terms of the act. Other illustrations might be added. Thus the administrator, trustee, or receiver duly appointed to manage the estate of a licensed dentist would, under our statute, be guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 12. The manager or proprietor of "a place where dental operations are performed" would include the manager and owner of every hospital and clinic permitting such operations, the many charitable agencies maintaining clinics, the infirmaries and guilds maintained and operated by the students in the universities and colleges, the many dental clinics maintained by parents' organizations for the benefit of school children, as well as the owners and managers of buildings where such operations are performed.

Closely resembling the case at hand is Messner v. Board of Dental Examiners, 87 Cal. App. 199, 262 P. 58, 60, where the court of the Third Appellate District annulled an order suspending the license of a dentist on the charge that an unlicensed person was the "manager" of his office. The court said that "Cohn had charge of the purely business end of the dental office, * * * but there is no evidence that he had or exercised the slightest control or direction of the professional work performed in such office." In referring to the provisions of subdivision 5, the court said: "A reasonable construction of the quoted provisions of the statute appears to be that, to come within the terms thereof, one must in some manner, to some extent, directly or indirectly, control or direct some professional service of the kind that dentists are licensed to render."

[3] This is about the same interpretation which was given the quoted portion of the section by the Attorney General of the state as early as 1918 when he advised the dental board that "so much of the business relating to his practice as does not concern the public may * * * be operated through the medium of a corporation. It is the evident intent of the act that the licensed dentist in his dealings with the public shall operate in his own name and that that name shall be the one under which he is licensed, but under the statute it is apparently not made of any concern to the public whether the business of the dentist other than as the public comes in contact therewith, is operated by the dentist himself or by a corporation to which he is responsible in connection therewith, or which may have an interest in the facilities employed or receipts from his practice."

The appellant insists that the foregoing interpretation was made at his request and that he has frequently informed the respondent board of his desire to conform to the law in this respect and has frequently requested the board to inform him of its desires and demands in that respect. In view of the uncertainty of the act, and in view of the fact that petitioner was charged with a violation of its terms over a period of fourteen years, we are inclined to petitioner's view of contemporaneous construction growing out of the interpretations of the board and of its legal adviser and the conduct of the board over that period of time. The ambiguity of the quoted portion of the statute is evident, and, whether we agree with the interpretation of the dental board and the attorney-general, that interpretation, employed over a long period of years, is nevertheless entitled to weight in this proceeding. Thus, in The Pocket Veto Case, 279 U. S. 655, 690, 49 S. Ct. 463, 470, 73 L. Ed. 894, the Supreme Court said: "that a practice of at least twenty years duration 'on the part of the executive department, acquiesced in by the legislative department, while not absolutely binding on the judicial department, is entitled to great regard in determining the true construction of a constitutional provision the phraseology of which is in any respect of doubtful meaning.'" Quotation is from State v. South Norwalk, 77 Conn. 257, 264, 58 A. 759. This principle is more liberally applied to the construction of statutes than to the provisions of a constitution. 6 R. C. L., p. 63, where many cases on the general principle stated in the Connecticut case are cited.

[4] Applying the doctrine to the case at hand, we find, first, that the statute is uncertain where it refers to one who "conducts as * * * proprietor * * * or otherwise a place where dental operations are performed" because if this language includes an owner of a dental office who merely controls the purely business side of the place it is unconstitutional (State v. Brown, 37 Wash. 97, 79 P. 635, 638, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798; Liggett Company v. Baldridge, 278 U. S. 105, 113, 49 S. Ct. 57, 73 L. Ed. 204); and if the words "manage or conduct" cover such functions as do not "call for any of the professional skill required of a dentist but rather that of one trained in business transactions" (Messner v. Board, supra), then the inhibitions of the statute are beyond the scope of the police power of the state; and, second, the statute being uncertain in this respect, the petitioner was entitled to assume from the language of the information that he was required to answer that charge in the light of the interpretation placed upon the statute by the dental board and its legal adviser. For these reasons the demurrer to the first count of the information should have been sustained upon the grounds of uncertainty.

[5] The evidence taken in support of the allegations of the first count does not aid the pleading as it merely tends to prove that, after the incorporation of Painless Parker Dentist, the petitioner became its manager. (Here it should be added that, though the charge in the information covered a period of fourteen years, none of the evidence was tied to that period and much of it was not laid in the state of California whereas it appears that the petitioner was operating during that period in other states.) Upon this charge and evidence he was convicted of aiding and abetting an "unlicensed person to practice dentistry unlawfully." In Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 180, 77 P. 879, 884, 1 Ann. Cas. 13, the Supreme Court, referring to a similar statute, said: "But it must be remembered that the act regulating the practice of dentistry and similar acts are not passed to promote the personal ends of individuals, but as salutary enactments in the exercise of the police power of the state to legislate for the safety, health, and welfare of the people." To reach this end the dental act has prescribed the method by which a person may obtain a license to practice dentistry, and from the language of the act, a license could be granted to a human being only and not to an artificial creation such as a corporation. The terms of the act, in so far as they relate to the licensing of individuals and to the practice of dentistry, show clearly that they were directed to persons as distinguished from corporations. Similar interpretations have been given to the act regulating the practice of architecture in Binford v. Boyd, 178 Cal. 458, 462, 174 P. 56; People v. Allied Architects' Ass'n, 201 Cal. 428, 435, 257 P. 511; the State Medical Act in Pilger v. City of Paris D. G. Co., 86 Cal. App. 277, 281, 261 P. 328; and the Nebraska Medical Act in State Electro-Med. Inst. v. State, 74 Neb. 40, 103 N. W. 1078, 12 Ann. Cas. 673. In the latter case the Nebraska court said (page 1079 of 103 N. W.): "There was no necessity of legislation to prohibit corporations, as such, from practicing medicine. It is impossible to conceive of an impersonal entity 'judging the nature, character and symptoms of the disease,' or 'determining the proper remedy,' or giving or prescribing the application of the remedy to the disease. Members of the corporation, or persons in its employ, might do these things, but the corporation itself is incapable to do them. The qualification of a medical practitioner is personal to himself. The intention of the law is that one who undertakes to judge the nature of a disease or to determine the proper remedy therefor, or to apply the remedy, must have certain personal qualifications; and, if he does these things without having complied with the law, he is subject to its penalties. Making contracts is not practicing medicine. Collecting the compensation therefor is not practicing medicine, within the meaning of this statute. No professional qualifications are requisite for doing these things."

[6] In view of these authorities it would seem to follow that when the Legislature declared it to be unprofessional for a licensed dentist to aid an "unlicensed person" to practice dentistry it had in mind the practice of dentistry which a licensed person might carry on—"some professional service of the kind that dentists are licensed to render" (Messner v. Board, supra), and did not contemplate a corporation which could not become licensed under the act and which could do no more than conduct the business side of the office.

Putting it in a different form, the evidence discloses that some fourteen years prior to the filing of the information the Painless Parker Dentist Corporation, in some manner not made to appear, appointed the petitioner as its general manager and then ceased to function as a corporation. The petitioner had complete control and management of all the dental offices, employed licensed dentists as local managers of each office, who in turn employed licensed dentists to perform all the dental operations performed therein. If we could treat the corporation as the employer under this evidence, we would still be forced to the conclusion that it was not practicing dentistry under the true meaning of the statute. In this respect the case is the same, except as to the number of operations performed, as Renwick v. Phillips, 204 Cal. 349, 350, 268 P. 368, 369, where the Supreme Court, in affirming a judgment annulling an order of the medical board revoking Renwick's license to practice medicine and surgery, said: "The petitioner was a licensed chiropodist. The said Roy Finney conducted a chiropodist parlor, equipped with a variety of foot remedies and appliances which he prepared and sold there. He employed the petitioner and respondent herein to act as a chiropodist in connection with his said establishment and to give such treatment and perform such operations as only could be done by the holder of a regular chiropodist's license so to do. In so far there was nothing illegal or unprofessional in the relations or conduct of Dr. Renwick in his connection with said Finney at the latter's place of business."

There is a clear distinction between this principle and that involved in the cases cited by respondent. People v. California Pro. Corp., 76 Cal. App. 354, 244 P. 1089, and People v. Merchants' Pro. Corp., 189 Cal. 531, 209 P. 363, were quo warranto proceedings to oust the corporations from the practice of law. The principle is stated in the latter case at page 538 of 189 Cal., 209 P. 363, 366, where the court said: "The essential relation of trust and confidence between attorney and client cannot be said to arise where the attorney is employed, not by the client, but by some corporation which has undertaken to furnish its members with legal advice, counsel, and professional services. The attorney in such a case owes his first allegiance to his immediate employer, the corporation, and owes, at most, but an incidental, secondary, and divided loyalty to the clientele of the corporation." To the same effect is Midland Credit Adjustment Co. et al. v. Donnelley, 219 Ill. App. 271. People v. Painless Parker Dentist, 85 Colo. 304, 275 P. 928, was also a quo warranto proceeding heard on a demurrer to a petition which alleged that the corporation was practicing dentistry and advertised to that effect. These allegations being admitted on the demurrer, the Supreme Court of Colorado held that the corporation was employed in an illegal practice as no corporation could be licensed to practice dentistry. People v. State Board, etc., 85 Colo. 321, 275 P. 933, was a proceeding in prohibition which was heard and determined on the record in the former case. As this record disclosed that the corporation was practicing dentistry the supreme court correctly denied the petition for prohibition to restrain the dental board from trying petitioner on a charge that he was aiding the corporation to practice illegally. Pilger v. City of Paris, etc., Co., 86 Cal. App. 277, 261 P. 328, merely holds that the corporation was not liable for the negligence of its employees in a chiropody department maintained by the corporation in its store because the corporation could not practice chiropody.

The cases cited follow the general rule of the authorities which is that the true purpose and intent of regulatory statutes of this character is that one who undertakes to judge the nature of a disease or other bodily ailment, or to determine the proper remedy, must have certain personal qualifications, and that, from the nature of these required qualifications a corporation may not be licensed to practice the profession. Adopting this rule the authorities then hold that when the regulatory statute refers to the licensing of "persons" it intends natural and not artificial persons. Pharmaceutical Soc. v. London and Prov. Suppl. Ass'n, Ltd., 5 L. R. (Appeal Cases) 857.

[7] The second count charged the petitioner with unprofessional conduct in that he aided an unlicensed person named Ramona McShane to practice dentistry unlawfully in that he permitted her to participate in the profits of the dental office owned and operated by "Painless Parker Dentist, a corporation." The evidence in support of the charge was that in 1920 the Associated Dental Supply Company was in need of funds and for that reason executed a trust agreement selling trust certificates in small denominations. Ramona McShane purchased 151 shares at $1 a share. Interest in the nature of dividends was paid to each certificate holder until 1929 when the loan was repaid and the trust dissolved. As the Painless Parker Dentist Corporation leased dental offices from the Associated Dental Supply Company, the respondents found that Ramona McShane participated in the profits of the Painless Parker Corporation, that she therefore practiced dentistry unlawfully, and that the petitioner aided and abetted her in so doing. It would be just as reasonable to say that every stockholder of a bank which has loaned money to the owner of a building in which some dentist has practiced without a license is an aider and abetter in the unlawful practice of dentistry. To interpret the statute as contended for by respondents would make it unconstitutional for the reasons heretofore given, whereas, if the statute is given a reasonable and constitutional interpretation the information and the evidence both demonstrate that Ramona McShane was not practicing dentistry within any sound construction of the act.

[8] The third count purported to charge petitioner with practicing under an assumed or fictitious name in the use of the term "Painless Parker Dentist," and the fourth count charged a similar breach of the act in the use of the term "E. R. Parker System." The evidence was that petitioner, by decree of court, changed his name to "Painless Parker." This name was used by him in his practice of dentistry. The name Painless Parker Dentist was not fictitious. Spreckels v. Grace Darling Hosp. Ass'n, 28 Cal. App. 646, 648, 153 P. 718; Wetenhall v. Mabrey (Cal. Sup.) 286 P. 1015; Andrews v. Glick, 205 Cal. 699, 701, 272 P. 587. There is no evidence in the record to sustain the allegations of this count. All the evidence shows without conflict that petitioner was practicing under the name given him by decree of court which was the name under which he was licensed to practice by respondents.

[9] The fourth count purported to charge petitioner with the practice of dentistry under the false and fictitious name of "E. R. Parker System." E. R. Parker is the name under which petitioner was engaged in business prior to the decree changing his name to "Painless Parker." Under that name he promulgated the system of studying and teaching the practice of dentistry including both the business details and technical matters of the profession. For this purpose manuals and other printed documents were prepared and circulated for the use of those engaged in the dental practice and in many of the offices maintained by petitioner the words "dentists using the E. R. Parker System" were prominently displayed. In support of the allegations of this count the evidence showed no more than that the petitioner used the expression in the teaching of the practice of dentistry. Under no possible theory could the transactions detailed be treated as the practice of dentistry.

[10] Finally it is argued that the respondents usurped their authority in this proceeding when they compelled the witnesses French, Jacobs, and Cage to appear before them and give testimony against the petitioner. The argument is that because of section 12 of the Dental Act these witnesses were each guilty of a misdemeanor if the charges contained in the information against the petitioner were true, and that they were, therefore, entitled to be excused from giving testimony against themselves under the provisions of section 13, article 1 of the Constitution.

When the witnesses were called they were advised by their attorneys that they need not testify upon the ground that their testimony might incriminate them, but the respondents refused to heed their objections and ordered them to testify after counsel for the dental board had read to the witnesses the provisions of section 1324, Penal Code, and pretending to act in accord therewith, undertook to grant them immunity from prosecution if they would so testify. This section of the Penal Code had been repealed in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 291), and hence was not available at the time of the hearing which was in September, 1929. There can be no doubt that these witnesses were led into a false sense of security by the pretended reliance of respondents upon the repealed section and by the pretended assurance of immunity to them which neither the respondents nor their counsel had any possible right to grant. This action of the board is not defended on this appeal, and in view of the rule of Ex parte Clarke, 103 Cal. 352, 37 P. 230, and Hickman v. London Assurance Corp., 184 Cal. 524, 531, 195 P. 45, 18 A. L. R. 742, we cannot see how it could be defended. If this evidence is to be disregarded, there is no evidence to support any charge in the information as the case presented by the dental board rests (with certain exceptions which are immaterial) upon the evidence which the board compelled these witnesses to give in disregard of their constitutional rights. The great weight of the authorities is to the effect that evidence so taken must be treated as no evidence, while on the other hand authorities may be found holding that evidence, no matter how illegally obtained, must be given its full weight. We do not need to decide that question here because we are satisfied from a review of the entire record that all the evidence, including that illegally obtained, wholly fails to support any charge in the information.

The judgment is accordingly reversed, with instructions to the trial court to enter its order annulling the order under review.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

3. Appeal and error ⇨101(1).

Mere conflict in evidence as to fraud, resolved for prevailing party, furnishes no ground for reversal.

4. Trial ⇨105(2).

Evidence that real estate brokers were duly licensed, admitted before objection thereto, could be considered by trial court in determining whether brokers were licensed.

5. Brokers ⇨86(1).

Evidence not showing real estate brokers' license was canceled before exchange of properties supported finding that brokers were licensed until consummation of exchange (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32; St. 1919, p. 1259, § 20).

6. Brokers ⇨42.

Commissions for procuring exchange of property held earned when contract was executed, where contract did not require payment of commissions after transaction, and parties completed exchange, as respects recovery of commissions by brokers licensed when contract was executed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32; St. 1919, p. 1259, § 20).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by Howard Corvin and another, copartners, doing business under the fictitious name of Union Realty Company, against the Smead Investment Company and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Raphael Dechter, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William Lewis, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MARKS, J.

Respondents brought their action against appellants for $2,000 alleged to be due them as a real estate commission on an exchange of appellants' property effected through their agency. The answer of appellants denied generally the allegations of the complaint. It contained a special defense of fraud on the part of respondents in the execution of an agreement, whereby appellants promised to pay them a commission of $2,000, and a further defense of the statute of frauds. The trial court gave judgment in favor of respondents in the sum of $2,000, from which appellants have prosecuted this appeal.

The evidence shows that appellants were copartners doing business under the firm name of the Union Realty Company, and, as such, had a broker's license issued to them by the real estate commissioner of the state of Cali-

115 Cal.App. 175

CORVIN et al. v. SMEAD INV. CO. et al.
Civ. 856.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.
June 25, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 13, 1931.

1. Pleading ⇨129(5).

Due execution of contract, true copy of which was attached to verified complaint, held admitted, where not denied by answer (Code Civ. Proc. § 447).

2. Brokers ⇨43(3).

Verbal employment of agent to effect exchange of property, and verbal and written promise to pay commission, held sufficient to support judgment for commission.

fornia for the year 1927. They employed E. C. Adams as a salesman, who was licensed as such by the real estate commissioner.

Some weeks prior to August 23, 1927, Adams contacted C. R. Smead and was employed by him to effect a sale or exchange of appellants' property, for which services Smead orally agreed to pay a commission of $2,000. Adams brought Smead and William D. House together in an effort to effect an exchange of their properties. He left on his vacation on August 15, 1927, and turned the consummation of the exchange over to Howard Corvin, one of his employers and one of the respondents. Smead repeated to Corvin his oral promise to pay the $2,000 commission. Corvin succeeded in bringing Smead and House together, and effected an exchange of their properties. On August 23, 1927, appellants and House signed a written agreement of exchange, which was prepared by Corvin. Smead signed his own name and that of the Smead Investment Company to this agreement of exchange. Its closing paragraphs are as follows:

"And I further agree to pay the Union Realty Co., Two Thousand and XX/100 Dollars commission for said exchange.

"Dated at Los Angeles, this 23rd day of August, 1927.

"Smead Investment Co.
"C. R. Smead."

The actual exchange was consummated, and titles to the properties passed about September 23, 1927, and appellants refused to pay any commission to respondents.

A number of the grounds upon which appellants seek to obtain a reversal of the judgment can be considered under their contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and judgment.

[1] They first urge that there is no evidence of the due execution of the contract of August 23, 1927, by the Smead Investment Company. The complaint is verified and has attached to it as an exhibit a true copy of this contract. The answer of appellants does not deny the genuineness and due execution of this contract, which facts are therefore admitted by them under the provisions of section 447 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Cutten v. Pearsall, 146 Cal. 690, 81 P. 25.

[2] They next urge that there is no evidence of any written authorization to appellants to effect the exchange of their properties, and no sufficient written promise to pay the commission. The evidence discloses the verbal employment of the agents, and a verbal promise to pay the commission as well as the written promise contained in the contract of August 23, 1927. Such promises have been held sufficient to support a judgment of this nature. Coulter v. Howard, 203 Cal. 17, 262 P. 751; Johnson v. Krier, 59 Cal. App. 330, 210 P. 966.

[3] Appellants next urge that the evidence submitted in support of their defense of fraud should have been accepted and adopted by the trial court as true. This evidence was flatly contradicted by the testimony of Corvin, and the court found in accordance therewith. At best, this created merely a conflict in the evidence which was resolved in favor of respondent by the trial court, and furnishes no ground for a reversal of the judgment here.

[4] Appellants next urge that there is no sufficient evidence that the respondents were licensed by the state of California as real estate brokers. Respondent Corvin, while on the witness stand, was asked if respondents were so licensed. After he had answered this question in the affirmative, appellants' counsel objected to the question, which objection was overruled. No motion was made to strike out the answer given. The evidence of their being so licensed was thus before the court prior to an objection, and could have been considered by the trial court. Furthermore, appellants admit that respondents were duly licensed brokers from January 1 to September 1, 1927.

[5, 6] Appellants further urge that respondents were not licensed as real estate brokers at the time the exchange of properties was finally consummated on or about September 23, 1927. The evidence discloses that on or about September 1, 1927, they filed with the real estate commissioner a request to have their broker's license canceled because Archie W. Conrad was withdrawing from the partnership. This request bears upon its face the word "cancelled" stamped thereon by the real estate commissioner. No date of the actual cancellation of the license appears in the record. A new broker's license to Howard Corvin, doing business under the name of Union Realty Company, was issued on October 5, 1927. The trial court found that respondents were licensed real estate brokers during the year 1927, until the consummation of the exchange of properties between Smead Investment Company, Smead, and House. This finding is sufficiently supported by the evidence which shows that respondents were granted a license as real estate brokers for the calendar year of 1927, and fails to show that such license was canceled prior to the consummation of the exchange of properties. "A thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature." Section 1963, subd. 32, Code Civ. Proc. Furthermore, section 20 of the Real Estate Brokers' Act (Statutes of 1919, pp. 1252, 1259) requires the brokers to be licensed at the time the alleged cause of action arose. The contract of August 23, 1927, signed by appellants, contained a definite promise to pay respondents the commission for the exchange without any provision that the payment be made after the transaction was consummated and the exchange completed. The evidence discloses that Smead and House took the matter of completing the exchange into their own hands after the signing of the exchange agreement. They went to their own banks, which were created escrow holders by them, and did not call upon respondents to do anything more in connection with the transaction.

Under the circumstances of this case, respondents' obligations were fully completed on August 23, 1927, when the valid contract of exchange was executed by appellants and House followed by an actual exchange completed by themselves. Respondents' commission was earned at the time of the execution of the contract of exchange, and at that time they were admittedly duly licensed real estate brokers.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

SMITH v. FRANS NELSON & SONS, Inc.*
Civ. 6587.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

June 27, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1931. Hearing
Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 24,
1931.

1. Escrows ⇨5.

Escrow instructions held to contemplate broker was to receive commission, to be held by escrow holder until escrow was closed.

Escrow instructions of party employing broker provided that escrow holder should pay broker certain commission and deliver to him as balance of commission a deed. Instructions of both parties provided for completion within thirty days from date, and each contained provision that, if conditions had not been complied with at expiration of such time, they should be completed at earliest possible date thereafter, unless written demand had been made for return of money or instruments deposited by either signer.

2. Brokers ⇨49(1).

Under agreement to secure acceptance of proposition for realty exchange, commission is earned when acceptance is obtained, regardless of completion of sale or ability of prospective purchaser.

3. Frauds, statute of ⇨106(1).

"Memorandum" under statute of frauds must contain essential terms of contract so expressed that it may be understood without parol evidence showing intention.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Memorandum," see Words and Phrases.]

4. Brokers ⇨43(3).

Escrow instructions directing escrow holder to pay commission when escrow was closed held insufficient "memorandum" of contract to procure acceptance of realty exchange (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Evidence of plaintiff broker disclosed that he was employed by defendant under oral contract "to get an acceptance" of proposition to exchange realty; that escrow instructions to title company, describing properties, were prepared and signed, defendant's escrow instructions including direction to pay plaintiff commission and to deliver to him as balance of commission a deed, instructions of both parties providing for completion within thirty days and extension, unless written demand had been made for return of money or instruments deposited by either signer. After some extensions, exchange was not consummated because of other party's inability to clear title.

5. Brokers ⇨64(2).

Where escrow instructions contained agreement to pay commissions for realty exchange, and party employing broker withdrew upon default of other party, provision respecting commission fell with contract between realty owners.

6. Brokers ⇨54.

If broker suing for commission pleaded employment to secure purchaser for realty, finding purchaser procured was ready, able, and willing to make proposed exchange would be material.

Such finding would be material as such an agreement would have been completed by producing purchaser ready, able, and willing, in event defendant had not lived up to agreement to exchange realty.

7. Brokers ⇨86(5).

Finding broker procured purchaser able, ready, and willing to make realty exchange held unsupported.

CRAIG, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Guy F. Bush, Judge.

Action by Charles R. Smith against Frans Nelson & Sons, Inc. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Rehearing denied; CRAIG, J., dissenting.

Hughes & Miller and Harold Aubry Miller, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edgar G. Wenzlaff, of Los Angeles, and John H. Miller, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

[1] Defendant has appealed from a judgment awarding a commission to plaintiff as a realtor. Plaintiff testified that he was a real estate broker on and prior to December 1, 1927, that about said date he was employed by defendant under an oral contract "to get an acceptance" of the latter's proposition to exchange certain real properties for property owned by one Fred W. Siegel, at a stipulated commission or compensation, and that on that date he succeeded in bringing the parties together. Escrow instructions to the title company describing the respective properties were prepared and signed, the parties agreeing to deposit deeds to their properties which could be delivered by the escrow holder when the latter could issue certificates of title showing the properties each was to receive to be vested in him or it "free of incumbrance except 2nd  $\frac{1}{2}$  taxes for fiscal year 1927-1928," etc. In defendant's escrow instructions appeared the following: "Pay Charles R. Smith \* \* \* \$5,250.00 commission and deliver to him as balance of commission a deed covering Lots 6 and 7 in Block 23 of Tract No. 7264, in the County of Los Angeles \* \* \* with certificate of title. \* \* \*" The instructions of both parties provided for completion within thirty days from date and each contained a provision that, if the conditions thereof had not been complied with at the expiration of such time, they should be completed at the earliest possible date thereafter, unless written demand had been made for the return of the money or instruments deposited by either signer.

In our opinion the only conclusion that can be drawn from such escrow instructions is that plaintiff was to be paid the money and be given the deed to the designated lots by the escrow holder, and that both money and deed were to be held by such escrow holder until the escrow was closed either by performance of the conditions or cancellation for failure so to do.

The conditions of defendant's escrow instructions were changed in various particulars not material here, and extensions were either permitted or expressly granted by it until February 21, 1928. It is admitted that plaintiff understood that defendant would require clear title in the contemplated exchange, and Siegel testified that there were many liens against his property, and that he had not been able to "clear" his property up to February 21, 1928, at which time defendant withdrew from the escrow, although he says he was still "proceeding to arrange to clear it."

[2-5] Appellant contends that there was no sufficient memorandum in writing of respondent's employment within the intent of the statute of frauds, and insists that respondent was not entitled to a commission except upon a consummation of the exchange as evidenced by the escrow instructions. The case was tried on the theory that the agreement set out in the amended complaint is within the statute of frauds, and for the purposes of this appeal we shall assume, without so deciding, that such is the case.

Respondent relies upon the language quoted from the instructions as a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute, the agreement in question being verbal, and in support thereof cites the case of Coulter v. Howard, 203 Cal. 17, 262 P. 751, 752, the facts of which he says "are strikingly similar to the facts in the instant case." The defendant in that case was the owner of a piece of real estate which she was willing to sell on certain terms, and "plaintiff, a licensed broker, was interested under a verbal contract with her in finding a purchaser on said terms." Pursuant to this verbal arrangement plaintiff found a prospective purchaser, "which fact was communicated to defendant," and he also obtained a written offer to purchase from said party, which was drafted at a certain bank which was to act as escrow holder for both purchaser and seller. Later the seller appeared at the bank and made a separate written offer to sell, which contained the following direction to the bank: "Pay F. Bradley Coulter a commission of 5% at close of escrow but only out of funds then due and payable to me out of this escrow." The seller later canceled the escrow, the court finding such action to be without right, and it was held that the language quoted constituted a sufficient memorandum of the verbal agreement. As the seller was at fault she was held liable, the purchaser found having been shown to be ready, willing, and able to perform his part of the agreement. It is to be noted, however, that in such case the verbal agreement was not to pay the commission upon securing an acceptance of the proposition of sale, as in the instant case, but upon finding a purchaser—an entirely different contract from the one alleged in the amended complaint here. In the instant case the agreement alleged was to "get an acceptance," in which case the commission is earned when such acceptance is obtained, regardless of the completion of the sale or the ability of the prospective purchaser, while in the Coulter Case the commission was only due when a purchaser ready, willing, and able was produced. Here there is not a word in the alleged "memorandum" to the effect that the commission is to be paid for respondent's services in securing the acceptance of appellant's proposition of exchange, which the record shows was amended several times in order to help Siegel over some of the obstacles he found in his way. "The pre-eminent qualification of a memorandum under the statute of frauds is 'that it must contain the essential terms of the contract, expressed with such a degree of certainty that it may be understood without recourse to parol evidence to show the intention of the parties.' 5 Browne on Statute of Frauds, § 371." Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 85, 193 P. 84, 86. In other words, it would seem that the statute was enacted to prevent the very thing respondent was permitted to do here, viz., to recover, not on a contract proved as shown by the memorandum, to wit, a contract "authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" (subdivision 6, § 1624, Civ. Code), but upon one to "receive the acceptance of a proposition of exchange," the only term of which, shown by the alleged memorandum, is the amount of commission (concerning which there is no dispute), the term of employment resting entirely in parol and possibly the subject of conflicting evidence. A memorandum sufficient in the latter case is shown in Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 517, 137 P. 254.

In the case of Jennings v. Jordan, 31 Cal. App. 335, 160 P. 576, an agreement was entered into for the exchange of properties of the parties thereto which contained the following: "The parties hereto further mutually covenant and agree that they will each pay to Herman Eppinger, Jr., a commission of eighteen hundred and twenty-five dollars." The assignee of Eppinger sued for such commission, although the exchange was never consummated. On page 337 of its opinion (31 Cal. App., 160 P. 576, 577) the court says: "The object of the contract actually entered into was to provide for an exchange of the properties of the parties thereto, each agreeing to convey title free of incumbrances, and the provision therein for the payment of a commission to Eppinger must be construed in its relation to the whole contract. Quite apart from the evidence of Jordan, one of the parties to it, that as to him it was not his intention that any commission should be paid unless the exchange of lands was actually effected, such would be the natural and logical construction of the instrument. Unless and until the exchange was consummated the parties would receive no benefit from Eppinger's efforts; and, as we have seen, there was no obligation existing to pay Eppinger anything except that arising from the written agreement under consideration. The provision relating to such payment is not separable from the remainder of the contract; and certainly as to Jordan, when the other party to it found himself unable to comply with its terms and consented to its cancellation (Jordan already having a right to rescind it) the whole contract fell, the provision relating to Eppinger's compensation with the rest. If the broker should suffer any hardship from such construction it is one inherent in the form of the contract entered into, and which was the only means he chose for his protection. It would certainly be a greater hardship upon the defendant to require him to pay $1,825 for services from which he had received no benefit and which were for the greater part voluntarily rendered." As to the contract between the purchaser and seller here, viz., the escrow instructions, such language is very pertinent; for quite apart from appellant's evidence to the effect that no commission was to be paid under it until the exchange was consummated, "such would be the natural and logical construction of the instrument." When appellant in this case withdrew from the escrow upon the default of Siegel, as it had the right to do, not only the contract between appellant and Siegel fell, but the provision in regard to commission as well. Another and very important distinction, we think, between the case before us and that of Coulter v. Howard, supra, is that in the latter the defendant withdrew before there was a default, leaving the contract, including the commission instruction, a live thing, to be enforced by either the purchaser or the realtor if it were so desired to do. While we agree with the cases cited by respondent, we fail to see where any of them holds that such language is a memorandum of any such agreement as that upon which plaintiff herein stands in his amended complaint.

We must also observe that this is not an action by a broker who has furnished a buyer who enters into a written contract with the seller, who then agrees in writing to pay a commission for the making of the sale, in which case having accepted such purchaser he is liable for the commission and cannot raise the question of readiness, willingness, or ability. Johnson v. Krier, 59 Cal. App. 330, 210 P. 966.

[6,7] In the instant case the court found that "defendant employed Charles R. Smith * * * to secure an acceptance of its proposition to exchange certain real properties * * * and * * * that subsequently defendant agreed in writing to pay the said Charles R. Smith" the agreed compensation "as a commission for securing" such acceptance. The court then found "that it is true that pursuant to such employment the said Charles R. Smith, the plaintiff herein, did on or about the first day of December, 1927, find a purchaser who accepted its proposition of exchange, to-wit: one Fred W. Siegel, who was ready, able and willing to exchange his said real property, hereinbefore set out, and who was accepted by the said defendant, on terms agreed upon; that it is further true that the said plaintiff brought Fred W. Siegel, the said purchaser by exchange, and defendant together and thereupon said defendant and such purchaser by exchange signed escrow instructions which together constituted a contract of exchange of said properties, which said contract of exchange contained the memorandum in writing to pay said plaintiff said commission." It would seem that all of such finding regarding the readiness, willingness, and ability of said Siegel is immaterial, in view of the fact that plaintiff must stand or fall on his alleged contract, which was "to get an acceptance" of defendant's proposition; and, as the issues are framed on such allegation, that portion of the finding would seem to be outside of the issues and should not be considered here. But even assuming the complaint had been amended by adding a count similar to that of the original complaint, based on evidence showing an employment of plaintiff to secure a purchaser—in which case such a finding would be material, as such an agreement would have been completed by producing a purchaser ready, willing, and able, in the event defendant had not lived up to its agreement—yet even in such case such a finding would seem to be unsupported by the evidence, as the undisputed testimony of Siegel, the purchaser produced, shows that he had not cleared the record title to his property of incumbrances aggregating approximately $390,000, either at the time the escrow had expired by its terms, December 31, 1927, or on February 11, 1928, to which time it had been extended and at which time a further extension of ten days was granted by appellant, which at the same time authorized the amendment of the escrow instructions so that it was obligated to loan Siegel the sum of $187,000, to be secured by mortgages on the lots being transferred to the latter, and which sum was to be used in said escrow toward clearing said incumbrances in order that Siegel could comply with the requirement of showing clear title to the property he was to convey to appellant. Even with such concession, Siegel had not cleared such property at the time of the expiration of said extension, and appellant withdrew from the escrow on account of the inability of the title company to close the same, the record title, according to the evidence, showing without dispute that it was still in that incumbered condition about a week before the date of trial, November 30, 1928. In view of all that, Siegel's testimony to the effect that at the time of the cancellation of the escrow he was still "proceeding to arrange to clear it," and that, except as to a trust deed for $250,000, notice of intention to sell under which had been recorded, he had cleared all incumbrances and had the releases in his desk, could hardly create a conflict, and in our opinion it would have to be resolved against said finding. Moreover, even though the verbal contract alleged in the amended complaint required no memorandum under the statute of frauds—on which question we express no opinion in view of the fact that the case was tried on the theory that a memorandum was required and in view of the conclusion of the trial court expressed in the following language: "If this were not in there 'Pay Charles R. Smith,' the plaintiff could not prevail at all because there would be no written instrument. In this written contract it takes it out of the statute of frauds"—in our opinion a new trial would be necessary, as such statement changed the effect of the escrow instructions and the order therein relative to the commission into a most damaging conclusion against appellant, when it would seem to be a very persuasive bit of evidence to be weighed by the court with the other evidence in appellant's favor and against the conflicting evidence of plaintiff, before drawing a conclusion in plaintiff's favor.

Judgment reversed.

I concur: WORKS, P. J.

CRAIG, J.

I dissent. The case in its essentials here is parallel with Coulter v. Howard, 203 Cal. 17, 262 P. 751, 752. In each case the parties to the escrow made a memorandum consisting of a stipulated direction to the holder to pay to the broker a commission upon the happening of an event. In Coulter v. Howard, supra, it was provided that they should "pay F. Bradley Coulter a commission of 5% at close of escrow." A finding of the trial court that this was "no written evidence of the employment of the plaintiff" was held reversible error. In the instant case the memorandum directed: "Pay Charles R. Smith * * * $5,250.00 commission and deliver to him as balance of commission a deed," etc. Upon the authority of the Coulter Case this memorandum was sufficient. It rendered admissible proof of the oral contract that the commission was agreed to be paid upon acceptance. Application of Balfour, 14 Cal. App. 261, 111 P. 615. The commission, then, was earned before "written demand had been made for the return of the money or instruments deposited by either signer." The contract for exchange was actually executed by the parties, and the acceptance was complete. In the Coulter Case, and in the instant case, the deal was abandoned by the parties through no fault of the broker. The difference in surrounding facts and circumstances delineated by the majority opinion is of no consequence as against the ultimate finding that upon execution of the exchange the service had been performed and the commission earned (Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 517, 137 P. 254), in the absence of a substantial legal distinction. In each instance the intent to pay, the amount, and the names of the parties to be bound and to be paid, were expressly stated. The contract of exchange was complete, and the failure to consummate it was not due to any act of the broker.

appeal was on the calendar; the same being set for 10 a. m. on Wednesday, the 10th day of June, 1931. Counsel appeared for the plaintiffs, and, having called attention to the foregoing facts, made a motion that the judgment be affirmed.

115 Cal.App. 255

GIAMBRUNO et al. v. CARMICHAEL'S
U-DRIVE AUTOS, Inc., et al.
Civ. 7899.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
June 27, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ⇨901.

On appeal, burden rests on appellants to present record showing any alleged error.

2. Appeal and error ⇨901.

Appellate court need not of its own motion search record for purpose of finding errors within record.

3. Appeal and error ⇨773(4).

Failure of appellants to file brief or to appear on hearing of appeal, although notified thereof, held to justify affirmance.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Giambruno, by his guardian ad litem, Antone Giambruno, and another, against Carmichael's U-Drive Autos, Inc., and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Barry Colding, Theodore Hale, and Carroll B. Crawford, all of San Francisco, for appellant Carmichael's U-Drive Autos.

Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, of San Francisco, for appellant Sheldon.

John J. McMahon, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J.

In the trial court the plaintiffs obtained a judgment awarding them damages for personal injury. Claiming to represent the defendant corporation, its insurance carrier took an appeal and has brought up typewritten transcripts. They were filed March 16, 1931. Thereafter the hearing of the appeal was regularly placed on the calendar of this court for its June term, 1931. When the hearing was called there were no briefs on file and no one appeared for the defendants, although they had been duly notified by the clerk of this court that the hearing of the [1-3] In this state it is a statutory rule that the judgment of a superior court duly made and entered is presumed to be regular. Furthermore it is the settled rule of this state that on an appeal the burden rests on the appellant to present a record showing any alleged error and, in due time, to serve and file briefs in which he shows the alleged error, that the error was prejudicial, and the authorities on which he relies. It is no part of the duty of this court of its own motion to search a record for the purpose of finding errors, if any, within that record.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed (Howell v. Howell, 101 Cal. 115, 35 P. 443), and it is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 207
BLAKE v. BENNETT et al.
Civ. 7643.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.
June 26, 1931.

1. Evidence ⇨502.

In action for damages to sheep by dog, refusing to permit cross-examination of plaintiff respecting what plaintiff paid for all his sheep and as to selling price held not error under circumstances.

Refusal to permit such cross-examination was not error, because plaintiff owned sheep of various brands which varied in value from $50 to $3,000 per head, and evidence was introduced to show approximate value of various groups of sheep killed by defendant's dog, and though there was evidence that shortly after killing of sheep plaintiff made some sales and some purchases, neither as to purchases nor as to sales was there any evidence that sheep either bought or sold was of same price as animals killed.

2. Evidence ⇨18.

Court notices fact that since January 1, 1918, values of livestock have been very high at times and very low at other times, and that changes have been frequent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Action by F. T. Blake against Nellie A. Bennett and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Eugene D. Bennett, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Philip B. Beggs and Harry J. Bias, both of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J.

The plaintiff sued to recover damages for injuries caused to his flock of ewes by a dog alleged to be owned by the defendant and her son. The defendants answered, and a trial was had before the court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Nellie A. Bennett, but in favor of her son. From a judgment entered on the findings, the defendant has appealed.

[1, 2] The defendant claims that the trial court erred in certain rulings made on the exclusion of certain lines of evidence. While conducting the cross-examination of the plaintiff, the attorney for the defendant asked the plaintiff how much he got for sheep which he subsequently sold. An objection was made to the question, and the objection was sustained. The attorney then asked permission to propound the question as to what the plaintiff paid for all of his sheep, and continuing, the attorney asked a ruling on that question. The plaintiff, assuming the question had actually been propounded to Mr. Blake, who was the witness in the chair, interposed an objection, which was sustained. The defendant points to these rulings and similar rulings, and claims they constituted reversible error. It will not be disputed that in some cases the purchase price and the sales price constitute some evidence of the value of a certain article. Travis Glass Co. v. Ibbetson, 186 Cal. 724, 730, 200 P. 595. But that question is nowhere presented in the record before us. The plaintiff was conducting a farm on which he was raising pure-bred Shropshire sheep. He had many that were pure bred, but as we understand the record, he had others that were not pure bred. The value of the pure-bred stock varies from $50 to $3,000 per head. Of his entire flock, the plaintiff claimed he had purchased some from Baldwin, some from Comb, and some from Meecham. The Baldwins varied in value from $20 to $100 each. Those killed were of a value of $50 to $60, and there were nine of them. The Comb ewes were of a value of $30 to $40 each. Five were killed. The Meecham ewes were of a value of from $15 to $25, and two were killed. At no time did either party attempt to identify any particular sheep and place a value on that particular animal. But the evidence introduced tended to show that, as a strain, the Combs were twice as valuable as the Meechams, and the Baldwins were twice as valuable as the Combs. There was evidence that within a few weeks of the killing by the dog the plaintiff had made some purchases. There was evidence that, a short time after that date the plaintiff made some sales. But neither as to purchases nor as to sales was there any evidence that the stock either bought or sold was of the same type as the animals which were killed. This court will take notice of the fact that since January 1, 1918, the values of livestock have been very high at times and very low at other times, and that the changes have been frequent. But in this record there is no evidence, and no offer to show, that, between the date when the purchases were made and the date when the sales were made, the market did or did not fluctuate and, if it did, whether prices rose or fell and to what extent. The plaintiff testified that his losses included $7 spent for veterinary; 9 Baldwin ewes at $75; 5 Comb ewes at $25; 2 Meecham ewes at $15; general damage to flock $400 or $500; 23 Baldwin lambs at $18; and 15 Comb lambs at $6. Besides these items, several sheep were crippled. His total claim was a grand total of $1,557. The judgment was for $437. It cannot be said that the trial court erred in its rulings, for no foundation was laid for the questions. Moreover, if any error was committed, it cannot be said that the defendant was prejudiced thereby.

As each wounded ewe died, both the plaintiff and his flock master, Mr. Cornthwaite, were present. Each was a witness and gave evidence as to values. Neither was called upon to fix his attention on any particular ewe, identify her, and state her value; yet, as we have shown, the values varied greatly. As to the values of specific animals varying in type, evidence of costs and sales prices in general was wholly irrelevant.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 410
PEOPLE v. FRANKLIN.
 Cr. 2075.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
 July 9, 1931.

1. Criminal law ⇨742(1).

Credibility of witnesses is exclusively for jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 1847).

2. Homicide ⇨250.

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for manslaughter by shooting deceased.

3. Homicide — 300 (8).

Evidence in homicide prosecution held to justify court in giving instructions on original assailant's right to avail himself of plea of self-defense.

The court instructed that, where one is making a felonious assault on another, or has created an appearance justifying that other in making a counter attack in self-defense, the original assailant cannot avail himself of the plea of self-defense unless he has first and in good faith declined further combat and fairly notified the other that he has abandoned the contest, and that whenever an assault is brought upon a person by his own procurement or under an appearance of hostility which he himself creates, with a view of having his adversary act on it, and he so acts and is killed, the plea of self-defense is unavailing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Bolin C. Franklin was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

W. B. Heinecke and Joseph P. Guerin, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Ralph O. Marron, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Defendant was accused by information of the crime of murder, and the jury returned a verdict finding him guilty of manslaughter. From an order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment entered on said verdict, he has appealed.

Appellant contends: (1) That the verdict is contrary to the evidence; (2) that there is no competent evidence to support the verdict; (3) that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions and also in modifying certain others requested by defendant; and (4) that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in several particulars, which prejudiced the jury and prevented defendant from having a fair and impartial trial.

The evidence shows that on the day in question the decedent, James R. Gentry, who had something over $200 in his possession when he entered defendant's barber shop, was shot by defendant between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, in a room in the rear of the establishment. The only parties present at the time, and who were witnesses to whatever may have transpired immediately preceding the shooting, were the decedent, the defendant and one Cooper, a barber who worked in defendant's shop. Henry Baker, a witness for the prosecution, testified that he, together with Gentry, Cooper, and another young man, the defendant also being present, engaged in a dice game in the room in which Gentry was shot between the hours of 11 a. m. and 12 m. of the day on which Gentry was killed; that Gentry was winning and expressed a desire to quit, but that defendant said to him: "You will stay here and gamble. I will make you stay. I have something here to make you stay," raising his coat as if showing a gun; that Gentry then said that he had something to protect himself with, displaying a knife, which, however, was closed; that defendant then remarked, "I have got something here to beat that." The witness further testified that he and the "other fellow" then left, leaving Gentry, Cooper, and defendant "standing around." The witness John Davis testified that he was sitting "out on the sidewalk on a cracker box" in front of a pool-room next to the barber shop at about 3 o'clock p. m. of that day, when he heard a pistol fired "two or three times in succession—fast"; that he got up and looked through the window of the barber shop "and I seen him [defendant] run into the front from the back with a pistol in his hand," facing toward the front of the shop; that defendant ran out of the front door and slammed it behind him and "stood there with it [the pistol] in his hand * * * and looked like he was trying to get an aim at someone"; that he saw Gentry "coming walking up to the front, stagger first on one side and to the other from out of the back"; that Gentry fell over and "his head struck the window, breaking the window out"; that "just the minute his head went through the window he [defendant] took the barrel in his hand and hit him and knocked him back" into the shop, "and he fell backwards." The witness Albert McCarthy testified that he was in a bakery shop in the vicinity between 2 and 3 o'clock p. m. of the day in question and heard shots fired in rapid succession; that upon running out into the street he saw defendant backing out of the door of the barber shop, while Gentry was staggering forward toward the door with an open knife in one hand and "a wad of money" in the other. The autopsy surgeon testified that three bullets struck Gentry, one passing through the right lung and another through the tip of both ventricles of the heart and that these caused his death. He also testified that there was a deep scalp wound directly over a depressed skull fracture.

[1, 2] It would seem that if there were no other evidence the jury might well draw the conclusion, which it did, from the little we have mentioned. Appellant urges that the evidence of Baker and Davis is unworthy of belief. The question of the credibility of the witnesses is exclusively for the jury (section 1847, Code Civ. Proc.). "If in any criminal case, there be evidence adduced logically tending and legally sufficient to prove the guilt of a defendant, this court cannot and will not disturb the jury's determination. * * * The province of the jury in weighing evidence, and determining the degree of credibility to be accorded the testimony of witnesses, is, under the rules of law, exclusive. * * * Thus, upon a review of the evidence by this tribunal, we may not examine with minuteness claims that witnesses are discredited, or that their evidence is unworthy of belief, or look to see whether some other conclusion might not have been warranted by the evidence." People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 200, 48 P. 75, 79. So we must conclude that there is sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

[3] (3) Appellant does not claim the instructions given were erroneous statements of the law, but insists that as to two of them—which were to the effect that, "where one is making a felonious assault upon another," or has "created an appearance justifying that other" in making a counter attack in self-defense, the original assailant cannot avail himself of the plea of self-defense unless "he has first and in good faith declined further combat, and fairly notified him that he has abandoned the contest," and that "whenever an assault is brought upon a person by his own procurement, or under an appearance of hostility which he himself creates with a view of having his adversary act upon it, and he so acts and is killed, the plea of self-defense is unavailing"—the evidence does not show any circumstances justifying them, as there were only two living eyewitnesses to the combat, defendant and Cooper. The testimony of the witness Baker would seem to justify the giving of such instructions, leaving it to the jury to accept such testimony or reject it in favor of that of defendant and Cooper. In view of the fact that the first story told by both defendant and Cooper was that Gentry came into the shop from the street, while defendant was counting his money previous to banking the same, and held the latter up, and that neither of them had ever seen him before, together with their subsequent stories and evidence that defendant did not have the amount of money found in decedent's hand after the shooting, and that the latter did, and that Gentry was in fact known to both of them, we cannot say that the jury was not justified in believing Baker and in rejecting the evidence of both defendant and Cooper, except in particulars wherein the jurors felt it was corroborated by other testimony.

We see no error in the instructions questioned, nor (4) do we find anything prejudicial in the actions of the district attorney assigned as misconduct. In every case where the prosecutor did go beyond the proper limits, the court at the request of defendant properly told the jury to disregard such action or remark. We have, however, made an examination of the entire record and have read all the evidence, and we fail to see how any such claimed misconduct or misdirection of the jury could have resulted in prejudice to appellant in any way.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

115 Cal.App. 381
FINCH v. EKSTROM.
Civ. 6664.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 8, 1931.

1. Dismissal and nonsuit $\S$ 80.

Entry in minutes of order granting nonsuit is final act in entering final judgment, and thereafter another judgment is improper (Code Civ. Proc.  $\S$  581).

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 790(3).

Where reversal of judgment appealed from would be ineffective because of prior judgment of nonsuit, appeal presented only moot questions and was dismissed.

At conclusion of plaintiff's case, defendant moved for a nonsuit, and trial court ordered that the motion be granted. Court's transcript on appeal disclosed order granting motion for nonsuit. Thereafter extensive findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, and at same time a judgment was entered dismissing the action. Subsequently, plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Action by H. R. Finch against Arthur Ekstrom. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

Jacobs & Jacobs, of Stockton, for appellant.

S. Ernest Roll, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit entered in an action to recover an attorney's fee for services rendered with relation to an industrial accident award, the amount sought being in addition to that found reasonable by the commission. From the reporter's transcript we note that at the conclusion of plaintiff's case on August 31, 1928, defendant moved for a nonsuit, to which the trial judge responded, after the motion had been argued: "It is the order of the Court that the motion be granted." In the clerk's transcript we find this order, entered in the minutes of August 31, in these words: "Defendant's motion for a non-suit is by the Court granted." Thereafter, September 27, extensive findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, and at the same time a judgment dismissing the action was made, which was entered the following day. Not quite a month later, October 23, another set of findings was filed, but no judgment appears to have followed.

The appeal before us was taken December 21 from "the judgment made and entered * * * on or about September 27, 1928."

[1, 2] This appeal must be dismissed. It is provided in section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, that the entry in the minutes of an order granting a nonsuit is the final act in entering a final judgment, and there is no place thereafter for another judgment. Henry v. Lingsweiler (1927) 81 Cal. App. 142, 253 P. 357; Bengel v. Traeger (1929) 100 Cal. App. 526, 280 P. 538; Lewis v. Hammond Lumber Co. (Cal. App. 1931) 300 P. 49. As a reversal of the judgment appealed from, if that should be required, would be of no avail because the judgment of nonsuit (August 31) would still be left undisturbed, this appeal presents only moot questions and should be dismissed. Burks v. Bronson (1922) 58 Cal. App. 143, 207 P. 1018.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

115 Cal.App. 429

ROGAFF v. BARTLES.
Civ. 6585.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division I, California.

July 10, 1931.

Fraud § 59(2).

Measure of purchaser's damages for vendor's misrepresentations that lot had not been filled held difference between actual value of property and value if representation had been true (Civ. Code, § 3300).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dailey S. Stafford, Judge.

Action by Harry Rogaff against Lillian M. Bartles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

D. H. Laubershelmer, of Los Angeles (Leland S. Bower, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

L. A. Bloom and Robert I. Kronick, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J.

On terms and conditions set forth in a contract entered into between plaintiff and defendant, it was agreed that plaintiff would buy from defendant and defendant would sell to plaintiff a certain lot or parcel of land. Among the conditions which were stated in the contract were: "Lot is B Zone. No setback, no fill, and no restrictions against building a 4-story apartment house." In connection with such transaction, following the delivery to plaintiff of a deed of the property and the commencement by him of the construction of a four-story apartment house thereon, in the course of the excavation for the foundation for said building it was discovered that the lot had been filled; which fact induced the outlay by plaintiff of a considerable sum of money in payment of labor and materials for the increased depth of excavations for foundation, brick and cement walls, etc. Thereafter, "relying upon the terms and conditions of the aforesaid agreement," plaintiff brought an action for damages against defendant. Preliminary to the rendition of a judgment in favor of plaintiff, from which defendant appeals to this court, in substance the trial court made its finding of fact that the following allegations of the complaint were true, to wit: "That thereafter, relying upon the terms and conditions of the aforesaid agreement, plaintiff commenced building operations for the erection of a four-story apartment house building; that during the course of the excavation for the foundation for said building it was ascertained that the ground on said lot was filled; that by reason of said filled ground plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of three thousand seven hundred and fifteen dollars, forty cents ($3,715.40), being the amount expended by him for additional excavating and concrete necessary to build a foundation for aforesaid building, over and above the amount required for the usual and ordinary foundation necessary for the aforesaid building, owing to the fact that plaintiff was forced to make much deeper excavations to reach solid ground and which said deeper excavation and foundation were ordered by the Building Department of the City of Los Angeles."

On the trial of the action, over the objection of defendant, evidence was introduced which showed the amount of money expended by plaintiff in making extra excavations, constructing walls, etc., made necessary in the construction of the building by reason of the greater required depth of such excavations on account of the upper part of the soil on the property in question having been filled. And such evidence furnishes the sole support for the finding by the trial court as to the damages suffered by plaintiff.

One of the reasons urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment herein is that in attempting to fix the amount of damages which plaintiff was entitled to recover against defendant, the trial court erroneously applied the rule set forth in section 3300 of the Civil Code to the effect that for the breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages "is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." In that connection it is the contention of appellant that in circumstances such as are presented by the facts herein, the true rule for the admeasurement of damages to the injured party is that he is entitled to recover a judgment only for the difference between the actual value of the property and the value which it would have had if the representations regarding the property had been true.

Although in the instant case it is possible that, considering the use to which the property here in question was put, the method adopted by the trial court for the ascertainment of the damage which resulted to the vendee would be a fairer method than that prescribed by the rule for which appellant contends, it is manifest that the safer rule and the one which would oftener result in justice to an aggrieved vendee would be that to which appellant has directed attention. It is clear that the defendant herein was placed on notice that at least one of the anticipated uses to which the property might be put was a site for the construction thereon of a four-story apartment house. However, by the terms of the contract, no provision is made for the type of such contemplated building. For aught that appears, it might have been either a frame, a brick, or a stone building, or even a building composed of steel and cement; and if the construction were of either of the last three mentioned kinds of buildings, it is probable that the depth of the necessary excavation and the thickness of the walls of the building would materially differ from the depth and width of excavation necessary for the construction of a frame building, with a resultant difference in the matter of original cost to the vendee, which in turn would be transferred to the vendor. Nor, even in the construction of a brick building, which apparently was the type selected by the vendee herein, was any restriction placed upon him regarding the thickness of the walls of the foundation to be used. He may have been content to follow the bare requirements prescribed by law, or by city ordinance; but such a wall might have appeared to him to be too frail or unsubstantial, with the result that in constructing his four-story apartment house he might have built a foundation so strong and so secure that if put to the test it would have supported a much taller building. In such circumstances, the question well might be pertinent as to whether the vendor should be held liable for such increased cost. On the other hand, had the vendee constructed a height-limit building of twelve or thirteen stories on the property here under consideration, the question regarding the amount of damage which he had suffered by reason of a false representation as to "no fill" might have been more difficult to solve. As an illustration of consequences which might result from the application of the rule of damages which was adopted by the trial court, let it be supposed that a man purchased a tract of land which was represented to him by the vendor as especially suited to the growth and production of walnuts, and particularly that the natural soil of the land was at least twenty feet deep—"no rock"; and let it be further supposed that immediately after the vendee commenced to set out his walnut trees on the land he discovered bedrock at a uniform depth of six inches below the surface of the soil: Would it be reasonable that the vendee be permitted to blast out the rock to a depth of nineteen and one-half feet, remove same from the land, substitute therefor a soil suitable to the growth and production of walnuts, and that the cost of such operations should be the measure of damages?

In the case of Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 511, 143 P. 729, 731, the nature of the cause of action which may be maintained by a person situated as is plaintiff in the instant case is discussed. In part, it is there said: "* * * The consummation of a fraud may arise in a contract executed or executory. But in either case the right of action immediately exists. This is so because even in the case of an executory contract the action for fraud is not upon the contract, but is collateral to the contract and is on the case. [Citing authorities.] But while such an action for deceit is not upon the contract, nevertheless it grows out of, and in that sense is founded on, the contractual relations between the parties. * * *" In that case the conclusion reached was that in an action for fraudulent representation as to the character of land conveyed, the measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of the property and its value had the property been as represented.

In Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 390, 92 P. 1011, 1015, it is declared that "the real question in all such cases is whether or not the property, if it had been as represented, would have been of substantially greater value than its actual value in its real condition."

And in Wood v. Niemeyer, 185 Cal. 526, 532, 197 P. 795, 798, the statement is made that in actions for deceit in the sale of real estate, the settled rule of law in this state is that the party defrauded is "entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of the property which he received and the value which it would have had if the * * * representations as to the value thereof had been true." (Citing authorities.) To the same effect, see Wellnitz v. Sacramento Suburban F. L. Co., 97 Cal. App. 51, 274 P. 1016, 276 P. 154.

Reasoning from the principle announced in the authorities to which attention has been directed, it would follow that in the instant action defendant was prejudiced in her substantial rights by the method used by the trial court in estimating the damages to which plaintiff was entitled.

It becomes unnecessary to devote attention to any of the remaining specifications of error presented in the brief of appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

115 Cal.App. 317

WHITE v. SARFF et al.

Civ. 6798.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 1, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ¶110, ¶113(1).

Appeal from order denying motion for new trial and motion to vacate judgment held unauthorized.

2. Brokers ¶4, 106.

In action by purchaser of leasehold estate against broker and surety, evidence supported findings that plaintiff made purchase and paid purchase price upon knowingly false representations of broker.

3. Brokers ¶102.

Broker, making positive statements of fact which, if not known to be true, were intended to influence purchaser to buy and were relied upon by purchaser, held answerable therefor (St. 1919, p. 1252, § 9a, as amended by St. 1929, p. 228).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clair S. Tappaan, Judge.

Action by L. White against G. W. Sarff and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and, from orders denying a motion for a new trial and a motion to vacate the judgment, defendants appeal.

Judgment affirmed, and appeal from intermediate orders dismissed.

Whitson & Sims, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Leo Freund, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

[1] The appellants, a licensed realtor and his surety, respectively, have appealed from a judgment rendered in favor of a purchaser of a leasehold estate. They also appealed from orders denying a motion for a new trial, and a motion to vacate the judgment. The appeal from said orders being unauthorized by the statutes, it will be dismissed. Chaplin v. Amador, 93 Cal. App. 358, 269 P. 544.

In response to a published advertisement in one of the metropolitan newspapers, White communicated with Sarff, and was assured by the latter that he had for sale a lease on a cafe in the city of Los Angeles; and that the representations in said advertisement that it was a five-year lease, that the lessee had on deposit as security therefor the sum of $400, that the agent would sell the same for a specified price, including such deposit, and that investigation was invited, were true. Subsequent negotiations resulted in a purchase by respondent. Previously to the execution of the transfer, White questioned the responsibility of the owner, and demanded of Sarff, "if you are sure everything is as you represent, you won't hesitate a minute to sign the bill of sale." The conveyance was prepared, reciting that it included the "lease on building No. 5511 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood, Calif., and all deposit up on lease. Lease in force now and to continue for 3 or more years at $175 per month." It was executed by the lessee and by Sarff. It developed after the sale, and the owner of the property testified, that he did not know the broker, that no lease of the premises existed, that he had not been asked, nor had he promised, to execute a lease; and that no amount of deposit had been held by him at the time in question.

[2, 3] Appellant contends that the evidence was not sufficient to justify or to support findings by the trial court that respondent made the purchase upon representations of the broker, that because thereof he paid the consideration; and that said representations were false, fraudulent, and untrue, that they were made to deceive, or that they were known to the broker to have been untrue. There is no merit in this contention. The broker, having made positive statements of facts which, if not known to be true, were intended to influence the purchaser to buy, and were relied upon by the latter, must be held answerable therefor to the same extent as if he had known that they were false. Gaffney v. Graf, 73 Cal. App. 622, 238 P. 1054.

Section 9a of the Real Estate Brokers Act (St. 1919, p. 1252), as amended by St. 1929, p. 228, expressly affords an injured party a right of action for a failure of the broker to perform his duties or to comply with the provisions of said act. Section 2 as amended by St. 1929, p. 223, thereof embraces leasing or sales of leases upon real property, and such an agent is especially enjoined from the making of any false promise of a character likely to influence, persuade, or induce another to act to his detriment. The findings of fact were not unwarranted. Nittler v. Cont. Casualty Co., 94 Cal. App. 498, 271 P. 555, 272 P. 309.

The judgment is affirmed. The appeal from intermediate orders is dismissed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

114 Cal.App. 509

PACIFIC FINANCE CORPORATION v. CITY OF LYNWOOD.

Civ. 6531.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 1, 1934.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court July 30, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ⇨832(4).

Rehearing will not be granted to consider evidence called to attention of appellate court for first time after determination of appeal.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨231(2).

Contract employing engineer on various street improvements held not invalid as violating prohibition against officer of city being interested in any contract (St. 1883, pp. 279, 886).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

On application for rehearing.

Petition denied.

For former opinion, see 300 P. 50.

Roscoe R. Hess, City Atty., of Lynwood, for petitioner.

John A. Rush and John L. Rush, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

A quotation from the early case of Andrews v. Mokelumne Hill Co. (1857) 7 Cal. 330, is apposite: "This case may be said * * * to be a fair illustration of a most pernicious practice which has sprung up among the bar in many instances, of presenting cases without that care and examination of the record which is necessary to a correct understanding of the case, and afterwards trusting to the indulgence of the Court by way of a petition for a rehearing. * * * Such a practice does great injustice to the bar and the Court, and frequently imposes upon us double labor, besides giving to the decisions a seeming contradiction. * * * And we wish to announce that, for the future, we will be less indulgent in such cases."

[1] In the petition for a rehearing, counsel now representing appellant, a substitution having been made, points out that our filed opinion ignores the stipulations with respect to the city ordinance on claims and demands. This is true, but appellant may not complain of it. As pointed out in the opinion, a city ordinance is not a general law, but a special one, which must be proven. Because appellant's counsel, in his opening brief, argued the effect of the ordinance under the topical heading, "The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," we suppose he regarded the ordinance as a general law which did not need to be proven. In harmony with this theory we found that neither his opening nor his closing brief contained in the text or in the supplement any copy of, reference to, or hint suggesting that, if we looked in the typewritten record, we would find a stipulation that the ordinance might be introduced in evidence or any evidence that an ordinance had been passed. Nor in support of the criticism, made in appellant's opening brief, that there was no finding respecting the passage of the ordinance, was there even a suggestion that a stipulation had been entered into or any evidence received respecting it. Not until the petition for a rehearing do we hear of this incident of the trial and that the ordinance was proven before the trial court. We know of no reason why an exception should be made in this case and a rehearing be granted to consider the effect of evidence called to our attention for the first time after the appeal has been submitted and determined.

Complaint is also made that there is no finding respecting the defense that, since March 3, 1926, there has been no revenue of the year 1925—26 with which to meet Schwabland's claim. Even the petition for a rehearing fails to reveal the existence of evidence which would support such a finding if it were required, and the briefs serve us no better, even in their generous direction to "see the following pages of the transcript," enumerating some thirty-four. In the absence of evidence, of course, appellant cannot complain if the finding is absent also.

[2] Another thought, suggested for the first time in the petition for a rehearing, is that the contract is invalid because contrary to section 886 of the Municipal Corporation Act, St. 1883, p. 279 (and similar provisions elsewhere), prohibiting any officer of the city from being interested directly or indirectly in any contract with the city. This common-law rule (County of Shasta v. Moody [1928] 90 Cal. App. 519, 265 P. 1032) is predicated on the principle that no man can serve two masters (Stockton P. & S. Co. v. Wheeler [1924] 68 Cal. App. 592, 229 P. 1020; Nielsen v. Richards [1925] 75 Cal. App. 680, 243 P. 697), and that an officer of a city "cannot be permitted to place himself in any position where his personal interest will conflict with the faithful performance of his duty" (Berka v. Woodward [1899] 125 Cal. 119, 128, 57 P. 777, 780, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31). Because we are unable to see how these reasons for the rule are remotely applicable to the situation in this case, we doubt that the contract is in violation of section 886, even should the appointment of Schwabland as an officer be regarded as a permanent one.

We are unable, however, to distinguish this case from Kennedy v. City of Gustine, 199 Cal. 251, 248 P. 910 (cited in our opinion). It is evident that the Supreme Court was not unmindful of section 852 of the Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, p. 267, as amended by St. 1919, p. 19, § 1) as well as of section 41 of the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 751 [amended St. 1929, p. 1652]) from which they quoted. Rather the Supreme Court saw there, as we see here, a plain intent existing from the first not to appoint a civil engineer under section 852 of the Municipal Corporation Act (unless temporarily without pay) nor to fix his compensation and prescribe additional duties by ordinance, as is the method section 881 of the act (St. 1883, p. 278) provides shall be followed for fixing the duties and compensation of city officials. Instead, from the beginning in each case, it was the intention to secure engineering services required for certain improvements for which petitions were on file, such services to be paid for only under improvement acts, the employment to be that authorized by section 41 of the Improvement Act of 1911 (or section 3 of the Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925 [St. 1925, p. 853, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1383, § 13] in our case). This was the intent, and in accomplishing it, in the case at bar, a contract calling for legal work and other matters not the duty of a civil engineer as an officer was entered into. If, as held in the Kennedy case, the relation of employee and not that of an officer results, it may not be changed by the employee taking an oath of office. Incidentally, provision was made that routine engineering services, which the city did not obligate itself to request from Schwabland nor he agree to do if requested, were, if done, to be paid for on a cost plus nothing basis. Nor is there any ground for the criticism that by the contract Schwabland may claim a life job. The recitals of the contract refer to petitioned improvements, and, these done, there is no theory on which he could claim the contract covers others. His present action is not consistent with any claim for profits denied him on other work.

We see no reason why the agreement on which the plaintiff relies, as assignee, should be held invalid, and we know of no reason why a city, as well as an individual, should not be expected to keep faith with those with whom it contracts, or else respond in damages for its failure.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

115 Cal.App. 267
SUTTON v. TANGER.

ALMSTEAD v. SAME.
Civ. 7572.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

June 29, 1931.

1. Statutes ☞74(1).

Statute respecting liability of owner of automobile driven by another held not to violate constitutional provision requiring all laws to be uniform because inapplicable to owners of horse-drawn vehicles (Civ. Code, § 1714¼; Const. art. 1, § 11).

2. Names ☞18.

Jury held warranted in inferring identity of person driving defendant's automobile from identity of name (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 25).

Evidence disclosed that defendant rented his automobile to person giving his name as L. F. and showing a license in that name, and passenger in automobile, who was dozing at time of accident, testified that about an hour or two after the rental he was introduced to man with that name, and that such man was driving automobile at time of accident.

3. Evidence ☞67(1).

Jury held warranted in inferring that operation of automobile by same person continued from its rental to accident (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32).

4. Automobiles ⇨192(1).

Word "operate" in statute respecting automobile owner's liability means to direct or superintend and is sufficient to hold owner liable for negligence of person to whom his permittee has temporarily intrusted automobile (Civ. Code, § 1714¼).

Civ. Code, § 1714¼, makes the owner liable for the negligence of any person using or operating his automobile with his implied or express permission; the words "using" and "operating" in the statute not being synonymous terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Operate" and "Use; Used," see Words and Phrases.]

5. Trial ⇨108½.

In automobile collision case, court properly overruled objection to question collectively on voir dire whether any juror had interest in certain casualty company.

6. Automobiles ⇨245(80).

Contributory negligence of motorist struck, when turning into vehicular lane to board ferry, by defendant's automobile traveling rapidly held for jury.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Actions by Dorothy Sutton and by F. N. Almstead against C. A. Tanger, doing business under the firm name and style of Owl-U-Drive-or-Fly Auto Rental Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore Hale, Barry J. Colding, and Carroll B. Crawford, all of San Francisco, and B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kilpatrick & Goodman, of Oakland, for respondents.

GRAY, Justice pro tem.

[1] In the above-entitled actions, tried together before a jury, each respondent recovered a judgment for injuries received in a collision between an automobile operated by Dorothy Sutton and in which F. N. Almstead was a passenger, and another automobile, owned by appellant and operated by a renter. Appellant first contends that his demurrers to each complaint should have been sustained, because, while the facts pleaded shows his liability under section 1714¼ of the Civil Code, such section violates the requirement of article 1, section 11, of the state Constitution, that all laws be uniform, by failing to be applicable to owners of horse-drawn vehicles. As broadly stated by him, this criticism is equally applicable to all the regulations of the California Vehicle Act, which have been repeatedly held constitutional in that regard. Matter of Application of Schuler, 167 Cal. 282, 139 P. 685, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 706; In re Schmolke, 199 Cal. 42, 248 P. 244; Old Homestead Bakery, Inc., v. Marsh, 75 Cal. App. 247, 242 P. 749. More narrowly stated, the section does impose upon an automobile owner alone a new liability analogous to the doctrine of respondeat superior, without the existence of the relationship of employment or agency or family and irrespective of negligence in ascertaining the competency of the driver. In Buelke v. Levenstadt, 190 Cal. 684, 214 P. 42, section 24 of the Motor Vehicle Act, which imputes negligence of the minor to the person who signed his application for operator's license, was held not violative of the above constitutional provision. While it is true that an automobile may not itself be a dangerous instrumentality, yet, in the hands of an incompetent person, it may, under modern traffic conditions, become extremely dangerous to life, limb, or property. The greater potential danger in case of a fast-moving automobile as compared to a slow-traveling horse-drawn vehicle warranted the Legislature in placing its owner in a separate class by imposing this new liability upon him, effectively requiring him to ascertain, at his peril, the competence of the borrower. A similar statute of the state of Michigan was held in Stapleton v. Independent Brewing Co., 198 Mich. 170, 164 N. W. 520, L. R. A. 1918A, 916, to be a valid exercise of the police power. In Robinson v. Bruce Rent-A-Ford Co., 205 Iowa, 261, 215 N. W. 724, 61 A. L. R. 851, another similar statute was upheld as not violating due process of law. A statute of the state of New York, identically worded as our Code section in its material part, was also sustained as constitutional. Feitelberg v. Matuson, 124 Misc. Rep. 595, 208 N. Y. S. 786, 789; Stapleton v. Hertz Drivervself Stations, 129 Misc. Rep. 772, 222 N. Y. S. 579.

[2-4] The appellant next urges that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict because it does not show who was driving his car at the time of the accident. Appellant admits that about four hours before the accident he rented his automobile to a person giving his name as Leroy Foster and showing a license in that name. A passenger in this automobile, who was dozing at the time of the accident, testified that about an hour or two after such rental he was introduced to a man with this name, and that such man was driving the automobile at the time of collision. This driver fled the scene of the accident and has never been seen since. The jury was warranted in inferring an identity of person from identity of name (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 25); and that the operation of the automobile by the same person continued from its rental to the accident

(Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32). But, even if the renter was not the operator, appellant would still be liable. The Code section makes the owner liable for the negligence of any person using or operating his automobile with his implied or express permission. The word "operate," meaning "to direct or superintend," is sufficient to hold the owner liable for the negligence of a person to whom his permittee has temporarily intrusted the automobile. Bosse v. Marye, 80 Cal. App. 109, 250 P. 693. A statute providing that the owner of an automobile shall not be liable for injury occasioned by its negligent operation, unless it was being driven by his express or implied consent or knowledge, does not require that the particular driver must be known, and his driving consented to by the owner; and hence the owner would be liable for negligent injury caused by his automobile loaned to another and being driven by the latter's brother at the time of the accident. Kerns v. Lewis, 246 Mich. 423, 224 N. W. 647. The following excerpt from Feitelberg v. Matuson, supra, is particularly pertinent: "What was the purpose of adding the word 'use' unless it was meant to include the person who had the actual, though not physical, control of the car, and who was constituted by the owner is master ad hoc. If the liability of the owner were limited to the acts of the operator, the statute would become a dead letter in most cases. Its evasion would be an easy matter. The statute must be interpreted in harmony with its verbiage. We cannot hold that 'using' and 'operating' are interchangeable or synonymous words. If the owner chooses to intrust his car to another person, he invests such person, so long as he uses the car, with the same authority in regard to the management of the car which the owner has. That authority includes the right to select the operator. The statute so provides in unmistakable language."

[5] Respondent asked the jurors collectively on their voir dire the following question: "Has any lady or gentleman in the jury box any interest either as a stockholder or bondholder, agent or otherwise in the New Amsterdam Casualty Company?" Appellant merely objected to the question, but requested no admonition by the court. The court properly overruled the objection. Dougherty v. Ellingson, 97 Cal. App. 87, 275 P. 456.

[6] Immediately prior to the accident, respondent Sutton had driven her sedan, at a rate of from 8 to 10 miles per hour, between intersecting streets, across the Embarcadero, having a width of 200 feet, preparatory to boarding the Southern Pacific automobile ferry from San Francisco to Oakland. When her automobile was 8 feet westerly of the curb projected and as she was turning into the vehicular lane, at the direction of the company's traffic officer, the sedan was struck at its right front door by the left front portion of appellant's automobile, traveling on its right side of the street, and slid around a distance of 3 or 4 feet. Although the street was well lighted and nothing obstructed respondent's view to the right, she testified she did not see appellant's car until it was right on top of her. As to this respondent alone, appellant argues that she was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in failing to see the other car prior to the collision. But other additional facts required the submission of this question to the jury. On cross-examination, this respondent testified that she went across the Embarcadero looking both ways; that when in the center of the Embarcadero, and when three-quarters of the way across, she looked but did not see the other automobile until it was right on top of her. The traffic officer testified he first saw the other automobile when it was 60 or 70 feet from the point of impact, and that it was then traveling at between 35 and 40 miles per hour. At this rate of speed it would travel this distance in approximately one second of time. Whether respondent had taken proper precautions of observation under all the attendant circumstances was a question of fact which the court properly left to the jury's decision.

The judgments are affirmed.

We concur: SPENCE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

In re YOUNG'S ESTATE.*

ALLEN et al. v. YOUNG et al.
Civ. 4388.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 6, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 5, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

1. Wills ⚡858(1).

Legatees named in clause disposing of balance of estate consisting of property described held not entitled to insurance on death of last survivor of permitted class of beneficiaries.

2. Army and navy ⚡51½.

Amendment respecting beneficiaries of war risk insurance held retroactive, taking effect as of October 6, 1917 (Act Cong. March 4, 1925, § 14 [38 USCA § 514]).

3. Descent and distribution ⚡6.

Rights of parties to estate must be determined as of date of deceased's death.

⚡For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*For subsequent opinion see 8 P.2d 346.

4. Army and navy ☞51½.

Naming of beneficiary in war risk policy does not limit insured's right to make change or vest in beneficiary indefeasible interest (World War Veterans' Act 1924, § 303, as amended by Act Cong. March 4, 1925, § 14 [38 USCA § 514]).

5. Army and navy ☞51½.

Insured could execute will and name person to whom war risk insurance should go (World War Veterans' Act 1924, § 303, as amended by Act Cong. March 4, 1925, § 14 [38 USCA § 514]).

6. Wills ☞440.

Court must determine testator's intent from words used in will (Civ. Code, § 1318).

7. Army and navy ☞51½.

War risk insurance paid to insured's estate on death of life beneficiary must be considered as paid as of date of insured's death, and those entitled to receive estate are determined as of that date.

8. Wills ☞548.

Statute respecting words in will referring to death or survivorship held inapplicable to will giving testator's father insurance and in case of his death to another (Civ. Code, § 1336).

9. Wills ☞612(1).

Will giving father insurance, and in case of his death to another, did not give father only life estate.

10. Wills ☞540.

Where there is devise to one person in fee and in case of his death to another, contingency referred to is death of first-named devisee during testator's life.

11. Wills ☞548.

Words in will referring to survivorship simply relate to time of testator's death.

12. Wills ☞612(1).

Will bequeathing insurance to testator's father, and in case of his death to another, conveyed absolute title to father.

13. Wills ☞612(3).

Where will bequeathed insurance to testator's father, and in case of his death to another, words regarding use of money to be made by the other person did not limit absoluteness of gift to father.

14. Army and navy ☞51½.

Where will gave testator's father war risk insurance and father was deceased at date of distribution sought, distribution should be made to testator's father's estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Hilliard Comstock, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Ralph Clark Young, deceased. Proceeding between Jane B. Allen and others, as claimants and contestants, and Fred Young, administrator, and Henry Ralph Siess, legatee. From a decree distributing the proceeds of a certain life insurance policy, Jane B. Allen and others appeal.

Reversed and remanded.

Jacobs, Blanckenburg & May, of San Francisco, and J. Harold McAlpine, of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Lewis H. Cromwell, Karl Brooks, and F. A. Meyer, all of Petaluma, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J.

This cause is before us upon an appeal from the decree of the trial court distributing to Henry Ralph Siess the proceeds of a certain life insurance policy.

The deceased, Ralph Clark Young, was an enlisted man in the United States Navy during the World War. While in the service he applied for and obtained an insurance policy in the amount of $10,000, payable as provided in the Act of Congress approved October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. 398). The application designated his estate as beneficiary. Certificates were issued by the government pursuant to the applications made by the deceased, to the effect that the $10,000 insurance would be payable, in case of death or total, permanent disability, in monthly installments in the sum of $57.50 each. The Act of Congress referred to was amended in 1919 (40 Stat. 1160, 41 Stat. 274, 371), revised and re-enacted in 1924 (43 Stat. 607), and on March 4, 1925, section 303 of the act, necessary to be considered herein, was amended (section 14 [38 USCA § 514]) to read as follows: "If no person within the permitted class be designated as beneficiary for yearly renewable term insurance by the insured either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured or survives the insured and dies prior to receiving all of the two hundred forty installments or all such as are payable and applicable, there shall be paid to the estate of the insured the present value of the monthly installments thereafter payable, said value to be computed as of date of last payment made under any existing award: Provided, That all awards of yearly renewable term insurance which were in course of payment on the date of the approval of this act, shall continue until the death of the person receiving such payments, or until he forfeits same under the provisions of this act," etc. The various amendments made by the acts of Congress to which we have referred, enlarged the permitted class of beneficiaries, but have no bearing upon the questions tendered for determination upon this appeal.

On May 17, 1918, Ralph Clark Young made and executed his last will and testament in the following words and figures, to wit:

"May 17th, 1918.

"I Ralph Clark Young declare this my last will and testimony. To my father George C. Young my ten thousand dollar insurance policy in case of his death this said policy is to go to my Godson Henry Ralph Siess. My idea is that he uses this money to go to college and to help his mother. My interest in the Young, Patterson Co. of Oakland goes to R. H. Patterson my pardner and friend. The house hold furnishings silverware and jewelry I wish my three cousins Alma, Gladys and Dora to have. The balance of my estate consisting of life insurance policy of one thousand dollars stock in Taft & Penoyer Co. Oakland and real estate in Petaluma and Alameda I wish divided into four equal parts one-fourth going to each of the following: Mrs. Morris Taylor, Miss Gladys Holmes, Miss Dora Holmes, and Mrs. Emma McCoy. I hereby appoint Mr. Wm. H. Holmes administrator to serve without bonds and with power to buy or sell without order from the courts.

"Ralph Clark Young."

[1] On October 18, 1918, Ralph Clark Young died. His father, George C. Young, who survived him, was then paid installments of insurance at the rate of $57.50 per month until his death on April 13, 1921. Thereafter the monthly installments were paid to certain aunts and an uncle, and upon the death of the last survivor of the permitted class of beneficiaries, the present value of the remaining installments was paid to the estate of Ralph Clark Young, deceased, and is now awaiting distribution. The appellants Dora A. Holmes, Gladys E. Holmes, and Alma Holmes Taylor claim that this sum falls into and becomes a part of the residuary portion of the estate of said deceased, and base their contention upon the fourth clause of the will. This contention, however, we think is without merit, as that clause of the will specifically mentions the balance of the estate intended to be devised to the persons therein named, and under that clause they are not entitled to any more.

[2-4] Without following all of the argument of appellants, it suffices here to state that the Act of Congress of March 4, 1925, was retroactive and took effect as of October 6, 1917, and the rights of the parties to the estate of Ralph Clark Young, deceased, must be determined as of the date of his death, and as though all of the provisions of the law relative to the enlargement of the permitted class of beneficiaries and the right to make disposition of any sums coming into the estate of the deceased, existed as of the date of the death of the decedent. Thus, the right of the deceased to dispose of the fund now constituting a part of his estate is the same as though that fund had been paid to him preceding his death. While the administration and distribution are delayed, all other rights are considered as existing as and of that date. The naming of a beneficiary in the insurance policy, as one entitled to receive the monthly installments does not, under the acts of Congress, limit the right of the insured to make a change thereof, or vest in the beneficiary an indefeasible interest therein. The foregoing statements which we have made are supported by the following cases: Palmer v. Mitchell, 117 Ohio St. 87, 158 N. E. 187, 55 A. L. R. 566; In re Pivonka, 202 Iowa, 855, 211 N. W. 246, 55 A. L. R. 570; Williams v. Eason, 148 Miss. 446, 114 So. 338, 55 A. L. R. 574; Woodworth v. Tepper, 152 Md. 332, 136 A. 536, 55 A. L. R. 578; In re Ogilvie's Estate, 291 Pa. 326, 139 A. 826. See, also, extended note in 55 A. L. R., beginning on page 580.

[5] The rights of the deceased to execute a will and name the person to whom his insurance policy should be devised, being thus established, there remains to be considered the legal effect of the first clause of the will, which reads as follows: "To my father George C. Young my ten thousand dollar insurance policy in case of his death this policy is to go to my Godson Henry Ralph Siess. My idea is that he uses this money to go to college and to help his mother."

Upon this appeal two sections of the Civil Code are presented for our consideration: First, section 1318, which reads: "In case of uncertainty arising upon the face of a will, as to the application of any of its provisions, the testator's intention is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made, exclusive of his oral declarations." And section 1336, which reads: "Words in a will referring to death or survivorship, simply, relate to the time of the testator's death, unless possession is actually postponed, when they must be referred to the time of possession." The contention of the appellants is that the wording of the clause of the will quoted is unambiguous; that it refers only to a situation, and not a contingency at the date of the death of the testator. On the part of the respondent the theory is put forward that the words of the first clause of the will are ambiguous, and that a contingency is presented, to wit, the death of George C. Young, and the actual possession of the installments. In other words, it is contended by the appellants that George C. Young took an unlimited interest in the insurance policy so far as any interest therein was possessed by the testator Ralph Clark Young. The contention of the respondents is to the effect that George C. Young took, in reality, only a life interest, and that the words of the will constituted the creation of a remainder over, to Henry Ralph Seiss.

[6] The law appears to be well settled that in ascertaining the intent of the testator, we must look only to the terms of the will, and must determine his intent from the words used. This rule is very carefully stated in the Estate of Young, 123 Cal. 337, 55 P. 1011, 1013, where the court, speaking through Justice Henshaw, said: "The inquiry will not go to the secret workings of the mind of the testator. It is not, what did he mean? but it is, what do his words mean? In Bingel v. Volz, 142 Ill. 214, 31 N. E. 13, 16 L. R. A. 321, 34 Am. St. Rep. 64, it is well said: 'The purpose of construction, as applied to wills, is unquestionably to arrive if possible at the intention of the testator; but the intention to be sought for is not that which existed in the mind of the testator, but that which is expressed in the language of the will.'" A number of cases are then cited supporting this statement. It is then further stated: "The inquiry of the court in construing a will comes to an end when the intent has been discovered from the language of the will. * * * It is never at liberty to supply omissions, or to wrest language from its plain import, and give it such a meaning as it may be guessed the testatrix would have intended if she had known that her own efforts to create a legal devise had resulted in failure."

[7] While it is clear that the naming of a beneficiary in a war risk policy of insurance gives the beneficiary no title to the policy or interest therein further than the right to receive the specified monthly payments, yet in view of the cases which we have cited that the right to the fund paid to the estate by the government upon the death of the last beneficiary, is to be considered as paid as and of the date of the death of the insured, and that those entitled to receive the estate are to be determined as and of that date, as established by the cases which we have cited, and especially the long list of cases found in the note set forth in 55 A. L. R., page 596, all the asserted ambiguity in the first clause of Ralph Clark Young's will disappears. Likewise, all contention as to postponement of possession. Speaking as and of that date, the right of immediate possession to the proceeds of the insurance policy was immediately and actually vested. Being in law then and there a part of his estate, the legatees named to take possession thereof, and to whom it was given without any limitation as to his right to take and enjoy the whole thereof and consume the principal sum so paid, we find nothing upon which to base a contingency. Considered in the light of the decisions which we have referred to, there is presented entirely a situation as to who would be entitled to take the fund of the insurance policy, and the whole thereof, as of the date of the death of the insured. As said in the case of Marvel v. Wilmington Trust Co., 10 Del. Ch. 163, 87 A. 1014, 1015: "No legatee takes anything 'until after the death of the testator, and every legatee takes his gift immediately upon the death of the testator, if there is nothing to indicate a suspension of the vesting until a later period."

[8, 9] Read in the light of the foregoing decisions, there is nothing in the will which would limit the right of George C. Young to take the fund represented by the insurance policy, as and of the date of the death of Ralph Clark Young, immediately upon the happening of such occurrence. George C. Young living at that date, there was no change in the situation contemplated by the testator, between the date of making his will and the date of the bequest becoming effective. The cases which we have cited, establishing the law relative to war risk insurance policies, and the date from which they speak, completely answer respondent's argument based upon the law relative to annuities, as the whole fund was payable to the legatee George C. Young as and of the date of the death of Ralph Clark Young. There being nothing in the will indicating postponement of possession, and the law of distribution, speaking as and of the date of the death of the testator, giving immediate possession to the legatee named in the will, there is nothing upon which the provisions of section 1336, Civil Code, can operate. The right to enjoy the subject-matter of the bequest was vested without any limitation; that is, there are no words in the will limiting the bequest to George C. Young or from which it can be construed that the testator intended only to give him a life estate.

[10, 11] The authorities are practically unanimous in support of the following: "It may be regarded as a settled rule of construction that where there is a devise to one person in fee, and in case of his death to another, the contingency referred to is the death of the first-named devisee during the life-time of the testator." In re Application of N. Y. L. & W. Ry. Co., 105 N. Y. 89, 11 N. E. 492, 59 Am. Rep. 478. In 26 California Jurisprudence 109, the text-writer thus sets forth the rule of construction "a gift in form, to A, and at or after his death to B, passes to A a life estate, and to B, and estate in remainder. But where the devise or bequest is to A, and in the event of his death, to B, the gift to B is contingent, the contingency being A's death in the testator's lifetime. That is to say, the limitation over to B is merely a lapse provision, taking effect only in case A predeceases the testator." Citing Estate of Hoytema, 180 Cal. 430, 181 P. 645; Estate of Clancy, 3 Cal.

Prob. Dec. 343. Words in a will referring to survivorship simply relate to the time of the testator's death. Estate of Rounds, 180 Cal. 386, 181 P. 638; Estate of Alexander, 149 Cal. 146, 85 P. 308, 9 Ann. Cas. 1141.

As to whether the language of the will relates to a contingency or a situation, the text found in 26 California Jurisprudence 107 is applicable. Among other things it is there said: "If the gift is one that is effective at the testator's death, the presumption is that the testator considered the contingency as happening during his lifetime, but if the devise or bequest is limited, to take effect during or at the termination of a period subsequent to the testator's death, the inference is that the testator intended the gift to be dependent upon the occurrence of the event during this period, rather than during his lifetime." Here, as we have seen, the gift is effective to George C. Young as and of the date of the death of Ralph Clark Young, and is not postponed to a future date, and is not limited upon the contingency of any after event.

Viewed in the light of the law that the right involved herein has its inception as and of the date of the death of Ralph Clark Young, the decisions relied upon by the respondent establish the error of the ruling of the court involved upon this appeal. See Marvel v. Wilmington Trust Co., supra, and Small v. Marburg, 77 Md. 11, 25 A. 920, 922, where it is said, quoting from Jarman on Wills: "It has become an established rule that, where the bequest is simply to A., and, in case of his death, or if he dies, to B., A., surviving the testator, takes absolutely." The distinction is likewise made in Jarman on Wills, between a case where the possession, or right to possession vests as of the date of the death of the deceased, or is postponed to some future time. Schouler on Wills (6th Ed.) § 1040, thus states the rule: "If a bequest is to one person, and 'in case of his death', to another, the gift over takes effect prima facie only in the event of the prior legatee's death before the period of payment or distribution, agreeable to the rule which favors an early vesting and the prompt settlement of the decedent's estate."

A very well-considered case is that of Fischer v. Fischer, 75 N. J. Eq. 74, 71 A. 488. It is there said: "A bequest to one and in case of his death to another, the expression 'in case of his death' unexplained by the context refers to the event of death happening before the death of the testator." Further: "An absolute bequest to a person, followed by the expression 'in case of his death,' cannot be construed to mean 'at his death' or 'from his death'; the element of contingency being absent in that case, as no proper force could then be given to the expression, 'in case of.'"

Practically the holding of all the cases is summed up and set forth in the opinion found in the case of Carpenter v. Sangamon Loan & Trust Co., 229 Ill. 486, 82 N. E. 418, 419. From this case we quote the following: "The rule which we think controls is clearly stated in that portion of the opinion in the case of Britton v. Thornton, 112 U. S. 526, 5 S. Ct. 291, 28 L. Ed. 816, which reads as follows: 'When, indeed, a devise is made to one person in fee, and "in case of his death" to another in fee, the absurdity of speaking of the one event which is sure to occur to all living as uncertain and contingent has led the courts to interpret the devise over as referring only to death in the testator's lifetime. 2 Jarman on Wills, c. 48; Briggs v. Shaw, 9 Allen (Mass.) 516; Lord Cairns in O'Mahoney v. Burdett, L. R. 7 H. L. 388, 395. But when the death of the first taker is coupled with other circumstances which may or may not ever take place, as, for instance, death under age or without children, the devise over, unless controlled by other provisions of the will, takes effect, according to the ordinary and literal meaning of the words, upon death, under the circumstances indicated, at any time, whether before or after the death of the testator.'"

[12, 13] That the first clause of the will of Ralph Clark Young conveyed to George C. Young an absolute title to the insurance policy, is supported by the decision of this court in the Matter of the Estate of Mattley, also reported as Pinegar v. McGee (Cal. App.) 294 P. 37. In that case, just as in this, the fund represented by the insurance policy was paid to the estate of the testator, and it is held that under the will of the testator the legatee to whom the war risk insurance policy was bequeathed took the proceeds of the policy, and being deceased, distribution should be made to her estate. The words of the will expressing the thought of the testator as to the uses of the money to be made by Henry Ralph Siess, do not in any particular limit the absoluteness of the gift to the father of the deceased, George C. Young.

[14] From what we have said we think it is clear that the clause of the will under consideration presents only a case of substitution, and not of contingency, and under the law, being interpreted, and speaking as and of the date of the death of Ralph Clark Young, it must be held that all of the fund paid over by the government representing, or represented by the insurance policy, vested in and became the absolute property of George C. Young, and he being deceased at the date of distribution sought in this proceeding, distribution should be made to the estate of George C. Young and to those entitled to take under and through him.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance herewith.

I concur: PRESTON, P. J.

115 Cal.App. 374

GUILD v. BROWN et al.

Civ. 7394.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

July 8, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 7, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

Automobiles ⇨ 197(1).

Admiral in United States Navy held not liable, under respondeat superior doctrine, for negligence of enlisted man acting as chauffeur in driving government automobile on return to headquarters after delivering admiral to private club.

Driver of automobile at time of accident was enlisted man in United States Navy, and his detail on shore duty embraced duties of chauffeur, including duty to operate service automobiles as directed. Driver at appointed time, and pursuant to order, drove admiral to private club where he left him, and, on return to headquarters, collision in question occurred. Both enlisted man and admiral served under same employer, though each had different status and different duties to perform. Automobile had been placed at disposal of admiral by governmental authority which permitted its use for whatever purpose the admiral might determine.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Eva R. Guild against W. F. Brown and another. Judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant Thomas Washington appeals.

Reversed.

Ford & Johnson and Fletcher A. Cutler, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Crozier C. Culp and Lynn W. Culp, Sr., both of Oakland, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem.

The action is to recover damages claimed as a result of personal injuries and injury to personal property incurred as the result of an automobile accident. In the court below judgment went for the plaintiff and against both the defendants. The appeal is prosecuted by the defendant Washington. The question of negligence is not an issue on this appeal, nor does the question of damages enter herein.

The facts of the case are undisputed in the main, and the question here presented may be more accurately stated following a general outline of the facts.

The appellant Washington is, and was at the times herein noted, an admiral in the United States Navy and was at the said times assigned as commandant of the Twelfth Naval District of the United States, which said district embraced the territory wherein the happenings to be related occurred. The defendant Brown is and was at all of the said times an enlisted man in the United States Navy. The defendant Brown under orders, of which hereinafter, was acting as chauffeur for the appellant, the admiral, on the day in question. The car which he was operating was the property of the United States government. The admiral and his chauffeur left the navy headquarters at San Francisco en route to the Bohemian Grove, at which latter place was maintained a clubhouse as an adjunct of the Bohemian Club. The admiral was a member of this club, and his attendance at the place was as a member and in no wise connected with the naval department or with any other department of the federal government. After delivering the admiral safely to his destination, the chauffeur proceeded to return to headquarters as originally directed and ordered. It was on his return, while the admiral was not with him, that the car driven by the chauffeur collided with the car of plaintiff, as a result of which this action was brought.

The only question is whether or not there was such a relationship between appellant Washington and the enlisted man Brown on the day and at the time and place in question as would render appellant liable in damages to the plaintiff for the admitted negligence of Brown, the chauffeur. The question is one not free from difficulty for two reasons: First, there is little precedent from the standpoint of factual similitude; secondly, the underlying principles formerly controlling have, through a process of statutory enactment both substantive and procedural, and judicial application, become sufficiently elastic to justify almost any conceivable solution. It seems elementary, however, that no liability can attach to the appellant Washington unless it can be shown that there was some privity of individual relationship between him and the defendant Brown. It may, therefore, be well to establish the individual status of each regardless of the events in question.

Brown was an enlisted man in the navy, with the rating of machinist or machinist's mate, first class. By regular routine he had been assigned to shore duty through the proper authorities. His detail on shore embraced the duties of chauffeur. It was within his duties to operate the service automobiles as directed. Whatever the orders were in this respect, his obedience thereto was enjoined wholly by reason of his status, and not through any personal contract of service with any individual whom he might serve. If he had been ordered to take the car and drive to any store or business establishment to secure articles personal to his superior officer, he would have had no discretion to question the order. Whatever he did in the operation of said car pursuant to his orders, he did in the capacity of an enlisted man.

The automobile with which we are concerned was admittedly the property of the United States and assigned for use to naval headquarters of the Twelfth District. On the day prior to the day of the journey the admiral had notified his aide of his contemplated trip and requested the detail of the car and driver. Accordingly at the appointed time Brown appeared with the government car at division headquarters, with directions to drive the admiral to Bohemian Grove. No order was given by the admiral nor was Brown directed in any way by him as to where he should drive. All of this was embraced in his routine detail. The admiral simply stepped in the car and the journey began. The trip to the grove was completed, the admiral safely delivered at his destination, and the chauffeur started on his return to headquarters. His official detail was to deliver the admiral at Bohemian Grove and return to headquarters.

Coming then to the status of the appellant. He was a member of the same navy as the defendant Brown. Each was bounden to a common authority, and basically there was no difference in the status of either. Their common vocation was with the navy. Though of different rank each served under the same general regulations and to the accomplishment of a common end. While their duties were under a common authority, yet in the performance of these duties one was subordinate to the other, and in the scheme of things the enlisted man was subject to the orders and directions of the superior officer. In its strictest sense, however, the relation of master and servant did not exist.

The proper governmental authority had placed at the disposal of the admiral the automobile in question and a likewise properly functioning agency had permitted its use for whatever purpose the admiral might determine. Respondent concedes that had the accident happened while the government car was on an official trip engaged in business directly pertaining to the administration of the admiral's business then no personal liability on the admiral would have resulted. But, contends respondent, the admiral had withdrawn himself from his office or his rank for the time being and was engaged wholly in his private affairs. Let us concede this for the sake of argument. Then it necessarily follows that we must fix the time of this claimed withdrawal. If for the purposes of this vacation the admiral stepped aside from his rank and official position, the transition occurred at the time he stepped into the car at the commencement of his journey. He was from that time on the guest of the naval department. He was either such guest or else he was the admiral fully functioning as such and in the discharge of his duties. There can be no middle ground. Conceding still the private nature of his journey, it follows that as an individual he had no control or authority over the chauffeur with respect to his employment or discharge or his conduct. If there had been a breach of discipline or any insubordination displayed by the chauffeur on the journey, the power or right to punish or discharge him would have to be traced back to the regulations of the service.

The only claim of respondent to sustain the judgment of the court below is on the theory of respondeat superior. Having discussed the relationship of the parties, we may then apply the rule relied on thereto.

In the case of Moss v. Chronicle Publishing Co., 201 Cal. 610, 258 P. 88, 90, 55 A. L. R. 1258, the court quotes approvingly from other holdings of the same tribunal. We find therein this statement: "In other words, the application of the doctrine of respondeat superior in any given case depends upon the power of control which the superior possesses, and which for the protection of third persons he is required to exercise, over the conduct and activities of his subordinates. Consequently the doctrine has application only in cases where the power of control exists, and such power does not exist in a situation where the special employer has no voice in the selection or retention of the negligent subordinate."

Again, quoting from 39 Corpus Juris, § 1462, p. 1275: "To escape liability the original master must resign full control of the servant for the time being, it not being sufficient that the servant is partially under the control of a third person; and it is necessary to distinguish between authoritative direction and control and mere suggestions as to details or the necessary cooperation where the work furnished is part of a larger operation."

In Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 477, 209 P. 241, 243, speaking on the doctrine under discussion here, the court states: "In such a situation, however, it is obvious that it is necessary to ascertain who was the master at the very time of the negligent act complained of. This is so, for the doctrine of respondeat superior applies only when the relation of master and servant is shown to exist between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be charged for the result of some neglect or wrong at the very time and in respect to the very thing out of which the injury arose."

While the facts before us in the instant case do not parallel a case of hiring or lending, nevertheless in as far as the control of the servant goes, there is more than a passing analogy.

Quoting from Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, we find: "It would appear, therefore, to be the rule in this state that, when a master hires out, under a rental agreement, the services of an employee for the operation of an instrumentality owned by the master, together with the use of the instrumentality, without relinquishing to the hirer the power to discharge such servant, to go where and perform such work as the hirer directs, the legal presumption is that, although the hirer directs the servant where to go and what to do in the performance of the work, the servant, as the operator of the instrumentality employed in the doing of the work, remains, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the servant of the general employer in so far as concerns the manner and method of operating the instrumentality, and the negligence of the servant must be held to be that of the owner, and not that of the hirer, of the instrumentality." (Citing cases.)

In the instant case any control or authority that the admiral had over Brown necessarily arose out of the naval regulations bearing on the particular situation. To repeat, if it be conceded that both men were on official duty covering the trip, then it is further conceded that no theory of respondent superior has application under the facts.

The complicating feature is the fact that as admiral the appellant remained the superior officer of the enlisted man; but this was entirely independent of the transaction under review. But if we accept the theory of the respondent and of the court below that appellant had completely disconnected himself from the service, we cannot accede to the contention that though in fact removed from the service, yet for the purposes of fixing a liability he was still in control of the chauffeur solely by reason of his rank in that service. We can see no difference in the facts of the case than in a case where the admiral had retired from active service and had completely withdrawn himself from the service and after retirement had been a visitor at headquarters and the officer in command had detailed an enlisted man to escort him to his home. Surely, if in such a case the enlisted man upon his return from his trip, homeward bound, had been guilty of a wrongful or negligent act in the handling of the car, there would be no contention that the retired officer was liable under any doctrine.

Summing up the facts as coming within the rules of law stated, we find Brown, an enlisted man, bound to his employer, the government, pursuant to his enlistment and the regulations governing, and assigned to chauffeur duty. He is ordered in the regular course of his employment to drive the car to Bohemian Grove and to carry as a passenger the admiral, the appellant herein. He is neither hired nor loaned to the appellant. He is specifically in the service of his master performing no service for appellant as master, but always within the terms of his own employment and subject only to the control of his own master throughout. We can conceive of no sound principle of law that renders appellant liable for the acts of Brown upon his return trip.

Much is said by respondent of the fact that when the admiral was delivered at the grove he instructed Brown to return and gave him money with which to buy his lunch. The instruction to return home was pursuant to the detail. And if the relationship under the skin between the colonel's lady and her maid still holds, there was perhaps sufficient subcutaneous relation between the admiral and the chauffeur to break down the barrier of rank to the extent at least of permitting this friendly courtesy.

In the case of Dowler v. Johnson, a New York case, found in 225 N. Y. 39, 121 N. E. 487, 3 A. L. R. at page 146, it is said: "We do not doubt the rule invoked by counsel for the defendant, and sustained by superabundant citations, that public officers are not liable for the negligence of their subordinates unless they co-operate in the act complained of, or direct or encourage it."

There remains another feature of the case that must be considered. The appellant was the commandant of the Twelfth Naval District. His duties were to some extent general within his district and it will be unnecessary to enumerate them. He was on duty twenty-four hours a day under the regulations and at any place or point within the district. Bohemian Grove was within the district. Any official business that it was necessary to transact with him by any member of the staff or of the department could have been transacted at Bohemian Grove, and while, perhaps, the cares of his station might have been momentarily forgotten in this retreat, he was still on duty. The record offers no contradiction of this direct evidence and the trial court was without right to ignore it.

He was not on leave of absence, and if he chose by way of respite to depart from the surroundings nominally designated as headquarters, he in no sense assumed the status of a civilian. The various branches of the government, state and federal, are necessarily knit together in close formation, and it hardly seems in comport with the comity existing to attempt to draw too close lines regarding the technical status of those engaged in the public service.

It seems to be taken for granted in these times that the main thing in every case of accident is to find some one able to respond to the claim of damage. And following this out the ancient doctrines of the law have been twisted and distorted in an endeavor to dole out damages to every unfortunate person injured, regardless of the true principles upon which liability rests.

It is our opinion that the judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

---

115 Cal.App. 400

SCOTT v. SHAW (two cases).
Civ. 6666.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 9, 1931.

1. Automobiles ⇐245(8).

Evidence that motorist striking four year old boy crossing street, was not watching street or did not have automobile under proper control, held for jury.

There was evidence from which jury might have found that defendant motorist drove eighty-eight to one hundred thirty-two feet, while child could be seen in street, before defendant arrived within forty feet of child; that child and defendant went on, latter swerving to one side, then over to curb on other side of street, striking child; and that, just before child's and defendant's paths crossed, defendant's brakes were heard for first time.

2. Automobiles ⇐150.

It was duty of motorist to watch street.

3. Appeal and error ⇐110.

No appeal is authorized from order denying motion for new trial.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Actions, consolidated pursuant to stipulation, by Andrew Scott, by his guardian ad litem Ruth J. Scott, and by Ruth J. Scott, in her own right, against Louis R. Shaw. From a judgment of nonsuit and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment of nonsuit reversed. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

Nimmo, Leighton & Heath and Mark A. Hall, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Kidd, Schell & Delamer, of Los Angeles (Patrick F. Kirby, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

Andrew Scott, aged four years, was struck by an automobile driven by defendant on a public highway in Los Angeles city. By his guardian ad litem, Andrew brought suit to recover for the injuries he sustained, and in a separate action his mother sought reimbursement for the expenses she incurred because of his injuries. Pursuant to stipulation, the actions were consolidated and proceeded to trial. From a judgment of nonsuit and an order denying them new trials, both plaintiffs appeal. Because there is evidence which would warrant the jury in finding that the defendant drove negligently and that his negligence was the proximate cause of the accident, the motion for a nonsuit should not have been granted.

From the evidence the jury may well have seen this picture: Andrew and his nurse with his little sister Jean, who is just out of school for the noon recess, are walking south along the east side of Burlington avenue, between Acacia and Maryland streets. Jean, six years old, runs across Burlington avenue to the opposite side. A few seconds more and Andrew breaks away from his nurse, runs around the end of an automobile parked obliquely to the curb and out into the street. When fifteen feet beyond the automobile he hesitates, then goes on, his course being south of a direct line across the street. Burlington avenue, between Acacia and Maryland streets, drops toward the south at a grade of 7.8 per cent. Down Burlington avenue the defendant is driving a Studebaker sedan, first seen by the nurse when it is just south of Acacia street, regarded again when about forty feet north of the path of the boy and then as it shuts out the boy from her sight. Its speed, the jury could believe, was twenty-eight to thirty miles an hour from the time it was first noticed until forty feet from the boy's path. At the time the car driven by defendant was forty feet away from Andrew, he was at the point fifteen feet beyond the parked car. As it is an exceptional college athlete who can run thirty feet in one second, i. e., a hundred yards in ten seconds, the jury may well have thought that it took Andrew, four years of age and hesitating at the end of the distance, two or three seconds to run the fifteen feet he was in clear sight of any one looking at him from the defendant's direction; and that defendant, consequently, drove eighty-eight to one hundred thirty-two feet while Andrew could be seen in the street before he arrived within forty feet of him. Andrew went on and so did defendant, swerving first to the west, then over to the curb on the east side of the street, striking Andrew, breaking his leg, as their paths crossed. Just before the point of intersection defendant's brakes "squealed" for the first time.

[1-3] From this picture the jury could with reason conclude that defendant either was not watching the street, which it was his duty to do (Rush v. Lagomarsino [1925] 196 Cal. 308, 237 P. 1066), or did not have his car under that control which the law requires of a driver (Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co. (1922) 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125). If failing in either duty, his failure was negligence proximately causing the accident. It was error to grant a nonsuit, and the judgment so entered is reversed. As an appeal is not authorized from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the appeal from that order is dismissed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

115 Cal.App. 447

PEOPLE v. JENNERJOHN.

Cr. 2085.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 10, 1931.

Larceny ☞ 65.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for grand theft of automobile (Pen. Code, § 31).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Harry Jennerjohn was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Jones, Tatlow & Meloy, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Belford, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

Appellant was charged with the crime of grand theft, to wit: Stealing an automobile, in count one of the information, and with violation of section 146 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 564), under a second count. The second count was dismissed, but appellant was convicted under the first count by trial without a jury. From this judgment, he appeals, assigning but one ground of appeal, to wit, the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the judgment.

The evidence showed that on or about the 19th day of January, 1931, the prosecuting witness, Francisco Ledesma, parked his Ford touring car at Ninth and Soto streets, in the city of Los Angeles, at about 9:30 in the morning; he was away from it for about five minutes, and, upon his return, found it was gone; the car was found by police officer Bradley in an open field about 11 a. m. of the same day, with the defendant standing beside the automobile. The police officer testified that the spare tire was on the ground, the battery out of its container, the carburetor removed from the motor and lying on the running board, gasoline was spilled on the running board, a couple of wrenches and a pair of pliers were lying on the running board, and all the nuts were taken off the bolts that held the tires on. He further stated that he found none of the nuts lying about that had been removed from the rims of the tires, but that after he had searched the defendant he found six or seven nuts in his pocket, such as are used on the rims of Ford automobiles, together with a few short bolts, keys, and other miscellaneous objects; that defendant's hands were dirty and greasy, and that "it was fresh and wet grease and oil." He further testified that he told defendant to get into his car and drive over to the boulevard, and that defendant then entered an old Ford touring car that was standing beside the road; that he, the witness, then called another police officer, who came to the field where the Ledesma car was standing; that the second police officer told the boy "it looked pretty bad for him, and Jennerjohn said it didn't look so good," and that "we checked the parts for prints and we looked at the parts of the car lying on the ground, and felt of the radiator and the radiator was hot."

Another witness, a deputy sheriff, testified that on the evening of the same day, in the presence of another deputy sheriff, the defendant made a statement to him in which he related his actions that day from the time the car was stolen until it was found. His statement was as follows: That defendant, together with one Harold Provin, left their home about 9 o'clock in the morning, defendant driving his Cadillac roadster, and Provin driving the old Ford touring car that was standing beside the road at the entrance of the field where the Ledesma car was found; that they drove to 9512 Laurel avenue, where Provin left his Ford touring car, both of them getting into appellant's Cadillac; that they drove north on Alameda street to the vicinity of the Southern Pacific freight sheds on North Alameda, where they "tried to start a Ford touring car they found sitting there," and that "they couldn't get that one because it was locked, the steering wheel was locked, and they had no keys for it." That they both got back in the Cadillac and drove through Boyle Heights to the vicinity of Ninth and Soto, where appellant stopped his Cadillac, Provin getting out and entering the parking lot of Sears & Roebuck; that appellant then drove south on Soto street to 9512 Laurel avenue; that, while he was driving along Soto street, Provin passed him driving the Ledesma automobile; that when they arrived at the address on Laurel avenue, appellant parked his automobile and got into Provin's old Ford touring car; that they both turned around, going south on Alameda street to Dominguez road, turned to the left and went about a mile across the railroad track to the entrance of the pasture or field where the Ledesma car was found; that appellant then stated he parked Provin's Ford touring car beside the road, Provin driving the other car (the Ledesma car) about seven or eight hundred feet south of Dominguez road beside the Edison Company high line, and "they both started to take the tires off, and they took the battery out of it, the manifold, the carburetor, and loosened the nuts on the radiator, and about that time, he said, Provin saw a fellow watching them and they figured it was an officer, so Provin ran across a pasture and up over a storm drain and across the tracks and was on his way. And he said this man kept watching him and he finally walked away from the car (the Ledesma car) toward where he had his Ford touring car parked, when he was arrested." The witness then stated that later on that evening appellant repeated this statement in the presence of Provin and the two deputy sheriffs, and that Provin denied any connection with it whatsoever.

At the trial of the case, appellant denied having made the statement as related above by the deputy sheriff. He accounted for his actions on the day of the theft by testifying that on the morning of the 19th he was driving his Cadillac down to the place where he was employed; that he met Provin about Ninety-Seventh and Hickory street, and the latter wanted him to stop and fix his car, but that defendant told him he did not have time to do so as he had to see his employer on St. Louis street; that Provin then asked defendant to take him up to North Main street, which defendant did; that Provin went into a place, apparently looking for work, but soon came out again, and that he and Provin then drove to Ninth and Soto, where he left Provin at the entrance of Sears & Roebuck's store; that he, the appellant, then proceeded down Soto, and that Provin passed him in a Ford automobile (the Ledesma car); that when they reached Ninety-Fifth and Laurel avenue Provin told him to "take my Ford touring car and find out what is wrong with it and follow me"; that appellant was then on his way to Virginia City to get an estimate on some cars for his employer; that Provin pulled into a field with the Ford automobile

(the Ledesma Ford) and told defendant to meet him on the way back from Virginia City; that when he, appellant, returned he found Provin on the car tracks; that appellant "walked—got within 50 feet of the car, that is" (the Ledesma car) "when Mr. Bradley drove up in his Ford coupe in front of my car. I was there just about a second, walked around the car, looked down underneath the hood, turned around and come back out again. Mr. Bradley encountered me and he asked me what I was doing. I said 'I am looking at the car.' He says, 'Do you know who that car belongs to?' I said, 'I do not.' He says, 'Let's go down and take a look at it, so we walked back and took a look at it and found parts of the car'; that the officer asked me whether I had done it, whether I had taken anything off of it, and I told him no, I hadn't, because I had just arrived." The appellant further testified that he did not drive the Ledesma car or take any parts away from it; that he was an automobile mechanic, and that his business was appraising automobiles for secondhand places.

The evidence in this case, exclusive of appellant's extrajudicial statements to the deputy sheriffs, points very strongly to appellant's guilt. He testified that Provin's own car had been left earlier in the morning at the address on Laurel avenue, and yet a short time later Provin passed him on Soto street driving another Ford automobile, and that later on he, appellant, drove Provin's own car while Provin drove the Ledesma car to the field at which the Ledesma car was found. This testimony itself tends to support the conclusion that appellant was knowingly assisting in the theft, and, by reason thereof, was guilty of the crime charged. Pen. Code, § 31. Furthermore, appellant was found in the immediate neighborhood of the stolen car shortly after it had been stolen; the car had a number of its parts removed, the radiator was still hot, appellant's hands were dirty, and, according to one witness, it was "fresh and wet grease and oil." In the case of People v. Roldan, 93 Cal. App. 677, 270 P. 253, 254, it is said: "The firmly established rule of law is that, 'when a person is found in possession of recently stolen property, slight corroborative evidence of other inculpatory circumstances tending to show his guilt will support a conviction.' People v. Cataline, 54 Cal. App. 36, 200 P. 1060."

It cannot be said, after a consideration of all the testimony in this case, that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

115 Cal.App. 261

FIRST MORTGAGE CORPORATION V. BECK.

Civ. 7693.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 29, 1931.

Appeal and error ☞761.

Appellate court need not assume burden of applying to facts of case principles of law discussed by appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by the First Mortgage Corporation against Albert Beck, in which the defendant filed cross-complaint against the plaintiff and the Guardian Investment Corporation of California. From an adverse judgment, the plaintiff and the cross-defendant Guardian Investment Corporation of California appeal.

Affirmed.

Lewis Cruickshank, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MURPHEY, Justice pro tem.

This is an action based upon a promissory note made, executed and delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff on the 7th day of July, 1926, due on or before thirty days after date. At the same time and place, plaintiff delivered to defendant a receipt in the following words:

"Received of Albert Beck Seventy Five Thousand Dollars. Evidenced by a promissory note of even date due in thirty days. It being understood that we will accept in lieu of said note, contracts on lots or orange groves that are worth one hundred cents on the dollar ~~from a loan standpoint~~. Provided said contracts are offered for exchange on or before thirty days and draw interest at not less than seven per cent. (Marked out-C. W. Harrison.)

"First Mortgage Corporation
"By (Sgd) C. W. Harrison, Gen'l Mgr."

The promissory note and the property named in the receipt were given and received according to the plaintiff's contention for 600 shares of common and 600 shares of preferred stock of the Guardian Investment Corporation, cross-defendant and appellant in this case. The record shows that no stock was ever delivered to the defendant Beck. The record discloses that the negotiations leading up to the actual business transaction so far as the plaintiff corporation and the Guardian Investment Corporation are concerned were handled by Harrison representing both corporations. In the course of the transaction

Beck urged thereto by Harrison had not only delivered to him the promissory note, but also deeds and contracts of the value of $75,000 as claimed by Beck and $40,000 claimed by Harrison. The transaction involving the delivery of the promissory note and the receipt hereinabove referred to was consummated after office hours on the date of their execution. There was an actual passing by way of consideration from plaintiff to the defendant of nothing other than the papers involved in the transaction. It may be said that the circumstances of the entire transaction are enveloped in an atmosphere of dissimulation not at all creditable to the corporations represented in the transaction by Harrison.

The court found, and the true history of the events are reflected in the findings, as follows:

"That it is not true that at the time of the execution and delivery of said promissory note that defendant deposited or pledged with the plaintiff herein as collateral security for the payment thereof, or otherwise, or at all, the following described property, or any part thereof, to wit: Six Hundred (600) shares of preferred stock of Guardian Investment Corporation of California, evidenced by Certificate No. 76; or Six Hundred (600) shares of common stock of Guardian Investment Corporation of California, evidenced by Certificate No. 57; or any stock of said corporation, or any certificate, or any other property of any kind or nature, whatsoever, or at all.
* * *

"That said plaintiff gave no consideration of any kind to defendant for said note, and never became the owner of said note; that defendant has never received any consideration of any kind for said note. * * *

"That * * * said note as set forth in said complaint was given to said plaintiff solely for the purpose of said plaintiff holding the same as escrow holder as the agent of said defendant until said defendant should deposit with said plaintiff certain property belonging to defendant in lieu of said promissory note; that it was at all times understood and agreed by and between plaintiff and said defendant that said note was held and to be held by said plaintiff solely for said purpose, and was to be returned to said defendant upon demand in case said escrow was not completed, or in case said defendant did not deliver to said plaintiff said property to be deposited with said plaintiff in lieu of said note; that thereafter said defendant did deposit with said plaintiff all the said personal and real property hereinabove referred to. * * *

"That thereafter, and on or about the 13th day of August, 1926, said cross-complainant deposited with said cross-defendant deeds to said real property, and assignments of said contracts, except said Mazetti contract, but that at said time said cross-complainant at the request of said cross-defendant made and executed a deed to said property covered by said Mazetti contract. * * * That at the request of said cross-defendant, First Mortgage Corporation, said deeds and assignments of contract were executed by the cross-complainant in the name of Guardian Investment Corporation of California. That thereupon said First Mortgage Corporation caused to be recorded said deeds without authority or permission of said cross-complainant and retained said assignment of contract and refused, and has at all times refused to return the same to said cross-complainant. * * *

"That it is true that on or about the 7th day of July, 1926, said cross-defendants First Mortgage Corporation and Guardian Investment Corporation of California, wrongfully, fraudulently and unlawfully represented to said cross-complainant that if cross-complainant would make and execute to said First Mortgage Corporation his promissory note in the sum of $75,000, and would thereafter deposit with said First Mortgage Corporation certain deeds and contracts to real property owned by said cross-complainant, and hereinafter described, that said First Mortgage Corporation thereupon, upon the deposit of said deeds and contracts, would return to said cross-complainant said promissory note, and would retain and keep said deeds and said assignments of contract, and in exchange therefor would give to said cross-complainant Six Hundred (600) shares of common and Six Hundred (600) shares of preferred stock of Guardian Investment Corporation of California, and that upon delivery of said stock to said plaintiff said cross-complainant would become the owner of said stock and said cross-defendant would become the owner of said real estate and said contracts for the sale of said real estate, and that in addition thereto said cross-defendant would cause said cross-complainant to be elected a member of the board of directors of said Guardian Investment Corporation of California; that said real property and said contracts are described as follows, to-wit. * * *" Then follows a description of the contracts not necessary to be included herein.

"That it is true that said cross-complainant never at any time received from said cross-defendants, or either of them, any of said stock in said corporation, and never was made or elected a director of said corporation, or received said Two Hundred and Fifty shares of stock, or anything of value, whatsoever from said cross-defendants or any of them for said promissory note or said property, and that said promissory note and said property were received by said cross-defendants without any consideration of any kind whatsoever, and that said cross-complainant was induced by said cross-defendants to turn over said promissory note and property to said cross-defendants by reason of the false and fraudulent statements of said cross-defendants hereinabove referred to. * * *

"The Court finds that it is not true that said cross-defendant, First Mortgage Corporation, was to receive property and contracts satisfactory and acceptable to said cross-defendant, First Mortgage Corporation, in return for said promissory note, but that it is true that it was agreed between said cross-defendant and said cross-complainant that said cross-defendant should return said promissory note upon receiving said deeds and contracts and assignments of contract hereinbefore described.

"That it is not true that said cross-complainant ever at any time pledged any property with said cross-defendant First Mortgage Corporation, or either of said cross-defendants, to secure the payment of said promissory note.

"That it is not true that cross-complainant at any time instructed the Guardian Investment Corporation of California for or in his behalf, or at all, to record said deeds hereinabove described and referred to, or either of them, or otherwise or at all."

That there should be and are contradictions in the record with respect to the questions of fact involved in this litigation, as reflected in the findings herein set out, goes without saying; nevertheless there is abundant evidence in the record to fully sustain the findings of the trial court. A careful consideration of the entire record has convinced us that there is no substantial merit in the appeal of the plaintiff or cross-defendant.

In so far as the law of the case is concerned, appellant has written an elaborate dissertation on fraud, rescission, alternative demands, modification of contracts, but has not assisted the court by making or attempting to make any application of the principles of law thus discussed, to the facts of the instant case, and we are satisfied after reading the cases cited and from our knowledge of the facts as adduced by the evidence in this case that no application favorable to the contention of the corporations, parties to this litigation, is possible. There is no duty incumbent upon the appellate courts to assume this burden, and this is particularly so under the facts and circumstances developed in this case, as any such effort, as above indicated, must necessarily prove futile and fruitless. As is well said in the case of Neff v. Engler, 205 Cal. 484, 271 P. 744, 747: "There is contained in the record here competent and persuasive evidence in support of the findings and judgment. As might be anticipated in a case of this character, the testimony is in conflict as to whether defendants made the representations charged against them, but there is nevertheless sufficient evidence of a tangible character to uphold the conclusions of the trial court, to meet the requirements as to the degree of proof required to support findings of fraud, and to establish the misrepresentations found by the court to have actually been made."

In this case the rescission was promptly made and the misrepresentations substantial, and the deal was actually consummated through the activities of and with the knowledge of both plaintiff and the cross-defendant.

No error appearing in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

115 Cal.App. 348

In re MITCHELL'S ESTATE.

REED et al. v. MCCARTHY.

Civ. 886.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

July 6, 1931.

1. Wills ☞203.

Decree of final distribution held not such adjudication of title to property of estate as prevents court from admitting to probate will left by decedent (Code Civ. Proc. § 1666).

2. Wills ☞431.

Order dismissing proceeding to establish lost or destroyed will, refusing to admit will to probate did not bar subsequent proceedings to admit to probate will later found.

3. Wills ☞431.

Court's conclusion that will alleged to have been lost had actually been destroyed by decedent before death held not conclusive upon will subsequently found.

4. Executors and administrators ☞33.

Order discharging public administrator held not appealable.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Proceeding between Edwin Reed, administrator, and James Mitchell, contestants, and Marie L. McCarthy, proponent, for the probate of the will of W. O. Mitchell, deceased. From an order refusing to admit the will to probate, proponent appeals.

Reversed.

Claude M. Shell and Jesse George, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Hamilton, Lindley & Higgins, of San Diego, for respondents.

BARNARD, P. J.

This is an appeal from an order refusing to admit an alleged will to probate. W. O. Mitchell died on January 24, 1927, and Edwin Reed, public administrator of the county of San Diego, was appointed administrator of his estate on February 11, 1927. On January 13, 1928, Marie L. McCarthy filed in the same proceeding a petition to probate an alleged lost or destroyed will of the said W. O. Mitchell, a copy of said will being set forth as follows:

"August 31, 1925

"Marie L. McCarthy
"Katherine C. McCarthy
"Marie C. McCarthy
"Helen M. McCarthy
"John McCarthy

"I leave everything, property and valuables to Marie L. McCarthy.

"[Signed] W. O. Mitchell."

After a hearing thereon, the court, on September 5, 1928, entered an order dismissing said petition, the court finding, among other things, that the contents of the alleged will had not been proved by two credible witnesses; that the said writing was in the possession of W. O. Mitchell prior to his death and was not found among his effects thereafter; and that the same cannot now be found. As a conclusion of law, the court found that the purported will was destroyed by Mitchell in his lifetime, and that the same was not in existence at the time of his death. An appeal was taken from the order dismissing the petition. On January 11, 1929, Marie L. McCarthy, in a separate proceeding in the superior court of San Diego county, filed a petition for the probate of an alleged will alleging that W. O. Mitchell left a will "which is herewith presented." A copy of the purported will was not set forth in the petition, and the record does not show that any purported will was filed with the clerk of the court. On September 5, 1929, an order was entered abating this proceeding, the court stating that it appeared that the parties and issues in that action were identical with the parties and issues in the previous proceeding. On September 5, 1929, Marie L. McCarthy moved the court to set aside the decree and order of September 5, 1928, upon the ground that since the making of said order the will of W. O. Mitchell had been found. On September 16, 1929, the appeal in the first proceeding was dismissed by the Supreme Court for want of prosecution.

On December 30, 1929, Marie L. McCarthy filed a "notice of motion to reopen the matter of the petition to probate will and permit another petition to be filed," in which it is stated that on a certain date she would move the court to reopen the administration of said estate and permit her to file a petition for the probate of the last will of W. O. Mitchell, deceased, "discovered and produced since the appointment of the public administrator, and since the findings and judgment herein dismissing the petition of the same said petitioner for probate of a lost will." Attached thereto appears an order signed by the trial judge granting her permission to present this motion. Also attached thereto is a "Petition for Probate of Will discovered after letters issued herein and for revocation of said letters and appointment of Petitioner as Administrator with Will annexed." This petition sets forth a copy of the purported will, as follows:

"August 31st, 1925

"Marie L. McCarthy
 "Katherine McCarthy
 "Marie M. McCarthy
 "John McCarthy

"I leave everything, property and valuables to Marie L. McCarthy.

"[Signed] W. O. Mitchell.

"Witness: D. J. Hocking

"Witness: Dorothy K. Wollgast."

Among other things, this petition alleges the following: "That the said will was lost and was not discovered until long after the Public Administrator was appointed herein, nor until on or about the 10th day of January, 1929, and has not been presented herein prior to this time because your petitioner through mistake caused it to be presented in an independent proceeding, No. 16194."

The public administrator filed a motion to strike from the files "that certain petition for leave to probate an alleged will of W. O. Mitchell, deceased," on the ground that this petition or motion had been denied on September 6, 1929, and on the further ground that the matter was res adjudicata. Prior to the hearing on these two motions, an order was entered settling the final account of the administrator, and ordering final distribution of the estate. After a hearing on the motions, the court entered an order refusing permission to probate the alleged will. The trial judge certified that these motions were made, heard, and decided upon the papers, records, and files in this proceeding and upon the papers, records, and files in the other proceeding started by Marie L. McCarthy on January 11, 1929, without oral or other evidence being received. From this last order refusing to admit to probate the alleged will of W. O. Mitchell, deceased, Marie L. McCarthy has appealed.

The respondent Mitchell has made no appearance in this court, but the respondent public administrator has filed a brief. The only point raised is that admission to probate of the will now offered by the appellant has been previously refused, and that the matter is res adjudicata. In this connection, it is urged that the decree of distribution, having become final, is, under section 1666 of the Code of Civil Procedure, conclusive. It is further urged that, since the appeal from the previous order of the court, refusing to admit to probate the alleged lost or destroyed will, was later dismissed, such dismissal amounts to an affirmation of the order of the trial court.

[1] That a decree of final distribution is not such an adjudication of the title to the property of an estate as prevents the court from admitting to probate a will left by the decedent was decided in Re Estate of Walker, 160 Cal. 547, 117 P. 510, 511, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 89, a case in which the essential facts are quite similar to the case at bar. In that case, the court said: "The sanctity and immunity of a decree of distribution which has become final attaches to the decree itself, and not to those who under it may have derived an unconscionable advantage through fraud, accident, or mistake. Such questions the probate court does not possess the requisite machinery to try. They belong in a court of equity. Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 454; Dean v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 473; Wickersham v. Comerford, 96 Cal. 433, 31 P. 358. Nor are we here called on to anticipate the decision of any such question which may in future arise. It is sufficient on this appeal to say that it was proper for the probate court to establish the last will of the deceased to the end that those entitled to take under that will might be in a position to prosecute their rights in equity."

[2, 3] Nor do we think that the prior proceedings herein constituted an adjudication of the issues here presented. The former order refusing to admit a will to probate, which later became final, was made in connection with an effort to establish a lost or destroyed will. That order was based upon a failure to establish the existence and contents of such a will, and the conclusion was drawn by the court that the will had been destroyed by the deceased prior to his death. If the will was actually in existence and was later found, there is no reason why the same cannot be established and admitted to probate. The conclusion of the trial court that the will alleged to have been lost had actually been destroyed by the decedent prior to his death was based upon the evidence then before the court, and is not conclusive upon a will subsequently found. It also appears that the will subsequently offered and which it is alleged was subsequently found, is somewhat different from the will previously offered as the lost or destroyed will, the difference consisting in the names first set forth in the instrument, and in the fact that the will now offered in court purports to have been signed before two witnesses. It is entirely possible that the will set out in the first petition was destroyed by its maker, as inferred by the court, and that another will was made on the same day, in the presence of two attesting witnesses. The issue presented to the court in the first instance was as to the existence, contents, and validity of what was claimed to be a lost or destroyed will. The issue finally presented was as to the validity of an instrument offered in court and claimed to be the last will of the deceased. No evidence was taken upon this question, and the same has never been decided by the trial court. This issue, not having been presented in the prior proceedings, was not settled by any of the prior orders. When the motion was made on September 5, 1929, to set aside the order of September 5, 1928, an appeal from that order was still pending.

[4] It appears that two days after the entry of the order refusing to admit to probate the will now offered, the court entered a decree discharging the administrator. The notice of appeal purports also to appeal from this order. Not only is that order not an appealable one, but the matter calls for no consideration, since the public administrator has no further interest in the proceedings. In re Estate of Walker, supra.

For the reasons given, the order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFEN, Justice pro tem.

---

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. ABBOTT et al.***
Civ. 7293.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
June 23, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 23, 1931.

1. Eminent domain ⇨246(3).

City's compliance with injunction against prosecution of condemnation action and commencement of new action held abandonment of original action.

After commencement of action in eminent domain by city, another action was brought against the city wherein a judgment was rendered enjoining the city from paying out any costs or expenses incurred in connection with improvement, because the ordinance of intention and the required notice were fatally defective and the proceedings null and void. Thereafter, city did not further prosecute action, but commenced a new action based on new proceedings.

2. Eminent domain ⇨265(5).

City's abandonment of condemnation action by commencement of new proceedings after original proceedings were declared invalid held to entitle property owner to costs and attorney's fees (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a; Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 8198, § 14).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a, in substance, authorizes plaintiff to abandon condemnation proceeding by serving on defendant and filing written notice of such abandonment, and provides for awarding to the defendant his costs and disbursements, including all necessary expenses incurred in preparing for trial and reasonable attorney's fees. Street Opening Act of 1903, § 14 (Deering's Gen. Laws, Act 8198) provides, in substance, that city council may at any time prior to payment of compensation abandon condemnation proceedings by ordinance and cause action to be dismissed without prejudice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Samuel R. Blake, Judge.

Action in eminent domain by the City of Los Angeles against Sadie D. Griffith Abbott and others. From a judgment dismissing the action and awarding to the defendant Alice Virginia Hatfield her costs and reasonable attorney's fees, the plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Rehearing granted; THOMPSON, J. dissenting.

Erwin P. Werner, City Atty., and Arthur Loveland and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. C. Pyle, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal in a proceeding in eminent domain. Pursuant to ordinance of intention No. 45,501 (new series) a complaint in the usual form was filed November 24, 1923, seeking to condemn certain property, including that owned by the respondent for the purpose of opening, widening, and extending Mines avenue in the city of Los Angeles. On January 8, 1930, the defendant Alice Virginia Hatfield gave notice that on January 21 she would make a motion in the trial court for an order dismissing the proceeding on the ground that the same had been abandoned by the city. The motion was supported by the affidavit of one of her attorneys to the effect that the action had been abandoned and the plaintiff had brought another action in connection with the proceeding, and that the second suit was then pending. In opposition there was filed an affidavit by one of the deputy city attorneys in which it was set forth that on September 11, 1924, and before the cause had gone to judgment the O. T. Johnson Corporation had filed a complaint against the city of Los Angeles seeking to enjoin the city from prosecuting the action; and that subsequently a judgment was rendered by the superior court by which the city was enjoined from paying out any "costs or expenses incurred in connection with the improvement provided for by ordinance No. 45,501 (new series)," and that thereafter an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court wherein the judgment of the trial court was affirmed, the decision being reported in volume 198 Cal., at page 308, 245 P. 164. The lower court made and rendered its judgment of dismissal based upon its finding that the plaintiff had abandoned the action and awarded the defendant her costs and reasonable attorney fees. The amount of attorney fees allowed does not appear from the transcript, and it does not appear that a motion to tax costs was made by the appellant.

---

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*For subsequent opinion see 19 P.2d 47.

It is now insisted by the appellant as follows:

1. There was no abandonment of the action by the city of Los Angeles because of lack of intent, and because the requirements for abandonment imposed by statute had not been complied with.

2. Granting an abandonment in fact, nevertheless it is not of such a character as to entitle the respondent to her attorney's fees.

3. The trial court erred in allowing attorney's fees because the appellant had previously been enjoined from paying them.

The last argument is concluded by the decision rendered by us in the case of City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Julia Fanta et al., respondents, 299 P. 807.

[1] Reducing the contentions which we have numbered 1 and 2 to their elementals, we may well consider whether there was in fact an abandonment, and, if so, whether under the law the abandonment is such that the respondent is entitled to recover attorneys' fees. The superior court determined that the ordinance of intention and the notice of public work were fatally defective and the proceedings were null and void. This judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court. Johnson v. City of Los Angeles, 198 Cal. 308, 245 P. 164. Let us suppose that the city attorney had discovered the fatal error in the proceedings and of his own free will and accord had determined that it was his duty not to prosecute the action further, but to have new proceedings initiated. Could there exist any doubt concerning an actual abandonment of the action in the assumed situation? The question then remains whether, when compelled to desist by order of court on account of the invalidity of the proceedings, there is an abandonment. It is argued that since the proceedings were invalid there was nothing to abandon. But this can scarcely be true; there was prior to the judgment of dismissal an action pending, an attempt had been made to take the property of the defendant for public purposes and an end had to be put to the attempt—to the action. Abandon is not necessarily used in the sense of voluntarily relinquishing the effort, for we sometimes speak of abandoning the attack after discovery of an impregnable defense, or of abandoning the idea after learning of insurmountable difficulties in our path. No, the word no more suggests the thought of voluntarily letting go than it does of forsaking the effort by compulsion of circumstances. In the instant situation the commencement of a new action was evidence almost irrefutable of an actual abandonment.

[2] We next turn to inquire whether it was of such a character as to entitle the respondent to attorney's fees. We had occasion to comment upon the reason behind the enactment of section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure in City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Julia Fanta et al., respondents, supra, and reference may be had to that case and the authorities therein cited for a more detailed statement of the proposition that it is because in no sense of the word is the party defendant in a condemnation case responsible for the litigation and may be entirely unwilling to sell his property. Thus our natural sense of justice would seem to dictate the statement that, where he has been compelled to defend himself against an action for which he is in no wise answerable, the loss occasioned thereby in case of a discontinuance thereof should fall not upon his individual shoulders but upon the corporate plaintiff or upon the entire political subdivision. And it can make no difference to the conclusion that the relinquishment of the action has come about by reason of a change of heart on the part of the plaintiff or a mistake in the proceedings, for which (it may be repeated) the defendant is in no wise to blame. These thoughts should be borne in mind in any effort to construe the law enacted for the protection of the owner of property and with them in mind we read section 14 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1923, p. 3317) as follows: "The city council may, at any time prior to the payment of the compensation awarded the defendants, abandon the proceedings, by ordinance, and cause the said action to be dismissed, without prejudice; and if any of the assessments levied to pay the expense of the improvements, as herein-after provided, shall have been actually paid in money at the time of such abandonment, the same shall be refunded to the persons by whom they were paid. If the proceedings be abandoned or the action dismissed no attorneys' fees shall be awarded the defendants or either or any of them."

The respondent argues that an abandonment brought about by the passage of an ordinance is the sole and only kind of abandonment which will entitle the defendant to attorney's fees when the proceeding is instituted under that act. In effect it is contended that the city council may grant or withhold the right to such fees by either passing or refusing to pass the ordinance. It is to be observed, however, that the concluding sentence of the section to the effect that no attorney's fees shall be paid in case of abandonment or dismissal was declared unconstitutional in the case of City of Los Angeles v. Cline, 40 Cal. App. 487, 181 P. 78, and in effect it was there determined that section 1255a, Code of Civil Procedure, was controlling in relation to the allowance of such fees. That section of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows: "Plaintiff may abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of thirty days after final judgment, by serving on defendant and filing in court a written notice of such abandonment; and failure to comply with section 1251 of this code shall constitute an implied abandonment of the proceeding. Upon such abandonment, express or implied, on motion of defendant, a judgment shall be entered dismissing the proceeding and awarding the defendant his costs and disbursements, which shall include all necessary expenses incurred in preparing for trial and reasonable attorney fees. These costs and disbursements, including expenses and attorney fees, may be claimed in and by a cost bill, to be prepared, served, filed and taxed as in civil actions; provided, that said costs and disbursements shall not include expenses incurred in preparing for trial where the said action is dismissed forty days prior to the time set for the trial of the said action."

With the concluding sentence of section 14 of the 1903 act eliminated, we find nothing inconsistent in the two provisions. The one authorizes the city council to abandon the proceedings and cause the dismissal of the action. The other fixes the conditions upon which attorney's fees will be allowed. It now becomes important to determine the meaning and purpose of the provision of section 1255a that the "plaintiff may abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of thirty days after final judgment, by serving on defendant and filing in court a written notice of such abandonment. * * *" Does this mean that an actual abandonment of the action in any other manner shall not entitle the defendant to his attorney's fees, or does it mean that the plaintiff may conclusively evidence an abandonment by such written notice? If it means the former, it is immediately apparent that it is without substantial significance, for the reason that an abandonment in fact such as the trial court found to exist in the instant cause might be, as it was here, followed by a failure or refusal to serve and file the written notice and the defendant cut off from his right to be made whole for fees by the neglect or determination of the plaintiff. In Silver Lake Power & Irrigation Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 32 Cal. App. 123, 162 P. 432, 433, we find expressions of the court, however, which throw light upon the language under consideration. In that case the plaintiff sought to dismiss the action under section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure followed by a notice of its action served upon defendant and filed. The court said: "Viewing section 1255a as a valid enactment, then it appears that the only effect of a request to the clerk for a dismissal of the action and notice of such request to the opposite party would be to apprise the defendant in such a suit of the determination on the part of the plaintiff to abandon the action. Thereupon the defendant would be permitted to proceed as is provided by section 1255a and ask the court by a motion for a judgment of dismissal and for his costs. The procedure followed by the defendants, after they had been apprised that plaintiff had abandoned its action, was strictly in accordance with that outlined in the section under consideration." The trial court impliedly found, and we see no reason to view the matter differently, that the commencement of a new action was just as effective to apprise the defendant of an actual abandonment as would have been the notice mentioned in the section quoted. It must be remembered that we are not here dealing with the implied abandonment therein defined, but an actual desertion of the action.

It is insisted by appellant that the case of City of Los Angeles v. Hannon, 79 Cal. App. 669, 251 P. 247, is in point to the effect that there has not been such an abandonment as entitles respondent to her costs. An inspection of that case, however, will convince the reader that two main points were therein determined: First, that the trial court was not divested of jurisdiction to file its decision and enter its judgment by a delay of four years and seven months after trial and an order for judgment; second, that inasmuch as the statute provided only that failure to comply with section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure should constitute an implied abandonment we could not say as a matter of law that an abandonment should be implied from the delay.

Reliance is also placed by appellant upon City of Long Beach v. O'Donnell, 91 Cal. App. 760, 267 P. 585, but that case simply announces the rule that, since section 1255a was enacted to reimburse a defendant for attorney's fees which he has laid out, it did not apply to one who had employed an attorney on a contingent basis and had not in fact paid out or obligated himself for any fee.

We have examined the authorities cited from other jurisdictions, but we find them neither persuasive nor helpful, and for that reason decline to comment further upon them.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

---

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a Municipal Corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. Sadie D. Griffith ABBOTT et al., Defendants; Benevolent Realty Holding Company, Defendant and Respondent ***

Civ. 7539, 7540.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

June 23, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 23, 1931.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Myron Westover, Judge, of dismissal of an action in eminent domain and from an order denying motion to tax costs. Affirmed.

Rehearing granted; THOMPSON, J. dissenting.

Erwin P. Werner, City Atty., Frederick Von Schrader, Asst. City Atty., and Arthur W. Nordstrom and C. N. Perkins, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

A condemnation proceeding was pending in the lower court, which was terminated by a judgment of dismissal and an allowance of costs, including attorney's fees to the defendant Benevolent Realty Holding Company. There are two appeals involved herein, the one (7540) from the judgment of dismissal made and entered upon the motion of the defendant and respondent, and the other (7539) from the order denying the plaintiff's motion to tax the costs of the defendant and respondent. The records by which these appeals are presented to us establish that the motion for judgment of dismissal and the opposition thereto were based upon the same grounds and facts as in the case of City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Alice Virginia Hatfield, defendant and respondent (Cal. App.) 1 P.(2d) 538, this day decided. While there was no motion to tax costs in that case as there was in this, nevertheless there is no claim that the attorney's fees, allowed as a part thereof, were or are excessive, the appellant here resting upon the same arguments as were put forward in the case just mentioned, to wit, that there was no abandonment of the action, and that, assuming an abandonment in fact, it was not of such a character under the law as to entitle the respondent to attorney's fees.

*For subsequent opinion see 18 P.2d 796 and 19 P.2d 47.

So far, therefore, as the appeal from the order denying the motion to tax costs is concerned, it is governed and controlled by another one of those already disposed of in this series of appeals, that of City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Julia Fanta, etc., et al., respondent (Cal. App.) 299 P. 807.

And even if that appeal were not thereby determined, it, as well as the appeal from the judgment of dismissal, would be governed by City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Alice Virginia Hatfield, respondent, mentioned above.

Judgment of dismissal affirmed. Order denying motion to tax costs affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

---

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a Municipal Corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. Sadie D. Griffith ABBOTT et al., Defendants; The Lankershim Estate, a Corporation, Defendant and Respondent. †

Civ. 7541, 7542.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division Two, California.

June 23, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 23, 1931.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Myron Westover, Judge, of dismissal of an action in eminent domain and from an order denying motion to tax costs. Affirmed.

Rehearing granted; THOMPSON, J. dissenting.

Erwin P. Werner, City Atty., and Arthur Loveland and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

There are two appeals herein, the one (7541) from an order denying plaintiff's motion to tax costs, and the other (7542) from a judgment of dismissal. All of the material facts and propositions of law are identical with those in the case of City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Benevolent Realty Holding Company, defendant and respondent (Cal. App.) 1 P.(2d) 538, this day decided, and these appeals are governed thereby.

†For subsequent opinion see 18 P.2d 796 and 19 P.2d 48.

Judgment of dismissal affirmed. Order denying motion to tax costs affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

---

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a Municipal Corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. Sadie D. Griffith ABBOTT et al., Defendants; Richard R. Freeman, Defendant and Respondent.***
Civ. 7543, 7544.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
June 23, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 23, 1931.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Myron Westover, Judge, of dismissal of an action in eminent domain and from an order denying motion to tax costs. Affirmed.

Rehearing granted; THOMPSON, J. dissenting.

Erwin P. Werner, City Atty., and Arthur Loveland and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

There are two appeals herein, the one (7543) from an order denying plaintiff's motion to tax costs, and the other (7544) from a judgment of dismissal. All of the material facts and propositions of law are identical with those in the case of City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Benevolent Realty Holding Company, defendant and respondent (Cal. App.) 1 P.(2d) 538, this day decided, and these appeals are governed thereby.

Judgment of dismissal affirmed. Order denying motion to tax costs affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

---

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a Municipal Corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. Sadie D. Griffith ABBOTT et al., Defendants; Dora Haynes, Defendant and Respondent.***

Civ. 7545, 7546.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
June 23, 1931.

Rehearing Granted July 23, 1931.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Myron Westover, Judge, of dismissal of an action in eminent domain and from an order denying motion to tax costs. Affirmed.

Rehearing granted; THOMPSON, J. dissenting.

Erwin P. Werner, City Atty., and Arthur Loveland and Arthur W. Nordstrom, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

There are two appeals herein, the one (7545) from an order denying plaintiff's motion to tax costs, and the other (7546) from a judgment of dismissal. All of the material facts and propositions of law are identical with those in the case of City of Los Angeles v. Sadie D. Griffith Abbott et al., defendants; Benevolent Realty Holding Company, defendant and respondent (Cal. App.) 1 P.(2d) 538, this day decided, and these appeals are governed thereby.

Judgment of dismissal affirmed. Order denying motion to tax costs affirmed.

We concur: CRAIG, Acting P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

*For subsequent opinion see 18 P.2d 797 and 19 P.2d 48.

115 Cal.App. 277

FAUST v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO.

Civ. 447.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

June 29, 1931.

1. Trial ☞388(4).

Where case was submitted upon agreed statement of facts, findings of fact held unnecessary.

2. Appeal and error ☞1071(5).

Where case was submitted upon agreed statement of facts, findings of fact made by court may be disregarded.

3. Waters and water courses ☞231.

Where assessment, sale, and conveyance of city's pueblo lands to plaintiff's grantor by irrigation district were valid, city was not entitled to judgment in suit to quiet title.

4. Quieting title ☞52.

In suit to quiet title, judgment that plaintiff take nothing except that plaintiff have judgment for $60.71, but which fixed no time to make payment, must be reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Frank F. Faust against the City of San Diego. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

M. W. Conkling and H. C. Hopkins, both of San Diego, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

This is an action to quiet title to 80 acres of pueblo lands formerly belonging to the city of San Diego. The complaint is in the usual short form alleging ownership, possession, and the right to possession of the property in the plaintiff, and the wrongful claim of an interest therein by the defendant. The answer is equally brief. It denies the ownership, possession, and right to possession of the plaintiff, and asserts title in the defendant. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed.

The case was submitted to the trial court upon two stipulations which constituted an agreed statement of facts. They are brought to this court in the form of a bill of exceptions.

[1,2] The trial court unnecessarily made findings of fact. In Crawford v. Imperial Ir- rigation Dist., 200 Cal. 318, 253 P. 726, 733, it was said: "As the case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts without any other evidence whatever, findings of fact were unnecessary. 24 Cal. Jur. 953. The only question, therefore, before the court, was as to what was the law applicable to those facts. Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 P. 364; McMenomy v. White, 115 Cal. 339, 47 P. 109. Any findings of facts made by the court under these circumstances may be disregarded."

The sole question to be considered by us is whether the judgment is supported by the facts set forth in the stipulations. The pertinent parts of the judgment are as follows:

"By reason of the law and the findings aforesaid, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows, to-wit:

"That the plaintiff take nothing by reason of his action herein, except that the plaintiff have judgment against the defendant for the sum of sixty dollars and fifty-one cents ($60.51), together with interest thereon at the rate of seven (7%) per cent per annum from August 28, 1911, until paid.

"That the certificate of purchase and deed to the property described in plaintiff's complaint be, and they are hereby cancelled and decreed to be null and void.

"That the defendant have judgment for its costs herein expended."

From the stipulations before us it appears:

That the 80 acres involved in this action is the east half of pueblo lot No. 1179 in the city of San Diego. That during the year 1891, the Linda Vista irrigation district was lawfully organized and included within its boundaries the property in question here, as well as over $2,000 acres of other pueblo lands of the city of San Diego. That during the year 1911, the land in question here, together with other lands, was assessed for taxation by the irrigation district and a tax of $112.87 was levied upon the 80 acres involved here. That this land was assessed to O. J. Stough. That none of the assessments on the pueblo lands were paid prior to February 28, 1912, on which date the property in question and the other pueblo lands of the city of San Diego were sold to Charles B. Gould, who paid the delinquent assessment and interest, penalties, and costs on the 80 acres involved herein in the total sum of $121.01. That Gould assigned his certificate of purchase to Frank F. Faust, and that the Linda Vista irrigation district by its officers deeded the property to him. That the Linda Vista irrigation district has issued and sold bonds to pay for certain improvements within its boundaries, and that the assessment was levied to pay all or part of this indebtedness. That the Live Oak Corporation claimed to be the owner of this indebtedness prior to February 29, 1911. That on March 1, 1912, Ed Fletcher wrote and delivered the following letter:

"San Diego, California, Mar. 1, 1912.

"Honorable City Council, San Diego, Calif.

"Gentlemen: This is to inform you that all delinquent property in the Linda Vista District was sold on Wednesday, Feb. 28th. The pueblo lands owned by the city were included in this sale. Nearly 90% of the land owners have already paid their assessments.

"Mr. Charles B. Gould bought in the property of the city, and providing a settlement is made within a reasonable time, (say thirty days from date) along the lines of our original proposition, I am in a position to say that same will be accepted.

"The Live Oak Corporation have been more than fair with the city in extending time of payment, nearly six months from the date of September 12, 1911, when it became delinquent, and Mr. Gould does not feel that we should be called upon to make any further extension, except as above stated."

That thereafter on or about April 2, 1912, the city of San Diego paid the Volcan Land & Water Company and the Live Oak Corporation "the sum of $6,810, in full payment, discharge, satisfaction, settlement and compromise of the claim of the Linda Vista Irrigation District and of the claim of the Live Oak Corporation, claiming to be the beneficiary of said assessment, and of all successors in interest of said Live Oak Corporation; and the said Linda Vista Irrigation District and the said Live Oak Corporation and its successors and assigns hereby release and discharge the City of San Diego and the pueblo lands of the City of San Diego heretofore assessed or claimed to be assessed for the payment of any tax, lien or assessment whatever of said district, or of any claim against said lands, which are described as follows." That pueblo lot No. 1179 was not described or mentioned in this receipt. That on April 4, 1912, the Linda Vista irrigation district issued its receipt, in part as follows: "Received of the City of San Diego, Six Thousand Eight Hundred and Ten ($6,810) Dollars in payment of the assessment of said District levied in the year 1911 to pay the judgments against said District upon the following described property: Description — Lot — Acres — Pueblo Lands." That pueblo lot No. 1179 was not mentioned in this receipt nor was any part of the assessment thereon included in any payment ever made by the city of San Diego. That all of the proceedings employed by the Linda Vista irrigation district in levying the assessment, making the sale, and in deeding the 80 acres to Charles B. Gould were legal and valid and in accordance with law as was the assignment from Gould to Faust. That "the plaintiff in this action has never been in the actual possession of the property involved in this action nor has he ever paid taxes thereon. The land involved in this action is, and at all times has been, wholly unimproved and no actual occupancy thereof has been had by any person. Plaintiff purchased the certificate of sale involved in this action for value and at no time prior to the issuance of the Linda Vista Irrigation District deed to plaintiff did plaintiff have actual notice or knowledge of the defendant's claim of title to said property nor of any settlement and/or negotiation for settlement of the claims of the Linda Vista Irrigation District, Live Oak Corporation, Volcan Land & Water Company, a corporation, and/or Charles B. Gould against this property or against any Pueblo Lands of the City of San Diego."

[3] In the case of San Diego v. Linda Vista Irrigation District, 108 Cal. 189, 41 P. 291, 35 L. R. A. 33, an action to quiet title to pueblo lands, it was held that an assessment by the defendant irrigation district upon pueblo lands of the city of San Diego which were unoccupied and uncultivated and which had not been put to use under the governmental functions of the city and which were susceptible of cultivation through irrigation, were subject to assessments levied by the irrigation district and to sale by it for unpaid assessments. Under authority of this case, the stipulated facts do not support the judgment, as the defendant has admitted that the assessment, sale, and conveyance of the property were all legal and valid proceedings taken under authority of and in accordance with the laws governing them.

[4] Under authority of Warden v. Nahas (Cal. Sup.) 300 P. 815 the judgment must be reversed regardless of the fact of the insufficiency of the stipulations to support it. The Warden Case was an action to quiet title against an invalid tax deed. The Supreme Court held as follows: "The judgment as to the portion thereof assailed upon this appeal read as follows: 'It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendants are the owners of the following described property (description) and that upon the payment to the plaintiff of the sum of $55.99, with interest thereon from the third day of July, 1928, at the rate of seven per cent per annum, that the title to said property and every part thereof be forever quieted in said defendants, and the plaintiff, her agents and servants shall be and they are hereby enjoined and estopped from asserting title thereto, or to any part thereof, after the payment by defendants to the plaintiff of the sum of $55.99 with interest thereon as aforesaid.' The plaintiff appealed from said judgment on the judgment roll and urged upon the appeal, as the only ground thereof, 'that the conclusions of law and the decree do not set any time in which the respondents are to make the payment set out in said decree, and is not the judgment required by the decisions of the supreme court of this state.' In support of her appeal the appellant directs attention to the case of Bloom v. Bloom, 207 Cal. 70, 276 P. 568, 569, in which, in an action substantially similar to this and in which the plaintiff appellant urged that 'the judgment is uncertain and incomplete in that no time was fixed within which the defendant was required to pay the amount found to be due the plaintiff as a condition upon which the defendant would be entitled to a reconveyance,' this court held that the judgment in that case was subject to the above infirmity, and that the trial court should have entered an appropriate judgment requiring the defendant to pay the amount found due the plaintiff within a specified reasonable time; that upon such payment within the time specified the defendant would be entitled to a reconveyance; and that in default of payment within such time the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree quieting his title. The court reversed the judgment in that case because of said infirmity. We are satisfied that a similar course must be pursued in the instant case."

The defendant has urged at considerable length that the judgment should be affirmed because of equitable reasons which need not be detailed here. None of them are within the stipulated facts, and some are contrary to inferences which these facts justify. Some are not within the issues made by the present pleadings. If the defendant desires to urge the grounds of defense suggested, it should take such steps as it may be advised to enable it to present any special defense it may be able to urge at another trial.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 330

CLOUGH v. ALLEN et al.
Civ. 7681.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
July 6, 1931.

1. Master and servant ☞302(1).

Respondent superior doctrine cannot be invoked, unless at time of negligent act causing injury servant was performing service for master.

2. Automobiles ☞197(7).

That agent was returning to his home at time of automobile accident after business visit to officer of employer, would not render employer liable for agent's negligence.

Such fact would not render the employer liable, because insufficient to establish that the agent was engaged in performing a service for the employer.

3. Appeal and error ☞891.

Appellate court cannot take evidence discovered after denial of new trial, and, if facts are found to be true, reverse and direct judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Marshall F. McComb, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Maude E. Clough against E. S. Allen and the National Automobile Insurance Company. From judgment for the last named defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

M. O. Graves, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John C. Miles, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J.

Action to recover damages. Plaintiff was injured by an automobile driven by defendant Allen. The National Automobile Insurance Company was joined as a defendant in the action as the employer of Allen. Both parties were served, and Allen defaulted. Upon the close of plaintiff's case, a nonsuit was granted as to the insurance company. Motion for a new trial was made and denied, from both of which orders plaintiff appeals.

From the evidence, it appears that Allen was employed as a "special agent" of defendant insurance company to solicit insurance from automobile dealers and finance companies. His hours of employment were from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon. His duties required him at times to visit outlying cities and he was not required to report at the office of the company before entering upon or completing his daily work. On the day of the accident complained of, Allen drove to the home of the president of his company and discussed with him a particular form of policy desired by a prospective client. The visit was made to the officer of defendant insurance company for the reason that such officer was confined to his home by sickness, and a personal interview was desired by the agent. The business was completed shortly after 6 o'clock in the evening, and Allen then drove his car several miles across the city of Los Angeles to Rowan street and Whittier boulevard, arriving there about 7 o'clock in the evening. It was at this time and place that the accident complained of occurred. Under these circumstances, appellant claims that defendant insurance company was liable for the tortious acts of defendant Allen at the time of the accident, and that the order granting a nonsuit as to his employer was erroneous and should be reversed.

[1, 2] There is no merit in the claim. There is absolutely no evidence in the record to show that the automobile was being used for the insurance company's purposes at the time of the accident, nor is there any evidence from which a presumption to this effect could be drawn. It nowhere appeared that the car driven by Allen belonged to the company. A master is not responsible for the negligence of his servant while such servant is pursuing his own ends. The doctrine of respondeat superior cannot be invoked in an action for personal injuries unless at the time of the negligent act causing the injury complained of the servant was engaged in performing a service for the master or some act incidental thereto. Kish v. State Automobile Ass'n, 190 Cal. 246, 212 P. 27; Hall v. Puente Oil Co., 47 Cal. App. 611, 191 P. 39; Randolph v. Hunt, 41 Cal. App. 739, 183 P. 358. Even if it be assumed that Allen was returning to his home after his visit to the officer of the company, such fact would not alter or change the situation. Mauchle v. Panama-Pacific Int. Exp. Co., 37 Cal. App. 715, 174 P. 400. Under such circumstances, the servant is not engaged in performing a service for the master.

[3] In a supplemental brief filed by appellant, it is claimed that subsequent to the denial of the motion for a new trial appellant has discovered that the car driven by Allen was owned by defendant insurance company, and we are asked to take evidence upon this subject, and, if we determine such fact to be true, to reverse the judgment and fix the amount of damage to which plaintiff should be entitled, and direct the lower court to enter such judgment. We have no such power. Tupman v. Haberkern, 208 Cal. 256, 280 P. 970. Plaintiff had full opportunity to properly present her case at the trial. There must be an end to litigation.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; PARKER, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 403

In re EHLER'S ESTATE.

EHLER et al. v. EHLER.

Civ. 7771.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 9, 1931.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨188.

Where it had not been determined, in widow's divorce action pending at husband's death, whether widow left husband voluntarily or for good cause, widow held not to have lost her statutory rights as widow.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨182.

Widow could have exempt furniture constituting portion of decedent's home set aside to her, although decedent had bequeathed furniture to others.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨181.

Widow could have proceeds from insurance policy set aside to her, notwithstanding executors had used it to pay claims.

4. Executors and administrators ⇨178.

Where decedent's estate was worth over $200,000, order awarding widow $750 per month during administration held not excessive.

5. Executors and administrators ⇨178.

Where decedent's estate was worth over $200,000, allowance of $6,500 to widow for eight months' period and $750 monthly thereafter held not abuse of discretion.

6. Executors and administrators ⇨176.

Allowance to widow should not be limited to one year after issuance of letters testamentary, unless estate is insolvent.

7. Executors and administrators ⇨176.

Estate, assets of which were sufficient to pay debts and administration expenditures, held not "insolvent" within statutory definition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1466).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Insolvency; Insolvent," see Words and Phrases.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter J. Desmond, Judge.

Proceedings for the probate of the estate of Gerd Ehler, deceased, in which Cora E. Ehler filed a petition for family allowance and for order setting apart exempt personal property and for order setting apart a homestead. From orders for petitioner, Otto Ehler and others, contestants, appeal.

Affirmed.

L. J. Faust, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Julius V. Patrosso, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J.

This is an appeal by the executors from an order for family allowance, and from an order setting apart exempt personal property, and from an order setting apart a homestead, all in favor of the respondent, who is the widow of decedent. Said decedent died testate leaving an estate consisting entirely of separate property, which he devised to his children by a former marriage. By his will he specifically disinherited respondent, giving as his reason for such action the fact that she had left him and commenced an action for divorce against him. The inventory showed the value of the estate to be $346,000, against which amount there were liabilities in the form of mortgages and two disputed claims amounting to $75,000 and $3,700 respectively, making in all $171,000 of outstanding claims, but less than $100,000 of admitted indebtedness.

Appellants maintain that respondent is not entitled to a family allowance, to the exempt personal property, or to the homestead out of her deceased husband's estate, for the reason that she was not a member of his family at the time of his death.

It is admitted that respondent commenced an action for divorce against deceased, which was pending at the time of his death, and that decedent had been paying to her the sum of $20 per week alimony pendente lite. In the Estate of Parkinson, 193 Cal. 354 at page 358, 224 P. 453, 455, it was contended that the use of the word "family" in section 1466, Code of Civil Procedure, gave rise to the implication that the allowances under that section were to be confined to cases where an actual family status existed at the date of the decedent's death, and the court in passing upon that question said: "We can see no reason for giving any such restricted significance to the use of that phrase in that section, nor, in fact, in making any distinction between the application of section 1464 and section 1466 of said Code in that regard. Both of these sections are dealing with the support of the widow and minor children, if any, of the decedent, the one before and the other after the return of the inventory. In the case of an application made under section 1464, Code of Civil Procedure, this court held, in the Matter of Estate of Gould, 181 Cal. 11, 183 P. 146, that the right of a widow to a reasonable provision for her support under section 1464 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not conditioned upon her having lived in a family relation with the deceased at the time of his death. In so holding this court reviewed the earlier cases in this state involving this very question, and wherein it was held that, in the absence of a showing that the wife had either by her conduct lost, or by her agreements waived, her statutory rights as a widow, she was entitled to a family allowance upon her husband's death, even though she was not living in the family relation with him at the time of his death. We can perceive no reason why this principle should not be given a like application to the provisions of section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure and to applications for family allowances made thereunder."

[1] Appellants contend that the widow voluntarily abandoned decedent, and that she thereby waived her right to claim any allowance from his estate. As a matter of fact, the record shows that she left him and instituted an action for divorce against him, which was pending at the date of his death. It was therefore never determined whether or not respondent left voluntarily or for good cause. In view of this we are of the opinion that there was a total absence of any showing that respondent by her conduct lost her statutory rights as the widow of decedent.

In the Estate of Henningsen, 199 Cal. 103, 247 P. 1082, 1083 (in which an appeal was taken from an order setting apart a homestead to the surviving husband of a deceased wife, and an appeal from an order setting apart the exempt property of said estate to the surviving spouse, and in which the appellant contended that the family relation had been dissolved prior to death, and that therefore the husband was not entitled to benefit from the estate of the deceased wife), the court said: "Even if it were to be conceded, which it is not, that the appellant herein had established upon such hearing by practically undisputed evidence that the family status of the parties had been destroyed, it would not follow that the husband of the decedent must for that reason have been denied the rights he sought to assert under section 1465 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the contrary, this court has held in Estate of Gould, 181 Cal. 11, 183 P. 146, and also in Estate of Parkinson, 193 Cal. 354, 224 P. 453, that the rights of the surviving spouse created under the provisions of sections 1464, 1465, and 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure were not conditioned upon the existence of the family status at the date of the decedent's death."

[2, 3] The court, in its order setting aside the exempt personal property for the use of the widow, included therein several pieces of furniture from the home place, which had been bequeathed by decedent to his heirs. The appellants claim that the court's action was inequitable and contrary to the law, inasmuch as the particular articles were unnecessary for the use of respondent, and that she could very well have done without them. These pieces of furniture—admittedly exempt from execution—constituted a portion of decedent's home, and upon application of the widow, duly made and noticed, the requirement to set them aside to her is mandatory, and the court is without jurisdiction to make an order denying it. Mahoney v. National Surety Co., 89 Cal. App. 148, at page 152, 264 P. 304, citing Estate of Ballentine, 45 Cal. 696; County of Los Angeles v. State, 64 Cal. App. 290, at page 296 et seq., 222 P. 153. This is also true of the proceeds from the insurance policy. The respondent had the prior right to have this money set aside to her, despite the fact that the executors had used it to pay claims filed against the estate.

[4-7] Appellants also claim that the court grossly abused its discretion in awarding respondent the sum of $6,500 for the month ending December 20, 1927 (which was more than eight months after letters testamentary had been granted), and also awarding the further sum of $750 per month from that date for the period of administration of the estate or until further order of the court; and in addition claim that these amounts are far in excess of the amounts reasonably necessary for respondent's maintenance according to her circumstances and manner of living, and are not justified by the amount and condition of the estate, which they maintain is insolvent. So far as the record shows, respondent received from the estate of her deceased husband the homestead, together with its furnishings and $4,000 insurance money. There is nothing to show that she had independent means of her own with which to sustain herself. Further, the estate is a large one—over $200,000—and, while much of the property is non-income bearing, we do not find that the order awarding the widow $750 per month during the period of administration is excessive or an abuse of discretion by the trial court. The allowance of $6,500 "for the month ending December 20, 1927," probably was made by the court in the light of the fact that there had been a delay of seven months in the filing of the inventory, and a corresponding delay in the matter of family allowance. Neither do we believe that the allowance should be limited to one year after issuance of letters testamentary, unless the court should subsequently find the estate to be insolvent. In the ordinary estate offered for probate, there is rarely either sufficient cash on hand or income with which to pay off outstanding indebtedness, and an executor ordinarily is forced to sell off part of the estate in order to secure the funds necessary to pay claims and demands outstanding. In the instant case the assets of the estate were amply sufficient to pay all debts and all expenditures incident to administration. That is sufficient to make the estate not insolvent, within the definition of an insolvent estate under the provisions of section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Where the assets of an estate were appraised at $58,000, and the debts allowed, exclusive of subsequently accrued interest, amounted to $31,000, but the property could not at that time be sold at the appraised value, it was held, nevertheless, that the estate was then solvent. Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 143, 152, 90 P. 454.

The orders are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

115 Cal.App. 383

REYNOSA v. PICKWICK STAGES SYSTEM
et al.

Civ. 6819.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 8, 1931.

1. Negligence ⇨62(1).

"Intervening efficient cause" is independent force which breaks causal connection between original wrong and injury.

"Intervening efficient cause" is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and the injury, and but for which the injury would not have occurred.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Intervening Cause," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Negligence ⇨62(3).

To fix liability for accident, law will not look back from injurious consequences beyond last efficient cause, where responsible person has intervened.

This is so if the chain of events is so broken that they become independent and the result cannot be said to have probably and naturally accrued from the primary cause, or to have been anticipated.

3. Automobiles ⇨245(65).

In action against stage company for injuries in collision with automobile after automobile in which plaintiff was riding was struck by stage, whether presence of other automobile involved in collision was independent intervening cause held for jury.

4. Damages ⇨131(1).

$5,500 for fractures of shoulder blade and ribs and other injuries, held not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Edward Henderson, Judge.

Action by Frank Reynosa against the Pickwick Stages System and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Thomas S. Gould, for appellants.

Sheridan, Orr, Drapeau & Gardner, of Ventura, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

The respondent was injured in a collision between his automobile and another machine in the county of Ventura. After trial by a jury, a verdict and judgment were rendered in his favor, and the defendants appealed from said judgment.

It was testified by the plaintiff that while riding on a curve in the public highway, in a northerly direction, he suddenly noticed the lights of a machine within a few feet before him, upon his side of the thoroughfare, there was a crash, and the next that he knew he was taken to a hospital at Fillmore, in Ventura county. His son, who was driving at the time, swore that his Ford car was traveling near the right bank of the roadway, that the wheels on the right side were off of the pavement; that he first saw the approaching stage on the curve between thirty and forty feet distant, that it was traveling at the rate of about fifty miles per hour, that he quickly turned against the bank, but was unable to avoid a collision. He was unable to testify as to subsequent occurrences. A witness by the name of Williams testified that he was driving in a sedan in a southerly direction, but some distance northerly from the scene of the first impact, when the stage passed him at a speed of fifty or fifty-five miles an hour; that "as it rolled up the boulevard a few feet more, on the left-hand side of the road we heard a flash, and out from behind the bank came the Ford, and it rolled along next the bank and angled right on the road and ran into us." The testimony of Mrs. Williams tended to corroborate the two former witnesses. The witness Shean averred that he was driving in a southerly direction along the same highway, at about forty miles per hour, to the rear of the Williams car; that the stage passed him at a speed of "fifty miles, probably fifty-five, maybe sixty, because they passed us very fast." This witness further testified, and was corroborated by various witnesses, that "as it passed Williams it swerved to the left and they were completely on the left side of the road as they hit the curve; * * * we heard the bump and then we heard the smash, and then the Ford—Mr. Reynosa's car—smashed into Williams in front of us. * * * I asked the stage driver why he was driving so fast and he said he was late and trying to make up time." It was stipulated that the driver was an employee of the appellant company, and that he was at the time of the accident operating the stage in the course of his employment. Evidence offered on behalf of the defendants consisted of testimony to the effect that the stage was at all times on the right-hand side of the boulevard, that its impact with the Ford was very slight, and that the stage received only a small indentation on the left rear fender.

[1-3] It is first contended that there was a total failure of proof of any negligence upon the part of either defendant proximately resulting in the injuries alleged to have been sustained. It is insisted that respondent's machine and occupants received their injuries, if at all, from the fact that the "sedan, which had been following at a distance of approximately 150 feet behind the stage, crashed into the Ford." The rule invoked by appellants requires that the plaintiff must show that the negligence, if any "was an efficient cause from which the injury followed in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any efficient intervening cause." Marovich v. Central California T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595, 599. But in the cited case the issue arose rather as to whether a street car passenger suffered injury from its failure to stop or from walking off the car while it was in motion, than as to whether the injury resulted from a direct impact or from the resulting contact. We are cited to no authority, nor is logical argument advanced in the instant case, that contact with the ground may be held an efficient intervening cause of injury to one who has been struck by an automobile, illegally driven, at a dangerous place upon a much-traveled public thoroughfare. Appellants' contention falls for want of evidence that Williams' car collided with the Ford at all, other than that the Ford was cast over the roadway into the sedan, as herein stated from the testimony of various witnesses. An intervening efficient cause is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original wrong and the injury, and but for which the injury would not have occurred. The law will not look back from the injurious consequences beyond the last efficient cause, where a responsible and intelligent person has intervened, if the chain of events is so broken that they become independent and the result cannot be said to have probably and naturally accrued from the primary cause, or to have been anticipated. Schwartz v. California Gas, etc., Corp., 163 Cal. 398, 125 P. 1044; Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas, etc., Corp., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134. It does not appear that the mere coincidental lawful presence of Williams at some distance from the collision intervened or was a more efficient cause of the result than was the embankment which prevented respondent's escape from a violent irresistible primary force. There was evidence that he applied his brakes immediately upon hearing the crash; that he was driving at a legal rate of speed, and that the Ford was traveling but fifteen or twenty miles per hour, when it was struck. The jury might well have concluded that the opportune appearance of Williams was not an independent intervention but for which the injuries would not have occurred. That he was not guilty of negligence has heretofore been decided. Williams v. Pickwick Stages System (Cal. App.) 297 P. 98.

[4] Finally, it is strenuously insisted by appellants that the verdict allowing damages in the sum of $5,500 for injuries to the spinal area and thorax of respondent's body was so excessive as to indicate that the jury were influenced by the evidence adduced. It was testified that the respondent suffered fractures of the shoulder blade and ribs, and other injuries, from which he was still incapacitated and endured pain eight months after the accident. We cannot say as a matter of law that the facts and circumstances before the jury were not such as to justify their action, nor do the appellants cite any particular wherein the record tends to warrant a charge of unfairness or of passion or prejudice upon the part of the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 314

PEOPLE v. HICKS.

Cr. 2070.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 1, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 11, 1931. Hearing
Denied by Supreme Court July 30, 1931.

1. Criminal law ☞1134(6).

Notwithstanding trial judge gives erroneous or insufficient reason for rendering judgment, if on review it appears that upon any theory judgment rendered was in accordance with law, it will be sustained.

2. Homicide ☞250.

In homicide prosecution, evidence held to support conviction of manslaughter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Harry Hicks was convicted of manslaughter, and from the judgment rendered, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Joel Terrell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HOUSER, J.

From a judgment of conviction of the crime of manslaughter, and from an order by which his motion for a new trial was denied, appellant has appealed to this court.

The action was tried before the court without a jury, and the only specifications of error presented by appellant are that "the court erred in applying the law to the facts," and that "the verdict of the court is contrary to and against the evidence produced at the trial, and the law."

From the briefs of respective counsel it appears that the point at issue is whether the evidence adduced at the trial of the action was sufficient to support the judgment.

[1] It is argued by appellant that, because in rendering judgment the judge of the trial court made the statement, in substance, that if the case should stand entirely upon the testimony given by defendant "an actual case of manslaughter was shown," in determining whether the judgment should be reversed, no consideration should be given by this court to the other evidence in the case. But manifestly such is not the law. The authorities are numerous to the effect that, notwithstanding the fact that in rendering judgment an erroneous or an insufficient reason therefor may have been assigned by the trial court, if on review it appear that upon any theory the judgment rendered was in accordance with the law as applied to the facts in the case, it will be sustained. 2 Cal. Jur. 809; 24 Cal. Jur. 924, and authorities respectively there cited.

[2] Although, in some particulars contradicted by testimony given by defendant, evidence was presented on the trial of the instant action which, in substance, showed that immediately prior to the commission of the offense "this man that was killed (Washington) came out and run down here onto the ground and Mr. Hicks (defendant) came out on the porch there and they were talking, but I don't know what they said. Mr. Hicks went back into this open door and left the door open and this man that was killed went up onto the step to the porch and Mr. Hicks came back and struck him three blows and I saw the man fall and that's all I know." No blows were exchanged between defendant and Washington when they first came out of the house and walked down to the side of the steps; defendant talked as though he were angry when he went back into the house. Washington walked up onto the porch. What then occurred is illustrated by the following testimony:

"Q. Did he (Washington) put his hand on the door? A. I don't think so.

"Q. As far as you know, he was standing on the steps? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you hear any words then? A. No.

"Q. Then you saw Mr. Hicks come out? A. I did.

"Q. Then did you see any blows exchanged? A. I seen him strike him three times. * * *

"Q. Could you hear the blows? A. Yes, I heard the blows.

"Q. As well as see them? A. I saw them and heard them.

"Q. Was this man struck down? A. He fell; that's all I know.

"Q. Do you know whether or not he fell at the first blow or was it after the three blows? A. I couldn't tell you nothing about it.

"Q. When (then) what did you see Mr. Hicks do? A. He went back in the house and closed the door."

Furthermore, testimony was given by witnesses to the effect that, immediately after the occurrence which resulted in the death of Washington, defendant stated that "he threw everything on him that he could get; * * * and he had told him to get out of the house and he didn't go and he jumped on him." In addition thereto the testimony given by defendant was much weakened, if not altogether discredited, by reason of the fact that when questioned by officers defendant told them that he "didn't know anything about how Washington was killed"; that he did not kill him; that he did not hit him. It was not until defendant took the witness stand in his own behalf that he made a statement to the effect that Washington had tried to hit him with a beer bottle, and that then in self-defense defendant had hit Washington with a pick handle.

Considering the application herein of the rule that the trial court is the judge of the credibility of the testimony given by the several witnesses, it becomes apparent that, notwithstanding the discrepancies, if any, which appeared in the testimony given by the several witnesses called by the prosecution, in the aggregate it was sufficient to justify the trial court in reaching the conclusion that defendant was guilty of the commission of the crime of manslaughter.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Douglas L. Edmonds, Judge.

Action by Elmer E. Frost and another, doing business under the fictitious firm name of Elmer E. Frost & Company, against the Majestic Furniture Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Paul Friedman, Mose Katzev, and Louis Lamy, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John E. Dalton, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J.

The sole question presented by this appeal from the judgment is whether the evidence adduced on the trial of the action was sufficient to sustain the finding of fact to the effect that plaintiff sold to the defendant, and the defendant purchased from plaintiff, certain furniture.

On examination of the record herein it appears that, although plaintiff and other witnesses produced in his behalf testified to a state of facts from which the conclusion might have been reached by the trial court that the furniture in question was consigned by plaintiff to the defendant, on the other hand, the defendant by its witnesses was equally positive that no consignment was made, but, to the contrary, that the parties to the transaction agreed upon an out-and-out sale of the furniture one to the other, and that a sale was the ultimate result of their negotiations. In such circumstances, the authorities are universal that the power of deciding the submitted issue of fact rests with the trial court and that its decision thereon cannot be disturbed by this tribunal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

115 Cal.App. 319
In re JENKINSON'S ESTATE.
Civ. 7904.

115 Cal.App. 442

FROST et al. v. MAJESTIC FURNITURE
CO. et al.
Civ. 6635.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
July 10, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

Appeal and error  $\S$  1011(1).

Where testimony is conflicting, issue of fact is for court in trial without jury, and court's decision cannot be disturbed on appeal.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
July 1, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1931.

1. Wills  $\S$  230.

Unsuccessful opposition to probate held not to constitute bar to contest of invalid will after probate (Code Civ. Proc.  $\S$  1327).

2. Wills  $\S$  111(1).

Instrument not signed by testatrix held invalid as testamentary disposition of estate.

Following the last provision of purported will in handwriting of some person, a cross appeared as indicating the place for signature, but signature was absent, and at bottom of page was written the word "over," and then followed on opposite page a form of attestation clause beneath which was written the name of testatrix and blank spaces for names of witnesses. Name of testatrix was written upon first line of these spaces, and a line was drawn through her name, and in margin opposite appeared a notation that it was copy of one person named had.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Crail, Judge.

Proceeding by Catherine Jenkinson, contestant, against Florence P. Caton, proponent, to contest the will of Eliza Jane Jenkinson, which was admitted to probate. From an order revoking the order admitting the will to probate, proponent appeals.

Affirmed.

Thos. C. Ridgway and John M. Thomas, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Randall & Bartlett and Manley C. Davidson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J.

A document probated as the last will and testament of Eliza Jane Jenkinson, deceased, was thereafter contested by the respondent, and was adjudged null and void, and the order admitting the same to probate was revoked. The proponent appealed from said judgment.

Upon the original petition for probate the instrument in controversy was alleged to have been the olographic will of the decedent, entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testatrix. It consisted of twelve consecutively numbered paragraphs or provisions, and an attestation clause, immediately following which appeared the name of the deceased, all in the handwriting of some person. Opposite the tenth paragraph, which directed that cash remaining after payment of legacies be equally divided, appeared in the margin the notation, "with my four children." The eleventh paragraph was entirely obliterated, apparently with pencil. Following the last provision was written: "In witness I hereby set my hand this 3rd day of December, 1927." A cross then appears, as indicating the place for signature, but the signature is absent. At the bottom of the page was written the word "over," and then follows upon the opposite side a form of attestation clause, beneath which is written the name Eliza Jane Jenkinson, and blank spaces for the names and addresses of two witnesses. The name of the decedent was written upon the first line of these spaces, a line was drawn through the same, and in the margin opposite them appears the notation: "Copy of the one Mr. Madden has." No witness signed the purported will.

The trial court found that the instrument previously admitted to probate "is not the will of said decedent and that it is not executed in the manner and form required by law; that said purported will purports to be entirely written, dated and signed by the said Eliza Jane Jenkinson as her olographic will, but that the said purported will was never at any time signed by the said Eliza Jane Jenkinson; * * * that said instrument is not an instrument which would operate to transfer the property of Eliza Jane Jenkinson on the occurrence of her death."

[1] One of the heirs of said deceased contested the probate of the instrument upon substantially similar grounds to those interposed by respondent in attacking its validity after probate. Appellant's contention is that "the judgment upon the contest prior to probate is final and conclusive upon the petitioner for revocation of the probate." In other words, it is contended that an unsuccessful opposition to probate constitutes a bar to the contest of an invalid will after probate. In support of her defense of the document appellant urges a further ground that, since the petition for revocation is based upon its invalidity, questions as to its legal dating, signature, and handwriting may not be considered because they are merely matters of proof. It is obvious that if this were true the proof and admission to probate of any purported last will and testament would preclude a contest as well in the absence of opposition to its probate, and result in nullification of positive legislative enactment to the contrary. A careful perusal of appellant's briefs and cited authorities does not permit of such anomalous conclusions. Section 1327 of the Code of Civil Procedure unconditionally authorized respondent's contest, as follows: "When a will has been admitted to probate, any person interested may, at any time within one year after such probate, contest the same or the validity of the will. For that purpose he must file in the court in which the will was proved a petition in writing, containing his allegations against the validity of the will or against the sufficiency of the proof, and praying that the probate may be revoked."

An insufficiency of the proof of the date, writing, or signature upon the admission to probate of an olographic will which under the tests authorized by said section may render it invalid, presupposes the right to establish such insufficiency upon a subsequent contest by the will itself and other competent evidence. In Estate of Dorn, 190 Cal. 343, 212 P. 206, 207, our Supreme Court distinguished other authorities cited by appellant, and in a similar proceeding said: "The right to contest a will after its admission to probate is thus expressly reserved to all the heirs. To uphold the soundness of respondent's position would be to hold that the provisions above quoted and all the remaining provisions of that article of the Code are wholly inoperative, because the probate of a will is as binding in the absence of a contest as it is when a contest has been filed and tried. It may well be that an heir who has actually contested the will before probate is thereby estopped to contest it again after probate, but that is not the situation here involved. Certain it is that one who has not done so is accorded that right for the period of one year after probate."

[2] Since the trial court was clothed with power to so hold, it cannot be said upon appeal in the instant case that the subject of inquiry was not invalid as a testamentary disposition of the estate. In re Estate of Manchester, 174 Cal. 417, 163 P. 358, L. R. A. 1917D, 629, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 227.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

---

115 Cal.App. 167

FUGELSANG et al. v. STEINER et al.
Civ. 368.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
June 24, 1931.

1. Negligence ⇨136(9).

Contributory negligence is question of law only when reasonable men can draw but one inference from facts, and that pointing unerringly to plaintiff's negligence contributing to injury.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1002.

Jury's finding on conflicting evidence is controlling unless appellate court can discover, from evidence and inferences reasonably deducible therefrom, that determination was manifestly incorrect.

3. Trial ⇨139(1), 140(1).

Weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses is for jury.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(80).

Contributory negligence of driver, on issue of right of way at intersection, held for jury (St. 1923, p. 560, § 131(a), as amended by St. 1929, p. 541, § 55).

California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 560), § 131(a), as amended by St. 1929, p. 541, § 55, provides that driver of vehicle approaching intersection shall yield right of way to vehicle which has entered intersection, and that when two vehicles enter intersection at same time, driver of vehicle on left shall yield to driver on right.

5. Automobiles ⇨208.

That driver, after seeing defendant's automobile approaching intersection from right, did not again look until too late to avoid collision, held not to defeat recovery by occupants of his automobile (St. 1923, p. 560, § 131(a), as amended by St. 1929, p. 541, § 55).

Recovery by occupants of automobile having right of way was not defeated by their driver's failure to look again after first seeing defendant's automobile, because driver was entitled to assume that defendant's automobile was traveling at lawful and prudent rate of speed and under such control that it could be slowed down or if necessary stopped to enable automobile having right of way to proceed through intersection with safety, in view of driver's testimony that when he first looked defendant's automobile was 140 feet from intersection.

6. Automobiles ⇨226(2).

That automobile occupant was reading book at time of intersection collision held not to defeat recovery, without showing that her dereliction proximately caused collision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by Martin Fugelsang and another, minors, by their guardian ad litem, Caren Fugelsang, against H. J. Steiner and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

F. W. Docker, Claude Minard, and R. E. Norton, all of Fresno, for appellants.

M. F. McCormick and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for respondents.

JENNINGS, J.

The present action was instituted to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision between an automobile operated by plaintiff Martin Fugelsang and another automobile operated by defendant H. J. Steiner. Plaintiffs were minors and have prosecuted the action through their guardian ad litem. At the conclusion of the trial the case was submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions by the court. The jury returned a verdict in favor of each plaintiff. Thereupon judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs. From this judgment defendants have appealed.

The record herein presents the following state of facts: On October 17, 1929, respondent Martin Fugelsang was operating a Ford roadster automobile on Braley avenue in Fresno county. Braley avenue runs north and south and the Ford roadster was proceeding in a northerly direction. Braley avenue intersects Kearney avenue, which runs east and west. Appellant Steiner, an employee of appellant California Northern Petroleum Company, was operating a Studebaker sedan in a westerly direction on Kearney avenue. At the intersection of the two streets Kearney avenue is approximately 140 feet wide. There is upon it a central driveway which is graded to a width of 39 feet and oiled in the center to a width of 20 feet. On each side of this central roadway there is a road running parallel to the central driveway. Between the central driveway and each of the parallel roads there is a row of palm, oleander, and eucalyptus trees. Braley avenue is graded to a width of 26 feet south of its intersection with Kearney avenue and has an oiled surface of approximately 13 to 15 feet wide in the center. South of the southerly roadway along Kearney avenue there is an irrigation ditch, and at the southwest corner of the intersection of Kearney avenue and Braley avenue there was a vineyard whose vines on the day of the collision had attained a height of from  $4\frac{1}{2}$  to 5 feet. The point of collision of the two automobiles was near the center of the intersection of the central driveway of Kearney avenue with Braley avenue. The evidence presented at the trial indicates that the right front part of appellants' Studebaker sedan collided with the right rear side of the Ford roadster owned and operated by respondent Martin Fugelsang. As a result of the collision the right rear wheel and fender of the Ford roadster were crushed and the rear bumper torn off. The windshield was shattered and the standards were broken. The steering wheel and the top of the radiator were bent down and the right front wheel broken. The front bumper of the Studebaker sedan was torn off and the right front fender was crushed. The right headlight was broken and the right front spring horn was bent. The speed of the automobiles was variously estimated at from 15 to 35 miles per hour for the Ford roadster and from 35 to 55 miles per hour for the Studebaker sedan as the vehicles approached the intersection. Following the collision the Ford roadster came to a stop at about the northeast corner of the intersection, a distance of approximately 30 feet from the point of collision. The Studebaker sedan came to a stop at a point on the southerly side of the central driveway of Kearney avenue and west of the intersection with Braley avenue at a distance variously estimated from 50 feet to 250 feet from the point of collision. While most of the evidence introduced at the trial by appellants indicated that the two automobiles came into the intersection at approximately the same moment, it is to be noted that appellant Steiner testified that when he first saw the Ford automobile it was entering the intersection, at which moment the Studebaker sedan which he was operating was approximately 20 feet east of said intersection. The testimony of respondents' witnesses indicates that the Ford roadster had proceeded into the intersection before appellants' automobile had come into it. On the point as to whether the Ford automobile which approached the intersection on the left of the Studebaker sedan had entered the intersection prior to the entrance into it of the Studebaker automobile, the evidence is therefore, at most, conflicting.

[1] Appellants first contend that the evidence showed that the respondent Martin Fugelsang was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law and that therefore the verdict rendered in his favor lacks evidentiary support and that the judgment based on the verdict is contrary to law and that the court erred in denying appellants' motion for a new trial. Counsel for appellants correctly state the rule relative to contributory negligence as a matter of law. It has been so often and clearly enunciated by California courts that its scope and limitations are determined. "Contributory negligence is a question of law only when the court is impelled to say that from the facts reasonable men can draw but one inference, and that an inference pointing unerringly to the negligence of the plaintiff contributing to his injury." Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 343, 208 P. 125, 128. The above language was quoted with approval in Flores v. Fitzgerald, 204 Cal. 374, 268 P. 369. It is admitted that the evidence as to the cause of the accident was sharply conflicting. Under such circumstances there is slight possibility of applying the doctrine of contributory negligence as a matter of law. The evidence upon which appellants rely to sustain their contention that the respondent Martin Fugelsang was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law is the testimony of Martin Fugelsang himself wherein he stated that he looked to his right as he entered the intersection, saw appellants' automobile about 140 feet to his right approaching the intersection at a speed which he could not estimate, that he then looked to his left and did not again look to the right until appellants' automobile was within 3 or 4 feet of his automobile, when he glanced over his right shoulder and saw appellants' car in close proximity to his own. The case of Kinney v. King, 47 Cal. App. 390, 190 P. 834, on which appellants place so much reliance, was one wherein the court had before it the construction of a municipal ordinance providing that the drivers of all vehicles must look out for and give the right of way to automobiles approaching from the right at the street intersections. In its decision the court adverted to the fact that plaintiffs' own evidence showed that when plaintiff F. E. Kinney was approaching the intersection in which the collision occurred he saw the defendant's automobile traveling at such speed and at such a point in the street as would bring it into collision with his own car, and the court said that this being true both parties must be held to have been approaching the intersection simultaneously within the meaning of the ordinance and that the duty therefore rested upon plaintiff to yield the right of way to defendant who was at plaintiffs' right. The conclusion arrived at by the appellate court that the evidence of the plaintiffs showed that as plaintiff F. E. Kinney approached the intersection he saw defendant's automobile traveling at such speed and at such a point that if each driver continued to proceed along his respective line of approach a collision would inevitably occur indicates the existence of an important element of fact in view of the language of the ordinance before the court. The evidence in the instant case does not warrant this court in arriving at the conclusion announced in the case cited. Furthermore, we are not here concerned with the interpretation of an ordinance phrased as was the ordinance in Kinney v. King, supra. The statutory law here applicable is to be found in subdivision (a) of section 131 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 560), as amended by St. 1929, p. 541, § 55, which reads as follows: "The driver of a vehicle approaching an intersection shall yield the right of way to a vehicle which has entered the intersection. When two vehicles enter an intersection at the same time the driver of the vehicle on the left shall yield to the driver on the right."

[2-4] This was the state law applicable to the situation presented in the instant case which was in effect at the time of the collision. Under it the right of way at street intersections is given to the vehicle which first enters the intersection. It is only in those cases in which the two vehicles actually enter the intersection at the same time that the rule that a driver on the left shall yield to a driver on the right applies. An important and vital feature therefore of the present action, and so recognized throughout the trial, is a determination of whether the Ford automobile operated by respondent Martin Fugelsang entered the intersection prior to the entrance into it of the Studebaker sedan operated by appellant Steiner. Since the evidence respecting this feature was in conflict, the jury's determination of the fact is controlling unless this court can discover from the evidence presented and inferences reasonably deducible therefrom, that the jury's determination was manifestly incorrect. It is argued that, accepting as correct the testimony of respondents and their witnesses as to the speed of the two automobiles and the distance of appellants' automobile from the point of collision when it was first observed by respondent Martin Fugelsang, the inherent improbability of Martin Fugelsang's testimony is apparent and it is said that this tends to substantiate appellants' testimony that each car entered the intersection at the same time, traveling at approximately the same rate of speed. To arrive at this conclusion there is involved a mathematical calculation where-in certain factors are assumed as definitely fixed. We must, for instance, assume that appellants' automobile was 140 feet from the point where respondents' automobile was when Martin Fugelsang first observed it and this latter point must be taken as definitely fixed. Furthermore, we must be able to assume a definite rate of speed at which each automobile was traveling. But the testimony relating to these different factors is in conflict. Appellants' witnesses fix the speed of appellants' automobile at from 30 to 35 miles per hour as it approached the intersection and the speed of respondents' automobile at approximately the same rate. Respondents' witnesses place the speed of the Ford automobile at 15 miles per hour approaching the intersection and a decrease in this speed in the intersection and estimate the speed of appellants' automobile at from 35 to 55 miles per hour. The estimate of respondent Martin Fugelsang that appellants' car was 140 feet distant from his own when he first observed it is an estimate and nothing more. It is therefore obvious that too many facts are in dispute to arrive at a determination of the problem by mathematical calculation. These disputed facts were necessarily resolved in respondents' favor by the jury who heard the testimony of the witnesses who testified during the trial. Upon the jury rested the duty of determining the weight to be given to the evidence, its sufficiency, and the credibility of the witnesses.

[5] It is, however, urged that, although it be conceded that respondent Martin Fugelsang had the right of way, he was not entitled to recover, because his own undisputed testimony shows that, having first looked to the right as he entered the intersection and having seen appellants' automobile approaching the intersection, he then looked away and to his left and did not again look to the right until it was too late to avoid the collision that ensued. This failure to look longer to the right is said to constitute negligence which contributed to the collision and bars him from recovery. But as we are now proceeding on the hypothesis that the testimony of Martin Fugelsang is correct, we must assume that it was correct in its entirety and therefore assume not only that Martin Fugelsang looked once to his right, but also that his estimate that appellants' automobile was 140 feet away was correct. If his estimate of the distance was correct, respondent Martin Fugelsang was then entitled to assume that appellants' automobile was traveling at a lawful and prudent rate of speed and under such control that it could be slowed down or if necessary brought to a stop, to enable respondent to proceed through the intersection with safety. Robinson v. Clemons, 46 Cal. App. 661, 664, 190 P. 203; Carbaugh v. White Bus Line, 51 Cal. App. 1, 195 P. 1066; Whitelaw v. McGilliard, 179 Cal. 349, 176 P. 679. Under such circumstances, respondent was under no duty to give further heed to appellants' automobile.

[6] Finally, it is contended that respondent Ellen Fugelsang is not entitled to recover because, according to her own testimony, she was reading a book as the automobile in which she was riding as a guest proceeded into and across the intersection. This failure on her part to look and to warn her brother Martin Fugelsang is said to constitute negligence which contributed to the collision and to the injuries for which she claims compensation. If, as counsel for respondents point out, it be conceded that Ellen Fugelsang was negligent in failing to look, this alone does not bar her from recovery, for it was incumbent upon appellants to show that her dereliction in this regard contributed proximately to the collision. Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 96 Cal. App. 161, 273 P. 875, 274 P. 594; Curran v. Earle C. Anthony, Inc., 77 Cal. App. 462, 247 P. 236; Bolles v. Boone, 66 Cal. App. 238, 225 P. 775. We may speculate and conjecture that if respondent Ellen Fugelsang had looked up from the book which she was reading she would have seen appellants' automobile approaching and that if she had continued to look she might have been able to foresee that appellants' automobile would collide with the Ford automobile in which she was riding in sufficient time to enable her to warn the driver seated by her side so that he might have avoided the collision. But we here enter upon a field of clear speculation and conjecture not justified in view of appellants' failure to sustain the burden of showing not only that she was negligent but that her negligence proximately contributed to the happening of the collision in which she suffered the injuries for which the jury awarded her damages. Gett v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 192 Cal. 621, 221 P. 376; Basler v. Sacramento Gas & Electric Co., 158 Cal. 514, 111 P. 530, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 642.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

118 Cal.App.(Sup.) 761

PEOPLE v. ARMENTROUT et al.

Cr. A. 632.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

July 3, 1931.

1. Conspiracy ⇨23.

Workmen engaged in industrial dispute have right to appeal to others in sympathy with cause by spreading news of dispute, whether by arranging meeting in hall or printing paper, and employer, though damaged as result, cannot complain.

2. Constitutional law ⇨90.

Freedom of speech and press includes liberty of circulating and publishing; to "publish" ordinarily meaning to disclose, reveal, proclaim, circulate, or make public (Const. art. 1, § 9).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Publish," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Constitutional law ⇨90.

Constitutional guaranty of free press means immunity from restraint previous to publication (Const. art. 1, § 9).

4. Constitutional law ⇨90.

Constitutional guaranty of free press not only inhibits prior, but subsequent, curtailment of right of expression, subject to wartime restrictions or restrictions properly imposed upon expressions advocating violence (Const. art. 1, § 9).

5. Constitutional law ⇨90.

Injunction ⇨98(1).

No injunction lies against publication of what would be libel or contempt (Const. art. 1, § 9).

6. Municipal corporations ⇨596.

"Anti-picketing" ordinance, so far as prohibiting use of banners, signs and the like, held aimed at banners, signs, or circulars exhibited or offered free.

7. Municipal corporations ⇨596.

"Anti-picketing" ordinance held directed at direct persuasion not to patronize or work, not indirect persuasion coming from adhering to cause.

8. Municipal corporations ⇨631(1).

Sale or display of newspaper advising people not to patronize theater held not to violate "anti-picketing" ordinance.

9. Municipal corporations ⇨631(1).

Crying out, as part of appeal to buy newspaper, headline advocating withdrawal of theater patronage, would not violate "anti-picketing" ordinance, in view of Constitution and other ordinance (Const. art. 1, § 9).

If defendants confined themselves to announcing, "Extra. Read the * * * All about the * * * Theatre being unfair," or words to similar effect, there would be no violation of "anti-picketing" ordinance, making it unlawful to make any loud or unusual noise for purpose of inducing or influencing any person to refrain from entering any works or factory or place of business or employment, not only in view of general constitutional considerations, but in view of street advertising ordinance excepting news venders from the provisions of the latter.

10. Municipal corporations ⇨631(1).

Crying out, in front of theater and without referring to newspaper, headline advising withdrawal of theater patronage, held violation of "anti-picketing" ordinance, not cured by exhibiting newspaper.

11. Municipal corporations ⇨640.

Evidence sustained conviction of violating "anti-picketing" ordinance.

12. Criminal law ⇨62.

Excepting offenses against laws or ordinances under police power, creating crime regardless of intent, principal cannot be criminally responsible for agent's act unless he aids, commands, or assents thereto.

13. Criminal law ⇨21.

In statutory offense, created under police power, unless wrongful intent or guilty knowledge, commonly designated by words "willfully" or "maliciously," is made essential element of prohibited act, intent to disobey law is immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Maliciously" and "Willfully," see Words and Phrases.]

14. Criminal law ⇨20.

"Willfulness," if made vital ingredient of crime, implies knowledge and purpose to do wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Willfulness," see Words and Phrases.]

15. Criminal law ⇨62.

Criminal act requiring specific intent cannot be ratified.

16. Municipal corporations ⇨631(1).

"Anti-picketing" ordinance held intended to punish only acts done with specific intent of inducing persons to refrain from entering business place, or trading therein, or workmen from working or offering to work therein.

17. Criminal law ⇨20.

Where specific intent must exist, defendant, to be guilty, must specifically contemplate ultimate act.

18. Criminal law ⇨62.

Specific intent to commit crime cannot be imputed to person through agent without principal's direct participation.

To be guilty of this intent, there must be command, direction, or consent by principal to doing of very act.

19. Criminal law ⇨80.

Participation in crime may be inferred from presence at scene.

20. Criminal law ⇨62.

There must be something more than mere presence or surmise to show concert of action between principal and agent.

21. Criminal law ⇨62.

To hold principal criminally responsible for agent's act, purpose of act must be shown to have been authorized or contemplated by principal.

22. Criminal law ⇨62.

To convict principal of agent's crime, involving specific intent, there must be something warranting inference that principal formed intent and purpose to do act denounced.

23. Municipal corporations ⇨640.

Evidence warranted conviction of trade union officer for violation of "anti-picketing" ordinance by others, in view of statute respecting aiding and abetting or, not being present, advising and encouraging, commission of offense (Pen. Code, § 31).

24. Municipal corporations ⇨630.

That union officer's part in crime to deter public from patronizing theater did not require him personally to violate "anti-picketing" ordinance would not, of itself, prevent conviction (Pen. Code, § 31).

25. Municipal corporations ⇨630.

Object of plan to deter public from patronizing theater being lawful, mere fact that union officer joined in execution would not subject him to criminal responsibility for unlawful act other member of combination might do (Pen. Code, § 31).

26. Municipal corporations ⇨630.

To hold union officer criminally responsible for violation of "anti-picketing" ordinance by others, it must appear he agreed to commission of unlawful act as means of carrying out common purpose (Pen. Code, § 31).

If he did so agree, he thereby became member of conspiracy to do such unlawful act and assumed criminal liability for act when it was done by other members of conspiracy, and such conspiracy might be proved on his trial for offense in order to show his responsibility therefor.

27. Criminal law — 1159(2).

Appellate court could not reverse jury's finding supported by evidence.

YANKWICH, Judge pro tem., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Municipal Court of Los Angeles; Benjamin Scheinman, Judge.

Thomas W. Armentrout and others were convicted of violation of section 1 of the Los Angeles city anti-picketing ordinance (Ordinance No. 20586 N. S.), and they appeal.

Affirmed.

Thomas P. White, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles P. Johnson, City Pros., and Joe Matherly and John L. Bland, Deputies City Pros., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YANKWICH, Judge pro tem.

In three complaints the five defendants were charged with the violation of two sections of what is known as the Los Angeles city "anti-picketing" ordinance. Ordinance No. 20586 N. S. The first count of each of these complaints charged violation of section 1 through the making of loud and unusual noises for the purpose of inducing, influencing, and attempting to induce and influence, persons to refrain from entering the Rialto Theatre at 812 South Broadway, in the city of Los Angeles. Defendants Thomas W. Armentrout, Joseph P. Dufrane, and James Doyle are charged with the commission of the offense on December 3, 1930. No. 19535. In another complaint, Ernest Apac and Joe Hough are charged with the commission of the offense of December 4, 1930. No. 19537. In a third complaint, Joe Hough and James Doyle are charged with the commission of the offense on December 11, 1930. No. 19735. As to the second count, which charged loitering and picketing, the trial court granted a new trial. The defendants were found guilty by a jury, and judgment was pronounced by the court on March 24, 1931. The defendant Armentrout was fined $250, Dufrane was fined $50, the others were fined $25, upon count I of the complaint. As to count II the trial court granted a new trial.

The determination of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conviction requires a discussion of the section 1 of the anti-picketing ordinance under which the prosecution was had. Before doing so, however, it is well to state briefly that the defendant Armentrout was the assistant business manager of the Projectionists' Union, consisting of motion picture machine operators. The union was engaged in a controversy with the proprietor of the Rialto Theatre, who had locked out the members of the union, whom he had previously employed. For several weeks prior to the dates covered by the complaints, newsboys had been stationed by Dufrane, acting as circulation manager, upon the street, at the north and south property line of the theater, to sell copies of the Los Angeles Citizen, a newspaper of general circulation, published by the labor movement in Los Angeles, and to cry the headlines of the newspaper. On November 28, 1930, the editor of the newspaper issued, at the request of T. H. Eckerson, business manager of the union, a special edition of 500 copies, which contained all the material published in the regular edition, except that the front page had been changed by printing thereon in large type headlines: "Trade Unionists and their families and friends will need no further information to have them decide that they do not patronize the Rialto Theatre because it is on the unfair list of Organized Labor. By T. H. Eckerson, Business Representative of the Moving Picture Projectionists Union No. 150." The front page also carried a banner line in large type: "Rialto, Broadway are yet on the unfair list." On page 3 of this edition was the article relating to the controversy, which appeared also in the regular edition.

For crying out loud certain words claimed to be the headlines of this special edition, the prosecution was instituted. And it is the contention of the defendants that they were merely selling newspapers, and that, assuming they were making loud and unusual noises in so doing, these were not unusual, but such as are made by newsboys everywhere, and are clearly recognized and legalized by the exception to what it known as the "ballyhoo" or street advertising ordinance of the city of Los Angeles. Ordinance No. 6859 N. S.

In passing upon this contention, it is well to consider the anti-picketing ordinance, in the light of certain rights of laboring men which are recognized by law, and the right of every citizen to speak freely in peace time, without being subjected to legislative or administrative restrictions, not covered by the law of libel, contempt, and/or regulatory measures passed pursuant to the police power. Section 1 of the ordinance reads: "It shall be unlawful for any person, in or upon any public street, alley or public place in the City of Los Angeles, to make any loud or unusual noise, or to speak in a loud or unusual tone or to cry out or proclaim, for the purposes of inducing or influencing, or attempting to induce or influence, any person to refrain from entering any works or factory or any place of business or employment, or for the purpose of inducing or influencing, or attempting to induce or influence, any person to refrain from purchasing or using any goods, wares, merchandize or other article or articles, or for the purpose of inducing or influencing, or attempting to induce or influence, any person to refrain from doing or performing any service or labor in any works, factory, place of business or employment, or for the purpose of intimidating, threatening or coercing any person who is performing, seeking or obtaining service or labor in any works, factory, place of business or employment."

The ordinance has been declared a valid exercise of the police power. Matter of Williams, 158 Cal. 550, 111 P. 1035. Similar ordinances have been upheld elsewhere. Thomas v. Indianapolis, 195 Ind. 440, 145 N. E. 550, 35 A. L. R. 1194; Ex parte Stout, 82 Tex. Cr. R. 183, 198 S. W. 967, L. R. A. 1918C, 277; Watters v. Indianapolis, 191 Ind. 671, 134 N. E. 482. See note, "The boycott as a weapon in industrial dispute," 16 A. L. R. 230, 27 A. L. R. 651, 6 A. L. R. 909.

[1] In interpreting the ordinance, it is well to bear in mind that courts have recognized the right of workmen engaged in industrial disputes to appeal to others in sympathy with their cause by spreading the news of this dispute. Whatever be the loss the employer may suffer from the social pressure resulting from this appeal, he cannot complain. 16 R. C. L. 457. To make this appeal effective, the working man may, as it has been pithily put in one case, "hire a hall or print a paper." Some expressions of these principles are here given:

"After striking, the employees may engage in a boycott, as that word is here employed. As here employed it means not only the right to the concerted withdrawal of social and business intercourse, but the right by all legitimate means of fair publication, and fair oral or written persuasion, to induce others interested in or sympathetic with their cause, to withdraw their social intercourse and business patronage from the employer. They may go even further than this, and request of another that he withdraw his patronage from the employer, and may use the moral intimidation and coercion of threatening a like boycott against him if he refuse so to do. This last proposition necessarily involves the bringing into a labor dispute between A and B, C, who has no difference with either. It contemplates that C, upon the request of B, and under the moral intimidation lest B boycott him, may thus be constrained to withdraw his patronage from A, with whom he has no controversy. * * * In this respect this court recognizes no substantial distinction between the so-called primary and secondary boycott. Each rests upon the right of the union to withdraw its patronage from its employer and to induce by fair means any and all other persons to do the same, and in exercise of those means, as the unions would have the unquestioned right to withhold their patronage from a third person who continued to deal with their employer, so they have the unquestioned right to notify such third person that they will withdraw their patronage if he continues so to deal." Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 76, 77, 103 P. 324.

"Labor unions are recognized by the Clayton Act as legal when instituted for mutual help and lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects. They have long been thus recognized by the courts. They were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on equality with their employer. They united to exert influence upon him and to leave him in a body in order by this inconvenience to induce him to make better terms with them. They were withholding their labor of economic value to make him pay what they thought it was worth. The right to combine for such a lawful purpose has in many years not been denied by any court. The strike became a lawful instrument in a lawful economic struggle or competition between employer and employees as to the share or division between them of the joint product of labor and capital. To render this combination at all effective, employees must make their combination extend beyond one shop. It is helpful to have as many as may be in the same trade in the same community united, because in the competition between employers they are bound to be affected by the standard of wages of their trade in the neighborhood. Therefore, they may use all lawful propaganda to enlarge their membership and especially among those whose labor at lower wages will injure their whole guild. It is impossible to hold such persuasion and propaganda without more, to be without excuse and malicious." American Steel Foundries v. Tri-City Central Trades Council, 257 U. S. 184, 42 S. Ct. 72, 66 L. Ed. 189, 27 A. L. R. 360; Sayre's Cases on Labor Law, 213, 219, 220.

"So, also, the laborers have the right to fix a price upon their labor, and to refuse to work unless that price is obtained. Singly, or in combination, they have this right. They may organize in order to improve their condition and secure better wages. They may use persuasion to induce men to join their organization or to refuse to work except for an established wage. They may present their cause to the public in newspapers or circulars in a peaceable way, and with no attempt at coercion. If the effect in such case is ruin to the employer, it is damnum absque injuria, for they have only exercised their legal rights." Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 77 N. W. 13, 42 L. R. A. 407, 415, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421.

"Those who labor for wages have certain rights equally unquestioned. They may contract for employment on whatever terms they see fit, and, unless restrained by a binding contract, may cease employment when they please. They have a right to form unions for the purpose of improving their economic and social conditions, or to refrain from joining such unions if they choose. They have a right to strike in concert when the object of the strike is for their collective benefit. They have a right to acquaint the public with the fact of its existence and the causes thereof, and appeal for sympathetic aid by a request to withhold patronage. * * *

"It is clear that any resort to the primary boycott, if in any degree successful, will result in damage to the business of the person boycotted; but, where it is lawfully conducted, this is one of the inconveniences for which the law does not afford a remedy." Robison v. Hotel & Restaurant Employees Local No. 782, 35 Idaho, 418, 207 P. 132, 27 A. L. R. 642.

[2] The right of free speech and of a free press is guaranteed by the Constitution of California, article 1, § 9.

"Liberty of circulation is as essential to that freedom as liberty of publishing; indeed, without the circulation, the publication would be of little value." Ex parte Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. Ed. 877, 879.

"The word 'publish' ordinarily means to disclose, reveal, proclaim, circulate or make public." In re Monrovia Evening Post, 199 Cal. 263, 266, 248 P. 1017.

[3-7] The constitutional guaranty against the abridgment of the freedom of the press means immunity from restraint previous to publication. No such restraint previous to publication has been exercised in the English speaking world since the Licensing of Printing Act of the Long Parliament against which John Milton's Areopagitica was directed. The inhibition is also a positive injunction against the curtailment of the right of expression, after it is made, subject, of course, to war-time restrictions, or to such restrictions as may be imposed upon expressions in advocacy of violence. Schenck v. United States, 249 U. S. 47, 39 S. Ct. 247, 63 L. Ed. 470; People v. Steelik, 187 Cal. 361, 203 P. 78. In California, injunctive relief against the publication of what, upon publication, might be libel or contempt is denied. Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 P. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145, 9 Ann. Cas. 1219; In re Wood, 194 Cal. 49, 227 P. 908; Dailey v. Superior Court, 112 Cal. 94, 44 P. 458, 32 L. R. A. 273, 53 Am. St. Rep. 160.

The portion of the ordinance under which the defendants stand convicted was aimed more at boycotting than at picketing. It was aimed at oral means of inducing persons not to enter the premises or trade or work upon them. The use of printed means is covered by section 2. The Supreme Court has expressed doubts about the constitutionality of that section, particularly as it applies to "loitering." Matter of Williams, supra. We take it that even that section, in so far as it prohibits the use of banners, signs, and other similar physical means of persuasion, was aimed at banners or signs or circulars which are exhibited or offered free and not those which are, like a newspaper, offered for sale. The persuasion at which the section is directed is the direct persuasion not to patronize or work, and not the indirect persuasion which comes from adhering to a cause by being convinced of its justness. Were it otherwise, if a labor union should induce a newspaper of general circulation to publish an article in advocacy of its cause, in the course of a labor difficulty, the circulation of the newspaper in the vicinity of another's place of business might be entirely prohibited upon the ground that the reader might by reading it be convinced of the rightness of the union's cause and be induced to refuse to patronize or work. At the oral argument counsel for the people contended for such power. But we know of no decision which would recognize such right. The statement in Crouch v. Central Labor Council, 134 Or. 612, 293 P. 729, to the effect that the display of a newspaper is "equivalent to carrying a banner or wearing a sash with objectionable reference" and that such display might be prohibited, was not made in an action under a statute or ordinance prohibiting the doing of the act. It arose in a proceeding in equity. The same court, in interpreting an anti-picketing ordinance has held that such an ordinance cannot be sustained if it denies the lawful doing of a lawful act, such as the right to strike. Hall v. Johnson, 87 Or. 21, 169 P. 515, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 49. And while courts have upheld laws aimed at the suppression of particular issues of indecent publications we doubt if any constitutional authority or principle could be found which would sustain an ordinance which sought to suppress the circulation of a newspaper in the vicinity of a place of business, merely because its purchase by prospective patrons might result in the withdrawal of patronage or work. Freedom of the press would become illusory if it hung on so slight a thread. What precedes relates more to section 2 of the ordinance. It may seem beyond the issues here involved, because the trial court granted a new trial as to the counts based upon it. It is referred to because a good portion of the argument of counsel for the people is directed to the point that the acts of the defendants amounted to picketing. "Picketing" proper is denounced by section 2 of the ordinance. The first part of section 1, under which count I of the three complaints was drawn, is directed at boycotting. The purpose alleged in the complaint is "for the purpose of inducing, influencing and attempting to induce and influence persons to refrain from entering a certain place of business; and for the purpose of inducing, influencing and attempting to induce and influence persons to refrain from purchasing tickets from a certain place of business, to-wit: Rialto Theatre, located at 812 South Broadway in the City of Los Angeles."

[8, 9] We conclude that neither the sale of the newspaper, nor its display would constitute a violation of the ordinance. Nor would it be a violation of the ordinance to cry out the headlines, as a part of an appeal to buy the newspaper, whatever form that appeal might take. If the evidence in the record indicated that the defendants confined themselves to announcing, "Extra. Read the Citizen. All about the Rialto Theatre being unfair," or words to similar effect, the judgment could not be upheld. For, aside from the general constitutional considerations heretofore adverted to, the news vendors would come clearly within the exception of Ordinance No. 6859 N. S., the more so, as the evidence shows, that the manner of calling did not differ from that used by newsboys in ordinary cases.

[10, 11] However, there is evidence in the record which shows clearly that the newsboys in calling out did not always use the phrase "Rialto Theatre unfair to labor" in conjunction with an appeal to read or buy "The Los Angeles Citizen." There is evidence in the record that the reference to the newspaper was omitted altogether. The words "Rialto Theatre unfair to labor" thus became words intended to achieve the result denounced in the ordinance, and charged in count I of the complaints. And the mere fact that, at the same time, the newspaper may have been exhibited, does not change the character of the words. A careful examination of the record shows that this occurred upon all the dates charged in the complaints, December 3, 4, and 11. See Tr. pp. 35, 50, 62, 67, 87-89, 90, 104-105, 111, 134, 139, 140, 142, 143. The charge as to December 17 against the defendant Dufrane is not supported by the evidence. This is conceded by the people. There was no calling out on that day. Tr. p. 59. But while evidence was directed to this date we find no count in the complaints based upon this date. As to other days, the evidence is clear that he placed the newsboys (Doyle, Hough, and Apac) upon the north and south property line of the theater, told them what to say, and, when he did not himself participate in calling out, he directed their actions in such a manner as to be held responsible for the words used, even though he may have testified that his instructions to them were to mention the newspaper in conjunction with what they called out. People v. Wilson, 93 Cal. App. 632, 636, 269 P. 951. The judgment as to him and Apac, Doyle, and Hough is sustained by the evidence. However, the judgment cannot be sustained as to the defendant ArmentROUT. Certain general considerations should precede the examination of the testimony as to the connection of the defendant ArmentROUT with the acts of December 3, 1930, charged in complaint No. 19539. What are the circumstances under which a person may be charged with criminal responsibility for the acts of his agent?

"A principal, in order to be held criminally liable, must be shown to have knowingly and intentionally aided, advised, or encouraged the criminal act committed by the agent." People v. Doble, 203 Cal. 510, 511, 265 P. 184.

"Before one can be convicted of a crime by reason of the acts of his agent a clear case must be shown. The civil doctrine that a principal is bound by the acts of his agent within the scope of the agent's authority has no application to criminal law." People v. Green, 22 Cal. App. 45, 50, 133 P. 334.

Such is also the law elsewhere. 2 Corpus Juris, p. 855; 8 R. C. L., pp. 65, 66, et seq.; Rex v. Huggins, 2 Ld. Raymond 1574, 92 English Reports, 518, a leading case on the subject.

[12-14] Excepting offenses like libel, or violations of revenue or liquor law, or pure food laws, or laws against public nuisances, or ordinances under police power, which make the doing of an act a crime irrespective of criminal intent, there can be no criminal responsibility of the principal for the act of the agent. Only when the principal aids, abets, commands, or assents to the criminal act can he be held responsible for a crime of which intent is an essential ingredient which is not supplied by law or implied from the doing of the act. People v. Moore, 82 Cal. App. 739, 747, 748, 256 P. 266.

"If, at common law, crime when committed by the individual consists of acts done with an evil intent, in statutory offenses created in the exercise of police power, unless a wrongful intent or guilty knowledge, commonly designated by the use of the words 'wilfully' or 'maliciously', is made an essential element of the prohibited act, the violator may be convicted and punished, even if he has no design to disobey the law." Commonwealth v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 202 Mass. 394, 88 N. E. 764, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 351, 132 Am. St. Rep. 507, 16 Ann. Cas. 587.

The liquor selling cases, and the police power regulation cases draw the same distinction. People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 175-179, 31 P. 45; People v. McClenneen, 195 Cal. 445-469, 234 P. 91; People v. Dillon, 199 Cal. 1, 7-9, 248 P. 230; People v. Le Baron, 92 Cal. App. 550, 563, 268 P. 651, 269 P. 476. For the law elsewhere, see Commonwealth v. Warren, 160 Mass. 533, 36 N. E. 308; Commonwealth v. Sacks, 214 Mass. 72, 100 N. E. 1019, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1076, and note thereto at 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 2 et seq.; Spokane v. Patterson, 46 Wash. 93, 89 P. 402, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1104, 123 Am. St. Rep. 921, 13 Ann. Cas. 706. Where "willful"-ness is made a vital ingredient of a crime, it implies "knowledge and purpose to do wrong." People v. Swiggy, 69 Cal. App. 574, 581, 232 P. 174.

[15] Strictly speaking, there can be no ratification of a criminal act in which a specific intent is necessary.

"He, (the principal) must be liable, if at all, at the time the act is done." Clark & Marshall on Crimes (3d Ed.) § 194, p. 255.

"He only is criminally punishable, who immediately does the act, or permits it to be done." Rex v. Huggins, supra, at page 1580 of 2 Ld. Raymond.

[16] It must be evident that, by the enactment of section 1 of the ordinance against picketing, the council of the city of Los Angeles intended to punish not the mere doing of certain acts, but the doing thereof, with the specific purpose (i. e., intent) there denounced, namely, to induce or influence persons to refrain from entering a place of business, or from trading therein, or workmen from working or offering to work therein. The words "intent" and "purpose" express the same thought and idea. See Estate of Olmsted, 122 Cal. 224, 232-233, 54 P. 745; 6 Words and Phrases, Third Series, page 460.

[17, 18] There was thus created an offense like many others we have, in which the criminal intent, or purpose, implied from the doing of the act is not sufficient—offenses in which a specific intent must exist. People v. Weston, 32 Cal. App. 571, 163 P. 691 (assault with intent to commit murder); People v. Lee Kong, 95 Cal. 666, 30 P. 800, 17 L. R. A. 626, 29 Am. St. Rep. 165 (ditto); People v. Fleming, 94 Cal. 308, 29 P. 647 (assault with intent to commit rape); People v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 238, 32 P. 8 (ditto). In such cases, the defendant to be guilty must "specifically contemplate" the ultimate act. Otherwise he is not guilty. Without this specific intent, there can be no such crime. People v. Mooney, 127 Cal. 339, 59 P. 761.

Intent of this character cannot be imputed to a person through an agent, without the principal's direct participation.

To be guilty of this intent there must be command, direction, or consent by the principal to the doing of the very act. There is no such consent shown here as to the defendant Armentrout.

[19-22] The record shows that Armentrout's duty was to check the number of patrons going into the theater. He did not call out any words, or urge any one to buy a newspaper. He was seen the Friday before the occurrence to hand the newspapers to some of the newsboys. None of the officers saw him exhibit any of the newspapers. There is testimony to the effect that about November 14, 1931, Armentrout told one of the officers that he was hiring the boys and that he told the officer who protested that the newsboys were crying too loud that he could not keep them from so doing. This is too remote to infer a hiring on December 3, 4, and 11. This conversation was denied by him. He also denied that he ever gave the newsboys any money, as one of the officers testified. What the money was for was not stated. Armentrout admitted that he may have given them a dollar or two while they were waiting for the man who paid them. While he was about the premises, he exercised no direction or control over them. No one ever saw him give them any directions. We cannot infer direction even from hiring, assuming the evidence shows hiring. It may be true that intent may be inferred from the circumstances surrounding the doing of an act. People v. Franklin, 46 Cal. App. 1, 5, 188 P. 607; People v. Bowman, 24 Cal. App. 781, 142 P. 495; People v. Moore, supra, page 748 of 82 Cal. App., 256 P. 266. It is also true that participation may be inferred from presence at place of crime. People v. Wilson, 93 Cal. App. 632, 269 P. 951. But there must be something more than mere presence or mere surmise in order that concert of action be shown to exist. And the purpose of the act must be shown to have been authorized or within the contemplation of the principal. People v. Green, supra; People v. Doble, supra. There must be something from which the court or jury can infer that the principal had formed "the intent and purpose" to do the act denounced by the statute. See People v. Smith, 96 Cal. App. 373, 378-380, 274 P. 451; People v. Baba, 101 Cal. App. 723, 282 P. 403. There is nothing in the record here from which such inference can be drawn—nothing from which to infer that Armentrout was there for the purpose of aiding in the violation of the ordinance by the other defendants. His act in checking the theater patronage was a legal act, done in a legal manner. He cannot be held criminally liable for the acts of the newsboys merely because he also was engaged in some work for the cause which the newsboys had also been hired to serve. See Union Labor Hospital v. Vance Lumber Co., 158 Cal. 551, 556, 557, 112 P. 886, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1034.

The judgment as to Armentrout should be reversed. As to the other defendants, the judgments are affirmed.

McLUCAS, P. J., and SHAW, J.

[23-27] We concur in the foregoing opinion except as to the conclusion therein reached regarding the defendant Armentrout. We think the evidence is sufficient to warrant the jury in holding him criminally responsible for the acts of the other defendants under the provision of section 31 of the Penal Code that "all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, or not being present, have advised and encouraged its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed." Here the evidence shows that the acts done by the defendants other than Armentrout were not isolated transactions, but part of a concerted plan or scheme, the object of which was to deter the public from patronizing the Rialto Theatre. Armentrout was engaged in the execution of this same plan or scheme. The fact that his part in it did not require him personally to commit any act in violation of the ordinance would not of itself prevent his conviction of such violation. On the other hand, since the object of the plan, as above stated, was lawful, the mere fact that Armentrout had joined in its execution would not subject him to criminal responsibility for an unlawful act which some other member of the combination might do. To bring about that result, it must also appear that Armentrout agreed to the commission of such unlawful act as a means of carrying out the common purpose. If he did so agree, he thereby became a member of a conspiracy to do such unlawful act and assumed a criminal liability for the act when it was done by other members of the conspiracy, and such conspiracy may be proved on his trial for the offense in order to show his responsibility therefor. People v. Ford, 25 Cal. App. 388, 397, 143 P. 1075; People v. Wilson, 76 Cal. App. 688, 694, 245 P. 781; People v. Holmes, 118 Cal. 444, 456, 50 P. 675; People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 374, 149 P. 821.

The evidence shows that the defendants other than Armentrout had been standing in front of the Rialto Theatre and crying out daily the words which are held sufficient to warrant their conviction, for a period of four weeks or more, and during that same time Armentrout had been there almost every day, counting the patrons of the theater. According to his own testimony he had occasionally brought to the theater and delivered to Dufrane the money which was used by Dufrane to pay the other defendants for their work in selling papers, and according to police officers they saw the defendant himself on some occasions pay the others. Defendant also testified that he usually brought to the scene of action the newspapers which the other defendants attempted to use as a cloak for their violations of the ordinance. He was frequently present when they were doing the unlawful acts, and therefore knew of them, and sometimes told the others what hours to work. About a month before the date of the earliest offense charged in the complaints a police officer talked to Armentrout about the other defendants, saying, "Well, can't you keep them from hollering so loud?" to which Armentrout replied, "They can holler just as loud as they want to." Armentrout also admitted to a police officer that he employed and paid the other defendants and brought them the papers. These circumstances tend to show a continuous course of conduct involving a violation of the ordinance, and Armentrout's assent to such violation, and, the jury having accepted the evidence and drawn an inference of his guilt from it, we cannot reverse their finding.

The judgments against all of the appellants are affirmed.

213 Cal. 160

DAHL v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.
L. A. 12996.

Supreme Court of California.
July 21, 1931.

Attorney and client ☞58.

Evidence held to justify suspension of attorney from practice for six months for sharing with unlicensed person compensation for professional employment.

In Bank.

Proceeding by John F. Dahl to review an order of the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California, recommending that petitioner be suspended from the practice of law for a period of six months.

Petitioner suspended from practice of law for period of six months.

John F. Dahl, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

Philbrick McCoy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

Proceeding to review an order of the board of governors of the state bar of California recommending that petitioner be suspended from the practice of law in this state for a period of six months.

The local administrative committee for the county of Los Angeles, after a hearing upon charges duly preferred against petitioner, found him guilty of violation of rule 3 of the rules of professional conduct of the state bar of California, which provides, among other things, that a member "shall not employ another to solicit or obtain, or remunerate another for soliciting or obtaining, professional employment for him; nor shall he directly or indirectly share with an unlicensed person compensation arising out of or incidental to professional employment." Said committee recommended that petitioner be suspended from practice for such period as the board of governors should deem meet and proper in the premises. Petitioner failed to appear before said board, and, after a consideration of his case, they recommended a six months' period of suspension. Petitioner thereupon instituted this proceeding to review such action.

The evidence is without conflict. It shows unquestionably a violation of said rule by petitioner, and supports the findings in every respect. Petitioner, who is about 62 years of age, practiced law in Minnesota for many years, but was admitted to practice in this state only three years prior to this investigation. He represented some sixty cases filed in the Los Angeles county superior court in which he did not know the plaintiffs until they were brought to him by so-called adjusters, and he accepted said cases on a contingent fee basis, usually 20 per cent. to him and 20 per cent. to the adjuster, or one-third to each of them.

Citing his excellent record and reputation, petitioner pleads that he accepted said employment in good faith in the belief that he had made personal contracts with the various plaintiffs, and he seeks to distinguish his conduct from that of other members of the bar disciplined for similar infractions [Townsend v. State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 291 P. 837; Shaw v. State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 297 P. 532; Smallberg v. State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 297 P. 916; Howe v. State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 298 P. 25; Irving v. State Bar (Cal. Sup.) 1 P.(2d) 2], in that in said cases it appears either that the real client of the attorney was the adjuster, or there was no direct employment or contract between the injured party and the attorney. Petitioner testifies that in each instance he made a distinct contract with the claimant, and made it clear to both adjusters and claimants that their claims and any ensuing litigation would be entirely in his charge and under his control, he being personally directly responsible to the claimant, and not to the adjuster. Petitioner confessed complete ignorance of recent efforts to cure "ambulance chasing," which he had long recognized as wrong, and offered, as an excuse for taking the business, his feeling that the cases were bound to go somewhere, and he believed he could give good and competent service in accepting only such cases as he believed to be meritorious.

Confirming the position of the board of governors, that all these circumstances in mitigation of petitioner's offense were considered before their recommendation was made, is the fact that in not one of the cited cases was so brief a period of suspension as six months imposed. Those cases reveal the severity of this evil biting at the heels of honest practice, and the seriousness of the offenses springing from it. We are therefore satisfied with the recommendation made in this instance by the state bar.

It is ordered that the petitioner herein, John F. Dahl, be, and he is hereby, suspended from the practice of law in this state for the period of six months, beginning on the tenth day from and after the filing of this order.

213 Cal. 148

BLACKMORE INV. CO. v. JOHNSON et al.

S. F. 13486.

Supreme Court of California.

July 17, 1931.

1. Costs ⇨263.

Respondents held entitled to $500 damages for frivolous appeal taken for purpose of delay, and to cloud title to valuable property.

2. Corporations ⇨415.

Corporation's minutes held to authorize secretary and general manager to execute deed of trust to secure note given for price of land purchased by corporation.

Corporation's minutes recited resolution making secretary general manager of corporation with full power to contract for purchase of property.

3. Corporations ⇨426(10).

Corporation retaining benefits of land contract, knowing that trust deed securing note given for purchase price was executed by its president and secretary, was estopped from asserting officers lacked authority to execute instrument.

4. Injunction ⇨22.

Injunction cannot be granted to stay act already committed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by the Blackmore Investment Company against Axel A. Johnson and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Blackmore Investment Company, in pro. per.

Bianchi & Hyman and Milton Marks, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Palmer, of San Francisco, for Title Insurance & Guaranty Co. amici curiæ.

PRESTON, J.

[1] The judgment is affirmed, and, inasmuch as it clearly appears that the appeal was taken for the purpose of delay and for the purpose of clouding the title to a piece of valuable property, it is further ordered that respondents receive from the appellant the sum of $500 as damages for the prosecution of a frivolous appeal.

On November 26, 1926, appellant, a Nevada corporation, purchased from respondents Johnson and wife a piece of real property situated at the corner of Van Ness avenue and Washington street in San Francisco, and on said day received a deed thereto and entered into possession thereof. The agreed purchase price was $127,000, $15,000 of which was paid in cash, and the balance assumed the form of a promissory note executed by the president and secretary of appellant, and secured by a deed of trust upon the property, likewise executed by the president and secretary of said corporation, in which the Johnsons were beneficiaries and respondent title company was trustee.

Appellant defaulted on the payments due under the instrument and the trustee noticed the property for sale, fixing the date of January 16, 1928. On January 13, 1928, appellant began this action, setting up the claim that the president and secretary of the corporation had not been duly authorized to execute the deed of trust in question, and for that reason prayed for an injunction against the consummation of said sale. No preliminary injunction was obtained. The sale was regularly conducted on the day fixed, and, more than one year after said sale, this cause came on for trial.

The trial resulted in findings of fact and conclusions of law against the contentions of appellant, and judgment was entered denying the injunction. On the trial, the secretary, Frederick B. Mazingo, was the sole witness for appellant. He testified that no previous meeting of the board of directors of said corporation occurred authorizing the execution of said note and deed of trust, nor, indeed, the purchase of said property. There was no claim that the corporation did not pay the said sum of $15,000, nor that it did not receive the deed to said property and enter into possession thereunder, as well as receive all benefits derived from the use and occupation thereof. Indeed, the evidence shows that in the month of August next prior to execution of the deed of trust the minutes recited that a resolution was adopted making F. B. Mazingo general manager of the corporation "with full power and authority to enter into contracts and leases for the purchase, sale and operation of property." The deed of trust likewise had attached to it, under the seal of the corporation, a resolution purporting to authorize its execution.

[2-4] Appellant, pretending to act in propria persona through the said F. B. Mazingo, has prosecuted this appeal upon the sole ground of alleged absence of authority on the part of himself and the president of appellant to execute said deed of trust. In the first place, the minutes confer ample authority upon Mr. Mazingo, as secretary and general manager of the corporation, to execute the instrument. Secondly, it requires no citation of authority to show that the corporation received all the benefits from the contract, and retained for its use the fruits thereof with full knowledge of the trust deed, and the corporation is thereby estopped from asserting such a defense. Moreover, it is elementary that an injunction cannot be granted to stay an act already committed; hence, the order above made.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

=====

213 Cal. 156

MacDONALD et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.
S. F. 14245.

Supreme Court of California.

July 17, 1931.

Master and servant ☞417(7).

Evidence as to whether employee's death resulted from industrial injury held so conflicting as to require affirmance of commission's award denying compensation.

In Bank.

Application by Annie MacDonald and others for certiorari to annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation for the death of Archie C. MacDonald, employee.

Award affirmed.

Joseph E. Isaacs and William Sea, Jr., both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

A. I. Townsend and Edward O. Allen, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PRESTON, J.

Petitioners seek annulment of an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission denying them a death benefit upon the ground of insufficient evidence to establish that the death of Archie C. MacDonald on June 13, 1930, resulted from an industrial injury suffered by him on April 29th of said year.

We have examined the record at length in the light of petitioners' contention and, under evidence which could hardly be more conflicting, find that we have no recourse other than to affirm the action of the commission.

On said April 29th the deceased employee, while at work, fell from a scaffold into a hopper, injuring his arm and side. For this he received disability indemnity. His family testify that he also complained of injury to his head and offer new evidence to the effect that a fellow workman will testify that he saw the employee strike his head in falling. Said employee, however, continued all day at his work, and also worked from May 5th to 10th, after which date the condition of his arm kept him from his employment. On June 13th he collapsed on the street, striking the pavement, and was removed to the hospital. His skull was found to be newly fractured, and he passed away in the evening from shock and hemorrhage. Petitioners testify that from the day of the accident to the day of his death he suffered from dizzy spells, whereas he had theretofore been an unusually healthy and uncomplaining man. They claim that obviously one of these dizzy spells, resulting from the accident, caused the fall on the pavement and further head injury and death. But they offered no expert evidence to this effect.

There is unquestionably sufficient evidence in the record which would have supported an award based upon findings in accord with petitioners' contentions, but there is also ample and sufficient evidence to support the award and findings to the contrary. The attending physician found no indication of injury to decedent's head, and he made no complaint of any during the period he was having treatment for his arm. Said physician stated that when decedent's wife reported that her husband had been taken to the hospital following a severe heart attack, which she believed was precipitated by the injury, he told her that he was of the opinion that it had no relation to the injury. He later confirmed this opinion and was corroborated in it by the post mortem findings of the pathological laboratory, by the report of the examining physician at the hospital, and by the report of the autopsy surgeon.

The report of the examining physician gives, in effect, the substance of the medical evidence, as follows: "I feel that this patient had a well-advanced arteriosclerosis, a high blood pressure, and it is quite possible that he suffered a stroke that afternoon and fell on this account, the stroke having occurred spontaneously, and that in the fall he injured the side of his head and fractured the skull. In view of the long period of time that had elapsed between his fall in April and the fall and death on June 13th, I can see no industrial connection and think that this man's death was not due to industrial causes."

The award is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.

213 Cal. 183

MARTINELLI v. LUIS.

S. F. 13454.

Supreme Court of California.

July 23, 1931.

1. Easements ⇨18(1).

Right of way by necessity over another's lands arises in grant and is limited in duration to continuance of necessity.

2. Easements ⇨10(1).

User of right of way by necessity over another's lands cannot ripen into prescriptive easement while necessity continues.

3. Appeal and error ⇨1071(3).

Unsupported findings become immaterial or nonessential and may be disregarded.

4. Appeal and error ⇨934(2).

Since every intendment favors judgment, court will assume that judgment was based on findings supported by evidence, rather than on unsupported findings.

5. Pleading ⇨369(1).

Plaintiff seeking in one cause of action to establish right of way by necessity, and also, as second cause of action, by prescription, need not be compelled to elect between them at trial.

It was not necessary that plaintiff be forced to elect at trial as to which cause of action she would stand upon, since she had a claim based on necessity arising from grant to her and to her predecessors, and also a claim based on a continuous user for nearly forty years, and if she should fail in her proof of a right of way by necessity, her proof of a right by prescription would be established.

6. Easements ⇨61(2).

Injunction restraining interference with right of way by necessity, although made perpetual in form, should terminate when necessity ceases, and its operation should be limited by applicable law.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Ross Campbell, Judge.

Action by Genevieve C. Martinelli against Candido M. Luis, with a cross-complaint by defendant. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

E. J. Dole and Carl Barnard, both of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

Wallace L. Ware, of Santa Rosa, and Jordan L. Martinelli, of San Rafael, for respondent.

SHENK, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to establish a right of way across the lands of the defendant.

The complaint alleges two causes of action. The first alleges a right of way by necessity as appurtenant to the grant by which the plaintiff and her predecessors in interest acquired the property. The second alleges a right of way by prescription. The defendant answered denying the existence of the right of way on either ground, and filed a cross-complaint to have his rights quieted as against the asserted easement. The court found in favor of the plaintiff as to both causes of action, and issued a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's established right.

The appeal is grounded on the proposition that the findings supporting both causes of action are inconsistent; that it cannot be determined upon which theory the court predicated its judgment and injunctive order, and that the findings as to the prescriptive right are not supported by the evidence.

[1, 2] If a permanent injunction could be based on both causes of action, the alleged inconsistency would seem to be immaterial, for, in any event, the plaintiff would be entitled to the establishment of a perpetual right. But the right by necessity arises in grant and is limited in duration to the continuance of the necessity. Washburn on Easements (4th Ed.) p. 260. And the rules seem to be well settled that no length of user by way of necessity can ripen into an easement by prescription, at least while the necessity continues, for the reason that the right of way having arisen by necessity, the possession and use thereof is referable to the right appurtenant to the grant and cannot be made the foundation for the prescriptive right so long as the right by necessity continues. 9 R. C. L., p. 778. It would seem to follow that the time when the prescriptive right would commence to run would be not earlier than the cessation of the right by necessity.

[3, 4] The evidence is sufficient to support the findings on the first cause of action, and the necessity has not ceased. Since this is true, the adverse user has never commenced, and the findings on the second cause of action are not supported by the evidence. Such unsupported findings therefore become immaterial or nonessential and may be disregarded. American National Bank v. Donnellan, 170 Cal. 9, 148 P. 188, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 744. Every intendment being in favor of the judgment, it will be assumed that the judgment was ordered pursuant to the findings, which are supported by the evidence, rather than upon the unsupported findings. Therefore the claimed inconsistency in the findings, as a controlling question, disappears from the case.

[5] It was not necessary that the plaintiff be forced to elect at the trial as to which cause of action she would stand upon. She had a claim based upon necessity arising from grant to her and to her predecessors. She also had a claim based on a continuous user for nearly forty years. If she should fail in her proof of a right of way by necessity, her proof of a right by prescription would be established. It is the fact and not the claim of necessity that would prevent the prescriptive time from commencing to run.

[6] Something should be said with reference to the operation of the injunction. It is perpetual in form. Since it is based on a right by necessity, it is perpetual in the sense that it continues so long as the necessity exists. When the necessity ceases, the injunction should terminate and its operation should be limited by the law which thus surrounds it. With this observation, it is deemed unnecessary to modify it.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

213 Cal. 163
HORNBuckle et al. v. JENNINGS.
L. A. 11217.

Supreme Court of California.
July 21, 1931.

Appeal and error ⇨1011(1).

In action to cancel land contract, where testimony was conflicting and evidence supported trial court's findings, judgment for defendant was affirmed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles F. Cook, Judge.

Action by Harry Hornbuckle and another against Curtis Jennings. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Curtis C. Taylor, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles Schusterman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This appeal from a judgment of the lower court in favor of the defendant, in an action to cancel an alleged contract of sale of realty and to restrain any change in the status of the property pending trial of the action, comes on after issuance by the court of an order to show cause why the judgment should not be reversed or such order made as might be appropriate in the premises.

The plaintiffs (appellants) alleged a fiduciary relation between themselves and the defendant (respondent), because of which they were defrauded by him out of two lots in Manhattan Beach. The trial court, sitting without a jury, decided in favor of the defendant on all points, finding that he purchased the property from plaintiffs for "a good and sufficient consideration," and that the "sale so made was regular in form and in all other respects and that the deed therefor given by the plaintiffs to the defendant was a free and voluntary act on the plaintiffs' part and not tainted with any fraud on the part of the defendant whatsoever."

The testimony of the witnesses is conflicting, and there is sufficient evidence to support the findings and conclusions of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

213 Cal. 58
PACIFIC STATES CORPORATION v. PAN-AMERICAN BANK.
L. A. 12433.

Supreme Court of California.
July 30, 1931.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. For former opinion, see 1 P.(2d) 4.

Robert Brennan, of Los Angeles, and Russell & Heid, of Tulare, for appellant.

Alf. L. Armstrong, Louis W. Myers, and O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, all of Los Angeles, Elbert W. Davis, J. H. Hoffman, and Albert A. Rosenshine, all of San Francisco, and Chandler, Wright & Ward, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J.

The petition for a rehearing herein is denied.

In denying this petition, it should not be understood that the court has expressed an opinion as to the validity of the lien provisions in the lease, or that the court has determined what effect section 21a of the Bank Act has on such purported lien, for the reason that the court is of the opinion that the complaint sufficiently alleges a controversy in reference to other clauses of the lease to entitle plaintiff to a determination of its rights thereunder.

213 Cal. 117

ALBERTSON v. BROOKS.

S. F. 13459.

Supreme Court of California.

July 13, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 10, 1931.

Mechanics' liens ⇨ 281 (1).

In action to recover on lien for labor and materials furnished, judgment for defendant on theory of full payment held supported.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by Charles Albertson against Belle Brooks. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

F. W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Emilio Lastreto, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J.

Action to recover upon two liens for labor and material furnished in the construction of a building for defendant. The complaint set forth two causes of action, the first of which was settled and paid and need not be discussed. The second cause of action alleged that there remained due from defendant to plaintiff's assignor, hereinafter referred to as plaintiff and appellant, the original contractor, a balance of $2,500 representing the unpaid portion of the contract price of $7,500 plus the reasonable value of extras furnished by plaintiff. Defendant filed an answer and also a counterclaim and cross-complaint, alleging damages in various amounts for the failure of plaintiff to complete the building within the agreed time and to settle claims for labor, etc.

Findings were waived by the parties, and the trial court gave judgment decreeing, among other things, that plaintiff take nothing on his said second cause of action, and that defendant take nothing by her counterclaim and cross-complaint. From that portion of the judgment so decreeing plaintiff has appealed upon various specifications of insufficiency of the evidence.

We find his contention to be without merit; hence a brief statement will suffice to dispose of the case. The record shows that the parties entered into an unrecorded contract whereby appellant agreed to erect the building for $7,500. However, various problems of construction necessitated departures from the specifications. Some of the changes made no material difference in cost and were properly included in the contract price; others were paid for by respondent. According to appellant's résumé of the alleged accounting between the parties, the contract price was $7,500; reasonable value of extras $5,215.48, total $12,715.48—paid by respondent direct to contractor $6,117.86 and to others for extras $1,669.63—total $7,787.49. Appellant therefore claims a balance due him of $4,927.99; yet his recorded lien, the basis of his second cause of action, made claim for $2,500 only.

Respondent does not deny that the changes were made, but claims that she has paid the full amount due. Her testimony, with that of the other witnesses, affords ample and sufficient support for the action of the trial court. The reasons for the various changes, some due to alleged errors of construction on the part of appellant, and the differences in cost which they entailed, are given in detail. The evidence shows further that the building was not finished until 154 days had elapsed after the 120 days allowed by the contract for its completion, no good excuse appearing for the delay. The realtor who represented appellant at the time the contract and specifications were drawn up, and who watched the progress of the work continually, corroborated in many particulars the testimony of respondent. Respondent testified that appellant's slowness and failure to pay bills all but compelled her to dismiss him.

There was received in evidence a receipt in full to respondent, signed by appellant, covering all labor, material, and other expenses incurred in the erection of said building. Appellant claimed that respondent visited him one night and asked him to sign his name to a blank piece of paper so she could see how he did it, above which signature was later inserted the wording of the receipt. The court, however, was thoroughly justified in believing the testimony of respondent and her witnesses to the effect that she herself typed the receipt a couple of days before signature, submitted it to said realtor for approval, and that at the time of signature appellant approved the paper and stated that all bills had been paid.

There is no merit in the contention that the settlement of the first cause of action by payment of $360 upon the alleged labor lien of R. Albertson conclusively established the fact that all bills had not been paid by respondent; hence the receipt in full was false, and the correctness of appellant's contentions is thereby proven. After being told by appellant that all bills and labor were paid, respondent took said receipt in full from him, and, if he knew that there was an unpaid labor claim, he should have then so advised her and refused to sign. The settlement of the first cause of action, viewed in the light of the evidence and the further provisions of the judgment, establishes no more than this, and shows no inconsistency in the action of the court below. As above stated, there is to our mind no doubt whatsoever of the sufficiency of the evidence to uphold the decree.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.; RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.

213 Cal. 122

In re CARPENTER.
Cr. 3460.

Supreme Court of California,
July 13, 1931.

In Bank.

Charles A. Beardsley, of Oakland (Philbrick McCoy, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for petitioner.

A. H. Carpenter, in pro. per., of Stockton, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J.

The application made in open court by A. H. Carpenter on Friday, July 10, 1931, for stay of execution under judgment of contempt herein is denied.

The respondent Carpenter not having paid the fine imposed by this court on July 10, 1931, and the hour having passed at which the commitment herein was directed to issue in the event of such nonpayment, let commitment issue and be transmitted to the sheriff of San Joaquin county, Cal., with directions to serve and execute the same forthwith.

Dated July 13, 1931.

The judgment and commitment read as follows:

In the Supreme Court of the state of California. Crim. No. 3460. In the matter of A. H. Carpenter, an attorney at law. Judgment and commitment.

O. B. Harvey having heretofore filed an affidavit in the above-entitled proceeding, charging the respondent A. H. Carpenter, an attorney at law, with having disobeyed the lawful judgments and orders of this court, made on October 23, 1930, in case No. S. F. 13854, entitled "A. H. Carpenter v. The State Bar of California" (292 P. 450), and on January 12, 1931, in case No. S. F. 14029, entitled "A. H. Carpenter v. The State Bar of California" (295 P. 23), in that in the particulars set forth in said affidavit, the respondent practiced as an attorney and counselor at law in the state of California and held himself out to the public as an attorney and counselor at law in the state of California, while he was suspended by said orders of this court from the right so to do, and the court, upon reading and filing said affidavit, together with the documents filed in support thereof, having, at the suggestion of the State Bar of California, issued its order, directed to the respondent, requiring him to show cause on July 7, 1931, before this court in bank, at its courtroom in San Francisco, Cal., why he should not be adjudged to be in contempt of this court and punished accordingly for his disobedience of said orders so suspending him, in that he continued willfully after the dates thereof to engage in the practice of law in the county of San Joaquin, state of California, and in the superior court of said county, and in that he thereafter contumaciously held himself out as a licensed counselor and attorney at law, authorized and privileged to engage in the practice of law at and during the time said orders of suspension were in full force and effect, as more specifically appears in said affidavit of O. B. Harvey; the respondent, A. H. Carpenter, personally appeared in response to said order, in accordance with the instructions of this court, and the matter came regularly on for hearing at said time and place.

The respondent thereupon made a motion to quash service of the order to show cause served upon him, which motion the court denied. The respondent then interposed a demurrer to the affidavit upon which the order to show cause was based, a copy of which affidavit he admitted having received, together with the order to show cause. The court overruled the demurrer and directed the respondent to answer forthwith, or at a convenient fixed time.

The respondent declined and refused to make a verified or any sufficient answer to the accusation contained in the affidavit, and the matter having been duly submitted for decision and the court having considered the same, the court now finds that the respondent at the times and places, and in the manner, respectively, as stated in said affidavit, did practice as an attorney or counselor at law and did hold himself out to the public as an attorney and counselor at law entitled to practice in this state, at and during the times when said orders of suspension were in full force and effect, and that all of the allegations of said affidavit are true, and no good or any cause being shown why said A. H. Carpenter should not be found in contempt and punished.

Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that said acts of the respondent A. H. Carpenter in respect to this court constitute a contempt of this court, and the respondent is hereby adjudged and declared to be in and guilty of contempt of this court on account of the acts, as set forth in said affidavit, and that as punishment therefor the said A. H. Carpenter pay a fine of $300, and that in default of such payment he be committed to the sheriff of the county of San Joaquin, state of California, and, until such fine is paid, be imprisoned in the county jail of such county, at the rate of one day's imprisonment for every $2 of such fine.

Witness the Honorable William H. Waste, Chief Justice, and the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the state of California.

Attest my hand and the seal of this court this 13th day of July, A. D. 1931. [Seal] [Signed] B. Grant Taylor, Clerk of the Supreme Court of the State of California.

213 Cal. 125

Ex parte JOHANNES.

Cr. 3442.

Supreme Court of California.

July 14, 1931.

1. Criminal law ☞1083.

Appeal from superior court's judgment or order denying motion for new trial removes subject-matter thereof from jurisdiction of superior court.

2. Criminal law ☞1083.

Pending appeal from superior court's judgment, superior court has no jurisdiction to vacate judgment or make any order affecting it.

3. Criminal law ☞1017.

Court's jurisdiction on appeal is not determined by presence or absence therein of record on appeal.

4. Criminal law ☞1083.

Appeal may be subject to dismissal, but until disposed of, jurisdiction of subject-matter of judgment is vested in appellate tribunal.

5. Criminal law ☞1104(1/2).

Transcript can be prepared after notice of appeal is filed.

6. Criminal law ☞1110(2).

Trial court has power, notwithstanding appeal from its judgment is pending, to correct clerical errors, omissions, and mistakes of fact in order that record speak truth.

7. Criminal law ☞1110(2).

Trial court's changing judgment, appeal from which was pending, to make sentences run concurrently rather than consecutively, was not correction of clerical error or mistake of fact therein, and was not effective, although defendant had agreed to waive appeal.

8. Criminal law ☞1083.

That accused was present therein when trial court modified judgment, appeal from which was pending, might give trial court jurisdiction over his person, but not jurisdiction over subject-matter of action, which was vested in reviewing court.

9. Criminal law ☞99.

Jurisdiction of subject-matter of offense cannot be conferred by agreement of parties or estoppel.

10. Criminal law ☞83.

Jurisdiction of subject-matter of offense is governed by Constitution and statutes.

In Bank.

Proceeding by Gladys Johannes for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of Jacob I. Johannes.

Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded.

Superseding opinion in 296 P. 654.

Bodkin & Lucas, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHENK, J.

This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus, filed by Gladys Johannes on behalf of her husband, Jacob I. Johannes, who will be referred to as the defendant. The facts are not in dispute.

The district attorney of Los Angeles county filed an information charging Jacob Johannes with the offense of grand theft in five counts. By indictment the grand jury of that county charged him with the same but a separate offense. The actions were consolidated for trial. On June 22, 1928, the jury, the Honorable Charles S. Burnell, presiding as judge, found the defendant guilty as charged on all counts except the fourth and also returned a verdict finding him guilty as charged in the indictment. June 26th was named as the day for the pronouncement of judgment and sentence, at which time the defendant filed a motion for a new trial and a motion in arrest of judgment. On July 5th the court denied the motions and also denied the defendant's request to file an application for probation. Judgment and sentence was thereupon pronounced. By the judgment the sentences as to counts 1 and 2 of the information were made to run consecutively. The sentences as to counts 3 and 5 were made to run concurrently with counts 1 and 2. The sentence as to the charge laid in the indictment was made to run consecutively with the sentences on counts 1 and 2 of the information. Judgment commitments were thereupon issued; whereupon a written notice of appeal to the District Court of Appeal was filed by the defendant and a stay of execution pending appeal was granted. In view of the fact that a felony charge was then pending against the defendant in San Diego county, the court ordered that the sheriff of Los Angeles county deliver the defendant to the authorities of San Diego for trial there, at the conclusion of which the defendant was to be returned to the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county.

On July 13, 1928, the defendant appeared before said Los Angeles superior court and judge and stated, through his counsel and in the presence of a deputy district attorney of Los Angeles county, that the superior court in San Diego county had declared that if the defendant waived his appeal from the judgment rendered in Los Angeles county the court in San Diego county would dismiss the charge in that county on motion of its district attorney and that with this understanding the defendant had been returned to Los Angeles county. Defendant's counsel further stated that it was the desire of the defendant, then in open court, to waive his appeal on the condition that all of the sentences theretofore pronounced against him be made to run concurrently rather than consecutively. The Los Angeles district attorney's office expressed its approval of that course. Whereupon the court announced that, in view of the defendant's abandonment and withdrawal of his appeal, all five sentences imposed should run concurrently. No new or other judgment commitments were issued on this order except as hereinafter related. Without delay the defendant was delivered to the warden of the state prison at San Quentin accompanied by certified copies of the judgment commitments issued on July 5th providing therein that certain of the sentences shall run consecutively.

On September 23, 1928, the Los Angeles superior court issued an order purporting to revoke and set aside the judgment of July 5, 1928, to recall said commitments and to order a new judgment and amended and corrected commitments, so as to make all of the sentences run concurrently. When these so-called amended and corrected commitments were delivered to the warden at San Quentin is not disclosed. They appear herein certified by the clerk of the state board of prison directors as being among the official records of said board at San Quentin as of January 15, 1931.

At its meeting in October, 1928, the defendant appeared before the state board of prison directors and his term was fixed by the board "at five years and one year and one year consecutive sentences, five years and one year concurrently, paroled when served half time," said order having been based on the judgments of July 5, 1928.

Claiming that the board had erroneously based its order on the original judgments of July 5th and had unlawfully disregarded the amended and corrected judgments of July 13th, the defendant applied to the superior court in and for Marin county for a writ of habeas corpus, which was denied. On December 18, 1930, he renewed his application, this time to the District Court of Appeal of the First District, Division 2. The writ was granted and the petitioner was declared to be entitled to immediate parole. In his return to the writ the warden of San Quentin prison stated that he was holding the prisoner in restraint under authority of the judgment commitments of July 5, 1928, and that the state board of prison directors had authorized the release of the prisoner on parole as of date April 30, 1931.

It is conceded that if the state board of prison directors had fixed the term in accordance with the new judgment of July 13, 1928, the prisoner would have been entitled to parole as of date June 30, 1930; also that under the term as fixed in accordance with the judgments of July 5, 1928, the date of parole would be April 30, 1931. Johannes is now on parole. As the purpose of the present writ was to obtain an adjudication of the date on which he would be entitled to go on parole, and he being now on parole, it might appear to the casual observer that the matter has become moot. Indeed, the petitioner has represented to this court that if the matter were not decided prior to April 30, 1931, it would become moot. But such is not strictly the case. If the matter were declared now to present a moot question the term of the parole would still be left in doubt, depending on which of the judgments issued by the trial court be declared to be valid. The importance of the questions involved prompted the granting of the petition for a hearing and still moves us to pass upon the question of law presented notwithstanding the fact that such adjudication is of perhaps little consequence to the party involved.

[1-8] On the foregoing statement of facts the question is presented as to the power of the trial court to change its judgment of conviction and sentence and its commitment, which is evidenced by a certified copy of the judgment, pending an appeal from the judgment, which appeal is at the time undetermined. In this case a written notice of appeal was filed on July 5, 1928. This appeal was pending and undetermined on July 13th, when the court assumed to change the judgment so as to affect the operation thereof, and also on September 23, when the court assumed to recall the first commitments and to issue amended and corrected commitments to conform to the new judgments. The appeal has never been dismissed or otherwise disposed of. It is insisted that the appeal was not perfected by the preparation, certification, and filing of the record in the District Court of Appeal, and that since the defendant appeared in the superior court and announced an abandonment of the appeal, jurisdiction was then revested in that court to deal with the judgment as if the appeal had not been taken. But that is not so. An appeal from the judgment or order denying a motion for a new trial removes the subject-matter thereof from the jurisdiction of the superior court. Pending the appeal the superior court has no jurisdiction to vacate the judgment or make any order affecting it. People v. Mayne, 118 Cal. 516, 50 P. 654, 62 Am. St. Rep. 256; Stowe v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. App. 174, 236 P. 985; 8 Cal. Jur. p. 520, and cases cited. The jurisdiction of the court on appeal is not determined by the presence or absence therein of the record on appeal. Estate of Davis, 151 Cal. 318, 86 P. 183, 90 P. 711, 121 Am. St. Rep. 105. The appeal may be subject to dismissal, either by the appellant or by the respondent on proper grounds, or by stipulation, but until it is disposed of the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the judgment is vested in the appellate tribunal. The law, of course, authorizes the preparation of the transcript after the notice of appeal is filed, and the trial court has power, notwithstanding the appeal, to correct clerical errors, omissions, and mistakes of fact in order that the record speak the truth. People v. McNulty, 93 Cal. 427, 26 P. 597, 29 P. 61; Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892. There is no merit in the claim that the trial court in this case modified its judgment in order to correct a clerical error or mistake of fact therein. The change was a matter of substance and directly affected the operation of the judgment. Assuming that the judgment of July 13th and the order of the court of September 23d and the commitments issued in pursuance thereof had been transmitted to the warden and to the state board of prison directors immediately upon their rendition and issuance, those officials were justified in disregarding them and basing their course of action on the judgment of July 5th. The fact that the defendant was present in court on July 13, 1928, might vest in the superior court jurisdiction over his person, but could not confer upon that court jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the action which was then vested in the reviewing court.

[9, 10] Something has been said about the desirability and necessity, from an equitable point of view, of holding the prosecuting officer strictly to account in any stipulation or agreement he may make with a defendant in relation to any substantial right of the latter. This is conceded and was recognized in People v. Schwarz, 201 Cal. 309, 257 P. 71. But when we are dealing with the question of the jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an offense, agreement of the parties or estoppel cannot confer it. That question is referable to the Constitution and the statutes.

Authorities from other jurisdictions are not helpful, inasmuch as the problem involved herein must be determined in accordance with principles well established in this state.

The writ is discharged, and said Jacob I. Johannes is remanded to the custody of the respondent warden subject to his right to parole in accordance with the order of the state board of prison directors based upon the judgment of July 5, 1928.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.

213 Cal. 169
PADUVERIS v. PARIS.
S. F. 13476.

Supreme Court of California.
July 23, 1931.

1. Divorce ⇨160.

Defendant's default in divorce action constituted admission of plaintiff's allegation that property was community property.

2. Judgment ⇨568.

Admission by failure to answer is not equivalent of adjudication.

3. Divorce ⇨171.

Where divorce decree did not determine property rights, husband, although by failure to answer, admitting allegation that property was community, held not precluded from thereafter showing wife relinquished community interest pending divorce action.

4. Husband and wife ⇨266.

Wife may relinquish to husband interest in community property, which is thereby converted into separate property of husband (Civ. Code, § 158).

5. Husband and wife Ⓒ266.

Wife's transfer of interest in community property to husband held subject to rules controlling actions of person occupying confidential relations, and required to be shown to be fair to wife (Civ. Code, § 158).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by Dionysius Paduveris against Mary A. Paris. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Joseph E. Bien and Werner Olds, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Eloise B. Cushing, of Oakland, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J.

Defendant appeals from a judgment for plaintiff in an action to quiet title to a lot in the city of Oakland. The parties were formerly husband and wife, and had resided upon the property to which the action relates until their separation. Defendant denied that her claim of interest was without right, and alleged that said property was community property of herself and her former husband; that neither the interlocutory nor final decree of divorce entered in the action commenced by her in April, 1917, made any provision for the distribution of the community property: and that no settlement of her community interest had ever been made. She prayed that the court decree the extent of her interest, and make such settlement thereof as it should deem proper.

Upon the trial of the action herein, plaintiff introduced in evidence a deed of said property from his wife to himself, and testified that said deed was signed by his wife in his presence in July, 1917, which was after she had filed suit for divorce, and immediately delivered to him. It was not acknowledged, and had never been recorded. Defendant denied having signed said deed or any other instrument transferring her community interest to her husband. By its general finding that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the property involved, and that the claim of defendant was without right, the court below rejected defendant's contention that her signature was a forgery. Upon this appeal, defendant does not attack the court's conclusion in this regard, which we find to be amply supported by satisfactory evidence, but contends that, notwithstanding said deed may have been executed, it is of no legal effect.

This contention is based in part on the premise that the interlocutory and final decrees of divorce, entered after the date of the deed, which do not purport to dispose of the property of the parties, nevertheless determined that the property here involved was community in character, and the force of said adjudications cannot be overcome in the action herein by evidence of a transaction had before the entry of said decrees. Defendant must fail in this argument for the reason that neither the interlocutory nor final decree purport to determine the character of the property.

Defendant alleged, in her complaint for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, that the property herein described was the community property of herself and her husband, of the value of $4,000, and subject to a mortgage of $2,500, and that the household furniture was of the value of $50. She prayed that it be set aside to her. The complaint was filed on April 3, 1917. The deed under which plaintiff herein claims bears date July, 1917. He filed a general demurrer in the divorce action, which was overruled. On October 5, 1919, more than two years after the execution of the said deed, the wife filed a supplemental complaint alleging additional acts of cruelty, and describing the property, which she had referred to in the first complaint as 1046 Fifth avenue, Oakland, by metes and bounds. She again prayed that it be set aside to her. Although said supplemental complaint does not expressly state that said lots were community property, it was intended to supplement rather than to replace the original complaint, and the allegation as to the community character of the property must, under the circumstances, be considered as being made of the date of the filing of the supplemental complaint, which was subsequent to the execution of the deed to the husband. Defendant defaulted, and his default was duly entered on December 17, 1920. An interlocutory decree was rendered a year later, and thereafter a final decree was entered. Both decrees are silent as to the property of the parties, and neither made any provision as to alimony or custody and support of the six minor children of the parties.

[1-3] The default of the defendant in the divorce action constituted an admission of the truth of plaintiff's allegation that the property was community. 2 Freeman on Judgments, pp. 1392, 1398. Had the decree found in accordance with said admission, the defendant would have been precluded from proving, in a subsequent action instituted by him, that the property was his separate property on the date to which the adjudication made in the divorce decree related. Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 P. 1168; Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 8, 147 P. 1171; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Welch, 202 Cal. 312, 260 P. 545. This result would follow from an application of the general rules governing the conclusiveness of judgments. But an admission made by failure to answer is not the equivalent of an adjudication. Where the divorce decree fails to determine the property rights of the parties, the husband is not precluded from thereafter showing that the wife had relinquished her community interest pending the divorce action.

In Brown v. Brown, 170 Cal. 1, 147 P. 1163, a default decree of divorce, silent as to community property, was held to constitute an adjudication that there was no community property. But the complaint in that case alleged that there was no community property. It does not follow in the case herein, in which certain property was alleged to be community, that the court's silence can be construed as an adjudication that the property was community. Portions of the transcript of testimony taken at the time the interlocutory decree was granted were read in evidence. It appears that the court's failure to determine the property rights of the parties was due to plaintiff's abandonment of all questions in relation thereto as an issue in the divorce action. The attorney for plaintiff stated in said divorce action that plaintiff waived any claim to alimony or community property or custody of the children, and "just wanted to proceed with the divorce."

Said attorney then asked plaintiff the following questions:

"Q. Is there any community property? A. He has his own property.

"Q. You got property belonging to you and your husband. A. Yes, sir, that is on 5th Avenue.

"Q. Fifth Avenue? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You waive all your right—you don't want anything of that house? A. No, I don't.

"Q. You gave that to your husband to take care of the children? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And all the furniture and everything? A. Yes, sir."

The plaintiff in said divorce action filed a second divorce action against her husband on May 15, 1920. This action was dismissed upon the filing of a demurrer setting up the pendency of the prior action. In the complaint in the later action, she alleged that the property, together with the furniture therein, was community property, but that she claimed no interest therein. The evidence is to the effect that the wife was to relinquish all claim to the community real property, which was heavily incumbered, provided the husband would support and rear the six minor children, four of whom were females, the youngest being but an infant. She demanded and received the best part of the household furniture.

[4] Appellant also makes the point that her interest in the community property, which has been held to be only an estate in expecttancy (Stewart v. Stewart, 199 Cal. 318, 249 P. 197), was not the subject of transfer from herself to her husband. That the wife may relinquish to her husband her interest in the community property, which is thereby converted into the separate property of the husband, is too well settled to require discussion. See Sanguinetti v. Sanguinetti, 51 Cal. App. 347, 196 P. 799, and cases there cited; Estate of Brix, 181 Cal. 667, 186 P. 135. Express authorization for such relinquishment, whether made as a part of a separation agreement or otherwise, is found in section 158, Civil Code. A deed from the wife to the husband is an obvious mode of accomplishing the termination of the wife's interest.

[5] Such transactions from which the husband gains an advantage are declared by section 158, supra, to be subject to the rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, and must be shown to be fair as to the wife. In rendering judgment for plaintiff, the court below impliedly held that he had met the burden of showing the transfer to be fair as to his former wife, and we are not disposed to disturb its conclusion.

The parties had resided together with their six minor children upon the property until the wife left prior to the filing of her first complaint. The plaintiff herein testified that he and his wife had agreed to a dismissal of the divorce action, and he had paid her attorney a portion of his fee. They were unable to effect a lasting reconciliation. She transferred the property to him with the understanding that he should assume full care of the children. The property was worth between $3,500 and $4,000 and subject to a mortgage of $2,500, which had been paid off entirely by the respondent at the time he brought the present action. The wife has since remarried, and has not undertaken the care or contributed to the support of her children. The father seems to have had difficulty in properly discharging the obligation of parental care, as he had no means of support save his daily wages. The record indicates that at one time the children were committed to institutions because of his inability to care for them, and that one of the daughters was placed in a county tubercular hospital soon after the separation, and remained there for several years. One of the sons had been an inmate of the Whittier state school. However, the only home and support furnished by either parent was that given by the father upon the property here involved. At the time of the trial, several of the children were residing there with him. The case was considered in all of its aspects by the trial court, and we are not disposed to disturb its judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

213 Cal. 151

BRUNS v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 12716.

Supreme Court of California.

July 17, 1931.

1. Attorney and client ☞52.

Verified complaint is not prerequisite to state bar's jurisdiction in disciplinary proceeding.

2. Adoption ☞12.

Statute does not eliminate necessity of notifying parent of adoption proceeding, notwithstanding parent has been divorced for cruelty, where court has subsequently granted child's custody to such parent (Civ. Code, § 282).

3. Attorney and client ☞58.

Deliberately making false averment in petition for adoption, that minor's custody was in military school rather than in father, held violation of attorney's duty, requiring three months suspension (Code Civ. Proc. § 282).

4. Attorney and client ☞53(2).

That attorney procured service of unfiled complaint for alimony held not conduct meriting infliction of punishment, under evidence.

Evidence was that attorney's associate counsel had served the unfiled complaint upon the adversary counsel with the adversary counsel's consent, and, while the procedure was irregular and unusual, it could not have harassed the opposition to any great extent, for they were apprised of the fact that the complaint had not been filed nor summons issued thereon.

In Bank.

Proceeding by Paul H. Bruns to review a recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that petitioner be suspended from the practice of law for a period of three months.

Petitioner suspended for three months.

Crail, Shutt, Penprase & Crail, D. W. Richards, and H. F. Poyet, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers and Philbrick McCoy, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J.

The board of governors of the state bar, following a hearing before a local administrative committee, has recommended that petitioner be suspended from the practice of the law for a period of three months. This recommendation is grounded on findings of unprofessional conduct.

[1] There is no merit in the contention of petitioner that the state bar is without jurisdiction to proceed in the absence of the filing of a verified complaint. In the Matter of Herron (Cal. Sup.) 298 P. 474. Furthermore, the complaint served on petitioner was properly verified. In re Collins, 147 Cal. 8, 10, 81 P. 220. There is nothing in the further point that the hearing before the board of governors "was had without due process." In re Petersen, 208 Cal. 42, 45, 280 P. 124.

The first and principal charge of unprofessional conduct made against petitioner has to do with his inclusion in a petition for adoption, filed on behalf of a client, of certain alleged false averments of fact. It appears that in 1924, one Clara E. Swanner filed an action for divorce in the superior court of Orange county, the complaint charging cruelty. An interlocutory decree of divorce was entered upon the default of the defendant. This decree and the final decree thereafter entered awarded custody of the minor child of the parties to the plaintiff-mother. On February 26, 1926, the decree was modified, and custody of the minor awarded to the father, with directions that he place the child in a military school, the right of visitation being reserved to each of the parents. In February of 1927, the custody of the father was again affirmed and continued, but the decree modified slightly to permit the mother to take the child from the military school on alternate week-ends. Petitioner came into the case for the first time in 1929, when on July 20 he filed a petition with the Orange county superior court, on behalf of the mother, requesting that the decree be further modified to again place custody of the child in her. This application averred the necessary facts to show that the custody of the child had theretofore been transferred to and placed in the father. While this petition for modification was pending and undetermined, petitioner, on behalf of the mother and her second husband (she having remarried), filed with the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles a petition by which it was sought to secure an order authorizing the adoption of the minor by his stepfather. It is this petition which contains the false averments as to the custody of the minor being in the military school, thus obviating, so the petition alleges, the necessity of first securing the consent of the father of the child to the contemplated adoption.

In defense of his conduct in this regard, petitioner urges that he interpreted the order of modification of February 26, 1926, to mean that the actual custody of the child had been given to and placed in the military school, with a right of visitation only being reserved to the parents. Having so construed the order of modification, petitioner contends that he was warranted, under the terms of section 224 of the Civil Code, in suggesting to the court in the petition that the father of the child need not be informed of the pendency of the adoption proceeding. He also asserts that it was for the court to preliminarily determine, as a jurisdictional matter, whether the father should be given notice, citing Estate of McKeag, 141 Cal. 403, 407-408, 74 P. 1039, 99 Am. St. Rep. 80.

[2, 3] Section 224, supra, provides in effect that in adoption proceedings the consent of a parent divorced because of cruelty need not be secured. While this Code section may offer some explanation of petitioner's conduct, we cannot accept it as a complete and satisfactory excuse therefor. Research would have readily disclosed to him that under the authorities section 224 of the Civil Code does not eliminate the necessity of giving a parent notice of an adoption proceeding, even though the parent may have been divorced upon the ground of cruelty, where the court has subsequently granted custody of the child to said parent. Miller v. Higgins, 14 Cal. App. 156, 164, 111 P. 403. Aside from this phase of the case, however, there can be no justification for petitioner's inclusion of the clearly erroneous and false representation as to the custody of the minor being in the military school. His statement that he honestly misconstrued the order of modification to so read carries but little weight, for the original decree and each subsequent modification thereof is definite and positive in its award of custody. At the time petitioner employed the false averment above referred to, the records in the case of Swanner v. Swanner, clearly showed that the custody of the minor was then in the father. That petitioner was aware of this and must therefore have deliberately falsified the fact in the petition for adoption, with the intention of misleading the superior court of Los Angeles county, is attested by the fact that petitioner then had on file in the superior court of Orange county a petition seeking modification and transfer of custody from the father to the mother. This latter petition, which was still pending and undetermined at the time of the filing of the adoption petition, contains an averment that "at the present time the custody of said child is with the defendant [the father], but that said order * * * permits the plaintiff [petitioner's client] to have the custody of said child on alternate week-ends." It is thus apparent that petitioner had correctly informed himself as to the status of the custody of the child, and was not laboring under any misapprehension in this regard. Under these circumstances, his subsequent misstatement of the fact, made only six weeks thereafter, and to a court unfamiliar with the litigation, cannot be excused as an honest and unintentional error. That petitioner was seeking to secure an advantage for his client by deliberately misleading the court seems to us very clear. Such conduct is highly reprehensible, and a flagrant violation of an attorney's duty. Section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "It is the duty of an attorney and counselor: * * * 4. To employ, for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided to him, such means only as are consistent with truth, and never seek to mislead the judge or any judicial officer by an artifice or false statement of fact or law. * * *" Petitioner's unethical conduct in the particular mentioned calls for severe condemnation and the infliction of suitable punishment.

[4] We need not go at any great length into the second charge of unprofessional conduct directed at the petitioner. Nothing of a serious nature is therein involved. It is found that petitioner had, either personally or otherwise, procured the service of an unfiled complaint for alimony alleged to be owing to the plaintiff from the defendant in the divorce action. There is evidence tending to show that petitioner's associate counsel, explaining at the time his inability to then return to Orange county for the filing thereof and requesting that service be accepted prior to filing, had served the unfiled complaint upon the adversary counsel. To this the adversary counsel agreed. Whatever may have been the motive, we do not perceive anything meriting the infliction of punishment. Petitioner and his associate may well have determined to abandon the action after having served the unfiled complaint. While the procedure was irregular and unusual, it could not have harassed the opposition to any great extent, for they were apprised of the fact that the complaint had not been filed nor summons issued thereon. Moreover, the defendant named in the complaint [the father of the minor], being himself an attorney, was probably not greatly disturbed by the service of an unfiled paper.

Because of petitioner's attempt to mislead the court in a pending proceeding by means of the false averment of a material fact within his knowledge, it is ordered that he be suspended from the practice of the law in all the courts of this state for a period of three months beginning on the tenth day from the date of the filing of this order.

We concur: SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

213 Cal. 158

WRIN v. OHLANDT.

S. F. 13483.

Supreme Court of California.

July 20, 1931.

1. Venue ⇨52(1).

Changing venue for witnesses' convenience rests largely in trial court's discretion.

2. Appeal and error ⇨965.

Trial court's exercise of discretion regarding changing venue for convenience of witnesses will not be disturbed unless abused.

3. Venue ⇨52(1).

Inconvenience of parties in attending trial cannot be considered on motion for change of venue for convenience of witnesses.

4. Venue ⇨52(1).

In action for medical services, refusing change of venue for convenience of witnesses, two of witnesses being real parties in interest, and only other material witness being expert, held not abuse of discretion.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by Marian Wrin against Rae Ohlandt, as administratrix of the estate of Henry Ohlandt, Jr., deceased. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for a change of venue, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

L. E. Johnston, of Napa, and Daniel W. Hone and Leo B. Hone, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Dennis M. Duffy, of Napa, for respondent.

CURTIS, J.

Appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a change of venue from the county of Napa to the city and county of San Francisco upon the ground of the convenience of witnesses. Substantially the only issue in said action pending in the superior court of the county of Napa involved the reasonable value of certain medical services rendered defendant's intestate by two physicians, the assignors of the claims sued on. In plaintiff's affidavit in support of her motion for a change of venue to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco she set forth the names of these two physicians and that of one other, Dr. Lawrence Hoffman, all residents of the city and county of San Francisco, as witnesses who would testify that the services rendered by said physicians were of the reasonable value of $2,500, the amount claimed by plaintiff as the reasonable value of said services. In the counter affidavit filed by the defendant the latter gave the names of two physicians, residents of the county of Napa, who would certify as witnesses for the defendant that the services performed by the assignors of plaintiff were not of the reasonable value of $2,500. In said affidavit it is stated that defendant would prove by one of said witnesses that the reasonable value of said services of each of said two physicians, plaintiff's assignors, was the sum $375. As to the second witness, the amount which he would fix as the reasonable value of said services was left blank, probably by inadvertence. In addition to the three medical witnesses named by plaintiff in her said affidavit, she set forth the names of some six nurses, residents of said city and county of San Francisco, who, so it was averred in said affidavit, would testify that the services which were made the basis of the claim sued on were rendered by the assignors of the plaintiff, and also as to the nature of said services. As the defendant in her answer raises no issue as to the performance of said services, the testimony of these six nurses was not material to any issue in the case. Upon this state of the record the trial court denied the motion of plaintiff for a change of venue to the city and county of San Francisco.

[1, 2] It is well settled that a motion for a change of venue grounded upon the convenience of witnesses rests largely in the discretion of the trial court, the exercise of which will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing of its abuse. Blossom v. Waller, 30 Cal. App. 439, 158 P. 509; Scott v. Stuart, 190 Cal. 526, 213 P. 947.

[3, 4] Two of the witnesses relied upon by the plaintiff are the two physicians who performed the services which were the subject of the claims sued on, and it may be reasonably presumed that they are the real parties in interest as plaintiffs in the action. The inconvenience of the parties in attending the trial is not a factor to be considered in a motion of this character. Blossom v. Waller, supra. Eliminating these two witnesses would leave only one witness for the plaintiff who would be inconvenienced by the trial of the action in Napa county. Furthermore, there is no showing that this remaining witness has any personal knowledge of any of the facts in the case. If called, he will testify simply as an expert witness as to the value of the services rendered by the assignors of the plaintiff. In the case of Security Investment Co. v. Gifford, 179 Cal. 277, 176 P. 444, this court held that the convenience of expert witnesses having no personal knowledge of any facts in the case should not be considered in determining the question of the convenience of witnesses.

Upon the foregoing statement of the facts in this case and the law applicable thereto, we are of the opinion that appellant has signally failed to show any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial judge in denying appellant's motion for a change of venue.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Rehearing denied; LANGDON, J., dissenting.

Gavin McNab, Schmulowitz, Wyman, Atkins & Brune, and McKinstry, Haber & Firebaugh, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Lawler & Degnan, of Los Angeles, and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco (Alfred Sutro, and Eugene M. Prince, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

PRESTON, J.

The appeal in this cause must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

[1] The reason for this holding is that the authority for the maintenance of the action against respondent has been removed by the elimination of the constitutional provision which furnished its sole support.

The complaint assumes the form of a general creditors' and stockholders' bill seeking to hold the defendants, and particularly respondent Getz, for embezzlements and defalcations of a fellow director of the corporation known as Getz Bros. & Co., which said defalcations aggregated the sum of about $550,000. Demurrer of said respondent to the complaint was sustained. Appellant declined to amend, and judgment passed for respondent. This appeal followed.

Section 3 of article 12 of the state Constitution, prior to November 4, 1930, read in part as follows: "The directors or trustees of corporations and joint-stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint-stock association, during the term of office of such director or trustee." On said last-mentioned day, however, the People approved at a general election an amendment to said Constitution which repealed the said provision above quoted without a saving clause or reservation of any kind.

[2] The rule of law in this respect is not in doubt. In Napa State Hospital v. Flaherty, 134 Cal. 315, 317, 66 P. 322, 323, the court stated the rule as follows: "It is a rule of almost universal application that where a right is created solely by a statute, and is dependent upon the statute alone, and such right is still inchoate, and not reduced to possession or perfected by final judgment, the repeal of the statute destroys the remedy, unless the repealing statute contains a saving clause." This rule has been consistently and continuously adhered to since said date. Moss v. Smith, 171 Cal. 777, 787, 155 P. 90; Freeman v. Glenn County Tel. Co., 184 Cal. 508, 510, 194 P. 705; Callet v. Alloto (Cal. Sup.) 290 P. 438; Krause v. Rarity (Cal. Sup.) 293 P. 62. It

213 Cal. 164

COOMBES v. FRANKLIN et al.
S. F. 13939.

Supreme Court of California.
July 23, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 21, 1931.

1. Corporations ⇨320(1), 326.

General creditors' and stockholders' bill seeking to hold corporation directors for defalcations of fellow director held dismissible, because constitutional provision authorizing such an action was repealed without saving clause (Const. art. 12, § 3).

2. Statutes ⇨276(1).

Right dependent solely upon statute, not reduced to possession or perfected by final judgment, is destroyed by repeal of statute without saving clause.

3. Corporations ⇨312(3), 333.

Creditors and stockholders cannot recover at common law against directors for fellow director's defalcations.

4. Constitutional law ⇨154(2).

Repealing constitutional provision, making corporation directors responsible for fellow director's defalcations without saving clause, held not unconstitutional "impairment of obligation of contract" (Const. art. 12, § 3).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Impairing Obligation of Contract," see Words and Phrases.]

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Peirce Coombes against M. G. Franklin and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

is again referred to and approved in Peterson v. Ball (Cal. Sup.) 296 P. 291. A case especially applicable to repeal of a constitutional provision is Willcox v. Edwards, 162 Cal. 455, 123 P. 276, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1392; see, also, People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 159 Cal. 65, 112 P. 866, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1148, and many other cases.

The cases of Berg v. Traeger (Cal. Sup.) 292 P. 495, and Harris v. Moore, 102 Cal. App. 413, 283 P. 76, are not in conflict with this conclusion. These cases, after declaring the rule as above noted, simply sustain appeals duly perfected prior to a change in the statute, shifting the appellate jurisdiction of that class of cases. To apply the above rule to a cause of action which has not yet reached the stage of final judgment is not to give the constitutional provision a retrospective operation. Hastain & Purman, Inc., v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 300 P. 966, and cases therein cited.

[3,4] Section 2 of article 22 of the Constitution manifestly has no application to the situation here, and constitutes no saving clause to the former provision here under discussion. Neither do we find any warrant for the contention that a remedy of the kind here sought existed at common law. Both in reason and authority this contention cannot be sustained. The same is true of the contention that an impairment of the obligation of the contract in violation of the Constitution would result from this application of the rule pronounced above; hence the conclusion already stated.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; SEAWELL, J.

115 Cal.App. 518

PEOPLE v. YEOMAN.

Cr. 2078.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 17, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 29, 1931.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 13, 1931.

1. Criminal law ☞933.

To justify denying new trial, judge must be convinced, not only that evidence sufficiently supported verdict, but that in all respects verdict was legal and in furtherance of justice.

2. Criminal law ☞1160.

Verdict supported by substantial evidence and denial of new trial are conclusive on appellate court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William T. Aggeler, Judge.

Alvin Yeoman was convicted of robbery, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

S. S. Hahn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Alberta Bedford, of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J.

Defendant appeals to this court from a judgment of conviction of the crime of robbery, and from an order by which his motion for a new trial was denied.

Appellant frankly admits that the rulings by the trial court "on the introduction of evidence were fair," and that no error was committed by it either in the giving of instructions to the jury or in rejecting any of the instructions which were offered by defendant. His sole complaint herein is that the evidence adduced on the trial of the action was insufficient to support the verdict and that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. For the prosecution, but a single witness positively identified defendant as one who, with another person, actively participated in the commission of the crime of which defendant was accused, although, aside from generalities, the witness was unable to describe in what manner defendant was clothed at the time the robbery occurred. However, comparing the appearance of defendant with that of the person who concededly assisted in the commission of the robbery, another witness testified that defendant "was the same type of man; * * * his general physical appearance was similar;" but that the witness "couldn't say * * * whether or not this defendant sitting at the counsel table here, the man with the glasses on, is the man." A third witness, who also was present at the time in question, failed to see defendant "or anybody else" other than the person who actually committed the robbery. A fourth witness testified that the "general appearance" of the man who assisted in the robbery "was the same as that of this defendant." Although the witness "couldn't say positively that the defendant Yeoman was the man," she also stated that, "if I were asked to stretch my imagination, I would say that he was." A fifth witness testified that he did not "believe * * * that he was able to see these men sufficiently so that he could identify either one of them," but that, as compared with the robber in question, defendant "was a man of similar build."

[1, 2] For the defendant a very strong "alibi" was presented. Judging from facts appearing in the reporter's transcript of the proceedings at the trial, no adverse criticism may properly be made of any of the witnesses who testified in that regard. Apparently each of them was a person of good reputation, and the testimony given, which was of a most positive character, was clearly to the effect that under no condition would it have been possible for defendant to have participated in the commission of the crime of which he was charged. Indeed, viewed from the "cold record," it would be hard to conceive of a more convincing "alibi" in any case than was presented by defendant in his own behalf. If, considering the entire evidence adduced at the trial of the action, it be difficult to reconcile one's mind to the verdict of the jury, or to understand the reasoning by which the testimony given by defendant's witnesses failed to accomplish the result of creating in the "mind" of the jury a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of defendant, a compensating thought is presented with knowledge of the rule of law which presumably was followed herein, that, in order to be justified in his denial of the motion for a new trial, the judge who presided at the trial must have been convinced, not only that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, that the weight of the evidence was in favor thereof, but that in all respects it was legal and in furtherance of justice. 20 Cal. Jur. 25, et seq., and authorities there cited. Thus fortified, aided by the legal principle that on appeal from a judgment, if it appear that the verdict was supported by substantial evidence, the appellate tribunal is without authority to direct a reversal of the judgment or the order by which the motion of the defendant for a new trial was denied, the proper course of this court in the premises is clearly indicated.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 499

MOFFITT v. FORD MOTOR CO. et al.

Civ. 7279.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 16, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ☞1127.

Appeal would be determined on merits, where it would require about same amount of work to determine motion to affirm.

2. Appeal and error ☞811.

Respondent's age and financial condition and fact that case had not been tried on merits justified granting motion to advance hearing of appeal.

Respondent, the plaintiff in action for damages for personal injuries incurred through defendant's negligence, was depending on recovery in case for money to pay obligations, was nearly seventy-nine years of age, and was infirm in health and general physical condition.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Keetch, Judge.

Action by Alice D. Moffitt against the Ford Motor Company and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. On motion by respondent to affirm judgment or advance hearing of appeal on calendar.

Motion to advance granted, and motion to affirm denied.

See also (Cal. App.) 292 P. 698; (Cal. Sup.) 297 P. 553.

Lucius K. Chase and George H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for appellants on the motion.

Benj. M. Stansbury and Mott, Vallee & Grant, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Motion by respondent to affirm judgment of the trial court, or advance hearing of appeal on the calendar.

[1] It would seem to require about the same amount of work to determine the motion to affirm as it would to determine the appeal on its merits, and we are of the opinion that the appeal should be so determined.

[2] With regard to the motion to advance, respondent urges, among other things, her financial condition, and that she is depending on recoveries in the case for money to pay her obligations. That of itself would seem to be a ground that most litigants who have a judgment in their favor or even hopes of obtaining one might urge, and does not impress us as a good cause for advancement, but the affidavit filed does show that respondent is nearly seventy-nine years of age and is infirm in health and general physical condition, and the case is one in which she is suing for damages alleged to have been incurred through the negligence of defendants, and, in view of the fact that the case has not yet been tried on the merits, we believe the question of whether it should or should not be so tried should be determined speedily, so that if a trial is to be had it may be reached while the respondent is in a physical and mental condition to present her case.

Good cause being shown and all briefs being now on file, the motion to advance will be granted, and the matter placed on the next regular calendar. Motion to affirm is denied.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

115 Cal.App. 408

In re BURNS' ESTATE.

FORRESTER et al. v. ROBBINS et al.
Civ. 7775.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 9, 1931.

1. Wills ⇨327.

Evidence being insufficient to show testatrix' mental incapacity, directing verdict for proponents on such issue and rendering judgment based thereon, held proper.

2. Wills ⇨326.

There being no evidence of undue influence or irregularity of execution of will, granting nonsuit on such grounds held proper.

3. Wills ⇨341.

Court, having properly nonsuited will contestants on issue of undue influence and rendered judgment for proponents on issue of incapacity, properly probated will and codicil.

4. Wills ⇨52(1).

Absent showing of undue influence or fraud, contestants must show "mental incapacity" or insanity affected testator's testamentary capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Mental Incapacity," see Words and Phrases.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Annie E. Burns, deceased. Action contesting the will of said decedent by Wm. H. Forrester and others, contestants, against Clay Robbins, executor, and others, proponents. From a judgment nonsuiting contestants and declaring testatrix' mental competency, and from the verdict and from an order denying motion for new trial, contestants appeal.

Judgment affirmed. Attempted appeals from the verdict of the jury and an order denying motion for new trial dismissed.

W. C. Shelton and George W. Burch, Jr., both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Fredericks, Hanna & Morton and Byron F. Story, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment based upon a verdict rendered in response to the court's order made in connection with an order granting proponents' motion for a nonsuit.

[1-3] An examination of the evidence discloses the fact that there was not sufficient evidence to show mental incapacity to make a will either on August 7, 1923, or on January 23, 1924, at the time when the will and codicil were executed. Also, that there was no evidence showing undue influence or irregularity of execution of the will, and the court was therefore justified in granting the motion for nonsuit on such grounds. The court was justified in directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of the proponents on the other issue, to wit, mental incapacity, and such verdict was properly brought in by the jury. The court was also justified to render its judgment based upon such verdict that the decedent Annie E. Burns was mentally competent to make a last will and testament on August 7, 1923, and was mentally competent to make a codicil to her last will and testament on January 3, 1924, and the court was further justified in making its orders that the last will and testament of Annie E. Burns, dated August 7, 1923, and the codicil thereto, dated January 3, 1924, "be and the same are hereby admitted to probate."

[4] In order to constitute a ground for setting aside a will of a decedent it must be shown that mental incapacity or insanity of the testator was of such a nature as to affect the testamentary capacity of the decedent; and, unless this is shown by the contestants, the will of decedent cannot be declared to be void on the ground of mental incapacity, in the absence of any showing of undue influence or fraud.

The judgment is affirmed. The attempted appeals from the verdict of the jury, and from the order denying motion for a new trial, are dismissed.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

I concur in the judgment: HOUSER, J.

115 Cal.App. 326

KNOTT v. MEDINA NO. 1 et al.

Civ. 7787.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 2, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 1, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

1. Mines and minerals ⇨109.

Right which lessees reserved to use equipment if driller abandoned oil well held not extended by lessees' procuring so-called renewal lease after original lease expired, terminating right (Civ. Code, §§ 1636, 1647).

Evidence disclosed that, by contract with driller, lessees agreed that if he should drill to specified depth without producing commercial oil, then equipment should become his property, but if he abandoned work, lessees reserved right to use equipment to continue drilling; that driller drilled well to specified depth and discontinued operations a few days before expiration of original lease; and that some time after lease expired, lessees obtained so-called renewal lease and took possession of equipment, contending that they were entitled to use thereof during term of renewal lease.

2. Contracts ⇨169.

Agreement should be construed according to circumstances of execution (Civ. Code, § 1647).

3. Appeal and error ⇨1056(1).

Where issue involved 1926 value of well-drilling equipment, error, if any, in excluding 1922 cost held harmless under testimony that no established prices existed, and that 1926 prices were inflated.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by B. F. Knott against Medina No. 1, an unincorporated association, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Robert L. McWilliams and G. C. Ringole, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Norman A. Eisner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, J.

In this action, based upon the alleged conversion of personal property consisting of a certain oil well drilling outfit and equipment, the jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $8,250 and interest. From the judgment entered upon the verdict, defendants appeal.

The defendants Medina No. 1 and Medina No. 2 are unincorporated associations, and the remaining defendants are individuals associated together under those names. Defendants held an oil and gas lease on certain lands in Medina county, Tex., which lease was for a term ending August 11, 1926. It was dated August 11, 1921, and provided: "It is agreed that this lease shall remain in force for five years from this date and as long as oil or gas or either of them is produced from said land by the lessee." Although defendants carried on drilling operations, no oil or gas was produced during the term of the lease. On January 2, 1926, being several months prior to the expiration of the lease, plaintiff entered into a contract with defendants relating to a well located on the property, which well had been partially drilled for defendants by the Pacific Southwest Development Company. This agreement was evidenced by a lengthy letter signed by defendants, the main purpose being expressed in the last paragraph reading: "Our proposition to you as outlined in the preceding portions of this document is conditional that you shall furnish sufficient money to start and continue drilling operations in said well immediately and that there shall be no stoppage in said operations which could be attributed to lack of funds until said well is drilled to 3200 feet or commercial oil in paying quantities. * * *" In consideration for the assistance of plaintiff, the agreement provided, among other things, as follows:

"4th. And we further agree that you shall have the same rights and title to the drilling outfit, equipment and casing in said well as are accorded to the Pacific Southwest Development Co. in the contract which we entered into with it, namely, that if you drill to 3200 feet, or any greater depth, without producing commercial oil in paying quantities then said outfit, equipment and casing shall belong to you so that you may salvage same and receive back the money you have expended in operations at the well, and in this connection will state that we are informed that said outfit and equipment, together with the casing when pulled from the well, should bring approximately eleven thousand dollars ($11,000.00);

"This paragraph 4 is subject, however, as reserved in said contract with the Pacific Southwest Development Co., to our right to the use of the outfit, equipment and casing to drill deeper in said well if you should abandon it at 3200 feet or at any greater depth. * * *"

Plaintiff commenced drilling operations under the contract, and ceased operations on or about August 5, 1926, being a few days before the expiration of the lease. Plaintiff claimed that he drilled the well to a depth exceeding 3,200 feet, and, although this was an issue between the parties in the trial court, appellants concede that there is ample evidence to show that a depth of 3,200 feet was reached. Defendants did not use the drilling outfit between the time of the cessation of operations by plaintiff and the expiration of the lease. Some time after the lease had expired, defendants took possession of the drilling outfit, and subsequently in December, 1926, started further drilling on the well, using this equipment. On the trial, defendants offered to show that in the latter part of August, 1926, and after the expiration of the original lease, they secured a new lease on the property for a further period of five years, which lease by its terms ran from August 11, 1926. They also offered to show that about the same time they notified plaintiff of their election to continue work on the well. To the foregoing evidence offered by defendants, objections were made and sustained by the court.

[1, 2] On this appeal, appellants contend that there was no conversion, as they were entitled to use the drilling outfit during the life of the "renewal lease," and that the trial court erred in excluding evidence relating to said "renewal lease" and to appellants' election to use the outfit after the expiration of the original lease. In our opinion, this contention is without merit. Unless the contract gave appellants the right to use the drilling outfit after the expiration of the original lease, there was a conversion and the evidence offered was properly excluded. The respondent had drilled the well to the required depth, and under the contract the drilling outfit became his property subject only to the right reserved by appellants. Although the contract did not prescribe in express terms the time within which appellants might exercise this reserved right, the agreement of the parties should be construed with reference to the circumstances under which it was made. Civ. Code, § 1647. At the time the parties made their agreement, they had before them the original lease, which was the source of their right to drill upon the premises. At that time, the existing right of both appellants and respondent to drill the well was measured by that lease and terminated with it. The lease made no provision for extension or renewal, and there was no evidence to show that at the time the contract was made the parties had arranged for or contemplated any new lease or "renewal" of the original lease. The intention of the parties at the time of contracting governs (Civ. Code, § 1636), and the only reasonable construction to place upon the contract is that appellants' reserved right to drill with respondent's equipment continued only so long as their right to drill on the premises under the existing lease had not terminated. That reserved right of appellants was not extended by obtaining a new lease at some time after the expiration of the original lease.

[3] Appellants further contend that the trial court erred in excluding evidence of the cost to appellants of the property in 1922. There was a sharp conflict in the expert testimony concerning the value of the property in 1926, and an effort was made on direct examination of one of the appellants to prove the price that appellants had paid for it in 1922. We do not deem it necessary to decide whether the court erred in excluding testimony relating to the purchase price paid four years previously. One of appellants' expert witnesses, after stating that he did not know the cost price of a Star rig in 1922, testified: "I know, in fairness, to tell the truth about it, that in 1926 prices were inflated on account of the demand for oil country equipment. Prices were quoted higher on new materials, and therefore carried a higher second-hand value. * * * And all second-hand oil well supplies are worth what you can get for them. * * * There is no established prices or established market." It was the value in 1926 which was in issue, and, from the foregoing testimony of appellants' witness, we conclude that the error, if any, in excluding evidence of the cost to appellants in 1922, was not prejudicial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

115 Cal.App. 272
SAUER v. ANDREWS, Judge.
Civ. 408.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

June 29, 1931.

1. Contempt ⇨8.

Writing contemptuous newspaper article concerning grand jury and judge was "indirect" or "constructive contempt" (Code Civ. Proc. § 170, as amended by St. 1929, p. 958).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Constructive Contempt" and "Indirect Contempt," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Prohibition ⇨28.

On prohibition against contempt proceedings, determination regarding contemptuous nature of context of article concerning superior court judge rests first with superior court.

3. Judges ⇨51(4).

In case of constructive contempt by writing newspaper article concerning judge, judge had no right to pass upon his own disqualification (Code Civ. Proc. § 170, as amended by St. 1929, p. 958).

Petition by A. R. Sauer for a writ of prohibition against C. N. Andrews, Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of San Diego.

Writ issued.

Curtis Hillyer, of San Diego, for petitioner.

Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., and T. D. McLean, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondent.

OWEN, Justice pro tem.

The petitioner herein is the editor, publisher, and manager of the San Diego Herald, a newspaper printed and circulated in the city of San Diego. On the 13th day of March,

1930, this newspaper contained an article captioned as follows: "New Grand Jury is Sweet-scented Bunch of Hollyhocks Designed to 'Protect' San Diego. Judge Andrews Picked Them But Could Have Added More. (By A. R. Sauer.)"

The article in question is quite lengthy, and it is unnecessary to either set it out fully or to quote those portions alleged to be contemptuous. For the reason hereafter given, we express no opinion as to the nature of the contempt.

On the 20th day of March, 1930, Honorable C. N. Andrews, judge of the superior court, filed an affidavit for contempt of court, and thereupon issued a writ commanding the sheriff of San Diego county to attach the body of the said A. R. Sauer and have him forthwith before Judge Andrews to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt.

On the 25th day of March, 1930, the matter came on for hearing before Judge Andrews. At the hearing, the defendant, petitioner herein, filed his affidavit alleging disqualification of the respondent judge on account of actual bias and prejudice and made an application to have the matter transferred to another department of the San Diego superior court to hear and determine the alleged prejudice of Judge Andrews. The application for transfer was denied. Petitioner thereupon sought a writ of prohibition from this court. An alternative writ was granted, and we now have to consider whether the respondent should be permanently restrained from any further proceedings in the matter.

At the time the proceedings herein were instituted in this court the case of Blodgett v. Superior Court, 290 P. 293, 72 A. L. R. 482, was pending in the Supreme Court of the state. Shortly thereafter there came before the Supreme Court for consideration the case of Briggs et al. v. Superior Court, 297 P. 3, 7. There was thus presented to the highest court of the state two cases wherein must be determined the construction of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure (as amended by St. 1929, p. 958). The decision in this matter has been withheld pending the decision in Briggs et al. v. Superior Court, supra.

[1] In the Briggs decision the distinction between direct and constructive contempt has been clearly defined, and the confusion following the amendment of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the year 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1403) no longer exists. In the instant case the contempt was indirect or constructive. There can be no further uncertainty as to procedure. In cases of direct contempt the court should act summarily, and with such directness and certainty as is commensurate with the degree of interference with the due and orderly administration of justice, and the regular procedure of court.

It is held in Briggs et al. v. Superior Court, supra: "We nevertheless adhere to the views expressed in our earlier decisions as to the inapplicability of this section of the Code, whether as it read originally or as it has been made to read by its aforesaid amendment, to cases of direct contempt, and we place our present conclusion upon the same ground as that expressed in our former opinions, viz. that of necessity the courts must be held to retain their ancient and inherent power to summarily deal with all cases of direct contempt committed in the immediate view and presence of the court. * * *

As to indirect contempts the same case holds: "We are unable to say that the Legislature was without power to provide such a procedure for the hearing and determination of cases of constructive contempt; and for an even stronger reason we are unwilling to hold that the Legislature by its recent amendment to section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure was without power to prescribe the otherwise usual and salutary provision that the trial judge in such, as in all other cases save those of direct contempt, shall no longer be permitted to pass upon the question of his own disqualification."

[2, 3] We have expressed no opinion as to the subject-matter of the article published by the petitioner herein. The determination as to the contemptuous nature of the context rests first with the superior court. The only matter involved here is the question of respondent's right to pass on his own disqualification. We find that he has no right to do this. Let another judge of the superior court hear and determine the question of respondent's disqualification, until which time the respondent is restrained and prohibited from any further proceedings in the matter.

It is ordered that the writ of prohibition issue as prayed for.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

115 Cal.App. 517

KLING et al. v. KIMBALL PUMP CO., Inc.
Civ. 7794.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 17, 1931.

I. Exceptions, bill of  $\S$  36(3).

Appeal will not be dismissed for failure to file proposed bill of exceptions or make service thereof within statutory period, where written notice of order denying motion for new trial was not given (Code Civ. Proc.  $\S$  953d).

2. Exceptions, bill of  $\S$  36(3).

Law limiting time for preparing and serving bill of exceptions did not repeal law requiring written notice of order denying motion for new trial or waiver thereof (Code Civ. Proc.  $\S$  953d, and  $\S$  650 as amended by St. 1929, p. 839,  $\S$  1).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Action by D. G. Kling and another against the Kimball Pump Company, Incorporated, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant and cross-complainant, and plaintiffs and cross-defendants appeal.

Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

D. G. Kling and W. P. Hyatt, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Freston & Files, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

[1, 2] Respondent moved to dismiss the appeal from the judgment entered in the court below upon the ground that appellants did not file their proposed bill of exceptions or make service thereof within the period prescribed by law. The record shows that after the entry of judgment plaintiffs duly presented their motion for new trial, which motion was denied on June 26, 1930. It does not appear that the defendant ever gave notice in writing of the order denying said motion for a new trial, or that written notice thereof has been waived in writing or by oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the minutes in accordance with the provisions of section 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure. According to section 650 of said Code, the time limited for preparing and serving a bill of exceptions begins to run with the date of notice of the order denying the motion for a new trial, or other determination thereof, when such motion has been made. By reason of these Code provisions it has been held, and is now the established rule, that where the record stands in the condition hereinabove stated in respect to this case, a motion like that here presented should be denied. Sterling Corp. v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 370, 278 P. 859; Griffin v. Kent, 206 Cal. 263, 274 P. 56. To avoid the effect of the foregoing decisions, respondent contends that section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1929 (St. 1929, p. 839,  $\S$  1), by implication repeals section 953d of the Code of Civil Procedure in so far as this section was previously applicable to bill of exceptions. We are of the opinion that there is no such repeal intended or accomplished.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

115 Cal.App. 451
STEEL v. DUNTLEY.
Civ. 6674.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
July 13, 1931.

1. Frauds, statute of  $\S$  115(3).

Party to be charged is only one who must sign in order to satisfy statute of frauds (Code Civ. Proc.  $\S$  1973, subd. 5).

2. Frauds, statute of  $\S$  103(1).

Escrow instructions, containing terms of oral agreement with additional terms to be expected in escrow, constituted written contract subscribed by party to be charged with in statute (Code Civ. Proc.  $\S$  1973, subd. 5).

3. Frauds, statute of  $\S$  115(4).

Escrow instructions signed by vendor constituted sufficient memorandum of oral contract to satisfy statute (Code Civ. Proc.  $\S$  1973, subd. 5).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clair S. Tappaan, Judge.

Action by Sarah M. Steel against George M. Duntley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

George Clark and C. W. Pendleton, both of Los Angeles, and Hugh Gordon, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John C. Miles and Donald R. Peek, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

Upon the second trial of this action, based on the breach by the vendor of a contract to sell real estate, the parties stipulated "that the only question at issue before the court was whether or not the escrow instructions of the respective parties * * * constituted an agreement in writing legally sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds (section 1973, subd. 5, Code Civ. Proc.)." The trial court was satisfied that the statute had been complied with, and with this conclusion we agree.

[1] One of appellant's premises, advanced by counsel not now in the case, is that the writing required by the statute must be subscribed by the vendee, the plaintiff in this cause. This is not the requirement of the law. The party to be charged is the only one who must sign, and in the situation before us that is the vendor (who did sign). Benson v. Shotwell (1890) 87 Cal. 49, 25 P. 249; Cavanaugh v. Casselman (1891) 88 Cal. 543, 26 P. 515; Easton v. Montgomery (1891) 90 Cal. 307, 27 P. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Cowan v. Trem- ble (Cal. App. 1931) 296 P. 91. See Harper v. Goldschmidt (1909) 156 Cal. 245, 104 P. 451, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689, 134 Am. St. Rep. 124. In each of these cases there was a down payment made by the vendee, but this was not part performance taking the contracts out from the statute of frauds (Dondero v. Aparicio [1923] 63 Cal. App. 373, 218 P. 608), and the fact of payment was not relied upon by the court in determining that the contracts were valid. The statute of frauds does not require the signature of any party other than the one to be charged.

[2] Following an oral contract to sell and buy the piece of property involved in this action, defendant and plaintiff signed separate escrow instructions; the defendant signing personally, the plaintiff by her nephew, who had acted as her agent throughout the deal. It is of no consequence that the nephew had no written authorization to act as plaintiff's agent. These escrow instructions, signed the same day, referring to the same property, containing the terms of the oral agreement, but with additional terms to be expected in an escrow, constitute a written contract subscribed by the party to be charged; i. e., the defendant. Tuso v. Green (1924) 194 Cal. 574, 229 P. 327; Neher v. Kauffman (1925) 197 Cal. 674, 242 P. 713; Hudson v. Slonaker (1928) 89 Cal. App. 620, 265 P. 346; Wilson v. Coffey (1928) 92 Cal. App. 343, 268 P. 408. The escrow instructions before us do not vary in any material provision from those under consideration in the last two cases cited. Nor is there any circumstance which requires a different conclusion from that reached in those cases.

[3] But, if the escrow instructions were insufficient to constitute a written contract, the instruction signed by the defendant constitutes a sufficient memorandum of the oral contract, into which the parties had entered, to satisfy the statute. Coulter v. Howard (1927) 203 Cal. 17, 262 P. 751; Fritz v. Frost (Cal. App. 1931) 300 P. 454.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

115 Cal.App. 414

MARTIN MUSIC CO. v. ROBB.

Civ. 857.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

July 9, 1931.

1. Sales ⇨479(1).

On buyer's breach of conditional sale contract, seller may either disaffirm contract and retake property, or affirm contract and sue for purchase price.

2. Sales ⇨479(1).

On buyer's breach of conditional sale contract, seller's exercise of either option to disaffirm contract and retake property, or to affirm contract and sue for purchase price, constitutes abandonment of right under other option.

3. Sales ⇨477(4).

Any act of conditional seller clearly manifesting intention to rely on unpaid purchase price as absolute debt precludes seller from thereafter retaking property.

4. Sales ⇨477(4).

Commencement of any litigation by conditional seller that can proceed only on theory that title has passed to buyer generally constitutes election which seller may not revoke.

5. Election of remedies ⇨9.

In absence of mistake, commencement of proceeding to enforce one remedial right generally constitutes conclusive election barring subsequent prosecution of inconsistent rights.

6. Sales ⇨477(4).

Commencement of suit by conditional seller for contract price constitutes election passing title to piano to buyer.

7. Bankruptcy ⇨341.

Referees in bankruptcy are judicial officers clothed with power to adjudicate in first instance over claims against bankrupt's estate.

8. Bankruptcy ⇨341.

Findings of referees in bankruptcy on claims presented against bankrupt's estate are entitled to respect given to officers acting judicially.

9. Bankruptcy ⇨341.

Referees' allowance of claims presented against bankrupt's estate constitutes final judgment binding on both creditors and bankrupt.

10. Bankruptcy ⇨364.

Finding that action of conditional seller in suing for contract price and subsequent filing and allowance of seller's claim as creditor in buyer's bankruptcy proceeding constituted election precluding seller from pursuing inconsistent remedy of repossession held supported.

11. Appeal and error Ⓒ1052(8).

Admission of hearsay evidence held harmless where sufficient competent evidence warranted finding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Action by the Martin Music Company against Ada E. Robb and Ada E. Robb, bankrupt. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Ed Fitzpatrick, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward W. Forgy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner and entitled to the possession of a certain piano, brought this action to recover possession thereof. Judgment having been entered in favor of defendant, the plaintiff appeals therefrom.

The right of possession in plaintiff is based on a monthly installment note contract under which defendant agreed to pay $2,250. She was given credit thereon in the sum of $286, being in default as to the balance due of $1,964. The evidence indicates that a piano was taken in by plaintiff from defendant in the transaction. The contract bears date August 21, 1925. The complaint in this action was filed July 14, 1927.

The contract provides, among other things, that title shall remain in the plaintiff, and "if she fails to pay any of said instalments when due * * * then the entire unpaid balance of this contract with interest and all accrued costs, including drayage and attorney's fees, shall in any of said cases immediately become due and payable and Martin Music Company or assigns may enforce payment of the entire amount of principal, interest and costs aforesaid then unpaid, or if they so elect, they may cancel this contract and take possession of said instrument without legal process."

A statement of the facts discloses the following: That prior to the 26th day of May, 1926, plaintiff assigned the above-mentioned contract to one B. J. Tobey for collection; that on said 26th day of May, 1926, after several demands had been made for payment of the amount due, this assignee brought suit in his name against the defendant Ada E. Robb, to enforce payment of the full amount due under the contract, and alleged in his complaint under oath that "plaintiff has elected to exercise the option set forth in said contract and declare the whole amount of principal and interest due under the terms of said contract, and does hereby exercise said option and declares that whole of said principal sum of $1,964.00 and interest immediately due and payable." That Mrs. Robb was served with summons on May 27, 1926. Default of defendant for failure to appear was entered by the plaintiff in said action June 8, 1926. That on July 31, 1926, plaintiff filed a dismissal of said action and it was dismissed as of that date, without prejudice. No demand for the return of the piano was made.

The evidence further discloses that on June 5, 1926, Mrs. Robb filed her voluntary petition in bankruptcy and on the same day was adjudicated a bankrupt by the United States District Court. In her petition in bankruptcy she listed the claim of Martin Music Company as a "secured claim," stating in said listing that it was assigned to Tobey and that he had sued thereon in the superior court of Los Angeles county. That after the dismissal on July 31, 1926, of the above-mentioned suit, Tobey reassigned the claim to the Martin Music Company; that on December 8, 1926, the Martin Music Company filed with the bankruptcy referee proof of secured claim based upon said contract, which was allowed in full by the referee. Claims of other creditors were also filed.

On March 25, 1927, the Martin Music Company filed its petition for reclamation of the piano, based upon said contract, which petition was denied by the referee on June 14, 1927. In his order denying the petition the referee permitted Mrs. Robb to amend her original petition in bankruptcy so as to include the piano among her property claimed as exempt under subdivision 2, section 690, Code of Civil Procedure, and further stated in said order that it had not been shown by evidence that the trustee ever had possession of the piano, and it then appearing that the piano would not become any part of the estate of the bankrupt coming into the hands of the trustee, the petition would be denied. On January 16, 1928, she was granted a final discharge in the bankruptcy proceedings. No appeal from any of the orders was taken.

At least four suits were filed against Mrs. Robb before bankruptcy, one being before the Tobey action. Mrs. Robb testified that prior to the Tobey suit her creditors had been pressing her for payment, but had agreed to give her a chance and that this arrangement was interrupted because of that suit. That she had no intention of going into bankruptcy until this suit was filed. This last-mentioned evidence was admitted over objection.

The trial court found that the plaintiff did, prior to the bringing of this action, exercise one of the two options which it was entitled to exercise under the terms of said contract, and did fully and irrevocably elect to enforce payment of the purchase money for the piano, and did fully and irrevocably waive its option to repossess itself of such piano, and that prior to the bringing of this action title to the piano was fully and finally vested in the defendant.

Respondents contend that in addition to having made an election, which was complete on a matter which required an election, plaintiff specifically placed itself within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court in two ways, first, by filing its proof of claim, which was approved, and, secondly, by filing a petition for reclamation, which was denied, no appeal or attempt to modify either determination having been made, and that subsequently thereto, the discharge in bankruptcy was granted, making the matter res adjudicata.

Appellant contends that the evidence does not support the finding and that the trial court erred in the reception of certain evidence over objection. Appellant urges with some sincerity the equities of the case in support of his argument as to the law applicable. If it were a matter to be determined by equity rather than the law of the case, we find considerable merit in his contention.

In Holt v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 353, 42 P. 435, it was held, in a case where an election had been made as to goods sold on a conditional sale contract, where a claim was filed against an estate rather than repossess the goods under the contract, that the vendor in a conditional sale, electing to present a claim for the whole remainder of the purchase money against the estate instead of retaking possession of the property sold under the terms of the contract, without investigating and ascertaining whether the estate is solvent or insolvent, is not protected from the result of want of care in such investigation by reason of ignorance of the real condition of the estate; and the fact that the whole of the claims allowed against the estate largely exceed the value of the assets as shown by the inventory does not prevent the election from being binding upon him where it does not appear that he was misled by anyone as to the condition of the estate.

[1, 2] As a rule, on breach of a conditional sale contract by the buyer, the seller may either disaffirm the contract and retake the property, or he may affirm the contract, declare the subsequent payments due and sue for the purchase price. But since these remedies are inconsistent, he cannot have both and an assertion of one of them is an abandonment of and bars any right under the other.

[3, 4] No general rule as to what will constitute a waiver of his reserved title by the seller under a conditional sale contract can be laid down other than this: A waiver can be inferred whenever the conduct of the seller is inconsistent with the idea that he still intends to enforce a return of the goods if the conditions are not performed; whether or not such is the case is a question of fact. Any act on the part of the seller clearly manifesting an intention to treat and rely upon the unpaid purchase price as an absolute debt from the purchaser will be deemed an election to waive the conditions of the sale, resulting in title passing to the purchaser, and precluding the seller from thereafter retaking the property. The commencement of any litigation that can proceed only on the theory that title has passed to the purchaser on waiver by the seller generally constitutes an election which the seller may not revoke. Bancroft's Code Practice and Remedies, vol. 1, § 196, pars. 297, 298; Muncy v. Brain, 158 Cal. 300, 305, 110 P. 945; Parke v. White River Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 P. 442; Boas v. Knewing, 175 Cal. 226, 229, 165 P. 690, L. R. A. 1917F, 462.

[5] While the decisions are not harmonious as to the effect of commencing an action to enforce one of two or more remedial rights arising out of the same facts, in the absence of mistake, or some other legal excuse, according to the weight of authority the commencement of any proceeding to enforce one remedial right, in a court having jurisdiction to entertain such proceeding, is generally such a decisive act as constitutes a conclusive election, barring the subsequent prosecution of inconsistent rights. 20 Cor. Jur. p. 29, E., and cases cited.

In Spurdis v. Karadontes (Sup.) 170 N. Y. S. 92, 93, it was held that: "This election must be held to have taken place, notwithstanding the fact that the former action was abandoned, since it is the affirmative act of the plaintiff in commencing the action which determines his election, and not the result of the action." Citing Matter of Garver, 176 N. Y. 386, 68 N. E. 667.

In Silverstin v. Kohler & Chase, 181 Cal. 53, 183 P. 451, 452, 9 A. L. R. 1177, it being a case involving a contract sale of a piano, we find this language: "In many states it is held that where the full amount of the purchase price is due and the seller brings an action to recover the same he thereby confirms the title in the purchaser. This rule has been recognized in this state." Citing Parke v. White River Lumber Co., supra.

A case involving the sale of a piano under a contract similar to the one before us, but where the piano in question was attached at the time of filing the action, is Birkel v. Nast, 20 Cal. App. 651, 654, 129 P. 945, wherein the court held, after citing the cases of Muncy v. Brain, Holt v. Ewing, and Parke v. White River Lumber Co., supra: "The legal effect of such election was, immediately upon the filing of the complaint [italics ours], to transfer to and vest in defendant title to the piano as completely as though defendant had made full payment therefor."

Appellants rely principally upon the reasoning given and cases cited in De Laval

Pacific Co. v. United C. & D. Co., 65 Cal. App. 584, 224 P. 766, 767, where certain machinery was returned under a similar contract of sale and suit was subsequently brought for the total purchase price after default in payment. The court there (citing 9 R. C. L. 960) held that: "The commencement of an action to enforce one of such remedies is generally considered sufficient to estop a party from thereafter pursuing the other remedy. * * * Although it has also been held that 'the more reasonable rule is that the mere bringing of an action which has been dismissed before judgment, and in which no element of estoppel in pais has arisen, that is, where no advantage has been gained or no detriment has been occasioned, is not an election.' Brice v. Walker, 50 Cal. App. 49, 194 P. 721. * * * The rule might therefore be stated as follows: Whenever a party entitled to enforce two remedies either institutes an action upon one of such remedies or performs any act in the pursuit of such remedy, whereby he has gained any advantage over the other party, or he has occasioned the other party any damage, he will be held to have made an election of such remedy, and will not be entitled to pursue any other remedy for the enforcement of his right."

The cases in this state, where the principle has been invoked, are generally those where a party, having two inconsistent remedies for the enforcement of a right, has pursued one to judgment and then, finding that the other would be more effectual, attempts to invoke it. Hines v. Ward, 121 Cal. 115, 53 P. 427. In this case it was stated that the general rule in other jurisdictions is this: That where a party has brought an action in pursuit of one remedy he cannot, by dismissing it before judgment, be permitted to pursue another and different remedy, but the commencement of the first is a conclusive election by which he is bound.

But the court in that case did not determine whether the rule should be so extended in this state. Some cases (De Laval Pacific Co. v. United C. & D. Co., supra, and Brice v. Walker, supra) infer, if they do not hold, that in certain cases the filing of a complaint, in which no element of estoppel in pais has arisen, i. e., where no advantage has been gained or no detriment has been occasioned, is not an election, the doctrine of election of remedies being generally regarded as being the application of the rule of estoppel.

If we accept the theory that the commencement of the first action in this case was as a matter of law an election of an inconsistent remedy, then appellants would be foreclosed of seeking the possession of the piano through this present action. If we accept the rule last cited, that in addition thereto there must be the element of estoppel in pais, we must go to the evidence to establish facts, inferences, and deductions to warrant the finding the court has made.

Respondent testified in substance as follows: That at the time appellants were pressing her for money she had made arrangements with her other creditors (who were at the same time demanding their money from her) to pay a certain amount per month on their claims, and by reason of the filing of the suit declaring the whole amount due under this piano contract, her other creditors were discouraged with this arrangement. She then thought her only redress was to file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, which she did.

[6] When suit was filed seeking a judgment for the full amount of the contract price rather than the repossession of the piano, under the case of Birkel Co. v. Nast, supra, the title to the piano in question passed to the vendee upon the election specified in the complaint, the vendee being notified of vendor's election by service of a copy of the complaint and summons and she having defaulted. Knowing of their election to declare the whole amount due, she had the right to list this property among her assets in the bankruptcy proceedings or make any other disposition of it that she desired not inconsistent with the bankruptcy proceedings. Plaintiff failed to attach the piano in this case as was done in the Birkel Case. Other creditors, being interested third parties, had the right to rely upon this election and have this property listed in the proceedings among the assets of the estate until its exemption was declared and determined.

[7-9] Referees in bankruptcy are judicial officers clothed with power to adjudicate in the first instance over the allowance or disallowance of claims presented against the bankrupt's estate, and their findings are entitled to the respect and credit given to officers acting judicially. The allowance of the claim is an adjudication of all issues properly presented for determination and constitutes a final judgment which is binding upon both the creditors and the bankrupt. 7 C. J. 323, § 529.

Appellants having filed a claim in the bankruptcy proceedings and it having been allowed in the full amount of the contract price by the referee, this decree or order allowing the claim of appellant was final. The case of Elmore Quillian & Co. v. Henderson, etc., 179 Ala. 548, 60 So. 820, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 950, citing Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351, at page 371, 24 L. Ed. 195, definitely held that a decree of the trustee in bankruptcy ordering the allowance of a claim arising under a contract to be a bar to a subsequent suit on the contract and operated as an estoppel.

Appellant's subsequent action of filing a petition for reclamation was an inconsistent act indicating that the other option (that of repossession) was being pursued. The bankruptcy court for reasons specified in the order denied the petition for reclamation. We note that after a full hearing in the matter wherein the bankrupt appeared, contested, and opposed the petition, the referee denied, rather than dismissed, the petition for reclamation.

[10, 11] It was held in Nauman Co. v. Bradshaw (C. C. A.) 193 F. 350, that an assertion of ownership under a conditional sale contract is not one of debt of the bankrupt or of his estate and the claimant of property is not even a creditor of the bankrupt and has no debt or demand against the estate. The trial court in the case at bar found that the actions of appellant in the filing of the original complaint and proceedings had therein, and subsequent filing and allowance in full of the claim as a creditor in the bankruptcy proceedings, were sufficient to constitute an election and that plaintiff was estopped from pursuing the inconsistent remedy of repossession under claim and delivery. We are of the opinion that there is sufficient evidence to warrant the finding. Certain evidence was admitted over objection, which was hearsay, but we believe it to be harmless, there being sufficient competent evidence on the subject to warrant the finding, even if that portion had been denied admission. We deem it unnecessary to the decision to decide other points raised.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

115 Cal.App. 423

PROGRESSIVE FINANCE CORPORATION
v. VINING et al.

Civ. 6445, 6533.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 10, 1931.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31,
1931.

1. Appeal and error ⇨113(1).

Order denying motion to vacate judgment held appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 663).

2. Bills and notes ⇨517.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that signature on note was that of purported maker.

3. Evidence ⇨222(10).

Testimony respecting conversation between one of joint makers and another as to genuineness of signatures on note was inadmissible as against other maker.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1052(4).

Introduction of exhibits before proper identification held not erroneous, in view of full identification before close of case.

5. Evidence ⇨471(2).

Questions respecting witness' belief as to necessity to find out whether indorser owned note held properly excluded as calling for conclusion.

6. Appeal and error ⇨883.

Acquiescence in court's ruling on objection to questions prevented consideration thereof on appeal.

7. Bills and notes ⇨529.

Holder in due course of note held entitled to enforce payment for full amount, rather than for lesser amount which it had paid for same (Civ. Code, § 3138).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Progressive Finance Corporation against Marion L. Vining and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order refusing to vacate judgment on ground conclusions of law were incorrect, plaintiff appeals, and defendants appeal from judgment.

Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 299 P. 768.

Willebrandt & Horowitz and Girard F. Baker, all of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for defendants.

PER CURIAM.

On petition of plaintiff praying that the decision and order of this court, entered on June 17, 1931 (300 P. 979) be set aside, and that the judgment of the Superior Court be affirmed with modifications in accordance with the original decision rendered herein on May 20, 1931, 299 P. 768.

The said order of June 17th was made in response to a suggestion of counsel for defendants that the appeal of plaintiff from the order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment of the court below was an attempted appeal from a nonappealable order. In support of this point, counsel for defendants relied upon certain decisions of the Courts of Appeal which undoubtedly support their contention. In our order of June 17th, we followed those decisions on the assumption that if there had been Supreme Court decisions to the contrary they would have been brought to our attention.

[1] Now, on petition filed by plaintiff, we find that it has been directly decided by the Supreme Court in ruling on a motion to dismiss an appeal taken from an order denying a motion to vacate a judgment, which motion was made in accordance with section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, that an appeal does lie from an order denying such motion. Delta Farms v. Chinese American Farms, 201 Cal. 201, 255 P. 1097, and cases there cited.

In view of the foregoing, we are constrained to hold that the judgment of this court entered on June 17th dismissing the appeal from said order and affirming the judgment should be set aside, and the entire cause reopened for decision on the appeals as originally presented. The cause having been fully presented on the merits and carefully considered may now be decided without further argument.

The opinion on the merits of these appeals, written by Mr. Justice York and filed herein on May 20, 1931, is hereby adopted as the opinion of the court:

YORK, J.

The action out of which these appeals arise was brought to recover on a promissory note for the sum of $3,000, executed by defendants Vining and Lane in favor of one Dennis, who indorsed the same to one Albert Lane, who in turn indorsed it to plaintiff before maturity and without recourse.

Defendants denied execution and delivery of the note, alleged that it was obtained without consideration, through misrepresentation, fraud, and trickery of the original payee, and that plaintiff had notice thereof.

The trial court found that the defendants Vining and Lane executed and delivered to John B. Dennis their certain promissory note in writing, wherein they agreed to pay to him the sum of $3,000; that said Dennis obtained the note from said defendants through misrepresentation, fraud, and trickery, and without consideration, but that plaintiff in purchasing the note had no notice or knowledge of want of consideration and took it without notice of any infirmity attaching thereto; that before purchasing said note, plaintiff received from defendants Vining and Lane a statement in writing that the note was executed for a good and valuable consideration, and that they had no claim or defense against the said note.

As a conclusion of law from said findings, the court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff against defendants for the sum of $2,000, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, $200 attorney's fees, and costs of suit. Plaintiff promptly moved to vacate said judgment and to enter another and different judgment, on the ground that the conclusions of law were incorrect, inconsistent, and not supported by the findings of fact. This motion was denied, and from such denial of said motion, plaintiff takes appeal No. 6445, contending that a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $3,000, the face of the note, should be entered to conform to the findings of fact.

[2] Defendants, on the other hand, appeal from the judgment, being the appeal No. 6533, which we will take up first. Defendants' first point is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the note sued on was executed by defendants Vining and Lane, and also that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision as to Mrs. Vining's signature on the note. We have scanned the record very carefully, and are of the opinion that the evidence is amply sufficient to justify the findings referred to. The witness Carlson—a handwriting expert—made careful examination of the signatures of defendants on the various exhibits, including the signatures on the defendants' verifications of their pleadings, and gave as his opinion that the signatures as written in the admittedly genuine documents were written by the same persons who signed the note which is the subject of this action. On cross-examination, he carefully analyzed various letters and strokes in his comparisons of the signatures. Defendants' testimony that the signatures on the note were not their signatures accomplished no more than to produce a conflict in the evidence.

[3] Defendants objected to the admission of testimony relating to a conversation had between Cora Lane and Albert Lane as to the genuineness of the signatures on the note, offset statement and financial statement, maintaining that, while it was admissible as against Miss Lane, it was prejudicial to the cause of Mrs. Vining, who was not present when the conversation took place. Said testimony was not admissible as against Mrs. Vining; but, in view of all the evidence produced, it does not appear that the erroneous ruling had any important bearing on the court's decision of the case.

[4] Defendants objected to the introduction of the note and the financial statement as exhibits at the time they were offered, on the ground that they had not been properly identified, in so far as the signature of Marion L. Vining was concerned. These exhibits were fully identified before the close of plaintiff's case, so that no error resulted from their introduction.

[5] Defendants also object to the ruling of the court in sustaining objections to two questions asked of Albert Lane, president of the plaintiff corporation, on cross-examination, it being maintained that the circumstances under which said Lane bought the note from Dennis were such as to put him on guard that the note was either fraudulently obtained by Dennis or was a forged note. The questions referred to are as follows:

"Q. Did he (Dennis) say anything about using this note for the purpose of assignment in this real estate transaction? A. Absolutely not.

"Q. In this deal? A. No sir.

"Q. He didn't say it was his note? A. Yes sir, he said it was a note that belonged to him and that he wished to sell.

"Q. Oh, he said it belonged to him? A. Absolutely.

"Q. Did he say he paid anything for it? A. He said he got it—I asked him how he got this note and he said it was in some real estate transaction.

"Q. Did you think it was necessary to find out whether he owned the note?

"Mr. Horowitz: We will object to it on the ground that it calls for a conclusion of the witness.

"The Court: Sustained.

"Q. By Mr. Odell: Did you make any inquiry of the makers of the note as to whether it belonged to Mr. Dennis?

"Mr. Horowitz: I object to that on the ground that it is assuming facts not in evidence.

"Mr. Odell: I reckon he is right about that."

[6] Defendants cannot now in this court for the first time raise an objection to the second of these rulings because of his acquiescence in the ruling at the time it was made. As to the first ruling, we are of the opinion that the question called for a conclusion of the witness, and defendants cannot complain without an attempt to reframe the question so as to properly bring out some answer that would have been proper along this line.

[7] As to appeal No. 6445 taken by plaintiff from the order denying its motion hereinabove referred to, the trial court found that plaintiff corporation was a holder in due course of the note here involved, and, that being true, it was entitled to enforce payment of the note for its full amount (Civ. Code, § 3138), rather than for the lesser amount which it had paid for the same.

The petition of plaintiff for rehearing is granted. The said order of June 17th is set aside. The cause is resubmitted for decision. The order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate the judgment and enter another and different judgment is reversed, and the Superior Court is hereby directed to vacate the judgment heretofore rendered herein, and to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $3,000, with interest from August 27, 1926, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, together with the sum of $200 as and for attorney's fees, together with plaintiff's costs and disbursements.

The judgment, as so modified, is affirmed.

SECURITY CO. v. RICE.*

Civ. 6514.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 13, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 5, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept 10, 1931.

1. Evidence ⇨419(13).

Mere recital as to consideration in contract for purchase of property is not conclusive, and true consideration may be proved by parol testimony.

2. Evidence ⇨419(13).

Parol testimony in respect to true consideration in contract for purchase of property held properly admitted.

Contract for purchase of property, executed after condemnation proceeding had been filed, provided expressly for consideration to be paid, but was silent, however, as to what would happen when award was rendered in condemnation proceeding then pending, so that consideration as expressed in contract was not conclusive upon question.

3. Eminent domain ⇨153.

Parol reservation in contract for sale of property in respect to condemnation award in pending proceeding carries with it right of vendor to receive moneys awarded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Action by the Security Company against Paran F. Rice. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

William P. Mealey, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

D. Z. Gardner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant in an action brought for money had and received. The cause of action of plaintiff is predicated upon a written contract of date March 1, 1926, for the purchase of a certain piece of property in the city of Monrovia; defendant having thereafter received from the city of Monrovia for lands condemned by the city the sum of \$6,400, the plaintiff demanding from defendant  $\frac{92}{150}$  of said sum. Defendant contended that the amount awarded in the condemnation proceeding was wholly his and that plaintiff had no interest in said sum. The complaint in the condemnation proceeding was filed on the 1st day of December, 1925; summons thereon being issued on the same day and lis pendens properly recorded. Defendant alleges that he was the actual owner of all of the land involved, and that the title thereto stood in the name of one Webster for convenience and as trustee for the said defendant only. Defendant denies that the plaintiff purchased from him the easterly 92 feet of lot 1 or the northerly 18 feet of lot 2, as alleged in the complaint, except that defendant alleges that at the time of the sale by defendant to plaintiff, plaintiff was aware of and knew all of the facts concerning the proceedings of the city of Monrovia for the condemnation for street purposes of 16 feet along the northerly side of said lot 1, and that it was expressly understood and agreed between them that, if the said city completed the condemnation proceedings with respect to said northerly 16 feet of said lot 1 and paid for the same, the moneys paid therefor should be paid to and received by the defendant and were not to be paid to or received by the plaintiff. Defendant further alleged that the price paid by plaintiff to the defendant for the property purchased was fixed in accordance with and in view of said fact that the said condemnation money should be paid to and received by the defendant. Defendant further denied that the plaintiff acquired from the defendant  $\frac{92}{100}$  or any part at all of said lot 1, sought to be condemned by the city of Monrovia, or the right to any part of the moneys paid by said city therefor.

[1] The original receipt was somewhat ambiguous, but did state that the description was to be based upon the new improved lines, as established by the widening of Myrtle avenue and White Oak. Plaintiff contends that it was conclusively established that the appellant actually contracted for and purchased exactly what the deed called for, which it claims is the east 92 feet of lot 1 and the northerly 18 feet of the east 92 feet of lot 2, and it contends that the question for determination is whether or not the appellant is entitled to that portion of the award which was allowed for the northerly 16 feet of the east 92 feet of lot 1, which is the amount being sued for herein, and contends that the appellant should prevail for two reasons: First, that the contracts for the purchase and sale of the property provided in full for the consideration; and, second, that by the deed itself the appellant is entitled to the award. The appellant contends that it was error for the trial court to admit oral evidence to prove that the consideration was different from that expressed in the contracts, and it also objects to the admission of oral evidence that the vendor, who is the respondent herein, reserved the award to himself. Appellant admits that it is a well-established principle that a mere recital as to the consideration is not conclusive, and that the true consideration may be proved by parol testimony. Here, however, the appellant contends that the very subject-matter of the contract was the consideration, and to permit oral evidence to be introduced to change the consideration operates to change the effect thereof.

[2] The contract, although it provides expressly for the consideration to be paid, is silent as to what will happen when the award is rendered in the condemnation proceeding then pending. We think that the consideration as expressed in the contract is not conclusive upon the question, and that the court did not err in admitting testimony establishing the true consideration. Russakov v. McCarthy Co., 206 Cal. 682, 275 P. 808.

[3] Appellant further contends that the grant deed, without any reservations whatsoever with reference to the condemnation proceedings which had been commenced, conveyed to the appellant all of the rights the respondent had in the then pending action. Appellant states that at the time of the trial of this case in the lower court there was no decision of our Supreme or appellate courts upon this question, but that since the trial the case of Russakov v. McCarthy Co., 206 Cal. 682, 275 P. 808, has been rendered, and the principle established that the owner of the property at the time of the taking under condemnation proceedings is entitled to the award. Appellant states that the court also points out that the property is not taken by the city until actual payment is made, but admits that this decision holds that the vendor is entitled to make a parol reservation as to the award moneys to be paid in the condemnation proceedings, and further contends that in holding this the Supreme Court has committed a grievous error and one which may lead to serious results. However that may be, the decision should be followed here, and is, we believe, determinative of the question as to whether parol evidence may be introduced in the very kind of case as the one now before this court, and holds that it can be so introduced; and it is further determinative that, if it is a fact that such reservation was made by parol, it carries with it the right of the vendor to receive the moneys awarded in the condemnation proceeding.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

115 Cal.App. 238

SAN FRANCISCO IRON & METAL CO. v.
AMERICAN MILLING & INDUSTRIAL
CO. et al.
Civ. 7416.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

June 27, 1931.

1. Joint adventures ⇨5(3).

Where evidence tends to prove intention to join efforts for joint profit, existence of relationship of joint adventurers is for jury.

2. Joint adventures ⇨1.

Evidence sustained finding of joint adventure and violation of agreement by defendant's secret purchase of property on own account.

Parties entered into agreement to purchase unassembled railroad cars and resell same at profit. Document was prepared reciting that it was preliminary purchase and sales agreement covering cars; that parties were contemplating purchasing same in joint account on fifty-fifty per cent. basis of purchase price and selling price, each to put up equal amount of money or credit to pay for same including expenses to be shared equally between parties; and that buying and selling price and all other conditions should be mutually agreed on and accepted by parties. Plaintiff entered into extensive negotiations for purchase of cars, and informed defendant that he could make purchase. Initial payment was made by plaintiff to obtain option on property, but second payment was not made in absence of reply from defendant. In meantime defendant had been secretly negotiating for purchase of railroad cars on own account, and consummated purchase after plaintiff's option had expired.

3. Joint adventures ⇨1.

Joint adventure is consummated when minds of parties meet on point of entering into it and mutual promises are exchanged, though subsequent acts are to be performed.

4. Joint adventures ⇨1.

Agreement for joint adventure in purchase of personalty without limitation of time stated for making purchase remains in full force until purpose is accomplished or it is definitely ascertained that purpose cannot be accomplished.

5. Joint adventures ⇨1.

While agreement of joint adventure is in force, neither party can withdraw because no longer advantageous or for purpose of acting independently.

6. Joint adventures ⇨4(1).

Fiduciary relationship exists between coadventurers requiring utmost good faith and forbidding accrual of any profit or secret advantage by one coadventurer over other.

7. Joint adventures ⇨4(1).

Coadventurer breaching agreement for joint adventure by purchasing property on own account held liable to other coadventurer for difference between purchase price and market value of property at time of breach.

8. Joint adventures ⇨5(1).

Coadventurer suing for breach of agreement of joint adventure providing for sharing of expenses held entitled to recover expenses incurred to time it learned of defendant's breach.

9. Evidence ⇨215(1).

In action for damages for breach of agreement of joint adventure by defendant purchasing property on own account, cablegram from defendant to agent was admissible as declaration against interest.

10. Evidence ⇨213(3).

Cablegram to agent by coadventurers sued for breach of agreement by purchasing property on own account held not objectionable as relating to compromise, where there were no such communications between parties to joint adventurers.

11. Appeal and error ⇨1058(1).

Exclusion of evidence on cross-examination held not prejudicial where evidence was otherwise admitted.

12. Joint adventures ⇨5(1).

Where coadventurer violated agreement for joint adventure by secretly purchasing property on own account rendering it impossible for him to perform, other coadventurer was not required to offer to perform to recover damages for breach (Civ. Code, § 1440).

13. Joint adventures ⇨2.

Strict rules governing ordinary contracts held inapplicable to joint adventure agreement involving fiduciary relationship, particularly where party invoking rule violated relationship.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco Iron & Metal Company against the American Milling & Industrial Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

J. G. De Forest and Manson & Allan, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Brownstone & Goodman and Goldman & Altman, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J.

The controversy involved in this appeal arises out of the alleged breach of a joint adventure agreement relating to the purchase and sale of personal property. The complaint contains three causes of action, separately stated. The first is for the reasonable value of services rendered, the amount claimed being $4,000; the second is to recover $8,000 which plaintiff claims to have expended for the use and benefit of the defendants; and the third is for damages in the sum of $250,000, it being alleged in this regard that after plaintiff and defendants entered into said agreement defendants violated the same by secretly acquiring the property and reselling the same on their own account. The first cause of action was subsequently dismissed, and the amount sued for in the second was reduced to $4,802.92. The trial took place before a jury which returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $20,000. Judgment was entered accordingly and defendants have appealed. Insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, errors of law committed during the course of the trial in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence, and the giving, refusal to give, and modification of certain instructions to the jury, constitute the main grounds of appeal.

The subject-matter of the enterprise consisted of 4,000 unassembled railroad cars which for several years had been lying at Coquitlam and Vancouver, British Columbia. They were manufactured during the war for the use of the Russian government under the Kerensky regime, and while en route across Canada the powers of that regime were overthrown, and thereupon the cars were seized by the British government and subsequently passed into the hands of private ownership, and were offered for sale. Plaintiff's business was that of buying and selling new and secondhand iron and metal commodities of various kinds including old railroad equipment. Its principal owners were Harry Silberman and his son, Lou Silberman, and its place of business was in San Francisco. The defendant company was owned by the Kagan family and was engaged in the general mercantile business in China. A. I. Kagan, its principal owner, resided in Harbin, Manchuria, and his son, Jacob Kagan, was its American representative. Previously the two companies transacted some business together, and on August 27, 1925, while A. I. Kagan was visiting in San Francisco, the Silbermans called a conference at plaintiff's office, at which they brought to the attention of the Kagans the existence and location of said cars, the history of their manufacture and seizure, etc., and unfolded a proposition to purchase and sell the same on joint account as scrap iron, in this country, which they said could be done at a good profit. There is a dispute as to whether the Kagans had any previous knowledge of the existence of said cars; Lou Silberman having testified that the Kagans knew nothing of them, and Jacob Kagan having testified that he was aware of their existence. However that may be, the Kagans agreed to enter into the enterprise, claiming, however, that much larger profits could be realized by allowing them to sell the cars, assembled, to the present Russian government, which they asserted they would be able to do. Little, if anything, was known at that time about the material, either as to its quantity, quality, condition or price; and consequently an agreement could not be drawn embodying all of the details of the execution of the proposed enterprise; but after much discussion a document was prepared, which was revised by the Kagans, and then signed by the respective parties. It read as follows: "Preliminary Purchase and Sales Agreement Covering 4000 Cars, Between A. I. Kagan and the San Francisco Iron & Metal Company. August 27, 1925. Mr. A. I. Kagan, Berkeley, California. Dear Sir:—With reference to the 4000 cars now stored in Canada which we are contemplating on purchasing in joint account with you. It is to be understood that in the event this purchase is consummated that it will be on a 50-50 per cent. basis of the purchase price and the selling price between us, each one putting up an equal amount of money or credit to pay for same, on basis of purchase price, also all expenses incurred such as freight, insurance, etc., to be stood equally between us. Also the buying and selling price covering this material and all other conditions to be mutually agreed upon and accepted by both parties hereto mentioned. Final detail, agreement to be made at the time of purchasing of material. Very truly yours, San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. By L. H. Silberman Vice-President. Accepted A. Kagan." Shortly afterwards, A. I. Kagan returned to China, and in conformity with the plan previously agreed upon Lou Silberman, who transacted all of the subsequent business on behalf of his firm, proceeded at once to execute the plans for the acquisition of the property. He first inspected the material in British Columbia, and found it in good condition. Upon his return to San Francisco he so reported to Jacob Kagan, and was urged by the latter to prosecute with all diligence the negotiations for its purchase, which Silberman proceeded to do. His efforts met with many obstacles, however, and extended over some 16 months. During that period he made four trips to New York to confer with the owner's representatives. The first trip was made in September, 1925, the second in June, 1926, the third in September, 1926, and the fourth in December, 1926; and during the intervals between trips he carried on negotiations through correspondence. At first he was told that the cars were "out on option" and not subject to purchase. Later the owners indicated a willingness to sell, but insisted on imposing burdensome restrictions upon the resale thereof, which would have prevented the execution of the enterprise as planned by the parties; and later he was told again that the cars were "out on option" and could not be purchased until the option expired. During the progress of these negotiations he reported the results to Jacob Kagan and was at all times urged by the latter to continue his efforts to acquire the property. On his third trip to New York, which occurred in September, 1926, he was informed that an option was then outstanding on the cars; and consequently, to avoid the expense and delay of remaining in New York, he turned over the negotiations to a New York broker named Dulien, with instructions to close the purchase of the cars if possible at the expiration of said option. On December 15, 1926, Dulien phoned Silberman from New York that the opportune time had come to make the purchase; that the dealers were anxious to sell and that the cars could be obtained for $14 or $15 a ton. Thereupon Silberman cabled A. I. Kagan as follows: "Have indication can purchase Vancouver cars. Are you interested in. Please reply at once." On December 17th Kagan replied as follows: "Your silence eighteen months consider you are not interested in cars. Telegraph fully your views at what price you can buy F. O. B. Vancouver delivery within six months and all other conditions. Can you secure letter credit ninety per cent? Await your reply." Within the next few days Dulien phoned Silberman from New York again urging him to act at once if he were to consummate the purchase, and on December 21 at Dulien's request Silberman telegraphed Dulien $5,000 with which to make the initial payment on an option. On December 24 Dulien again phoned Silberman as to the necessity of consummating the purchase at once, whereupon Silberman again cabled A. I. Kagan as follows: "Vancouver cars can buy fourteen dollars per ton two thousand pounds. Telegraph immediately if you are interested in and will put up letter credit fifty per cent. as per agreement." No reply was received to this cablegram. On December 27 Silberman received a letter from Dulien enclosing the option he had obtained. It was dated December 21, 1926, acknowledged receipt of the down payment of $5,000, and provided for an additional payment of $30,000 on or before December 28, 1926, "or a full, clean, irrevocable letter of credit for the entire amount of approximately $400,000 buyer's option." The price fixed for the property was $12.75 a ton. Upon the receipt of this letter, which was the first knowledge Silberman had of the terms of the option, he went to New York at once; but having received no reply from the Kagans the second payment of $30,000, due on December 28, 1926, was not made, and consequently the option lapsed; and upon his arrival in New York he learned that the Kagans had been secretly negotiating for the purchase of the cars on their own account and had made an initial payment thereon, but did not learn of the terms of the Kagan purchase until the following June.

The circumstances under which these secret negotiations were carried on and consummated were revealed by a series of cablegrams, in code, passing between Kagan and his son, which plaintiff caused to be produced at the trial. The first was sent by Kagan to his son on November 1, 1926, and was as follows: "Proceed E. D. Locke to New York Open negotiations with Rikhoond [Richmond] Scrap Steel Company 10 Woolworth Building. In strict confidence May we buy entire quantity material for cars Vancouver 36,000 tons of 2240 lbs. including parts inside warehouse $14.50 per ton of 2240 lbs. alongside vessel Will deposit 10% against Bank guarantee in fulfillment of contract Balance payable about 4 to about 5 months against shipping documents. Storage and interest from January 1st. for our account. Do your utmost. If you are unable to what can be done option on now Telegraph present position Matter Message ends Commission 1½% for both together." Subsequently, however, as will be remembered, Kagan, Sr., received a message from Silberman with reference to the purchase of the cars, to which he replied, on December 17, 1926, and the inquiries he made therein indicated that he was still collaborating with them under the joint venture agreement; whereupon and on December 20, 1926, he cabled his son as follows: "Have a telegram from Silberman (San Francisco Iron & Metal Co.) whether we interested in cars what is your relation with him do they wish buy for joint account or commission what is the price what is your opinion regarding it joint account telegraph immediately." The reply message from his son was as follows: "Ref. to your telegram of 20th inst. We have not been in negotiations with Silberman (San Francisco Iron and Metal Co.) Strongly recommend that you do not joint account unless absolutely necessary. Buy for our account. Can you make firm offer. Why do you not write. No letters from you." Upon the receipt of this reply Kagan, Sr., proceeded to close the purchase of the property on his own account, and on December 22, 1926, cabled his son as follows: "Ref. to your telegram of 20th inst. Following is strictly confidential and must not be communicated to anyone. Negoflated through us owners agent at port of loading. Hope to secure (it) Very probably you will have to go in a few days to Vancouver Have written 5th December. * * * And on December 27, 1926, he again cabled his son that he had closed the transaction with the owners and gave instructions to his son as to handling the property. The total amount paid for the property was $395,000, the price per ton being $12.50. An initial payment of $10,000 was made thereon on December 31, 1926, which was three days after the Dulien option had expired; a second payment of $27,500 was made on January 8, 1927, on which date a formal sales contract was executed; $56,250 was paid on or before January 15, 1927, and it was agreed that the balance of $281,250 should be paid in June, 1927.

[1, 2] Defendants' principal contention is that the question of the existence of the joint venture agreement is necessarily one of law which must be determined from the terms of the document signed by the parties on August 27, 1925, to the exclusion of all other matters leading up to and following the preparation and signing thereof, and all oral understandings had between the parties as to the plan of executing the joint adventure; and that the terms of said document are legally insufficient to create a joint adventure agreement, and at best constitute merely a contract to enter into a contract in the future, which not only was lacking in mutuality, but otherwise was unenforceable in law and eventually was abandoned by the parties. The rule appears to be well settled, however, that where the existence of the relationship of joint adventurers is in issue, and there is substantial evidence tending to prove that the parties intended to join their efforts in furtherance of the enterprise for their joint profit, the question is pre-eminently one of fact for the determination of the jury (Hoge v. George, 27 Wyo. 423, 200 P. 96, 18 A. L. R. 469; Van Tine v. Hilands [C. C.] 151 F. 124; Brady v. Colhoun, 1 Pen. & W. [Pa.] 140); and in our opinion the evidence in the present case is legally sufficient under the authorities hereinafter cited to sustain the implied finding of the jury that a joint adventure agreement was entered into between the parties as alleged in the complaint and that the same was subsequently violated by the defendants.

As said in Goss v. Lanin, 170 Iowa, 57, 152 N. W. 43, 46, which appears to be one of the leading cases, and is cited by both parties: "It is not necessary that there should be a specific formal agreement to enter into a joint enterprise, or that the interests of the parties should be definitely settled in such agreement, or that there should be a formal agreement as to sharing in the profits. If there be a joint enterprise proven, either by direct evidence of a mutual agreement to that end, or by proof of facts and circumstances from which it is made to appear that such enterprise was, in fact, entered into, the law fixes their rights. [Citing cases.]" In other words, to appropriate the language of the court in Anderson v. Blair, 202 Ala. 209, 80 So. 31, 35: " * * * The great majority of contracts of joint adventure and of partnership * * * do not point out precisely what each party is to do under them. Such a provision is quite unusual, and, we should say, quite impossible in many cases." Such is the law in this state, and it has been expressly so restated in the recent case of Andrews v. Bush (Cal. App.) 293 P. 152, 154, wherein the court said: "Such an agreement is not invalid because of indefiniteness in respect to its details. 33 C. J. 848. Thus a partnership, which in many respects is similar to a joint adventure (Meneff v. Oxnam, 42 Cal. App. 81, 85, 183 P. 379), is none the less a partnership though there be no definite agreement as to how the profits shall be divided (Doudell v. Shoo, 20 Cal. App. 424, 438, 129 P. 478). Likewise, with a joint adventure. Hoge v. George, 27 Wyo. 423, 200 P. 96, 99, 18 A. L. R. 469; Goss v. Lanin, 170 Iowa, 57, 152 N. W. 43, 46. In considering whether or not a relationship such as that of joint adventurers or partners has been created, the courts are guided, not only by the spoken or written words of the contracting parties, but also by their acts." (Citing numerous authorities, including Niroad v. Farnell, 11 Cal. App. 767, 106 P. 252, and Saunders v. McDonough, 191 Ala. 119, 67 So. 591, 596, hereafter referred to.)

[3-5] Defendants stress some of the language used in the document in question, such as "preliminary purchase and sales agreement"; also "it is to be understood that in the event this purchase is consummated that it will be on a 50-50 per cent basis, * * *" etc. (italics ours), contending that the italicized words indicate only an intention to create a joint adventure upon future agreement at the option of the parties. But as held in Miller v. Walser, 42 Nev. 497, 181 P. 437, the joint adventure is consummated when the minds of the parties meet upon the point of entering into it and their mutual promises are exchanged; and it is evident that in making the above contention defendants fail to draw the distinction between such act, that is, the meeting of the minds of the parties in their decision to join in the adventure, of which there is ample evidence, and the subsequent act of the parties in attempting to reduce to writing some of the promises upon which the adventure was founded and the conditions upon which it was to continue, the controlling one being the successful efforts of the parties to purchase the cars. And there appears to be nothing peculiar about the language referred to by defendants for it is self-evident that any joint adventure agreement must of necessity relate to acts to be performed in the future; and the entire document when read in the light of and considered in connection with the testimony of the parties as to what transpired immediately preceding its execution clearly implies what the oral testimony shows, that the parties had already agreed to enter into the enterprise. True, "in the event" the cars the parties "contemplated on purchasing in joint account" could not be purchased, the enterprise would necessarily terminate; but there was no limitation of time stated within which they were to be purchased, and consequently no date was fixed for the termination of the adventure and the authorities are uniform in holding that such an agreement remains in full force until its purpose is accomplished or it is definitely ascertained that its purpose cannot be accomplished (Goss v. Lanin, supra); and that while it is in force neither party has the right to withdraw therefrom upon the ground that it is no longer advantageous to him (Bane v. Dow, 80 Wash. 631, 142 P. 23), or for the purpose of acting independently to the exclusion of his coadventurers (Goss v. Lanin, supra).

[6] The existence of the joint adventure being established, it follows that a fiduciary relationship between the coadventurers arose therefrom, which demanded of them the utmost good faith in all their dealings with each other; and this requirement of good faith alone forbade the accrual of any profit, or the acquisition of any secret advantage by one of the coadventurers over the other. Goss v. Lanin, supra; Miller v. Walser, supra; Hardin v. Robinson, 178 App. Div. 724, 162 N. Y. S. 531; Merritt v. Joyce, 117 Minn. 235, 135 N. W. 820; Kent v. Costin, 130 Minn. 450, 153 N. W. 874; Selwyn & Co. v. Waller, 212 N. Y. 507, 106 N. E. 321, L. R. A. 1915B, 160; Sicklesteel v. Edmonds, 158 Wis. 122, 147 N. W. 1024; Saunders v. McDonough, supra; McMullen v. Harris, 165 Iowa, 703, 147 N. W. 164, 165; Rich v. Teasley (C. C.) 194 F. 534; Irvine v. Campbell, 121 Minn. 192, 141 N. W. 108, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 689.

[7, 8] Defendants further contend that even though the joint adventure was created, plaintiff can recover only upon proving that defendants disposed of the property at a profit; and in this connection they offered evidence to show that they sold the material at a loss; but the evidence was excluded. The rule thus sought to be invoked would doubtless apply if the material had been purchased and disposed of in pursuance of the joint adventure agreement, and plaintiff were here seeking relief in equity in a suit for an accounting and its share of the alleged profits. But such is not the case. The agreement was breached by the defendants at the very threshold of the enterprise by secretly negotiating for and purchasing the property on their own account, and the settled rule in such cases is, as stated in Keyes v. Nims, 43 Cal. App. 1, 184 P. 695, 699, " * * * that one party in a joint adventure may sue the other at law for a breach of the contract or a share of the profits or losses or a contribution for advances made in excess of his share, as where the adventure has been closed and a party thereto is entitled to a sum certain as his share of the adventure; but the right thus to sue at law does not preclude a suit in equity for an accounting. 15 Ruling Case Law, p. 507." See, also, McCreery v. Green, 38 Mich. 172; Saunders v. McDonough, supra; Joseph v. Sulzberger, 136 App. Div. 499, 121 N. Y. S. 73; Lind v. Webber, 36 Nev. 623, 134 P. 461, 135 P. 139, 141 P. 458, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1046, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1202. Here the plaintiff elected to sue for damages on account of such breach, and having shown that the material in question had a ready and ascertainable market value, was entitled to recover from the defendants upon the basis of the difference between the purchase price thereof and the market value at the time of the breach (Joseph v. Sulzberger, supra); and in view of the terms of the document dated August 27, 1925, plaintiff was entitled to recover also the expenses incurred in promoting the enterprise up to the time it learned of the breach. Goss v. Lanin, supra. The evidence is amply sufficient to support the award made by the jury as to both elements. In fact, it would have been legally sufficient to sustain the verdict for a much larger amount, eliminating entirely the element of expenses.

[9-11] Nor do we find any error in the rulings of the trial court relating to the testimony of the witness Rocca. The cablegram from Kagan, Sr., to Rocca, dated May 27, 1928, was admissible as a declaration against interest; and it was not objectionable upon the ground that it related to a compromise, as defendants contend, for admittedly there were no communications whatever between the parties themselves to that end. Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 P. 529, citing a number of cases from other jurisdictions; Story v. Nidiffer, 146 Cal. 549, 80 P. 692; Ashlock v. Linder, 50 Ill. 169. And even assuming that the trial court should have been more liberal in its rulings on cross-examination, in permitting defendants to introduce certain evidence showing the circumstances leading up to the activities of Rocca, an examination of the entire testimony given by the witness discloses that all the facts surrounding the matter were eventually laid before the jury, and consequently defendants could not have been prejudiced by the rulings complained of.

[12, 13] Plaintiff alleged in its complaint that it was ready, able, and willing to perform the contract according to its terms; but defendants claim that no evidence was offered to substantiate such allegation, and that consequently plaintiff failed in its proof. In support of this contention defendants have cited a number of cases involving ordinary contracts of purchase and sale in which it is held generally that in order that one party may place the other in default upon a contract consisting of mutual dependent obligations, he must not only be able to perform, but must offer to perform. Hanson v. Slaven, 98 Cal. 377, 33 P. 266. But the record in the present case is not barren of such proof for it discloses that while Jacob Kagan was testifying as a witness plaintiff's counsel elicited from him the admission that during certain court proceedings in Vancouver growing out of this controversy counsel for plaintiff there stated to him that plaintiff was at all times ready, able, and willing to pay one-half of the purchase price of said material. Assuming however, as defendants argue, that the foregoing testimony is legally insufficient to prove the facts mentioned, it would seem that under the circumstances of this case such proof was not essential, for in the first place, under the provisions of section 1440 of the Civil Code, if one party to a contract or agreement gives notice that he will not perform, the other party is excused from making an offer to perform; and while there was no express notice given by the Kagans that they would not proceed with the joint adventure, their actions in violating the fiduciary relationship in secretly acquiring the property on their own account, to the exclusion of plaintiff, rendered it impossible for them to perform. Secondly, it is unquestionably well settled that the strict rules governing in cases of ordinary contracts, which defendants seek to invoke here, have no application to cases of agreements involving the fiduciary relationship, such as copartnerships, joint adventures and the like, particularly where, as here, the party in whose behalf the rule is sought to be invoked first violated such relationship by acquiring interests antagonistic to his coadventurers, and thus prevented the accomplishment of the object for which the joint adventure was formed. One of the leading cases upon the subject is Saunders v. McDonough, supra, and it was there said: "It [the rule mentioned] cannot be justly applied, and we believe it has never been applied, to obligations arising out of partnerships or quasi partnerships, which are founded upon trust and confidence, and which, without some express stipulation, are not presumed to exact, as conditions precedent to the continuance of the relation and the enjoyment of its fruits, the prompt and equal discharge, or readiness to discharge, by each partner or associate, of his various obligations concurrently with the occasion. For his defaults of duty a partner may be taxed with the loss he inflicts upon the business; and in grave cases the partnership may be dissolved by judicial decree; but it is not dissolved ipso facto." To the same substantial effect are Botsford v. Van Riper, 33 Nev. 156, 110 P. 705, and Miller v. Walser, supra. The question of the application of the rule arose in this state in the case of Andrews v. Bush, supra, under circumstances somewhat similar to those presented, but the court refused to apply it. Even assuming that grounds may exist for applying such rule in exceptional cases such as suits in equity wherein the purpose of the joint adventure is substantially accomplished, but the plaintiff claims he has not received his share of the alleged profits, we have no such situation here.

The assignments of error relating to the instructions involve only those questions of law which have already been discussed and disposed of, and consequently they are to be governed by the views already expressed and do not require further notice.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: TYLER, P. J.

---

---

115 Cal.App. 443
In re MYERS' ESTATE.
Civ. 7902.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
July 10, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 7, 1931.

1. Executors and administrators ⇨185.

Antenuptial contract that property should pass to heirs of spouses as though no marriage had been contracted did not waive widow's right to family allowance.

Under the antenuptial contract the spouses agreed to waive any rights acquired by law by their marriage in the property of each other, and that each spouse's property should pass to the heirs of the spouses as though no marriage had been contracted. The spouses lived together until the death of the husband, the husband supporting his wife up to that time, and under his will granting wife a life estate in the home in which they had lived.

2. Executors and administrators ⇨173.

Right to family allowance is not based upon right of inheritance.

3. Executors and administrators ⇨185.

Doubt as to whether antenuptial contract waived widow's right to family allowance should be resolved in favor of allowance, law strongly favoring widow's claim to family allowance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Solomon K. Myers, deceased, between Amy L. Lathrop, residuary legatee, and Elsa F. Myers, administratrix, of the estate of Solomon K. Myers, deceased. From an order granting a family allowance to deceased's widow, the residuary legatee appeals.

Affirmed.

Norman T. Mason, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harry L. Cohn and Cohn, Lambert & Jones, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from an order granting a family allowance to the widow of deceased. The appeal is taken by the residuary legatee under deceased's will, who is a daughter of the latter by a former marriage. No children were born of the second marriage. The appeal is based upon an antenuptial contract executed in the state of Iowa by the deceased and respondent, the material portions of which read as follows:

"* * * [I]t is hereby agreed that each of said parties to this Ante-Nuptial Contract hereby agrees to waive, and does hereby waive, all and every right whatsoever which he or she might have or acquire by law by such marriage in any and all property of every kind and character, real, personal or mixed, now owned or which may hereafter be acquired by the other party; it being understood and agreed that all of the property and property rights which each of these parties now has, or which each may hereafter acquire, shall pass to her or his heirs at law, devisees or legatees in precisely the same manner and with the same effect as though no marriage were ever consummated.

"It is further agreed that each party hereto shall have control and management of, and the right to sell, convey or transfer any and all of their separate properties during marriage without the signature or joining in by the other, as freely as if no marriage had taken place."

[1, 2] The cases cited by appellant are distinguished from the situation here by reason of the fact that in those cases the parties separated and entered into agreements which specifically provided that the support of the wife should be waived. It is to be observed that in the instant case the contract contains no such provision, but only provides that the property shall pass to the heirs of the parties as though no marriage had been contracted.

Here also the parties lived together until the death of the husband, he supporting her up to that time, and under his will granting her a life estate in the home in which they had lived:

In re Estate of Woodburn (Cal. Sup.) 300 P. 22, is, we think, decisive of the present appeal. In that case an antenuptial agreement was executed by the intending spouses in contemplation of their marriage and they undertook "to make a full and complete settlement of their property rights prior to said marriage," and both agreed that, "in consideration of the marriage contract above referred to," each party "does hereby expressly waive and relinquish any and all right, title and interest in and to any property either real or personal now owned or that may be hereafter acquired by" said parties which they "might be entitled to by reason of being the husband" or wife of the other party to the agreement. In connection with the wife's agreement, however, it was provided that the husband should furnish her for "as long as she may live a good and comfortable home, * * * and it is agreed that said property may be held as a home for" her "so long as she may live." The entire estate was not greater than $1,500, and the wife thereafter presented her petition to have the same set aside to her under the provisions of section 1469, Code of Civil Procedure. There were no children of their union, but her petition was resisted by an adult daughter of deceased by his first marriage. In affirming the order granting her petition, our Supreme Court said: "Upon the merits of this appeal we are of the opinion that the antenuptial settlement entered into between" deceased "and the lady who was to become his wife and widow, and who is the respondent herein, while the parties thereto expressly waived and relinquished each on his and her own part all right, title, and interest in the property then owned or thereafter to be acquired by the other party, and all right of inheritance therein to which either party might be entitled as the husband or wife of the other, cannot be held to have accomplished a waiver of those rights to which the widow or minor children, if any, of a decedent are entitled under the provisions of article 1, chapter 5, part 3, title 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure (sections 1464-1470). The provisions of said chapter and article expressly relate to the support of the family of a decedent, and to which the widow and minor children of said decedent become entitled upon his death and the probate of his estate, without regard to any interest which they or any of them may have had in the property of said decedent during his lifetime, and without reference to their heirship or right of inheritance therein. * * * The rights to which this widow became entitled under the foregoing provisions of the Code were in no

THEISEN v. KEOUGH.
Civ. 7077.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
July 7, 1931.

sense either the rights of inheritance or rights depending upon any previous interest in the property of the decedent owned by him during his lifetime, and which she may or may not have surrendered by virtue of the terms of their ante nuptial agreement." In principle there is no distinction between the cases, for it is noted that the right to an allowance is not based upon a right of inheritance.

[3] It must be borne in mind that, if there exist a doubt concerning the interpretation of the contract, it should be resolved in favor of the respondent, for, as it is said in Re Estate of Whitney, 171 Cal. 750, 154 P. 855, 857: "The widow's claim to a family allowance is strongly favored in our law. In re Lux, 100 Cal. 593, 603, 35 P. 341; Estate of Welch, 106 Cal. 427, 432, 39 P. 805; Estate of Cowell, 164 Cal. 636, 642, 130 P. 209. The right of testamentary disposition, and the right of beneficiaries to take under the will, are alike statutory, and are both subject to the power of the court having jurisdiction of the estate to make a provision for the support of the widow (or minor children) out of the estate. Estate of Bump, 152 Cal. 274, 92 P. 643. A family allowance is, in this respect, analogous to a probate homestead, which, as has been held, may be ordered even out of property specifically devised. Estate of Huelsman, 127 Cal. 275, 59 P. 776; Estate of Gray, 159 Cal. 159, 112 P. 890. A will may, of course, be so drawn as to put the widow to her election between taking the benefits given her by the testator and claiming her right of family allowance. So, too, the wife may, by agreement, surrender the privilege of applying for an allowance. Whether the right to demand an allowance is inconsistent with the will, or has been surrendered, is a question of interpretation of the will or the contract. In the case of a contract, we think the right should not be held to have been surrendered by an agreement between the spouses 'except by clear and explicit language.' This was the rule of construction applied by this court to an antenuptial agreement which, as was claimed, barred the wife's right to select a homestead out of the separate property of the husband while both spouses were living. Warner v. Warner, 144 Cal. 615, 78 P. 24. In reason, the same principle should apply to the matter under consideration in this case."

For other authorities in harmony with these views reference may be had to In re Chisholm's Estate (Wash.) 294 P. 973; In re Gould's Estate, 181 Cal. 11, 183 P. 146; Remington v. Remington, 72 Colo. 132, 209 P. 802; Deeble v. Alerton, 58 Colo. 166, 143 P. 1096, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 863; and Caldwell v. Caldwell, 192 Iowa, 1157, 186 N. W. 58.

Order affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

1. Contracts ⇨111.

Contract providing attorney should receive percentage of property awarded to wife for services in investigating conduct of husband and proceeding against him held void as contingent divorce contract.

The contract provided, in substance, that in consideration of indebtedness and expenses incurred or advanced and services rendered by attorney for client's account in investigating conduct and actions of husband, and procuring evidence thereof and proceedings against him by reason thereof, client agreed to pay attorney amount of such indebtedness and expenses and 15 per cent. of any money or property that might be awarded or set apart to client in any proceeding, or that might be recovered by client in addition to any amount that might be awarded for costs and attorney's fees.

2. Attorney and client ⇨143.

Contract for attorney's services, void as against public policy, afforded no basis for recovery.

3. Attorney and client ⇨166(3).

Where court is informed of nature and extent of attorney's services, its experience furnishes it with every element necessary to fix value.

4. Attorney and client ⇨141.

Attorney for wife in divorce proceeding, to whom court allowed $100 fee, held not entitled to recover additional compensation from wife under implied contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by S. Joseph Theisen against Eleanor M. Keough. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harry I. Stafford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem.

This is an action to recover a certain sum of money alleged to be due plaintiff on account of services performed for the benefit of the defendant and at her instance and request. The complaint is in two counts. The first count alleges the execution of a contract under which the services were performed and which contract expressly provided the amount and terms of compensation. The second count is on a quantum meruit. After trial, judgment went for the defendant, the lower court finding as to the first count that the contract between the parties was against public policy and unenforceable, and as to the second count that the plaintiff had been paid in full for all services rendered. From this judgment, plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff is an attorney at law practicing in this state. Some time in August of 1926, the defendant was brought to his office by a relative of defendant, the said relative having had occasion to employ the plaintiff on some former occasion. The defendant, a married woman, was in the midst of marital discord; she suspected her husband of sundry indiscretions, and related to plaintiff that her husband had threatened to leave her within the month. Plaintiff's first inquiry was as to the property rights involved, and the information derived led to defendant being advised to forthwith place a declaration of homestead upon the premises occupied by defendant and her spouse.

Taking now the text of appellant's brief, it reads as follows:

"During the succeeding days, appellant and respondent had further conferences respecting the items comprising the community property and concerning the details of the husband's conduct. From these conferences it developed that the present respondent had no direct evidence of the infidelity of which she was convinced her husband was guilty, and while her husband had committed some acts of cruelty upon her, they were not, in the appellant's opinion, so sufficiently serious as to constitute a particularly aggravated case. The appellant accordingly advised the respondent that if through the assistance of friends or relatives evidence could be procured of the husband's infidelity, the appellant could then through due proceedings obtain for the respondent a substantial share of the community property, and such allowance for maintenance and support of herself and her minor daughter as would be reasonable. In reply to this, the respondent stated that she did not know of any relative or friend that could render her this assistance, and she stated that she had no means with which to employ anyone to render this service or to pay the expenses of the suggested maintenance proceedings against her husband, or to recompense the appellant for his services or outlays in her behalf. These conditions led up to the making of the agreement of August 30, 1926, because upon ascertaining the destitute financial condition of the respondent, the appellant informed her that if he were to undertake to advance for respondent the expense of such investigations and proceeding, which expense was likely to run into a large amount, and render professional services in her behalf, which services, in view of a probable bitter contest, were very likely to occupy considerable time, labor and ability, the appellant should have, as compensation for his advances and services, in addition to any allowances that might be made by the court, a proportion of any money or property which might be recovered by or for the respondent through or by reason of proceedings by him, contingent, of course, upon any recovery being made. In other words, this appellant was to get nothing to recompense him for either advances or services unless the contemplated proceedings against her husband were successful, in which event he was to receive a proportionate amount of the recovery. The respondent agreed to this, and accordingly the contract was entered into." As indicated, the foregoing statement of the case is taken verbatim from the brief of the appellant and does, no doubt, present the appellant's view of the case in the light most favorable to him.

"The agreement referred to as the contract of August 30, 1926, is in words and figures as follows:

"San Francisco, August 30th, 1926.

"Mr. S. Joseph Theisen.

"In consideration of indebtedness and/or expenses incurred and/or advanced and services rendered by you for my account in investigating the conduct and actions of my husband and procuring evidence thereof and proceedings against him by reason thereof, I agree to pay you the amount of such indebtedness and expenses and 15% of any money or property that may be awarded or set apart to me in any such proceeding and/or that may be recovered by me from him, this in addition to any amount that may be awarded for costs and/or attorney's fees, and I assign to you a proportionate interest in such money or property equal to the aggregate of such indebtedness, expenses and percentage.

"Eleanor M. Keough."

As hereinbefore recited the trial court determined that this contract came within the class repugnant to a sound public policy.

In the case of Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 P. 907, 910, 50 L. R. A. 548, wherein the facts are similar to the facts in the instant case, and the contract which was involved was in its essentials like the one before us, the court, quoting a Michigan case (Jordan v. Westerman, 62 Mich. 170, 28 N. W. 826, 4 Am. St. Rep. 836), says: "Public policy is interested in maintaining the family relation. The interests of society require that those relations shall not be lightly sever ed, and that families shall not be broken up for inadequate causes or from unworthy motives; and, where differences have arisen which threaten disruption, public welfare and the good of society demand a reconciliation, if practicable or possible. Contracts like the one in question tend directly to prevent such reconciliation, and, if legal and valid, tend directly to bring around alienation of husband and wife, by offering a strong inducement, amounting to a premium, to induce and advise the dissolution of the marriage ties as a method of obtaining relief from real or fancied grievances, which otherwise would pass unnoticed.'"

In Parsons v. Segno, 187 Cal. 261, 201 P. 580, we find the doctrine stated almost by way of dogma, in this language: "It is not disputed that this contract was void as against public policy, being a contract for a contingent fee in a divorce action."

In the case of Ayres v. Lipschutz, 68 Cal. App. 134, 228 P. 720, 721, the doctrine was reaffirmed by the Supreme Court on a petition for hearing after decision by a District Court of Appeal. The District Court had held the contract in question to be valid, but affirmed the judgment of the lower court upon another ground. The Supreme Court, satisfied with the judgment in as far as the additional ground of support was deemed sufficient, nevertheless was careful to express its views on the contract lest the denial of the petition for a hearing be deemed an affirmation of all that was contained in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal. The language of the Supreme Court was as follows: "We are of the opinion that the contract herein comes within the rule announced and applied in Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 P. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548, and referred to in Parsons v. Segno, 187 Cal. 260, 201 P. 580, for the reason that under it the attorneys were directly and financially interested in preventing a reconciliation, and in bringing about a divorce." And without setting out the details of the contract referred to in this citation, it is sufficient to state that it was in its terms more worthy of approval than the one before us now.

[1] Authorities from almost every jurisdiction support the doctrine as we have announced it. Indeed, appellant seems in harmony with the rule, and offers no authorities in opposition; nor does he question the sufficiency of the reasoning behind the rule. Appellant contends that the contract in question does not come within the rule. He contends first that public policy is an elusive variant and quotes much authority to the effect that courts should hesitate before declaring the terms of any instrument to conflict with a sound public policy. We have little difficulty in adopting the theory advanced in this respect. The appellant urges that every contract should be so construed with reference to its terms to the end that it might harmonize with such a policy as would permit its enforcement. Within reasonable limits, though not unqualifiedly, we accede to this. Having thus approached the contract before us, appellant contends that there is nothing in the contract that in any way refers to, or that can be construed as referring to, a divorce action, and that from the terms of the contract it may be reasonably inferred that the purport thereof was to bring about an amicable adjustment of property rights between the spouses. And in this connection it is urged that the term "proceeding" as used in the contract refers to, or at least includes, any form of proceeding by or through which an adjustment of property rights might be effected, as, for instance, a voluntary conveyance.

Through some manner of twisted reasoning, appellant urges that this court in construing the instrument must take up the contract "by all fours." When we do this we find nothing more than the ordinary contingent divorce contract condemned in the cited cases. From the presentation of the facts as made by appellant, hereinbefore quoted, we more clearly see the intent of the contemplated arrangement. Under what possible theory of amicable proceeding could the fidelity, or lack thereof, of either spouse become the object of inquiry? We cannot readily cite any controversy between spouses wherein evidence of adultery on the part of either would be competent or material other than in actions for divorce or separate maintenance. Surely, as far as human experience has shown, where one spouse requires evidence of the other's infidelity to enforce a settlement of property rights, the resultant adjustment cannot be classed as amicable.

We are satisfied that the appellant's own statement of the case discloses that the true and intended meaning and effect of the contract was that appellant undertook to furnish evidence of the husband's infidelity or such other conduct as would authorize and warrant a divorce and distribution of the community property, and from that portion of said property which might be awarded to the wife the appellant was to share, contingent upon his success in procuring the necessary evidence.

Appellant cites an abundance of authority to the end that husband and wife may properly agree between themselves as to the division of their property providing that divorce is not facilitated, and that collusion is not shown. Such cases have no application to the question under discussion. The rule we have discussed deals only with the activities of an interloper who might, by reason of a separate and individual interest in the proceeds of the community, be tempted to widen the breach between the spouses.

We conclude that the contract before us contravenes a sound public policy and is not enforceable, and to this extent we affirm the conclusion of the court below.

We come now to the question of the reasonable value of the services actually rendered. For the purposes hereof it is unnecessary to pass upon the point as to whether or not quantum meruit may be invoked.

There appears some conflict in the testimony regarding the services actually rendered. Appellant's testimony is to the effect that the services embraced numerous and lengthy consultations with respondent and with her husband and the latter's counsel; that it involved an intricate examination into property titles, and the preparation and filing of two complaints, and a hearing on the return of an order to show cause relative to alimony and counsel fees. Respondent, on the other hand, testifies that the interviews were few in number and covering not more than one-half hour at any one time.

Appellant was first consulted about August 25th, and the first complaint was filed on September 15th of the same year. An amended complaint was filed enlarging upon the grounds for divorce, it being the explanation of appellant that he made the charges in the original complaint somewhat mild in order to avoid scandalous litigation and more in the nature of a warning to the husband to the end that the latter might secure counsel with whom appellant might negotiate toward a property settlement. An amended complaint was filed on October 22d of the same year, and thereafter the trial court upon and after a hearing awarded to the plaintiff therein, respondent here, the sum of $100 as and for counsel fees, which said amount was received by the appellant. No services appear to have been rendered subsequent to this, and within a few days thereafter appellant was dismissed and his services terminated. From the foregoing facts, the court below in the instant case found that appellant had been fully paid for all services that he rendered; in other words, that the services rendered by appellant were reasonably worth the sum of $100 and no more.

[2] In approaching a determination of the question involved, we may note preliminarily certain general principles applicable. Any recovery by appellant cannot arise out of the contract either through the express terms thereof or by way of reasonable value for services rendered. Again quoting from the opinion of the Supreme Court on application for hearing in the case of Ayres v. Lipschutz, supra: "The contract, being void as against public policy afforded no basis for a recovery which could have been had only upon a quantum meruit." So, therefore, we must eliminate once and for all any consideration of the terms of the contract. We therefore find the parties with no agreement or contract regulating the compensation to be paid; the attorney proceeding with the cause under the implied contract that he will be compensated in a reasonable amount for services performed.

[3, 4] Let us turn then to the original complaint prepared by the appellant herein. We find this allegation: "That the plaintiff has not sufficient means to enable her to support herself or said minor child during the pendency of the action or to pay her counsel herein." The said complaint was duly verified. Upon this allegation, the order to show cause was issued directing the defendant husband to appear and show cause why an order should not be made directing him to pay counsel fees and alimony pendente lite. Between the date of the order to show cause and the date of hearing thereon, the amended complaint had been filed so that on the date of the hearing all services for which compensation is claimed had been rendered. The amended complaint contained the same allegation as to the wife's inability to pay counsel fees or costs.

From the time of the Sharon Case, 75 Cal. 1, 16 P. 345, running through all of the subsequent decisions on the point, it has been conceded that the power of the court to allow counsel fees to a wife in an action for divorce should only be invoked in cases where, without such allowance, she would be unable to prosecute her cause. And if, whether she be with or without funds, counsel is engaged by her upon her own credit or through some agreement for future payment resting upon her credit, or where counsel undertakes to carry on her suit through philanthropic or humane motives, a showing of that fact will determine the court's action in the matter of allowance of counsel fees. And it would seem but just to conclude that where, as here, counsel urges upon the trial court the poverty of the wife and her inability as a result of such poverty to pay for the aid of counsel in prosecuting her cause, and thereafter the court after a full hearing finds the amount necessary and reasonable in view of all of the circumstances of the case to compensate such required service, the order thus made should not be wholly ignored. In the divorce case there was such a hearing, and the court, fully advised through its own records and such testimony as may have been received, determined that $100 was reasonably sufficient for the services rendered or to be rendered at that stage of the proceeding.

Appellant here interposes the contention that such allowance did not embrace past services, but was solely to enable the wife to further prosecute her action, and cites authorities in support of his point. The authorities cited do not support the contention made. While it is true that the court will not order an award or allowance for costs already paid or even counsel fees theretofore compensated, there is no holding called to our attention where a court has refused to make its order providing compensation for counsel who has instituted a divorce proceeding for a wife without funds or credit. If appellant's contention were sound, it would result in a destitute wife being unable to ever get before a court to present her petition for funds with which to prosecute her cause. There may be certain conditions wherein appears fraud or concealment that would warrant the holding of a separate and individual liability, but such is not the case before us.

There must be a more or less open relationship between court and counsel in this class of cases, to the end that full disclosure be made of all of the facts surrounding each case. And where an attorney represents to the court that he looks entirely to the court for his compensation, and through such representation invokes the court's award and accepts and retains the sum awarded, it would seem that a decent respect for the ethics of the profession would demand that such attorney be not permitted to repudiate his position and maintain his separate action based upon the theory of employment by the wife under an implied or express contract, whereby liability rested upon her for payment. In any event, the determination of the court on the order to show cause, presumably made after a full and fair inquiry into the facts of the case, stands as some evidence of the value of the services. And at the trial of the instant case, the court below determined likewise that the sum allowed was sufficient to compensate the appellant for the services he rendered. The only evidence adduced other than the records of the divorce case and the testimony herein noted was the opinion of the appellant that the services were reasonably worth the sum of $3,000.

It is too well settled to require citation that the value of attorney's services is a matter with which a judge must necessarily be familiar. When the court is informed of the nature and extent of such services, its own experience furnishes it with every element necessary to fix their value. Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, at page 307, 104 P. 320, 20 Ann. Cas. 49.

While the allowance of counsel fees is perhaps less than we would have allowed under the same circumstances, in view of the very wide discretion vested in the trial court, we are not prepared to disturb it.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

115 Cal.App. 434
YELLEN v. FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO.
OF NEW YORK.
Civ. 6605.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
July 10, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 24, 1931.

1. Injunction ⇨150.

Nomenclature used does not determine whether order is preliminary injunction or restraining order.

2. Injunction ⇨148(1).

Undertaking is not required on issuance of temporary restraining order.

3. Injunction ⇨132.

Order, made some six weeks after institution of action, restraining influence of which was to continue until determination of suit, held preliminary injunction.

4. Injunction ⇨239.

Where surety on injunction bond knew of pendency of action, surety held chargeable with knowledge of nature of order requiring bond.

5. Injunction ⇨239.

Injunction bond which stated that surety promises that plaintiff will pay to parties enjoined such damages as such parties may sustain, imposed legal obligation on surety (Code Civ. Proc. § 529).

6. Injunction ⇨244.

In so far as delay caused by injunction reduced security below power to satisfy indebtedness, grantee in trust deed suffered damages recoverable on injunction bond without first securing deficiency judgment against debtor.

7. Injunction ⇨252(5).

Measure of damages resulting from depreciation of security during delay caused by injunction was difference between what creditor would have received at sale which was enjoined and what he actually received.

8. Trial  $\hookrightarrow$  395(1).

Findings as to reasonable "value" of security when injunction was granted and when dissolved held insufficient basis for judgment on undertaking.

Such findings were insufficient basis for judgment on undertaking for damages suffered by grantee in trust deed, since by "value" the finding as to reasonable value at time injunction was granted was understood as meaning "market value" and by market value is meant not what the owner could realize at a forced sale, but the price he could obtain after reasonable and ample time such as would ordinarily be taken by an owner to make sale of like property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Market Value," "Reasonable Value" and "Value," see Words and Phrases.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leon R. Yankwich, Judge.

Action by Sam Yellen, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of S. Yellen & Co., against the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York. From the judgment for sum less than amount demanded, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed for new trial.

A. Lewis Silk and Nathaniel Halpern, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jennings & Belcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff, believing that the judgment in his favor was for an inadequate sum, appealed, presenting as the record on appeal the judgment roll alone. From the findings of fact we learn that the plaintiff was the holder of a note executed by J. S. and Della Jones in the amount of $1,385. A trust deed secured this note, the trust deed being, by its terms, subject to a prior mortgage, which secured an indebtedness of $2,500. The Joneses brought an action to have the note held by plaintiff canceled and to have the property relieved of the threat of the trust deed. While this action was pending, the plaintiff directed that the property covered by the trust deed be sold under its provisions, as the Joneses were delinquent in their payments. This move was countered by another suit on behalf of the Joneses, in which they secured a preliminary injunction prohibiting the sale under the trust deed, which was already advertised; the sale being suspended until the prior suit to cancel the note and trust deed could be decided. As a condition to the granting of this injunction, the court required an undertaking in the sum of $1,500. It is on this undertaking, executed by the defendant, that this action is based. In due time the action to set aside the note and trust deed was determined adversely to the Joneses, and a motion to dissolve the injunction, made by the plaintiff in this action, met with success. This suit to recover the damages suffered by the injunction followed.

Damages of two kinds were sought by the plaintiff. First, he asked for and obtained judgment for the attorney fees required to obtain the order dissolving the injunction. No question is before us touching this part of the judgment. In addition, he claimed some $1,600, lost, he argued, because the property which secured his indebtedness depreciated in value while the prior incumbrance appreciated in amount, during the blight of the injunction, with the result that, when sold, the property failed, by the amount sought as damages, to realize for plaintiff the full debt due him. To this the trial court made answer by a finding that the plaintiff had not yet pursued the Joneses with a deficiency judgment. This, the defendant argues to us, is a good and sufficient answer. It urges, furthermore, that in executing the undertaking sued upon it contracted no liability whatever. We are of the opinion that a liability was created and that the plaintiff is entitled to a greater judgment.

[1-4] We have spoken of the issuance of a "preliminary injunction." This term we have employed in spite of the fact that the findings, which follow the pleadings in this regard, call it a "restraining order," and the undertaking terms it a "temporary restraining order." The nomenclature used does not determine its character (Neumann v. Moretti [1905] 146 Cal. 31, 79 P. 512; Maier v. Luce [1923] 61 Cal. App. 552, 215 P. 399), but its character may be of importance when we come to consider the defendant's claim that no liability was contracted, for the law does not require an undertaking upon the issuance of a temporary restraining order (Biasca v. Superior Court [1924] 194 Cal. 366, 228 P. 861), but does upon the granting of a preliminary injunction (section 529, Code Civ. Proc.; Neumann v. Moretti, supra; Maier v. Luce, supra). The order under consideration was made some six weeks after the institution of the action, and its restraining influence was by its terms to continue until the determination of the suit to cancel the note and trust deed. When that action was determined, the order was dissolved. Plainly this was neither a temporary restraining order nor a permanent injunction, but a preliminary injunction (Neumann v. Moretti, supra), and, as we have noted, an undertaking was required by law and by the court's order. The surety knew of the pendency of the action, as appears from the undertaking, so was bound to know the nature of the order made. Lambert v. Haskell (1889) 80 Cal. 611, 22 P. 327.

[5] The undertaking given was entitled in the injunction action, and read, in part, in these words: "Whereas, the above-named plaintiffs * * * is about to apply for a temporary restraining order in said action, * * * Now, therefore, the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York * * * in consideration of the premises and of the issuing of said temporary restraining order undertakes in the sum of fifteen hundred and no/100 ($1500.00) dollars and promises to the effect that in case said temporary restraining order shall issue, the said plaintiffs will pay to the said parties so enjoined such damages, not exceeding the sum of fifteen hundred and no/100 dollars as such parties may sustain by reason of said temporary restraining order if the said superior court finally decide that the said plaintiffs were not entitled thereto." The emphasis in the quotation is that placed by the defendant. The promise and undertaking is that the plaintiff will pay, the defendant points out, not that it will, and it therefore is under no legal obligation to pay. Its inspiration for this defense is San Luis Obispo v. Ryal (1917) 175 Cal. 34, 165 P. 1, 2, where our Supreme Court found insufficient a bond, given pursuant to sections 1273, 1279, and 1292, of the Penal Code, wherein the sureties undertook that the defendant, not they, would pay. In these sections, aided, doubtless, by the reference to article 2 (sections 1277-1281a), which prescribes the form of bail bonds, our Supreme Court found that "one of the conditions provided by the Code to be inserted in such a bond * * * is that, in the event that the defendant * * * fails to do or perform any of the things provided therein * * * the sureties will pay * * * a sum particularly specified. * * *" It was because this requirement of the Penal Code (section 1278) was not complied with that the bond was found to be insufficient. No such condition is required by the terms of section 529, Code of Civil Procedure. The requirement there expressed is: "On granting an injunction, the court or judge must require * * * a written undertaking on the part of the applicant, with sufficient sureties, to the effect that he will pay to the party enjoined such damages not exceeding an amount to be specified, as such party may sustain by reason of the injunction. * * *" This section and similar sections requiring an undertaking that the applicant or appellant or some one other than the surety will pay, have been satisfied by instruments, such as that sued on here, declaring that the surety undertakes that the applicant or other person will pay. Language is but the vehicle by which an idea is conveyed, and in the following cases undertakings worded as ours is worded have been held to so convey the idea that the surety had contracted a liability that judgment went against him: Curtis v. Richards (1858) 9 Cal.

34; Tissot v. Darling (1858) 9 Cal. 278; Murdock v. Brooks (1869) 38 Cal. 596; Lambert v. Haskell (1889) 80 Cal. 611, 22 P. 327; Rice v. Cook (1891) 92 Cal. 144, 28 P. 219; Asevado v. Orr (1893) 100 Cal. 293, 34 P. 777; Moore v. Maryland Casualty Co. (1929) 100 Cal. App. 658, 280 P. 1008 (hearing in Supreme Court denied). We are of the opinion, therefore, that the defendant in this case incurred a legal obligation.

[6] Is it necessary that the plaintiff exhaust his remedies against the makers of the note before he can recover on the undertaking? This is the remaining question of importance in this action. There is no clear answer given in any case decided by an appellate court of this state so far as counsel's research and our search has revealed. We have reached the conclusion, however, that, in so far as the delay caused by the injunction has reduced plaintiff's security below its power to satisfy, he has an immediate damage which the surety has undertaken to make good, and that the plaintiff does not have to secure a deficiency judgment with execution returned unsatisfied before he can show that he has suffered damage and recover its amount.

We have come to this conclusion, first, because we are persuaded that injury to security which so affects it as to make it in whole or in part inadequate gives the creditor an immediate action for damages without first determining whether or not the debtor is insolvent. Oddly, the leading case is one where it appeared that the debtor was insolvent. This case is Van Pelt v. McGraw (1850) 4 N. Y. 110. Others, where the insolvency of the debtor was not shown, but where tacitly or avowedly the court concluded that this made no difference, but that he whose security had been destroyed was damaged and could sue, are Turrell v. Jackson (1877) 39 N. J. Law, 329; Chouteau v. Boughton (1890) 100 Mo. 406, 13 S.W. 877; Stevens v. Smathers (1899) 124 N. C. 571, 32 S. E. 959; Arnold v. Broad (1900) 15 Colo. App. 389, 62 P. 577; Jackson v. Brandon Realty Co. (Sup. 1906) 100 N. Y. S. 1005. In Turrell v. Jackson, supra, the court said: "It certainly is not just, and cannot be lawful, to leave a mortgagee without redress for the destruction of that substantial security upon the strength of which he loaned his money, because he is unable to show the present insufficiency of that wavering staff, the solvency of his debtor, upon which he never expected to rely." The value of thought thus expressed is not destroyed by the subsequent conclusion of the court that insolvency had been shown.

An early case in this state can fairly be interpreted as supporting this principle. In Robinson v. Russell (1864) 24 Cal. 467, an injunction was sought to prevent the dissipation of certain security. The injunction was denied because irreparable injury was not shown, in that it did not appear that the defendants (who were not the debtors) were insolvent, and therefore an action for damages would be adequate. With reference to the right of action, the court said: "There can be no doubt but that an action can be maintained by the mortgagee for injuries of the character set forth in the complaint in this case, when it appears that by the acts complained of the mortgage security is impaired. * * * Van Pelt v. McGraw." If a mortgagee has an action against one whose tort impaired the security, without being required first to take recourse against other property of the debtor, we believe one who was kept from a full use of his security because of an injunction can recover without first following what may prove to be a will-o'-the-wisp, the debtor's ability to pay.

Directly to the point, counsel have cited no case, and we have found none, holding that the surety is not to be held until all efforts to have the original debtor meet his obligations prove fruitless. There are, however, a number of cases holding the contrary. Kennedy's Administratrix v. Hammond & Hall (1852) 16 Mo. 341; Hunt v. Burton (1856) 18 Ark. 188; Dangel v. Levy (1878) 1 Idaho, 722. To these authorities there should be added those where recovery was allowed without insolvency being shown or a deficiency judgment first found futile, but where the propriety of the order of procedure was assumed and not discussed. Rubon v. Stephan (1852) 25 Miss. 253; Gibson v. Reed (1898) 54 Neb. 309, 75 N. W. 1085; Stull v. Beddeo (1907) 78 Neb. 119, 112 N. W. 315, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 507; Kitsap County Bank v. U. S. F. & G. Co. (1916) 90 Wash. 12, 155 P. 411; Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. West Blocton Sav. Bank (1927) 216 Ala. 465, 113 So. 489; Gruber v. Ewbanks (1930) 199 N. C. 335, 154 S. E. 318, 321. In the case last cited the creditor had failed to avail himself of an opportunity in the injunction action to obtain judgment for the unpaid balance due on his notes. On the question of damages resulting from the injunction, the court said: "The only interest which the creditor has in the property is its preservation as security for his debt, undiminished in value. It is this interest only which the debtor, who procures an order restraining the creditor from enforcing his security by the sale of the property, is required to protect by a bond or undertaking. * * * If the property depreciates in value during the time the injunction is in force, and the creditor for that reason fails to collect his debt, interest and costs, the amount of such depreciation is ordinarily the measure of his damages. * * * The creditor is entitled to the same security at the date of the dissolution of the injunction that he had at the date of its issuance—no more, and no less." We conclude, therefore, that this action was not brought prematurely, but that the damage has accrued for which the bond was given and that plaintiff is entitled to have the damages fixed without first securing a deficiency judgment.

[7, 8] There is no basis in the findings as they now appear by which the amount of damages can be determined. Following the language of the complaint, the findings declare that at the time of the injunction the property which secured the trust deed and mortgage "was worth and was of the reasonable value of $4200, or more." When the injunction was dissolved "said property was of the reasonable value and sold to the highest bidder * * * (for) the sum of $3,200." If plaintiff suffered damage due to depreciation, it would be measured by the difference between what he received and what he would have received at the sale which was enjoined. We do not have this latter essential figure. By "value," the first finding must be understood as meaning "market value." Dean v. Hawes (1916) 29 Cal. App. 689, 693, 157 P. 558. By market value "is undoubtedly meant, not what the owner could realize at a forced sale, but 'the price he could obtain after reasonable and ample time such as would ordinarily be taken by an owner to make sale of like property.'" San Diego Land, etc., Co. v. Neale (1888) 78 Cal. 63, 68, 20 P. 372, 374, 3 L. R. A. 83, and Santa Ana v. Harlin (1893) 99 Cal. 538, 542, 34 P. 224. The sale which was enjoined was a forced sale, and, while it might, it would probably not, have resulted in producing $4200. At any rate, a finding that the property was worth that is not a sufficient foundation on which to erect a judgment. We cannot, therefore, direct a judgment to be entered, but must leave its amount to be determined on a retrial.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HOUSER, Acting P. J.; YORK, J.

115 Cal.App. 512

PEOPLE v. McCLAIN.
Cr. 2074.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
July 17, 1931.

1. Burglary  $\S$ 42(3).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of burglary, where defendant several times refused to explain his recent possession of part of stolen goods.

2. Receiving stolen goods  $\S$ 8(3).

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of receiving stolen property (Pen. Code,  $\S$  496).

3. Receiving stolen goods  $\S$ 3.

Under statute penalizing receipt of personal property with knowledge that it has been stolen, knowledge need not be actual and positive, but may be circumstantial and deductive (Pen. Code,  $\S$  496).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William Tell Aggeler, Judge.

Clarence James McClain was convicted of burglary and receiving stolen property, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Guy Lewis and Orville A. Rogers, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Frank W. Stafford, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J.

Defendant appeals to this court from a judgment of conviction of each of the crimes of burglary and receiving stolen property, as well as from an order by which his motion for a new trial was denied.

[1] As to the charge of burglary, it is not contended that the corpus delicti was not established; but appellant urges that the evidence was "insufficient to sustain the verdict" that he was guilty of having committed the offense.

Aside from such testimony as appeared to favor the innocence of defendant, the incriminatory evidence against him included the facts that within a few days after the burglary was committed a part of the stolen goods was found in an automobile which was his property, and that on two or three occasions, when requested by police officers to explain such possession, defendant refused to do so. However, on one occasion defendant stated to an officer, "I know that stuff is hot and I'll admit I took a little of it, but the rest of it is all a pack of lies." Later, when asked by an officer whether a certain named individual had accompanied him at the time the burglary was committed, defendant replied, "No—that he always worked alone." Furthermore, the evidence shows that in a conversation which took place in the presence of three police officers, defendant, and two other persons who at that time were under arrest charged with the commission of the crime of which defendant stands convicted, certain statements in their nature accusatory of defendant were made, none of which was either denied or apparently resented by defendant. A part of such conversation between one of the police officers and one of the accused was as follows:

"Q. Where did you get that bronze jewel box with the amethyst stones? A. I saw that the first time in Clarence McClain's (defendant's) possession.

"Q. And the silver, where did you first see that? A. It was there in the house next door to 4449 Turquoise street when I first saw it.

"Q. Do you know who brought it there? A. No, I don't.

"Q. Who claimed ownership of it? A. I understand that Clarence (defendant) and his family claimed it. Clarence said it was his."

A few days after the commission of the crime defendant removed from the place of his then residence and at his new address gave his name, not as McClain, but as "John Hagerman."

Without here attempting to review the facts set forth in the case of People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 482, 76 P. 232, 233, it may suffice to state that the opinion therein, based upon a situation somewhat resembling that presented in the instant case, in principle contains a complete refutation of the contention of appellant herein regarding the point that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment. In part, it is there said:

"While possession of the stolen property is not, of itself, sufficient evidence of the guilt of the party in whose possession it is found, still the recent possession, unexplained, is a very strong circumstance, when taken in connection with other circumstances that point to guilt. The fictitious name given at the loan office, the pawning of the coat on the very day it was lost, and the denying of the signature on the books of the loan office are potent facts which are sufficient to justify the inference of guilt. The authorities hold that where goods have been feloniously taken by means of a burglary, and they are immediately or soon thereafter found in the possession of a person who gives a false account, or refuses to give any account, of the manner in which he came into the possession, proof of such possession and guilty conduct is presumptive evidence not only that he stole the goods, but that he made use of the means by which access to them was obtained." (Citing authorities.)

In the instant case, as far as the charge of burglary is concerned, it follows that the evidence adduced on the trial of the action was sufficient to support the judgment.

[2] With reference to the contention by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to support the judgment which was founded on the verdict of the jury returned against defendant on the charge of receiving stolen property, it appears beyond question that the property was stolen, and that it consisted of a watch which was engraved on its back with the name of the owner thereof; that five days after it was stolen it was found where it had been secreted in a "crack" behind a wash basin in a room which at that time was rented by defendant and his wife; that, on the day following the larceny of the watch, defendant was arrested, and that thereafter he refused to make a written statement to police officers regarding the manner in which the watch came into his possession; but on one occasion did make an oral statement to an officer, in substance, that on the day when the property was stolen he traded an automobile for certain personal property, including the watch. A part of the testimony given by the officer was: "I asked the defendant when he sold the car to Young, and he said 'that night we all left over there' (which was either on the same night that the property was stolen or on the day following). I said 'what did you get for it?' He says 'I got a watch and a diamond ring, and a nickel-plated flashlight.' I asked him if that was an Elgin watch, gold wrist watch with the name of Margaret Dorey on the back, and he said it was. I asked the defendant if he knew it was stolen and he said 'Yes,' and pointed to the gun and said he just brought it in."

As hereinbefore set forth, in another conversation which took place between defendant and a different officer at a time not more than six days after the property was stolen, defendant made the statement, "I know that stuff is hot," etc. Another incriminatory circumstance against defendant was that, on the day when he removed from the place where he had been living and took up his abode in a rented apartment, he gave a fictitious name to the man who owned the property.

Section 496 of the Penal Code, which relates to the crime of receiving stolen goods, in part provides that:

"Every person who for his own gain, or to prevent the owner from again possessing his property, buys or receives any personal property, knowing the same to have been stolen;

* * * is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years. * * *"

[3] The particular point presented by appellant is that in substance the words of the statute, "knowing the same to have been stolen," relate to the time when the stolen property comes into the possession of the person who receives it; and that since no direct evidence was presented on the trial of defendant to the effect that at the time the stolen watch came into his possession he then knew that it had been stolen—the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. But considering the facts with reference to the matter, it is but a fair inference that at the time he acquired the watch he knew that it was stolen property. It is not essential that such knowledge be actual and positive; it may be circumstantial and deductive. People v. Mercado, 59 Cal. App. 69, 72, 209 P. 1035. Considering what may be termed the flight of defendant, his use of a fictitious name, the possession of the watch by him and its concealment in a "crack" back of the wash basin at his new place of residence, that he was arrested and placed in jail on the day after the watch was stolen, and that five days thereafter, while still in jail, where he had been continuously confined after his arrest, according to his own admission he knew the "stuff was hot," and two days following such admission, in like circumstances, in connection with the story that he had traded an automobile for certain personal property, which included the watch in question, he made the direct statement that he "knew it (the watch) was stolen"—it is clear that the jury was justified in inferring that at the time he acquired the watch he knew it was stolen property. It therefore becomes plain that the second point presented by appellant cannot be sustained.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

115 Cal.App. 460
EVERHARDY v. UNION FINANCE CO.
Civ. 493.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 13, 1931.

1. Money received ☞11.

Recovery of money paid under contract for purchase of personal property cannot be had without mutual rescission, where allegations of complaint are laid under common count for money had and received.

2. Accord and satisfaction ⇨26(3).

Evidence held to sustain finding of accord and satisfaction in respect to claim for money paid on stock subscription contract and embezzled by agent (Civ. Code, §§ 1521, 1523).

3. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1).

Conclusion of trial court, amply supported by evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

4. Accord and satisfaction ⇨10(1).

Fact that dispute as to claim was in good faith was sufficient, as respects accord and satisfaction (Civ. Code, §§ 1521, 1523).

5. Accord and satisfaction ⇨26(3).

Evidence supported finding that subscriber for stock paying money which was embezzled by agent intended to accept shares thereafter delivered as complete accord and satisfaction (Civ. Code, §§ 1521, 1523).

6. Accord and satisfaction ⇨27.

Question whether agreement amounts to accord and satisfaction is one of fact.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Action by Anna H. Everhardy against the Union Finance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Michael F. Shannon and Thomas A. Wood, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harold A. Fendler, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

Appellant filed her complaint against respondent, and under the allegations contained in two separate causes of action sought the recovery of $4,000. The allegations of the first cause of action were laid under a common count for money had and received. The allegations of the second cause of action were based upon the conversion of her money. Respondent filed an answer denying the material allegations of her complaint and as a separate defense alleged an accord and satisfaction. The trial court in its findings resolved all issues against appellant and in favor of respondent. From the judgment thereafter entered, appellant has prosecuted this appeal.

The record discloses that on or about December 29, 1923, appellant, through one McCloskey, who was acting as sales agent for respondent, subscribed for 400 shares of its capital stock of the par value of $10 per share, for which she agreed to pay the sum of $4,000. She delivered to McCloskey a mortgage and note in the sum of $4,000, which he negotiated for its face value and which sum he embezzled. Respondent was not informed of this subscription nor of the embezzlement until some time after its occurrence, when appellant requested the issuance of the 400 shares of stock to her. Respondent referred the matter of its liability to its attorney, who advised it that under the circumstances of the case no liability to plaintiff had accrued. This resulted in numerous visits on the part of appellant to various officers of respondent, all of which resulted in her demand that the stock be issued to her in accordance with the subscription.

Shortly after the embezzlement was discovered and upon the request of respondent, its permit to sell its capital stock was revoked by the commissioner of corporations. During the month of November, 1926, appellant's demands for the stock were coupled with a threat to file suit against respondent to compel its issuance. This resulted in an apparent compromise of the dispute between the parties. On December 19, 1926, respondent issued to appellant 25 shares of its common stock and 75 shares of its preferred stock, together with the following certificate:

"Los Angeles, California,

December 18th, 1926.

"This is to certify that Anna H. Everhardy is entitled to One Hundred Twenty-five (125) shares of the preferred capital stock of the Union Finance Company and One Hundred Seventy-five (175) shares of the common stock of said company. Said stock will be issued as soon as same is available.

"Union Finance Company

"By David E. Fulwider, President.

"By C. S. Newberry, Secretary.

"[Corporate Seal.]"

Notation in pencil:

"Issued December 18th, 1926

25 common par 10.00 250.00

75 Prefr " 10.00 750.00

$1,000.00

"To be issued

125 Common

175 Preferred

300

10

$3,000."

The stock and this certificate were delivered to appellant by mail. Under date of January 2, 1927, appellant wrote the president of respondent in part as follows: "I received the certificate of stock and statement securing the remainder of my $4,000 subscription for which I thank you most sincerely." At some undisclosed date after December 18, 1926, and before June, 1927, appellant had a conversation with the secretary of respondent concerning this transaction in which he told her that as soon as the 300 shares of stock due her were available they would be issued to her, to which statement she replied, "That was all she wanted."

In June or July, 1927, she demanded the return of the $4,000 from respondent without offering to return the stock issued to her or the agreement to issue the additional 300 shares. Her complaint in this action was filed on December 9, 1927. At no time has she returned or offered to return to respondent the 100 shares of stock, or the agreement to issue the additional 300 shares.

At the trial respondent produced 125 shares of its preferred stock and 175 shares of its common stock issued in the name of appellant and tendered them to her, which tender was refused. In its judgment the trial court ordered the certificates for this stock delivered to her.

[1] Where there is a contract for the purchase and sale of personal property, the plaintiff cannot recover the money paid under the terms thereof without a mutual rescission of the contract where the allegations of the complaint to recover the money are laid under the common count for money had and received. Tomboy, etc., Co. v. Marks, 185 Cal. 336, 197 P. 94; Cincotta v. Catania, 61 Cal. App. 38, 214 P. 451.

Section 1521 of the Civil Code defines an accord as follows: "An accord is an agreement to accept, in extinction of an obligation, something different from or less than that to which the person agreeing to accept is entitled."

Section 1523 of the same Code defines satisfaction as follows: "Acceptance, by the creditor, of the consideration of an accord extinguishes the obligation, and is called satisfaction."

In the case of Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 192 P. 534, 536, it was held as follows: "The terms of the accord may provide either for the performance of an act or the giving of a promise as the consideration for the extinction of the existing obligation. In the latter case, the giving and acceptance of the promise is the execution of the accord."

Appellant seeks to escape the effect of these rules of law upon the grounds, first, that the claim of respondent that it was not legally liable to issue the 400 shares of its stock to her was not well founded in law; and, second, that the record does not contain sufficient evidence to support the contention that appellant intended to accept the stock issued to her and the agreement by which respondent promised the later issuance of 300 shares of its stock as a satisfaction of her prior contract.

Her first contention is disposed of by the cases of Berger v. Lane, 190 Cal. 443, 213 P. 45, and B. & W. Engineering Co. v. Beam, 23 Cal. App. 164, 137 P. 624, 626. In the latter case the court held as follows:

"The phrase 'accord and satisfaction' as it is known and applied in the law means the substitution of a new agreement for and in satisfaction of a pre-existing agreement between the same parties. More minutely defined, an agreement of accord and satisfaction is one whereby one of two parties, having a right of action against the other upon a claim arising out of an existing agreement, agrees to accept from the other party something in satisfaction of such right of action different from and usually less than that which might be recovered upon the original obligation. Civ. Code, § 1521. The effect of such agreement when executed is to extinguish the antecedent liability. Civ. Code, § 1523. As a matter of course an agreement of accord and satisfaction presupposes a prior controversy concerning the relative rights of the parties under the pre-existing agreement; and it may be conceded to be the law, as counsel for the plaintiff contends, that, before a dispute concerning a claim for money alleged to be due under an existing contract can be made the basis of an agreement of accord and satisfaction, it must be shown that such dispute was bona fide. * * * The rule in this behalf is clearly and concisely stated in the case of Simons v. American Legion of Honor, 178 N. Y. 263, 70 N. E. 776, where it is said that: 'If a debt or claim be disputed at the time of payment, the payment, when accepted, of a part of the whole debt, is good satisfaction, and it matters not that there was no solid foundation for the dispute. The test in such cases is: Was the dispute honest or fraudulent? If honest, it affords a basis for an accord between the parties, which the law favors, and the execution of which is the satisfaction.'

"It will thus be seen that, in so far as the defense of an executed accord and satisfaction was concerned, the trial court was not called upon to decide the question as to whether or not the covenant of the contract in controversy covering the cost of the work to be performed thereunder was fairly susceptible of the construction contended for by Beam. Upon this phase of the case the only question to be considered was whether or not there was in fact at the time of the acceptance and retention of the check in question a bona fide dispute concerning the sum due under the contract. This primarily was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court from all of the circumstances of the transaction (Lapp-Gifford Co. v. Muscoy Water Co., 166 Cal. 25, 134 P. 989); and in the determination of that question the mere fact that it might have been held, in an action involving the construction of the original contract, that plaintiff's assignor could not have been compelled to relinquish any portion of its original claim, was of no consequence in the face of the established fact that it did actually and knowingly accept a lesser amount in full satisfaction and settlement of its claim. Taylor v. Nussbaum, 9 N. Y. Super. Ct. 302; Roach v. Gilmer, 3 Utah, 389, 4 P. 221. In other words, where the parties to an executed agreement of accord and satisfaction have met upon equal terms, and without fraud, misrepresentation, or mistake have adjusted existing differences concerning their relative rights and obligations arising out of a valid, pre-existing agreement, it is neither necessary nor permissible to go behind a settlement actually made for the purpose of ascertaining which of the parties was right in the controversy which preceded and constituted the basis of such settlement. Farmers' Bank, etc., v. Blair, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 641, 652; Minor v. Fike, 77 Kan. 806, 93 P. 264; Kiler v. Wohletz, 79 Kan. 716, 101 P. 474 [L. R. A. 1915B, 11]; 1 Page on Contracts, 321."

[2-4] It will not be necessary for us to consider or pass upon the merits of the original claim of respondent that it was not legally liable to deliver to appellant the 400 shares of its capital stock for which she subscribed. The trial court as a necessary implication from its findings has held that this claim of nonliability was made in good faith and that there was an honest dispute between the parties as to its liability to issue this stock. The evidence amply justifies this conclusion, which, therefore, we cannot disturb. As is clearly set forth in the decisions which we have cited, it is not necessary that respondent's refusal to issue the stock be founded upon a legal right not to do so. The fact that it was asserting its rights in good faith and that there was an honest dispute between the parties is sufficient.

[5, 6] The intent of the appellant in accepting and keeping the stock and the agreement of December 18, 1926, was a question of fact primarily addressed to the trial court. The fact that she received and retained these documents for a number of months without objection, that she thanked the president of respondent for their issuance and delivery to her, together with the fact that she told the secretary of respondent that the issuance of the stock to her was all that she wanted, is amply sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that she intended to accept the 100 shares of stock delivered to her and the agreement to issue to her 300 additional shares of stock as a complete accord and satisfaction of her former demand for the issuance of 400 shares of the capital stock of respondent to her and as a complete substitute for the former contract. Murphy v. White, 101 Cal. App. 719, 282 P. 427. "The question whether an agreement amounts to an accord and satisfaction is, within the rules of law governing the subject, a question of the intention of the parties and is, therefore, a question of fact, and unless there is want of evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court, it will not be reversed on appeal. More specifically it has been said that whether there was a dispute as to the sum due and whether a tender was on condition that acceptance would be in full satisfaction are primarily questions of fact for the trial court." 1 Cal. Jur. 136. The findings of the trial court to the effect that appellant intended to accept the stock and the new contract as a complete accord and satisfaction between the parties cannot be disturbed here.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 553
CONNER v. PACIFIC READY CUT HOMES,
Inc.
Civ. 7680.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 20, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ☞931(1).

Reviewing court will adopt such logical inferences from evidence as tend to support judgment, if different inferences or conflicting conclusions are possible.

2. Mechanics' liens ☞260(1).

Owner and contractor, from whom materialman secured affidavits that work was continuing, with knowledge of their falsity, held not estopped to assert that lien was barred by limitations.

3. Estoppel ☞52.

Underlying principle of estoppel is to prevent wrong, not to destroy legal rights for individual gain.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles D. Ballard, Judge.

Action by James Conner against the Pacific Ready Cut Homes, Inc., doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of the Construction Supply Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Glen Behymer, of Los Angeles, and G. H. Wende, of Glendale, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem.

The case above entitled was consolidated for trial with some twenty-five other cases involving the same property and the same questions. Pursuant to the stipulation of counsel, the determination of this case concludes the others. In some of the cases the defendant above named was the plaintiff, with some of the individual plaintiffs in the remaining cases made defendants. The cases wherein the status of the present defendant and appellant was defendant were in the nature of actions to quiet title; the cases wherein the present defendant appeared as plaintiff were actions to foreclose liens upon the respective parcels of property described.

In all of the actions, however, as far as this appellant is concerned, the main question was the validity of the asserted claim of lien. We may remark, in passing, that the record comes before us in a most unsatisfactory manner. Appellant presents but one question, namely, the claim of estoppel as against the original owner and contractor; yet the findings disclose that the trial court made several general findings, unquestioned here, which might support the judgment even though it be found that the court was in error on the only point presented to us for determination. However, as it will hereinafter appear, it is not necessary to catalog the findings or detail the extent thereof. We will confine ourselves to the one point urged, and, if an examination thereinto discloses that the trial court was not in error, appellant concedes that the judgment should be affirmed. Yet, by way of forewarning, in case sufficient has not already been said by all of the appellate courts and by the Supreme Court on the subject, it may be well to call the attention of the bar to the fact that the mere mechanical perfecting of an appeal is not all that is required in order that the reviewing court may examine carefully into extended volumes of clerks' and reporters' transcripts.

[1] Coming directly to the controversy before us, a brief summary of the facts will better serve to illustrate the claims made. Milton Hesse was a contractor and builder in the county of Los Angeles. His activities encompassed many projects and covered a variety of enterprises, though mostly confined to the building and selling of residences. For some time prior to the transaction under discussion he had dealt with the appellant, procuring from the latter building materials and supplies for use in his various projects. In the summer of 1926 he began the construction of the houses on the properties here involved. The record before us falters somewhat, in the presentation of the actual facts at this point. Some doubt is cast upon the claim that materials were delivered to the properties. It is shown that a considerable quantity of lumber was delivered to one of the lots of the tract, but likewise is there evidence to the effect that some of this was carted away to distant work and the general finding that all of this material was not used in the buildings seems to have support in the evidence. For the purposes of the appeal it is admitted that all work ceased on the buildings, as far as Hesse was concerned, on or about the 2d of November, 1926, and that the finding to the effect that the work was at that time abandoned is not without sufficient evidence for its support. It is further admitted that the claim of lien was filed at a period subsequent thereto and at a time when the claim of lien was barred by limitation, unless preserved as hereinafter contended. No notice of completion was ever filed. And here it might be noted that, while Milton Hesse was the owner of the property, he did, for the purpose of becoming the contractor, make and execute a deed of the premises to Nettie Lee Hesse, his sister-in-law, which deed all parties admit to have been merely by way of convenience. To repeat, appellant concedes that its claim of lien was filed too late to entitle it to foreclosure if the defense of limitation were open to respondent. But, contends appellant, the Hesses, both Milton and Nettie Lee, and the respondent claiming under them, are estopped to set up this defense. This contention is based upon the conduct of the Hesses. It is appellant's claim that by a course of conduct, planned to that end, Milton Hesse and Nettie Lee Hesse lulled appellant into a sense of security by representing the continuation of the work and the progress thereon to the end that appellant forbear its lien rights under the belief that no time limitation was operating against it. While there is a semblance of conflict in the evidence on the point of representations made by the Hesse group, we may concede that this conflict is more apparent than real, and that, if no other question were to be solved save that of representations, it could readily be determined that such representations as claimed were made. However, the circumstances under which the same were made would have a controlling bearing upon the case. And here we may stop to note that the limits of investigation permissible to a trial court are not always confined to the exact words of testimony as adduced. The trial court may draw from the evidence the natural inferences of which the evidence is susceptible, and, if more than one inference may be drawn or if conflicting conclusions may result, a reviewing court will adopt such logical inferences as tend to support the judgment.

[2] Coming back to the facts, it has already been noted that there had been and were at the times under examination other business dealings between Hesse and appellant, as a result of which Hesse stood indebted to appellant on obligations other than those resulting from the transaction with which we deal. The record discloses negotiations toward a settlement between them. The buildings and premises against which the claim of lien is here asserted were progressing slowly on account of lack of finances and, uncompleted, were not attractive for sale or security upon which funds could be obtained. There is abundant evidence to indicate that appellant was anxious to secure payment of the sums due without risking the delay or panic incident to legal proceedings. The evidence further discloses that the representative of appellant, a Mr. Power, admitted to be the one to whom the entire matter had been intrusted, was at all times in the closest touch with all operations. Without detailing the same, there is more than sufficient evidence to have convinced the trial court, and, as that court found, that Power knew exactly what was taking place on the premises and what work was being done and when it stopped. Although he was in this almost continuous contact, appellant claims that he did not believe what he saw, but relied upon what he was told by the Hesses. While the progress of the work was thus being noted by appellant, it became apparent that the lien rights were being jeopardized. And, with the condition well known, appellant exacted a statement from Hesse to the effect that there was not a cessation or abandonment and that there would not be a discontinuance of the work. Hesse promised or assured appellant that he would carry on sufficient to keep the lien rights alive. Then appellant secured from both Milton Hesse and Nettie Lee Hesse an affidavit to the effect that the work was continuing sufficient to keep alive the liens.

The specific and controlling finding of the trial court is that the appellant had full knowledge of the conditions existing and was in no wise misled or deceived by the statements of either Hesse or the statements of both of them; that the actions of the appellant were with full and independent knowledge on its part; that, if any representations were made by the Hesses concerning the continuation of the work on the premises (as alleged by the appellant in the court below), the appellant knew the same to be false; further, in the same finding, that appellants had equal or superior knowledge and means of knowledge of the facts, as to the cessation of labor, as was had by Milton or Nettie Lee Hesse. As stated hereinbefore, the evidence amply supports this finding. The transcript of testimony before us, scantily referred to by appellant, contains some thirteen hundred pages of testimony in addition to a clerk's transcript of almost four hundred pages. Though we have carefully read the transcript, we regard it as wholly unnecessary to detail this mass of evidence in an attempt to demonstrate the correctness of the conclusion reached by the trial court. From the finding as made, the court below held that no estoppel existed, and this was the only conclusion that the finding would support.

The law of the case is not in dispute. Appellant, in its brief, concedes that among the essentials necessary to the creation of an estoppel are the following: Namely, the statements must have been made with the intention that the other party should act upon them; the party to whom they were made must have been ignorant of the truth of the matter; he must have been induced to act upon them to his detriment. These principles of estoppel were announced in the ancient case of Biddle Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279, and have been consistently adhered to throughout a long line of decisions. The subject is fully discussed and the authorities cited in California Jurisprudence, volume 10, beginning at page 627. The authorities there cited support the text, which reads as follows: "It is an essential element of an estoppel by conduct that the party asserting it must be ignorant of the true state of facts, and should have relied upon the representation or admission of the adverse party." 10 Cal. Jur. 636, 637.

[3] In the case before us it is manifest that appellant was endeavoring to make the best of a rather bad situation. It was doubtful whether or not all of the material furnished was used in the buildings upon which lien was claimed; there was continuing hope that the indebtedness existing could and would be adjusted in other ways and by means of loans which it would have been impossible to secure after a lien filed. Even when the conditions were apparent, from which it appeared that the claim of lien was being jeopardized, appellant still remained with the hope of satisfactory and full adjustment, but, in order to meet any possible hitch in the plan, prepared statements showing a condition of construction already known to be untrue and procured the affidavits of the Hesses thereto solely for the purpose of establishing an estoppel against a defense which appellant had knowingly permitted to arise. The underlying principle of estoppel, in all of its varieties, is to prevent a wrong being inflicted. This is something quite different from the creation of a situation whereby the law may be distorted to the end that all legal rights may be swept aside to permit individual gain.

It is our opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

115 Cal.App. 372

IRWIN v. PICKWICK STAGES SYSTEM, Inc., et al.

Civ. 7819.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 7, 1931.

Appeal and error  701(1).

Appellant, complaining that instruction given is erroneous, need not print in brief all evidence supporting instruction (Code Civ. Proc. § 953c; Rules of Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal, rule No. 8).

In such case, if instruction shows possible error on its face, appellant may rely thereon as a matter of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Action by William Richard Irwin against the Pickwick Stages System, Inc., and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal.

Motion denied.

B. P. Gibbs and George P. Kinkle, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Newmire and George Appell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Motion by respondent for an order dismissing the appeal on the ground that appellants have failed to comply with the provisions of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, and rule 8 of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

Appellants' opening brief, the only one on file, sets out three points of alleged error. Point I is that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, point II the giving of certain instructions by the court relative to the ownership of the bus in question and agency between its driver and Pickwick Greyhound Lines of California (not a party to the action), and point III the giving of an instruction involving the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

Respondent in his motion to dismiss contends that as to point I appellants have failed to refer parenthetically to the line and page of the typewritten record; that only a small part of the evidence has been printed, and only that favorable to appellant, and that the testimony so printed is insufficient to justify a reversal. As to point II the contention is that all the evidence is not printed, nor is any reference made to any documentary evidence which would support the instructions so attacked; and, as to point III, that no evidence is set forth concerning the facts surrounding the happening of the accident which is the basis of the action.

As to respondent's contention regarding point II, we do not understand rule 8 to mean that, where one complains that an instruction given to the jury is erroneous, all the evidence supporting the same is required to be printed in the brief. It would seem on principle that, if the instruction shows possible error on its face, one could rely upon that as a matter of law, in which case it would undoubtedly be presumed there was evidence in the record supporting it, in the absence of a showing to the contrary. The rule does require that "all other instructions given bearing upon that subject must be printed in full in appellant's brief," but no other instructions are set out in the brief bearing upon the asserted agency between the parties mentioned, and an examination of the instructions given discloses no other upon that subject. As to such point we are of the opinion that the brief discloses a sufficient argument so that the appeal should be decided on the merits, regardless of whether points I and III sufficiently comply with rule 8 or not.

Motion denied.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

115 Cal.App. 766

Betty B. IRWIN, a Minor, by Annie A. Irwin, her Guardian ad Litem, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. PICKWICK STAGES SYSTEM, Incorporated (a Corporation), and R. I. Bailey, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 7820.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 7, 1931.

Motion to dismiss appeal by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Warren V. Tryon, Judge, in an action for damages for personal injuries. Motion denied.

B. P. Gibbs and George P. Kinkle, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Newmire and George Appell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Motion by respondent for an order dismissing the appeal on the ground that appellants have failed to comply with the provisions of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, and rule 8 of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

This case grew out of the same occurrence as that involved in William Richard Irwin v. Pickwick Stages System, Incorporated, and R. I. Bailey (Cal. App.) 1 P.(2d) 1030, motion to dismiss appeal in which has been this day denied. The questions raised on the present motion and the points of law involved are in all material respects the same as those in that action, and in consequence the decision there governs this case.

Motion denied.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

115 Cal.App. 767

Florence B. IRWIN, a Minor, by Annie A. Irwin, her Guardian ad Litem, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. PICKWICK STAGES SYSTEM, Incorporated (a Corporation), and R. I. BAILEY, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 7821.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 7, 1931.

Motion to dismiss appeal by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Warren V. Tryon, Judge, in an action for damages for personal injuries. Motion denied.

B. P. Gibbs and George P. Kinkle, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Newmire and George Appell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Motion by respondent for an order dismissing the appeal on the ground that appellants have failed to comply with the provisions of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, and rule 8 of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

This case grew out of the same occurrence as that involved in William Richard Irwin v. Pickwick Stages System, Incorporated, and R. I. Bailey (Cal. App.) 1 P.(2d) 1030, motion to dismiss appeal in which has been this day denied. The questions raised on the present motion and the points of law involved are in all material respects the same as those in that action, and in consequence the decision there governs this case.

Motion denied.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

115 Cal.App. 768

Annie A. IRWIN, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. PICKWICK STAGES SYSTEM, Incorporated (a Corporation), and R. I. BAILEY, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 7822.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 7, 1931.

Motion to dismiss appeal by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Warren V. Tryon, Judge, in an action for damages for personal injuries. Motion denied.

B. P. Gibbs and George P. Kinkle, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl Newmire and George Appell, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Motion by respondent for an order dismissing the appeal on the ground that appellants have failed to comply with the provisions of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, and rule 8 of the Rules of the Supreme Court and District Courts of Appeal.

This case grew out of the same occurrence as that involved in William Richard Irwin v. Pickwick Stages System, Incorporated, and R. I. Bailey (Cal. App.) 1 P.(2d) 1030, motion to dismiss appeal in which has been this day denied. The questions raised on the present motion and the points of law involved are in all material respects the same as those in that action, and in consequence the decision there governs this case.

Motion denied.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

115 Cal.App. 472
HOLLAND v. BANK OF ITALY NAT. TRUST & SAVINGS ASS'N.

Civ. 858.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 13, 1931.

1. Trusts ⇨358(1).

Beneficiary, in order to recover trust fund, must trace fund into some particular fund or property.

2. Trusts ⇨372(3).

Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding that money claimed as trust fund came into hands of executor, so as to authorize recovery thereof.

3. Trusts *§*372(1).

Money alleged to have been intrusted to deceased may not be reclaimed as trust fund, in absence of evidence that it came into hands of executor.

4. Trusts *§*44(3).

To establish trust requires clear and convincing evidence.

5. Witnesses *§*144(7).

Testimony of claimant, respecting transactions with deceased, was admissible in action to establish trust (Code Civ. Proc. § 1880).

6. Judgment *§*256(1).

Judgment for recovery of money against executor as such held not to follow findings as to establishment of trust.

Judgment was against executor as such, and not as trustee, and provided that it should be payable in course of administration, whereas if trust was established as evidenced by finding and traced into hands of executor, then the trust fund was no part of estate.

7. Executors and administrators *§*221(6).

Evidence in action to recover moneys alleged to have been intrusted to deceased held insufficient to warrant appellate court in finding that loan of money was established.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by John L. Holland against the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, executor of the estate of Marie Bruton Teeter, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

John V. Morris and Hooper & Miller, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George Baltimore, Mark F. Jones, and Goodwin J. Oppegard, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BARNARD, P. J.

In this action, the plaintiff seeks to recover $11,500 which he claims Marie Bruton Teeter was holding in trust for him. The plaintiff claims that he lived with Mrs. Teeter for some five years before her death, although they were never married, and that in September, 1927, he handed her $11,500 to keep for him. For some considerable time before her death, Mrs. Teeter was running three hotels in Los Angeles. She went to a hospital for an operation in April, 1928, and died a few days later. Prior to going to the hospital, she assigned certain insurance policies to the plaintiff, made her will, and purchased a cashier's check for $8,000 at the Bank of Italy, which was made payable to the plaintiff or to herself, which check was found after her death in her safety deposit box in that bank, to which box the plaintiff had no access. After the defendant was appointed executor of her last will, the plaintiff filed his claim against the estate for $11,500 for money loaned to the deceased in her lifetime. The claim having been rejected, this action was filed. The complaint set up a first cause of action for $11,500 loaned to Marie Bruton Teeter at her special instance and request, and a second cause of action for $164 alleged to have been advanced to pay certain nurses during her last illness. Subsequently, an amended complaint was filed setting up the same two causes of action and adding a third, in which it is alleged that "on or about September 17, 1927, one Marie Bruton Teeter became indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $11,500 for money deposited with and paid over to said Marie Bruton Teeter by plaintiff to hold in trust for him; that at the times that the aforesaid moneys were deposited with said Marie Bruton Teeter, it was agreed between her and plaintiff that she would hold said money in trust for said plaintiff and pay and redeliver the same unto him upon demand, at his option." It is then alleged that no part of said sum has been repaid; that the defendant has been appointed executor of Mrs. Teeter's estate; and "that subsequent to the death of said Marie Bruton Teeter said trust fund came into the possession of said defendant who now holds and is in possession of same."

The plaintiff was not present at the trial, but his deposition was offered. Objection having been made that the plaintiff could not testify under subdivision 3 of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the objection was sustained as to the first two causes of action, and the deposition was admitted as applying to the third cause of action. Through this deposition, the plaintiff testified as follows:

"Q. On the 17th day of September, 1927, did you have any business transaction with her? A. Yes.

"Q. What was that transaction? A. It was $11,500 that she had taken for safekeeping for me. It involved that money.

"Q. And did you turn that money over to her? A. Positively yes.

"Q. Now, Mr. Holland, did Mrs. Teeter agree to give you back that money? A. Positively yes.

"Q. And when did she agree to give it back to you? A. No particular time.

"Q. Did she agree to pay it to you on your demand? A. Yes.

"Q. Did she agree to hold it for you? A. Yes."

He further testified that while she was in the hospital she said to him: "In case I don't get over this or don't get well or get out of it, or something of that sort, 'you are protected by the check at the Bank of Italy.'"

On cross-examination, he testified that he had won the money gambling, and that he handed the money to her that night at the apartment when no one else was present; that she told him he had better let her take it because he might gamble it all back and lose it; and that he gave it to her in paper money, but he could not remember what the denominations were. He then testified:

"Q. Did she give you a receipt for the money? A. She did not.

"Q. Did you ever ask her for a receipt for the money? A. No.

"Q. At the time you say you gave her this money at the apartment house on the night you have already testified to, did you tell her when you wanted the money back? A. No, I did not.

"Q. Did you tell her you ever wanted the money back? A. I just gave it to her and she kept the money. It was natural for me to figure that I would get it back whenever I wanted it."

Immediately following this, he was asked if anything had been said between them as to when the money was to be returned. A motion to strike his answer was made at the time the deposition was taken, and, at the trial, was granted by the court. Following the making of the motion the witness answered "All right. I will say that she told me 'I will give it to you whenever you need it.'" He was then asked: "Was there ever anything said as to whether or not it was to be returned at all?" The witness was instructed not to answer the question, and did not. The deposition shows that the witness was instructed by his counsel not to answer more than thirty questions, practically all of which were material, and the objections to which were later overruled by the court, but no answers had been made. Among these, he refused to answer whether he knew what she had done with the money. He did, however, testify that he did not deposit it in her bank account for her, and that he did not know whether or not it was ever deposited.

The only other evidence offered by the plaintiff was the testimony of a life insurance agent, and of a trust officer of the Bank of Italy. The life insurance agent testified that while collecting some premiums from Mrs. Teeter in the latter part of March, 1928, she requested him to change the beneficiary in certain policies, naming Jack Howard as the new beneficiary, and also told him that this party was known as John L. Holland, and was going under the name of Jack Howard. In order to ascertain the insurable interest, he asked her why she wanted to do this, and "she replied she was holding over $11,000 for him and wanted to protect him in the event of her death. I immediately canvassed her for more insurance, thinking I might write more to cover up the difference and she replied that she had made—was going to make arrangements at the bank to take care of the balance." He further testified that Mrs. Teeter signed the change of beneficiary at that time, that it was forwarded to the company, and that later, Mr. Holland received $2,250 from the insurance company on these policies. The trust officer of the bank testified that, a few days after Mrs. Teeter's death, he examined her safety deposit box and found therein a check for $8,000 payable to the plaintiff or to Mrs. Teeter, and that the check had been held by the executor and never paid.

As a witness for the defendant, the trust officer testified that on April 19, 1928, the morning Mrs. Teeter died, the plaintiff came to the bank and asked him about Mrs. Teeter's will telling him that his name was Jack Howard, that he was Mrs. Teeter's husband, that she was dead, and that he wanted to get such of her possessions as the bank had. Also, that he said he understood they had a will there. That he also spoke about a check "which she said she had willed to him," and he wanted to know if he could get that from her box. That about ten days after Mrs. Teeter's death, he returned and asked for the insurance policies. When the trust officer asked him as to his insurable interest, he replied that the policies were assigned to him for money he had given to Mrs. Teeter, that he had given her the money at odd times and in small amounts, and did not know the total sum. The trust officer also testified that on April 4, 1928, Mrs. Teeter gave him the data for preparing her will. When he asked her as to whether she had any debts, she told him that she had taken care of a debt she owed by means of insurance policies which she had. She told him that she was going to a hospital for an operation, and stated that she wanted to make a bequest to a male friend, but did not want her relatives in the east to know about this, as they wouldn't understand. He told her that such a clause in the will could not be kept secret. In reply to her questions as to whether he knew of any other way in which it could be taken care of, he said he knew of none except to give him the money before her death. The trust officer also testified: "When she came back to me later in the afternoon she said she had made arrangements to take care of the bequest she had asked if she could make secretly in her will." He further testified that on May 19, 1928, the insurance agent above referred to called on him and asked for the insurance policies, showing him an assignment signed by Mrs. Teeter, stating that the same had been on file with his company, and that Mr. Howard had an insurable interest in the policies through an indebtedness. When asked where he had obtained this information, he replied that "he had gotten it directly from Mrs. Teeter; that he had called upon her to collect some insurance premiums and that at that time she had requested that he change or have changed the beneficiaries of the policies and that he had inquired with reference to the insurable interest which the new beneficiary was to have and that she had replied it was to pay him what she owed him. I inquired further from Mr. Pries as to the full amount of the note, and he stated that she hadn't told him that, that he presumed it was in full or payment in full.

"Q. Did he mention any indebtedness of $11,500? A. He did not." The record of Mrs. Teeter's account with the bank was put in evidence, covering a period of about two years prior to her death. This shows deposits in varying small amounts, made from ten to fifteen different times a month, and made with about the same frequency prior to September 17, 1927, as from that date until the time of her death. Most of the deposits after September 17, 1927, were under $300, but a few were around $400 and $500, and one on April 9, 1928, was for $700. The record shows no deposit of $11,500 or of any other sum in excess of $700. The only assets of Mrs. Teeter coming into the hands of this defendant as executor, as shown by the record, are her bank account in the Bank of Italy, about $50 in money, and some small personal articles found in her room. The trust officer of the bank testified that he had made inquiries of all other banks in Los Angeles, asking if they had any account, any safety deposit boxes, or any record of business with the deceased, and that he had received a negative reply from each one.

The court found that on September 17, 1927, the plaintiff deposited $11,500 in cash with Mrs. Teeter at her request, upon the express agreement that she would hold such funds in trust for the plaintiff, and that she would repay or return said funds to the plaintiff on demand; that these parties had been living together for about five years as common-law husband and wife; that Mrs. Teeter died on April 19, 1928, and the defendant is the executor of her estate; that prior to her death no part of said funds had been returned by her to the plaintiff; that on March 27, 1928, in order to secure the return of part of said funds to the plaintiff, Mrs. Teeter had made the plaintiff the beneficiary in certain insurance policies, from which source the plaintiff has received $2,250; that on April 3, 1928, Mrs. Teeter purchased from the defendant bank a cashier's check for $8,000, made payable to herself or to this plaintiff, and that she deposited said check in her own private safety deposit box in said bank, where it was found after her death; that said sum of $11,500 was so intermingled with the assets of Mrs. Teeter that the said identical trust fund cannot be traced, and that all of the assets of Mrs. Teeter are now in possession of said bank as executor of her estate; that the plaintiff has demanded the cashier's check for $8,000 but delivery of the same has been refused; that the plaintiff presented to the executor of Mrs. Teeter's estate a verified claim for the obligation herein sued on; that the same was rejected on May 14, 1928; that no part of the said claim of $11,500 has been paid, except the sum of $2,250, and there remains "a balance due, owing and unpaid from the estate of Marie Bruton Teeter to the plaintiff herein in the sum of $9,250"; that the estate of Mrs. Teeter is solvent; and that the plaintiff John L. Holland is one and the same person as Jack Howard. A judgment for $9,250, with interest from the date of the presentation of the claim to the executor, followed, it being also ordered that this amount be paid to the plaintiff by the defendant "in the due course of the administration" of the estate of said deceased. From this judgment, the defendant has appealed.

This appeal is argued by both parties almost entirely upon the question of the validity of the judgment, with respect to the third cause of action. It is appellant's contention that neither the pleadings, evidence, findings, or judgment are sufficient to sustain a recovery upon the trust fund theory. It is argued that the evidence is not sufficiently convincing to establish a trust and, further, if the trust fund existed, it has not been traced into the hands of the executor of this estate. If we assume that a trust was here established, the main question presented would be the same as that in Byrne v. McGrath, 130 Cal. 316, 62 P. 559, 560, 80 Am. St. Rep. 127, namely, whether the plaintiff has "followed the trust fund in its mutations, and have sufficiently identified it to avoid the rule laid down in Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17 [89 Am. Dec. 141], which places the beneficiary who is unable so to follow the trust funds in the position of a general creditor of the estate." In Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, 89 Am. Dec. 141, the court said: "Neither the trust fund, nor any substitute for it, which can be identified as such, has come into the hands of the defendant. On the contrary, the trust estate is gone, or, which amounts to the same thing, its identity is entirely lost, for it is not shown to be in the hands of the defendant in its primary condition, or that it was converted by the defendant's testator into the property or any part of it now in the defendant's possession as executor."

In Roncelli v. Fugazi, 44 Cal. App. 249, 186 P. 373, 374, in which it was sought to recover from an administrator a sum of money claimed to have been given to the deceased in trust for the benefit of the plaintiff's intestate, the court said: "In order that the suit might be regarded as one in equity to recover a specific trust fund, it was necessary for the plaintiff to have alleged that the identical trust property, or its substituted new form, was traceable into the estate of Fugazi, and thus into the possession of his representatives. McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 42 P. 466; Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, 89 Am. Dec. 141. The complaint fails to meet this requirement. As stated in Orcutt v. Gould, 117 Cal. 315, 49 P. 188: 'To justify a recovery a beneficiary must be able to follow and identify the property, either in its original or substituted form.' And in the case of Lathrop v. Bampton, supra, in speaking of a money trust fund, the court said: 'The identity of a trust fund consisting of money may be preserved so long as it can be followed and distinguished from all other funds, not by identifying the individual pieces or coins, but by showing a separate and independent fund or value, readily distinguishable from all other funds.'

'Where a beneficiary is unable to identify a trust fund, or to follow it through its mutations, he is placed in the position of a general creditor. Byrne v. Byrne, 113 Cal. 294, 45 P. 536; Orcutt v. Gould, supra.'

In Estate of Arms, 186 Cal. 554, 199 P. 1053, 1055, the court said: "Where property, with the consent of the trustor, has been in that manner commingled with the property of the trustee, so that no part of it can be definitely traced and segregated from that held by the trustee, or identified as a part of any specific fund or property, none of it can be considered as the property of the trustor. 'The right of pursuing it fails when the means of ascertainment fails. This is always the case where the subject-matter is turned into money and mixed and confounded in a general mass of property of the same description.' Where the identity cannot be traced the trustor 'is forced to rely upon the personal liability of the trustee. * * * He has no special lien upon the general estate of the trustee which is superior to that of any other creditor,' and his only remedy is a personal action for damages or for money had and received. Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 23, 89 Am. Dec. 141. There are many other cases to the same effect. [Citing cases.] The case is different, of course, where the money or property of the trustor can be traced into a particular fund or deposit, where it still remains, though mingled with other money, or where it is used to establish a particular business which was continued in existence and is carried on by the trustee or some one taking from him with knowledge of the trust."

In Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 231 P. 987, 993, in which the plaintiff sought to recover the value of land obtained by fraud and sold, and in which the proceeds had already been distributed in the estate of the wrongdoer, the court said: "It is well settled, however, that one who claims as his own, adversely to an estate, specific property held and claimed by an estate, cannot be called a creditor of the estate within the meaning of the probate law, and is not required to present a claim. Estate of Dutard, 147 Cal. 253, 256, 81 P. 519. Therefore, unless it can be said that the complaint here shows on its face that the identical trust property, or its product in a new form, cannot be traced by the plaintiffs, the contention of the respondents must fail. When the money or property of the trustor can be traced into a particular fund or deposit, where it remains, though mingled with other money, the beneficiary may seek to follow the specific personal property and enforce the trust. Though the identical pieces of coin cannot be ascertained, yet if there is so much belonging to the trust in a general heap of private and trust funds, the cestui que trust is entitled to take so much out. Elizalde v. Elizalde, 137 Cal. 634, 641, 66 P. 369, 70 P. 861; Estate of Arms, 186 Cal. 554, 560, 199 P. 1053."

[1-3] While conceding these general rules, the respondent relies upon the case of Noble v. Noble, 198 Cal. 129, 243 P. 439, 442, 43 A. L. R. 1235, as conclusive upon this appeal. We do not so regard that case. In that action, the defendants were sued as trustees, and not as executors, for the purpose of recovering the proceeds of trust property which had been deposited in a bank. Certain real property had been conveyed in trust by a sister to her brother. With the sister's consent, this land was later exchanged for another parcel of realty. Later, that land was sold by the brother without the consent of the sister, and the proceeds of that sale were deposited in the brother's personal account in a bank. The action was brought after the brother's death, and the facts above given were found by the trial court. On appeal, all of the evidence not being before the court, the findings of the trial court were taken as controlling. In effect, the court held that this trustee could not, by the mere process of converting the trust property into money and depositing this in his personal account in a bank, relegate his trustor to the position of a general creditor of himself or of his solvent estate. In that case, the trust was established and the trust property, in its substituted form, was traced into a definite fund which actually came into the hands of the defendants. The court refused to hold that such a deposit of money in the personal account of a trustee in a bank would constitute such an intermingling of the trust funds as to obliterate the corpus of the trust, and quoted with approval from Newport v. Hatton, supra, as follows: "'when the money or property of the trustor can be traced into a particular fund or deposit, where it remains, though mingled with other money, the beneficiary may seek to follow the specific personal property and enforce the trust. Though the identical pieces of coin cannot be ascertained, yet if there is so much belonging to the trust in a general heap of private and trust funds, the cestui que trust is entitled to take so much out." But we see in the Noble Case no authority for the proposition that such an alleged trust fund need not be traced into some particular fund or property, or, in any event, traced into the hands of the defendant in some form. While it is not necessary to identify the identical coins in a mixed fund in a bank, it is as necessary to show that the trust fund has come into the possession of the defendant, as it is to establish that a trust originally existed. The complaint in the case before us recognizes such a necessity, and alleges "that subsequent to the death of said Marie Bruton Teeter said trust fund came into the possession of said defendant who now holds and is in possession of same." The trial court found that this $11,500 "was so intermingled with the assets of Mrs. Teeter that the said identical trust fund cannot be traced," and further found that "all of the assets" of Mrs. Teeter, upon her death, came into the possession of the defendant bank as the executor of her estate. If these two findings be considered as a finding that the $11,500 came into the hands of the executor, along with the assets of Mrs. Teeter, it is not supported by the evidence. The record is devoid of any evidence that the money in question was intermingled with any of her assets. The plaintiff testified that he did not know whether it was ever deposited in the bank, and he refused to answer the question whether he knew what she had done with it. There is no evidence that it was deposited in the bank, and the complete statement of her bank account indicates that it never was. Aside from a small amount of personal property in her apartment and about $50 in cash, it appears that the only property coming into the possession of her executor consisted of the deposits in the Bank of Italy and the check found in her safety deposit box. It might be said here, as was said in Gillespie v. Winn, 65 Cal. 429, 4 P. 411, 412: "Nor is it shown that the money which she received * * * ever came into the hands of defendant as such administrator, or otherwise. On the other hand, the only evidence introduced on the trial tends to prove the exact reverse." There is absolutely no evidence of any intermingling of the $11,500 with any fund she had, and none that it came into the possession of the executor in any form. The record is barren of any evidence as to what she did with that sum, if, in fact, she ever received it. She may have placed it where it has not been found by her executor, she may have given it away, or she may have lost it in the manner in which the respondent acquired it. But in the absence of any evidence that it came into the hands of the appellant, it may not be reclaimed as a trust fund. In this case, as in the case of Lathrop v. Bampton, supra, the trust fund "is not shown to be in the hands of the defendant in its primary condition, or that it was converted by the defendant's testator into the property or any part of it now in the defendant's possession as executor."

[4, 5] To establish a trust requires clear and convincing evidence. Austin v. Wilcoxson, 149 Cal. 24, 84 P. 417; Moulton v. Moulton, 182 Cal. 185, 187 P. 421. While considerable latitude must be given to a trial court in deciding such a question of fact, we hesitate to say that this requirement has been met in this case. The language used by the plaintiff in relating his version of what occurred when he handed her the money, and the meager and unsatisfactory evidence of an admission claimed to have been made by the deceased to the insurance agent, seem far from convincing. This is especially true in view of the contradictory statements made by the plaintiff, the contradictory statements made by the insurance agent, the latest statement made by the deceased to the effect that she had paid her debt by the assignment of an insurance policy, and the circumstances in connection with the $8,000 check. Plaintiff's refusal to answer questions upon the taking of his deposition, and his absence from the trial making an adequate cross-examination impossible, are more than ordinarily to be regretted in a case of this character, where the lips of the other party to the alleged agreement are sealed by death. While the testimony of the respondent was admissible, in spite of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in an action to establish a trust, this is but an added reason why the usual rules for establishing a trust should be fully applied. Nor do we read the Noble Case as doing away with such general rules. To hold that it is not necessary to identify particular coins in a composite bank account, when a trust is established and its proceeds are traced into such an account, is far from holding that clear and convincing evidence is not necessary to establish a trust, and that it is not necessary to trace the trust funds into some fund or property which has come into the hands of a defendant.

[6] Not only do we think the findings in this case are not supported by the evidence, but the judgment does not follow the findings as to the establishment of a trust. The judgment is against the executor as such, and not as a trustee, and it further provides that it shall be payable in the course of administration. If a trust was established and traced into the hands of the defendant, then the trust fund is no part of the estate. And the conclusions of law, after stating that the claim was presented to the executor and rejected, are to the effect that the estate is "indebted" to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against the defendant "as executor of the estate of Marie Bruton Teeter, deceased," with interest from date of presentation of the claim; and that the amount "so found due to the plaintiff herein as aforesaid" be paid to the plaintiff by the defendant in the due course of the administration of said estate.

[7] Respondent argues that, even though it be held that the evidence and findings are not sufficient to establish a trust as alleged in the third cause of action, they are sufficient to establish a loan as alleged in the first cause of action. While it is conceded that the plaintiff's testimony may not be considered in that connection, it is contended that the testimony of the insurance agent as to the statement made to him by the deceased, together with the assignment of the insurance policies and the finding of the cashier's check in the safety deposit box, is sufficient to make out a prima facie case on the first cause of action. Opposed to this is the other evidence, that on September 17, 1927, Mrs. Teeter had about $11,000 in her savings account, indicating no need for a loan; that she tried to find a way to make a bequest to a male friend in a manner that should not become known; that she secured a cashier's check payable either to herself or to the respondent, and retained this in her possession; that the insurance agent's first statement to the banker was that she had told him that the assignment of the insurance policies was to pay what she owed to the new beneficiary; that the respondent told the banker that the insurance policies were assigned to him for money he had given her at odd times in small amounts, the total of which was unknown to him; and that she told the banker, when making her will, that she had taken care of her debt by means of her insurance policies. Under the circumstances, it would be a close question, at best, whether the evidence is sufficient to sustain such a finding had it been made. But the fact remains that the court made no such finding. There is no finding that any money was loaned to her, and no finding that the estate is indebted to the plaintiff. The conclusion of law that the estate is indebted to the plaintiff is drawn from the findings which, though somewhat uncertain, purport only to find that the money was delivered to Mrs. Teeter in trust. Nor would we care to make such a finding when the evidence is so close, and when, as we think, the preponderance thereof is the other way. Viewed from the standpoint of either cause of action, we think this case should go back for a new trial.

While it is settled that section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application where a trust is sought to be established, and while equity may give relief in a proper case, the claim of a trust fund should not be allowed merely for the purpose of circumventing the provisions of section 1880, nor unless a case is presented which clearly comes within the established rules.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

---

---

BOYCE v. SAN DIEGO UNION HIGH SCHOOL DIST. OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al.*
Civ. 401.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.
July 2, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1931. Hearing
Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 31,
1931.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨724.

At common law, municipal corporation is not liable for negligence in exercise of governmental functions.

2. Schools and school districts ⇨89.

As regards liability for negligence, usual and ordinary use of school district's auditorium for school purposes was exercise of "governmental function" (St. 1923, p. 675).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Governmental Function," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Municipal corporations ⇨734.

Public building may be used by political subdivision in governmental and proprietary capacity.

4. Schools and school districts ⇨89.

Liability for injury to man in school district's auditorium when used in governmental capacity held liability, if any, for negligence in exercise of governmental function, though building was sometimes leased for private purposes (St. 1923, p. 675).

5. Appeal and error ⇨172(2).

In action by alleged invitee for injury sustained when falling into pit in school district auditorium basement, appellate court could not consider negligence of employee, not alleged (St. 1923, p. 675, §§ 1, 2).

Since liability for negligence of school district's agent or employee in exercise of governmental function must be based upon St. 1923, p. 675, § 1, and it was not alleged in complaint nor was any attempt made at trial to bring case within provisions of such section, appellate court, in considering sufficiency of evidence, had to conclude that injuries resulted solely from dangerous or defective condition of air duct in which pit into which alleged invitee fell was constructed, and could not consider possible negligence of district's electrical superintendent in not warning invitee of dangers ahead, or possible negligence of any employees of district in so adjusting light switches that electric light near one door of air corridor was not illuminated when superintendent threw switch at head of stairs.

6. Schools and school districts ⇨115.

One suing school district for injuries when district exercised governmental function could predicate action only upon statutory grounds (St. 1923, p. 675, §§ 1, 2).

7. Schools and school districts ⇨121.

Burden of proving dangerous or defective condition of premises held upon one suing school district for injuries (St. 1923, p. 675, §§ 1, 2).

8. Schools and school districts ⇨121.

Evidence held not to show dangerous or defective condition of school auditorium air duct containing pit into which plaintiff fell while inspecting duct (St. 1923, p. 675, §§ 1, 2).

9. Schools and school districts ⇨89.

That lights illuminating air duct which injured plaintiff was inspecting had been turned off, not having been brought to attention of those in authority, held not to render school authorities liable (St. 1923, p. 675, §§ 1, 2).

Negligence of school district's employees was not involved in case, plaintiff having sought to recover only on theory of defective condition of premises.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by William M. Boyce against the San Diego Union High School District of the County of San Diego and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Stearns, Luce & Forward, of San Diego, for appellants.

Arthur F. H. Wright and E. V. Winnek, both of San Diego, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon the verdict of the jury in an action for damages for personal injuries suffered by respondent from a fall into a pit in a duct or air conduit in the basement of the Russ Auditorium, one of the buildings belonging to the San Diego High School district and used by it for school purposes, and under the control of its board of trustees. The jury returned a verdict in the sum of $5,000, which was reduced to $3,500 at the time of the hearing of appellants' motion for new trial.

The evidence discloses that respondent was a member of a copartnership dealing in and installing electrical motors and other electrical appliances. Harry C. Bertolucci was the electrical superintendent for the San Diego High School district and in charge of the operation and maintenance of the electrical equipment in and upon the high school buildings and grounds.

The Russ Auditorium was erected in the year 1925, and was used for assemblies, programs and other school activities. It was occasionally rented by the district for private use.

In October, 1928, the school employees found that the heating and ventilating system in the Russ Auditorium was not functioning to their satisfaction. When in operation, the rear of the auditorium was overheated and little, if any, heat reached the stage. A few days before the 22d of October, 1928, Bertolucci communicated with respondent and asked him to look at the motor which operated a blower in the heating and ventilating system to see if the fault lay in this machine. It is admitted that respondent hoped that, as one of the results of his tour of inspection he might sell to the high school district a new motor in the place of the one which he was to examine.

On October 22, 1928, respondent, with Herbert Cordes, the San Diego manager of a corporation selling electrical equipment, went to the Russ Auditorium to inspect the motor in question. Bertolucci met them at the entrance of the auditorium and conducted them into the basement, where the heating apparatus was situated. The door leading to the basement was kept securely locked. On the day in question Bertolucci unlocked the door and proceeded with his two companions into the basement and into the fan room, in which the motor and blower were situated in a pit, the bottom of which was several feet below the floor of the balance of the room. Respondent descended into this pit and inspected the motor and blower, which he found sufficient and suitable for the work required of them. He told Bertolucci that the trouble was not with this part of the heating apparatus, but that it was probably with the ducts used to conduct the hot air from the blower and the electrically heated coils in front of it, to the various parts of the auditorium. It was then suggested that they examine the air ducts to see if they were in any manner defective and responsible for the uneven distribution of the heat.

The main air duct or air corridor, which extended nearly across the building in a northerly and southerly direction, was in the same end of the basement as the blower and was separated from the blower room and storage rooms by a concrete wall extending entirely across the basement. This wall was pierced by two doors, which were kept closed by mechanical devices and securely fastened by iron latches, but were not locked. The only other opening from the blower room and the adjoining rooms to the main air duct or corridor was an opening for the passage of air leading through this wall from the fan and blower pit to a pit on the opposite side of the wall. Extending along this wall and to within a few feet of each exterior foundation wall of the auditorium was this main air duct or corridor or passageway used for the distribution of the hot air into three air ducts extending longitudinally to or nearly to the opposite or stage end of the auditorium. For lack of a better name, we will refer to this main air duct or passageway first mentioned as the air corridor. In the center of this air corridor was a cement-lined pit which was more than eight feet long, about five and one-half feet deep, and which occupied the entire width of the corridor. In each end of this pit was a five-rung ladder extending from its top to its bottom. The bottom of this pit was slightly higher than the floor of the pit in the fan room, where the motor and blower were situated. The air corridor was lighted with two electric lights situated near the doors leading into it, each of them being fifteen feet or more from the ends of the pit.

On October 22, 1928, when Bertolucci, respondent, and Cordes decided to inspect the air distributing system and air ducts, Bertolucci led respondent and Cordes from the fan and blower room to the southerly storage room and then to the door at the northerly end of this room, which led into the air corridor. He opened this door and found the air corridor in darkness except for the light that came in through the open door. He told his companions to wait until he turned on the lights. Respondent stood in or just inside the doorway and Cordes held the door open. Bertolucci went up a flight of stairs to a panel board controlling the lights and threw an electrical switch illuminating the northerly light in the air corridor, this light being approximately forty feet from the door in which respondent was standing. When this light came on respondent started into the air corridor and proceeded northerly therein for a distance of about eight feet, when he fell into the pit which we have described and was seriously injured. He called to Cordes not to follow him, as he had fallen into a hole. As soon as Bertolucci came down the stairs, Cordes told him what respondent had said and Bertolucci turned a switch near the door through which they had entered and illuminated the southerly light. This light was sufficient to show the southerly edge of the pit and with both illuminated the entire pit was plainly visible. It is not disputed that with only the northerly light in the corridor illuminated the southerly edge of the pit was in darkness and could not easily be seen by one walking northerly in the corridor from the door through which respondent had entered.

On this state of facts appellants seriously urge that the evidence is not sufficient to support the judgment. They urge various other specifications of error, which can all be included under this one head.

[1] It is well settled that at common law a municipal corporation or other political subdivision exercising governmental functions is not liable for damages resulting from the negligence of its officers, agents, and employees in the use or exercise of these governmental functions. As was said in the case of Kellar v. City of Los Angeles, 179 Cal. 605, 178 P. 505, 506: "It is thoroughly settled in this state that, in the absence of a statute imposing the liability, a municipality is not liable on account of acts such as those here complained of, unless the negligence was in the matter of the exercise of functions private and proprietary in their nature as distinguished from functions purely governmental in nature."

What are governmental functions is defined in the case of Chafar v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 P. 670, 674, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106, as follows: "Nor is it difficult to set forth the definition of governmental functions as applied to a city. Under the theory of the common law, that the municipality is protected from liability only while exercising the delegated functions of sovereignty, the governmental powers of a city are those pertaining to the making and enforcing of police regulations, to prevent crime, to preserve the public health, to prevent fires, the caring for the poor, and the education of the young. And in the performance of these functions all buildings and instrumentalities connected therewith come under the application of the principle. City of Kokomo v. Loy, 185 Ind. 18, 112 N. E. 994."

[2-4] It cannot be disputed that in the usual and ordinary use of the Russ Auditorium for school purposes appellants were exercising a governmental function, and that therefore the San Diego High School district can only be held for damages, if at all, under the provisions of an act of the Legislature approved June 13, 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 675). Respondent seeks to escape the rigors of this rule on the ground that the auditorium was occasionally rented by appellants for private use.

He urges that, because it was occasionally rented, its use came under the proprietary instead of the governmental functions of the San Diego High School district, and that the district would therefore be liable for damages resulting from the negligence of the district or any of its officers, servants, agents, or employees acting within the scope of their employment.

It is well settled by a long line of decisions that a public building may be used by a political subdivision in both its governmental and proprietary capacity. The rule measuring its liability under such circumstances is stated in 19 Ruling Case Law, page 1112, as follows: "A municipal corporation is not liable merely because it derives an income from a purely governmental work rather than suffer waste, if the income is purely incidental to the main purpose of the work, but if it devotes property acquired for governmental purposes to private purposes for revenue, when not needed for the use for which it was required, it subjects itself to the danger of common law liability while the private use continues. Such liability does not, however, pervade once and for all the entire municipal department which derives the revenue, but extends merely to the building used or individuals working for profit while so used or working." (Italics ours.)

The fact that such a building as the Russ Auditorium belonging to a political subdivision was occasionally rented for private use does not change the general fact of its usual use for governmental purposes. It may be true that, if at the time of the accident in question the auditorium had been rented for a private entertainment and respondent had been injured while attending such entertainment and his injuries caused by the negligence of appellants or their representatives, a judgment in his favor might be sustained, because, for the time being and during the time the auditorium was so rented, a liability might attach under the responsibility of a political subdivision acting in a proprietary and not a governmental capacity. However, such are not the facts in the instant case. The injury to respondent occurred when the building was not leased for private purposes, but when it was being used by the high school district in its governmental capacity.

It has been repeatedly held in California that the collection of rent or revenue by a political subdivision in connection with the use of its property owned, possessed, and used by it in its governmental capacity will not of itself render such political subdivision liable for damages in its proprietary capacity. As was said in the case of Manning v. City of Pasadena, 58 Cal. App. 666, 209 P. 253, 254:

"As we understand the appellant, its position is that, without regard to what may be the rule in other states, the facts of this case do not show that at the time of the accident the city of Pasadena was engaged in the garbage business for profit, and therefore the respondent did not bring himself within any exception to the above rule that cities, as subordinate agencies of the state, are intrusted with the exercise of limited governmental powers for the benefit of the local public in the performance of which, in this state, there being no statutory provision to the contrary [this case was decided prior to 1923], they are not liable for the negligence of their officers, agents and servants through whom they act. The most that can be said in favor of the respondent's position is that the evidence before the trial court showed that in collecting the garbage the city of Pasadena did not lose every dollar it expended, but that it recouped some of its expenses by virtue of its sales. The fact that it collected some moneys to cover expenses did not ipso facto render the city liable to the same rules that would apply to private individuals. In performing the function of collecting garbage and disposing of the same in a sanitary method, and in enacting the ordinance above mentioned and enforcing its provisions, the city was acting within its police powers. In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 328, 81 P. 955. Conceding, without deciding, that when thereafter, at the incinerator and after the garbage had been gathered together, the city offered the same for sale and did sell the same, that therein and thereby it was performing a purely private business function; it suffices to point out that the accident in question did not arise in the performance of this last-mentioned function, but did arise in the performance of the above-mentioned function of gathering the garbage together. The fact that the city of Pasadena sold the garbage after it had been collected did not operate to convert a governmental function into a proprietary function. The question involved in this case in this state is not an open one.

* * *

"Any doubt that may exist on the subject seems to be entirely removed by the case entitled Kellar v. City of Los Angeles, 179 Cal. 605, 178 P. 505. The city of Los Angeles had purchased and was maintaining in the San Bernardino mountains a park—"for the purpose of giving any children of said city, at certain prescribed charges to be paid by said children to said city, a vacation, with care, board, and lodging at said camp." The plaintiff had gone to the camp under an agreement by which, in consideration of $3.75 per week to be paid by him, he was to be received and cared for, boarded, and lodged for two consecutive weeks. While there he accidentally fell and broke his arm. The alleged negligence was the failure to provide the necessary care and attention, in view of his injury, occasioning very serious results. There, as here, it was contended that the defendant was engaged in a business enterprise. The court held otherwise. It held that the city was in the due exercise of one of its governmental powers; and regarding the recoupment of expenses the court said (179 Cal. at page 610, 178 P. 507): "That a small charge is made upon those children going to and staying at the camp, for the purpose of assisting in defraying the cost of maintenance of such children while at the camp, does not change the situation."

It seems clear, therefore, that the liability of the appellants, if any, to respondent for damages for the injuries suffered by him must be found in the statute creating such responsibility. Stats. 1923, p. 675. Section 2 of this act is as follows: "Counties, municipalities and school districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works and property in all cases where the governing or managing board of such county, municipality, school district, or other board, officer or person having authority to remedy such condition, had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition of any such street, highway, building, grounds, works or property and failed or neglected, for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice, to remedy such condition or failed and neglected for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to take such action as may be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous or defective condition."

[5] Under the provisions of this section the appellants incur no liability from the negligence of any of their agents or employees, since such a liability must be based upon the first section of the act which we have cited. It was not alleged in the complaint, nor was any attempt made at the trial to bring the case within the provisions of said section 1. Therefore, to sustain the judgment we must conclude that the injuries to respondent resulted solely from the dangerous or defective condition of the air corridor in which was constructed the pit into which he fell. We cannot consider any possible negligence on the part of Bertolucci in not warning respondent of the dangers ahead of him or in the possible negligence of any of the employees of the appellants in so adjusting the light switches that the electric light near the southerly door of the air corridor was not illuminated when Bertolucci threw the switch at the head of the stairs and illuminated the northerly light in this air corridor. We must conclude that the air corridor itself, as it was maintained, was in a dangerous or defective condition, which condition alone was the proximate cause of the injuries to respondent.

[6-9] In considering this phase of the case we will make the following assumptions which must be resolved in favor of respondent to enable him to recover: First, that respondent was an invitee of the appellants on the premises at the time of the accident. Second, that the members of the board of education of the San Diego High School district had knowledge and notice of the condition of the pit and the air corridor in which the accident happened, except that they had no notice that one of the lights was not illuminated at the time of the accident. Third, that for a reasonable time after such notice the board of trustees neglected to remedy such condition, without conceding that there was a dangerous or defective condition therein. Fourth, that the injuries to respondent were proximately caused by his fall into the pit in the air corridor. Fifth, that respondent was not guilty of any negligence that contributed in any manner to his injury.

1 P.(2d)—66

We make these assumptions, not because we are convinced that all, or any of them, are justified and supported by the evidence, but by assuming their correctness, and because of the view we take of the case, it will be unnecessary to consider them further.

This leaves the sole question to be considered by us as follows: Was the air corridor in a dangerous or defective condition at the time of the accident, within the meaning of the statute?

In answering this question, we cannot overlook the fact that the air corridor was constructed and maintained for the purpose of conducting air to various parts of the auditorium and not as a walk or passageway for human beings.

We conclude that the intended use of the air corridor is the controlling factor of this case. What would be a dangerous condition in a sidewalk, road, or other place intended for vehicular traffic or the passage of individuals, would not be a dangerous or defective condition when intended for the purpose of conveying air. This same question was considered in the case of Beeson v. City of Los Angeles (Cal. App.) 300 P. 993, where it was said: "In all of the cases thus far decided the injured party was using the street in which he was injured, or the property which caused the injury, in the usual and ordinary manner in which it was contemplated that the street or property would be used. We are of the opinion that in passing and adopting section two of the act approved June 13, 1923, the Legislature intended to limit the liability of the city for damages resulting from defective streets, works, or property to damages suffered in the ordinary, usual, and customary use thereof. As was said in the case of Commonwealth v. Allen, 148 Pa. 358, 23 A. 1115, 1117, 16 L. R. A. 148, 33 Am. St. Rep. 830: 'As a general rule, highways and bridges are constructed for ordinary use, in an ordinary manner, and not for an unusual or extraordinary use, either by crossing at great speed or by the passing of a very large and unusual weight. A township is not bound to do more than to so construct its bridges as to protect the public against injury by a reasonable, proper, and probable use thereof, in view of the surrounding circumstances, such as the extent, kind, and nature of the travel and business over them.'"

As we have observed before, the Russ Auditorium was constructed in 1925. As far as appears from the record, no changes were made in the lighting, heating, or ventilating systems between that time and the time of the accident in question. Therefore, if the air corridor was in a dangerous or defective condition at the time of the injury of respondent, exclusive of the question of one light not being illuminated therein, this condition dates back to the construction of the building, and saying that it was then in such a condition is synonymous with saying that the details of construction of the air corridor were dangerous and defective.

Respondent can only predicate his action upon the grounds of suit given by the statute. The burden of proving a dangerous or defective condition, which in this case must amount to a dangerous or defective design of construction, rests upon him. In order to sustain his right of action the jurors, as ordinarily intelligent persons, must have had before them evidence from which they might have drawn the reasonable conclusion that the air corridor was so constructed that reasonable precautions were omitted for the safety of the very inconsiderable number of humans which might be expected to use it as a way for their passage.

There is no conflict in the evidence as to the details of the construction of the air corridor and its exact condition at the time respondent fell into the pit. Two lights were provided in it, and when they were both illuminated the pit was clearly visible to a person using the corridor.

If both the lights had been illuminated when respondent went into the air corridor he could have seen the pit and the danger. The evidence is clear and uncontradicted upon this point. Therefore, if the safeguards provided by appellants for the benefit of one using the air corridor had been in working order and in use at the time, respondent could have seen the pit and would not have fallen into it if he had employed his sense of vision and been reasonably diligent for his own safety.

Omitting from consideration any question of contributory negligence in walking into an insufficiently lighted corridor that was constructed to convey air and not primarily as a passageway for human beings, it seems clear from the evidence that the dangerous or defective condition of the air corridor, if there was such a condition, was caused, not by the lack of safety appliances, in this case lights, but in the failure to use them, or, in other words, to have both lights in such condition that they would be illuminated simultaneously.

The lights were evidently controlled by the main switch at the top of the stairs and also by individual switches near each of them. Some one had so manipulated the southerly switch that the light controlled by it was not illuminated when the main switch was thrown on. This was an act of an individual and not a fault of construction, unless it can be said that there should have been but one control switch for both lights, which we think too far-fetched to need consideration.

Under the provisions of section 2 of the act, which we have quoted, it is necessary that the dangerous and defective condition be brought to the attention of those in authority for a sufficient time prior to the accident to have enabled them to have it corrected. None of the trustees, nor their responsible representatives, had any intimation that this light had been turned off. The discovery of this fact was almost simultaneous with the injury to respondent. Therefore, if this fact rendered the condition of the air corridor defective or dangerous, it was not brought to the attention of those in authority and having power to remedy it before the accident, and therefore no responsibility attaches to appellants by reason of the injuries to respondent resulting therefrom.

This is not an action for damages against any of the employees of the San Diego High School district. The negligence of any of them is not involved here. While such negligence might have been the proximate cause of the injuries to respondent, he has not sought to recover from those employees who might have been guilty of such negligence, but from the high school district, which is not responsible.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 333

HARVEY v. ACEVES.
Civ. 163.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 6, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

1. Negligence ⇨136(8).

Contributory negligence becomes question of law only when facts are undisputed and only one conclusion can be drawn.

2. Automobiles ⇨220(3).

Passenger alighting from street car could reasonably expect no other automobile would suddenly come up, and pass automobile which had stopped (St. 1923, p. 560, § 134).

3. Automobiles ⇨245(76).

Whether passenger, struck by automobile while alighting from street car, was contributorily negligent held for jury (St. 1923, p. 560, § 134).

4. Trial ⇨253(1).

"Formula instruction" must contain all conditions necessary to verdict.

"Formula instruction" is instruction intended to be complete statement of law upon which jury may base verdict.

5. Trial ⇨234(4).

Instruction on burden of proof respecting contributory negligence, not purporting to state law upon which plaintiff might or might not recover, held not "formula instruction."

6. Trial ⇨296(7).

Instruction that defendant must show contributory negligence was "the" proximate cause of plaintiff's injury held cured by instructions correctly stating law.

Not only was matter complained of covered in other instructions, but correct rule of law was so specifically stated and restated to jury that it would be unreasonable to hold that verdict arrived at could have been based upon mistaken use of "the" instead of "a" in portion of instruction complained of, especially since it was surrounded and covered with other correct expressions.

7. Trial ⇨295(7).

All instructions upon contributory negligence should be taken together.

8. Release ⇨13(1), 24(2).

Payment of $100 to injured party, by motorist under suspended sentence for reckless driving conditioned upon motorist's payment thereof, held not "compromise" or "settlement" of civil action, nor was tender or return of money necessary to maintain action (Pen. Code, §§ 1377-1379).

Circumstances disclosed that, following defendant motorist's collision with plaintiff pedestrian, defendant was charged before justice of peace and found guilty of reckless driving in connection with accident. Justice, having learned that family of pedestrian was in want, gave defendant suspended sentence upon condition that she contribute something to well-being of pedestrian's family "for the present time," which amount was later paid in defendant's behalf. Evidence showed that Pen. Code, §§ 1377-1379, respecting compromises of offenses, were not complied with, and there was no agreement that pedestrian accepted money as satisfaction for his injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Compromise" and "Settle; Settlement," see Words and Phrases.]

9. Judgment ⇨875.

Payment to injured pedestrian in motorist's behalf, made to satisfy condition of suspended sentence for temporary relief of distress, held not to be credited upon civil judgment for pedestrian.

10. Appeal and error ⇨932(1).

Matter of payment to injured pedestrian having been presented to jury, defendant not having asked for credit, and pleadings not having been called to appellate court's attention, court assumed that judgment covered only damages shown to have been suffered by pedestrian irrespective of such payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by Samuel Harvey against Edythe L. Aceves. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Edward J. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellant.

Adam Thompson, Renwick Thompson, and Gordon Thompson, all of San Diego, for respondent.

BARNARD, P. J.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff based upon the verdict of a jury, in an action for damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff was struck by an automobile driven by the defendant, at a street intersection in the city of San Diego, just after he had alighted from a street car in which he had been a passenger. He had taken but one or two steps away from the street car toward the curb, when the automobile struck him, knocking him from 10 to 15 feet and seriously injuring him. The automobile proceeded across the street intersection, up over the curb, across the sidewalk, and crashed through the front porch of a house, where it came to a stop, approximately 99 feet from where the plaintiff lay.

[1] The first point urged by appellant, as a reason for reversal, is that it conclusively appears that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence. This contention is based in part upon certain statements made by the respondent to the effect that when the door of the car was opened, he got off and was struck when he was taking the second step; that he did not see the automobile driven by appellant at any time before it struck him; that the automobile was going so fast he couldn't tell much about it; that before he stepped off the street car he looked toward the rear to see if there were any automobiles approaching; that he saw only one which had stopped behind the car; that he stepped off frontwards; that he looked around to see if there was anything coming before he got off; and that before he got off the street car and after the door was opened, he looked with his head outside the door but did not see any automobile approaching until he was struck. In addition, appellant relies upon certain testimony to the effect that as she approached the intersection in question, she was traveling parallel to the street car, about five feet on the right-hand side thereof; that as she approached the intersection the street car kept on as though no stop was intended, and actually passed over the pedestrian lane before it stopped; that when she first noticed the street car slowing down its front was about at the prolongation of the nearest curb line of the cross street, at which time she was traveling about twelve miles per hour; and that as the street car passed over the pedestrian path she was driving about opposite the center of the street car. From this evidence it is argued that respondent either did not look at all or, if he did, did not look with sufficient caution. It is further argued that he is presumed to have seen what he could or should have seen; that there is no evidence of excessive speed on the part of appellant; and that the automobile must have been very close to him and plainly visible when he stepped from the street car. It is earnestly insisted that these facts disclose contributory negligence on the part of the respondent, as a matter of law. In support of this contention appellant cites the following cases: Lord v. Stacy, 68 Cal. App. 517, 229 P. 874; Barnett v. Railroad Co., 99 Cal. App. 310, 278 P. 443; Koster v. Southern Pacific Co., 207 Cal. 753, 279 P. 788; Young v. Railroad Co., 208 Cal. 568,

283 P. 61; Niosi v. Empire Steam Laundry, 117 Cal. 257, 49 P. 185; Davis v. Breuner Co., 167 Cal. 683, 140 P. 586; Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A. L. R. 1493. We think, however, that none of these cases are controlling under the facts before us. Under well-established rules the question of contributory negligence becomes one of law rather than one of fact, only when the facts are undisputed and when they are such that only one conclusion on the issue of plaintiff's negligence can be drawn therefrom by reasonable minds. As was said in the case of White v. Davis, 103 Cal. App. 531, 284 P. 1086, 1091: "Where the injured party fails to look at all, or looks straight ahead without glancing to either side, or is in a position where he cannot see, or, in other words, where he takes no precaution at all for his own safety, it is usually a question for the court. Where he looks but does not see an approaching automobile, or, seeing one, erroneously misjudges its speed or distance, or for some other reason assumes he could avoid injury to himself, the question is usually one for the jury."

[2, 3] While appellant testified that the street car had passed its usual stopping place and stopped suddenly near the center of the intersection, when a man swung off the car directly into her path, there was abundant testimony by other witnesses, most of them disinterested, that several passengers had signaled their desire to alight at this street; that the street car stopped at the usual stopping place in the pedestrian lane; that it came to a stop gradually; that the street car doors, which were at the front end of the car, were not opened until the car had stopped; and that the plaintiff looked and saw one automobile stopped behind the street car, but saw no other automobile approaching. The driver of the automobile which had stopped behind the street car testified that he saw the street car was stopping and stopped about ten feet behind it, and that while so stopped, the appellant's car passed him at a rate of speed which he estimated at between 25 and 30 miles an hour. The appellant testified on cross-examination that shortly after the accident she signed a statement in which she said she saw the street car was going to stop and speeded up to pass it, and that just before she speeded up she was going about 20 miles an hour. There was evidence that her automobile completely tore a porch away from a house, ninety-nine feet beyond the point where the respondent was knocked, leaving the porch column hanging. The evidence is sufficient to show that the intersection is what is known as a blind corner, within the meaning of the California Vehicle Act, there being a business building on the corner which interfered with the vision of the appellant, as she approached. As in force at the time of this accident, section 134 of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 560) read in part as follows: "In passing any railroad, interurban or street car while passengers are alighting from or boarding the same, vehicles shall be operated or driven on the right-hand side of such cars and at a rate of speed not exceeding ten miles an hour and no portion thereof or of any load thereon shall come within six feet of the running board or steps of such cars, and shall at all times be operated with due care and caution so that the safety of such passengers shall be assured."

* * *

There was evidence that there were no safety zones or police officers or traffic signals at the corner in question. Not only was the evidence sufficient, as admitted by appellant, to show negligence upon her part, but it is of such a nature as to make the question of contributory negligence on the part of the respondent rather clearly one of fact, and not one of law. The evidence is conflicting. The respondent took some precaution for his own safety. It by no means appears that reasonable minds could only draw the conclusion that the plaintiff was negligent, especially in view of the duty imposed upon the appellant by law, not to pass that intersection at an excessive rate of speed, and, in passing the street car while passengers were alighting therefrom, to operate her automobile "with due care and caution so that the safety of such passengers shall be assured." The evidence warrants the assumption that the appellant, at a rapid rate of speed, passed another automobile the driver of which had observed that the street car was stopping, and who had stopped ten feet behind it, and then passed the standing street car. The inference might reasonably be drawn that when the plaintiff looked and saw the other automobile stopped behind the street car, the machine driven by the appellant was some distance back, and it may even have been sufficiently to the rear of the street car to have been not visible. In any event, respondent could reasonably have expected that no other automobile would suddenly come up and pass the automobile he saw standing there, and rapidly pass the street car while he was alighting therefrom. Under the evidence and the reasonable inferences that could be drawn therefrom, it cannot be said that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. See Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 182 P. 281; Bolles v. Boone, 66 Cal. App. 238, 225 P. 775; Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 242, 137 P. 1078; Koehl v. Carpenter, 47 Cal. App. 642, 191 P. 43. Under such circumstances, we think the issue of the contributory negligence of the respondent was properly submitted to the jury.

[4-7] Appellant also contends that, assuming the issue of contributory negligence was properly left to the jury, the court committed reversible error in instructing the jury as follows: "You are further instructed that, where contributory negligence is pleaded as a defense to an action, the burden of proof of such contributory negligence, as alleged in this case,—is on the defendant; and contributory negligence cannot be presumed,—but must be proved by the party alleging it. Contributory negligence is an affirmative defense to be established by the defendant, and such contributory negligence as alleged by said defendant herein, must be shown by a preponderance of the evidence to have been the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury."

The portion shown in italics is the part criticized. It is argued that this, in connection with the correct definition of proximate cause given by the court, in effect instructed the jury that in order to sustain her defense of contributory negligence, it was necessary for appellant to establish that the negligence of the plaintiff was the sole and only cause of the injuries of which he complains. While it is admitted that the jury was elsewhere correctly instructed as to the law governing the issue of contributory negligence, it is argued that this does not cure the error for the reason that the instruction complained of is what is known as a "formula" instruction. It is of course true that a formula instruction, that is, one intended to be a complete statement of the law upon which the jury may base a verdict, must contain all of the conditions which are necessary to such a verdict. Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 264 P. 237, 238. In that case the instruction complained of left out of consideration the subject of contributory negligence and proximate cause, although the instruction told the jury that its verdict should be in favor of the plaintiff, if they should find certain things to be true. The court held that it was intended as an instruction only upon one branch of the case and did not purport to be a complete statement of the law upon which the plaintiffs might recover. In commenting thereon, the court said: "We are not prepared to say, however, that said instruction was given to, or accepted by, the jury as a 'formula' instruction." In the case of Saltzen v. Associated Oil Co., 198 Cal. 157, 244 P. 338, 339, it was claimed that a second instruction upon the subject of burden of proof was contradictory to a prior instruction on the same subject, in connection with contributory negligence. The court said: "In said first given instruction the court was dealing specifically, expressly, and only with the subject of contributory negligence, and the jury could not have misunderstood its plain and explicit terms. In the second of said instructions the subject of contributory negligence was not mentioned, and it is difficult to see how its generalities, however inapt, could have wrought confusion in the minds of the jurors upon that subject. The older rule that injury was to be presumed from error has not obtained in this court since the decision of the case of Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 554, 147 P. 238, and the cases which the appellant J. D. Saltzen cites as upholding his above contention do not, when examined, sustain it. In the case of Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 248, 107 P. 309, there was a specific instruction which was erroneous and highly prejudicial, and this court held that the error created thereby would not be cured by a merely general instruction correctly stating the rule but giving it no specific application. The reverse of that situation is presented here wherein we find that the specific instruction correctly sets forth the rule as to where the burden of showing contributory negligence lies, and the utmost that the appellant J. D. Saltzen can claim is that its effect has been destroyed by the later giving of a general instruction which, however erroneous, does not purport to cover the subject to which the correct and specific instruction relates."

In Alloggi v. Southern Pacific Co., 37 Cal. App. 72, 173 P. 1117, 1119, the court said: "We are not unmindful of the rule that conflicting and contradictory instructions upon a material phase of the case require a reversal where it cannot be ascertained from the record before us which instruction prevailed or was likely to prevail with the jury. While it is true that the instruction complained of in the present case is erroneous, and in a measure in conflict with several other instructions which correctly stated the rule of law relative to contributory negligence, nevertheless the correct rule of law was so specifically stated and restated to the jury that we feel that the idea in the several correct instructions must have preponderated in the considerations of the jury, and that as a consequence the erroneous instruction neither contributed to nor controlled the verdict."

In Squier v. Davis Standard Bread Co., 181 Cal. 533, 185 P. 391, 392, the court said: "The court, after charging as to the duty of the driver of an overtaking vehicle to sound an audible signal before passing a vehicle proceeding in the same direction, and after instructing the jury that if plaintiff was under such a duty and failed to sound his horn he was guilty of negligence, continued to the effect that if such negligence was found to be 'the proximate cause' of the injury, the verdict should be against the plaintiff. Appellants insist that the use of the article 'the' instead of the article 'a' before the words 'proximate cause' constituted reversible error. The sentence containing the objectionable words is immediately preceded by a sentence requiring the jury to determine whether plaintiff's negligence, if any, was 'a proximate cause' of the injuries received by him. Moreover, the jury was elsewhere fully and correctly instructed on the law of contributory negligence. Considering the instructions as a whole, we consider the possibility that the jury could have been misled by the error complained of so remote as to be altogether unworthy of serious consideration."

In Straten v. Spencer, 52 Cal. App. 98, 197 P. 540, 543, the court said:

"The instructions, as modified, amount to this: That if plaintiff was guilty of negligence and that negligence was the sole cause of the injury, then he could not recover. Of course, that is true, but defendants desired to have the court instruct the jury that, if plaintiff's negligence contributed to and was therefore a proximate cause of the injury, he could not recover. True, the court did not use the definite article, but to declare negligence to be 'proximate cause' necessarily implies that it is the only proximate cause.

"The question then arises whether this action of the court constituted prejudicial error. The answer manifestly depends upon whether the principle was covered by other instructions."

In applying these rules to the case before us, we are of the opinion that the portion of the instructions which is complained of by appellant, and which is above set forth, cannot be considered a formula instruction, and that the same does not purport to be a complete statement of the law upon which the plaintiff might or might not recover. And that it did not purport to be a complete statement of the law upon the issue raised by the appellant's plea of contributory negligence. It was, in fact, only a portion of the law given upon the subject of contributory negligence and related only to the burden of proof in that regard. This case is before us upon a bill of exceptions, which sets forth all of the instructions given, in a body, without distinguishing which were separate instructions. Other portions of the instructions which covered the subject of contributory negligence both preceded and followed the portion complained of. Several times before, and at least once following this portion, the court used such language as the following: "Guilty of negligence directly contributing to his injury," "which negligence proximately contributed to the injury," "that his negligence proximately contributed to the injuries of which he complains," "you are not to concern yourself with the question as to whether the plaintiff's contributory negligence was equal to or greater than or less than that of the defendant's negligence," and "or that the negligence, if any, of Samuel Harvey was in whole or in part the proximate cause of his injury." Upon the question of contributory negligence the court elsewhere instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that when the plaintiff was alighting from the street car upon which he had been riding it was his duty under the law to have looked in the direction in which he intended to move and to have looked in the direction from which motor traffic might ordinarily have been expected to advance, before attempting to cross from the street car to the sidewalk; and if he failed to do so and you find and believe from the evidence herein that by doing so he would have seen the defendant's car and could have stopped and thus avoided injury, then he was guilty of negligence directly contributing to his injury and he cannot recover herein and your verdict must be in favor of the defendant and against the plaintiff notwithstanding the fact, if it be a fact, that the defendant may have been guilty of negligence as charged by the plaintiff."

"You are instructed that if you find that there was negligence on the part of the defendant in the manner in which she drove and operated her automobile, and that the plaintiff was injured, still the defendant is not liable, if, by using ordinary care, the plaintiff might have avoided the automobile and the collision and the injury. If you find that on the occasion in question the plaintiff did not use ordinary care or was himself guilty of negligence,—which negligence proximately contributed to the injury,—then the plaintiff cannot recover in this case; that, to entitle the plaintiff to recover damages for the injuries sustained by reason of the accident in question, he must show the injuries to have been proximately attributable to the misconduct of the defendant. In determining either the negligence of the defendant or the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, the test is: What would an ordinarily prudent man have done under the existing circumstances?"

"You are instructed that the law does not concern itself with the relative degree of negligence of the plaintiff and the defendant. Thus, if you find that the defendant was negligent and that her negligence proximately caused the injury of which the plaintiff complains, and you further find that the plaintiff himself was negligent, and that his negligence proximately contributed to the injuries of which he complains, you are not to concern yourself with the question as to whether the plaintiff's contributory negligence was equal to or greater than or less than that of the defendant's negligence. Contributory negligence is an absolute bar to the plaintiff's recovery regardless of its relative degree."

"You are further instructed that the law of contributory negligence in the State of California is so well settled that it may be briefly summarized. Contributory negligence is a matter of defense, and the burden of proving it rests upon the defendant. Therefore, it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to establish affirmatively that Samuel Harvey, the plaintiff herein, was free from negligence. It is incumbent upon the defendant to establish affirmatively the existence of contributory negligence on the part of Samuel Harvey or that the negligence, if any, of Samuel Harvey was in whole or in part the proximate cause of his injury, or that it contributed to his injury. Again, the question of whether or not a party has been guilty of contributory negligence is usually one of fact for the jury's verdict; and it is only where no fact is held in doubt and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence that the court can say, as a matter of law, that contributory negligence is established. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury."

Not only was the matter complained of covered in these other instructions, but it can also be here said that "the correct rule of law was so specifically stated and restated to the jury" that it would be unreasonable to hold that the verdict arrived at could have been based upon the mistaken use of "the" instead of "a" in the portion of the instruction complained of, especially where it was so surrounded and covered with other correct expressions, as here appears. All of the instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence should be taken together, and, so taken, it seems apparent that they could not have misled the jury. It also appears that the portion complained of is, in fact, a general instruction. Although the court refers to the fact that contributory negligence was pleaded in this case, it is fully apparent that the court was attempting only to give a general instruction upon the subject of burden of proof, in connection with the general subject of contributory negligence. On the other hand, several of the other instructions upon contributory negligence were much more specific, the last, in particular, referring to the plaintiff by name, and specifically telling the jury that if the negligence, if any, of Samuel Harvey was in whole or in part the proximate cause of his injury or if it contributed to his injury, he could not recover. In our opinion such express instruction on the very point in issue, so frequently repeated, should not be held to be overcome by such an error as here appears in a more general instruction.

[8] The other point raised by appellant is that respondent's claim had been fully compromised and settled by the payment of $100 to him. It appears that the appellant, following the collision out of which this action arose, was arrested and charged with reckless driving in connection with this particular incident. After a plea of not guilty she was tried before a justice of the peace and found guilty. Sentence was deferred until the next day and the justice of the peace, having learned that the family of this respondent was in want, gave the defendant a suspended sentence upon the condition that she should contribute something to the well-being of this respondent's family "for the present time." She was given thirty days within which to pay the sum of $100 for that purpose and, later, that amount was paid in her behalf. Appellant maintains that this constituted a complete compromise and settlement of respondent's claim, under the terms of sections 1377, 1378, and 1379 of the Penal Code. Our attention is called to the fact that the justice of the peace testified that "the misdemeanor charge was compromised." It is argued that irrespective of any understanding on the part of this respondent, the justice of the peace was, in fact, the agent of this respondent and therefore the understanding between the justice of the peace and this appellant is conclusive and binding upon this respondent. And that since the $100 was not returned or tendered prior to the trial of this action, under the authority of Garcia v. California Truck Co., 183 Cal. 767, 192 P. 708, the respondent herein could not recover. It is conceded that at the time these events took place the justice of the peace did not have these sections of the Penal Code in mind. It is argued that whether he intended to or not, he followed them, and that this constituted a full settlement of the civil claims of this respondent as well. It fully appears from the evidence that these sections of the Penal Code were not complied with, in that the injured party never did appear before the court and did not at any time acknowledge that he had received satisfaction for his injury and nothing was done in the premises before the trial. It also appears that the defendant in the criminal proceeding was not discharged therefrom but was found guilty, and sentence was imposed, and this sentence was suspended upon the condition that the defendant contribute $100 toward the relief of the immediate needs of the family of the injured party. Not only did the respondent not agree to accept this money as satisfaction for his injuries, but if it should be conceded that the justice of the peace was acting as his agent, no such agreement appears between such agent and the appellant. By no stretch of the imagination can it be said that there was a meeting of the minds of the parties upon a settlement of respondent's claims. The justice of the peace testified that he was requested by appellant's representative to take the check "out to the Harvey family" and that when he delivered the check "Mr. Harvey asked me if this was in settlement for anything, or had anything to do with any damages. I told him no,—that it was merely a matter that had been worked out in the Police Court to render him some assistance." He further testified that the arrangement between himself and the appellant was that the sentence, either a fine or a jail sentence, would be suspended "on the condition that she afford them some relief." He further testified: "I had in mind that Miss Aceves was civilly liable for the damage done to Harvey. I didn't delve into that, I didn't go into that. I was simply trying to figure out the best way in which the criminal matter could be disposed of." And also: "Just before this check was received by me and paid over, I did not have any conversation with Miss Aceves as to paying it for her in settlement of all claims of any kind with Mr. Harvey. I never saw Miss Aceves from the time that I pronounced the sentence until I met her yesterday in the courtroom. I didn't have any talk with anyone on her behalf that this would be a payment or satisfaction of any damages that might be due Harvey." The respondent testified that when the justice of the peace brought the check to his house "we asked Judge Kelly if receiving this check would, in any way, hurt us, and he says not; that it was intended for our immediate uses. He said he was bringing the check because we were in need of groceries,—something to eat." Respondent's wife testified: "Judge Kelly said the check was for our needs. It was not to settle any claim for damages." The justice of the peace also testified: "The condition of the family was pathetic. Mr. Harvey was unable to carry on a conversation. He seemed to be in a dazed condition. He did not know whether he was going to get well or not. His wife was very much concerned, and the great concern of the family seemed to be whether or not Mr. Harvey was going to get well." He also testified that when he suggested suspending the sentence and this money being paid, "the defendant then asked whether or not that would interfere with their collection of the insurance. Mr. Beck, the city prosecutor, said that it in no way involved any settlement." In our opinion these circumstances entirely fail to show any compromise or settlement of the civil action now before us. Nor do we think any return of the money or tender thereof was necessary in order to maintain this action.

[9, 10] Although no such question has been raised by appellant, whether the $100 which was thus paid by another on her behalf should be credited upon the amount of the judgment, might present a somewhat closer question. However, the evidence sustains the conclusion that the money paid was in the nature of a contribution for the purpose of temporarily relieving a condition of distress. Although it was a forced contribution, it was gladly made in pursuance of another object and purpose which were most important to the defendant in the criminal proceedings. So far as she is concerned, she is actually entitled to no more credit than she would have been, had the contribution been to any form of charity. The paying of the money was more in the nature of doing penance than a payment upon an obligation. Not having been made for the purpose of covering any of the claims involved herein, the payment is in fact not involved in this action. See Dalton v. Pacific Electric Co., 7 Cal. App. 510, 94 P. 868. In any event, the entire matter was presented to the jury, and appellant not having asked for such a credit and the pleadings not having been called to our attention, it may be assumed, all intendments being in favor of the judgment, that the judgment covers only damages actually shown to have been suffered by the respondent, irrespective of any such payment or donation. Whether or not the action of the justice of the peace in the criminal proceeding was strictly legal is not involved here, although it may be said that the circumstances show that his action had much to commend it.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

LORANGER v. NADEAU. ***

Civ. 7762.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

July 2, 1931.

Rehearing Denied August 1, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

1. Torts ⇨2.

Substantive law defining one's rights regarding torts is law of state where tort occurs.

2. Venue ⇨8.

Tort is transitory action and under certain circumstances may be tried in any court which obtains jurisdiction of parties.

3. Evidence ⇨29.

Automobile guest suing host for injuries held not required to plead law of state where automobile accident occurred (Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, as amended by St. 1927, p. 110).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, as amended by St. 1927, p. 110, courts will take judicial notice of the laws of the several states of the United States and the interpretation thereof by the highest courts of appellate jurisdiction of such states.

4. Evidence ⇨5(2).

It is common knowledge that nearly every automobile operator carries insurance.

5. Courts ⇨8.

California court did not have jurisdiction of automobile guest's common-law action against host for injuries in Oklahoma accident, since Oklahoma law allowing such action was contrary to moral standards fixed by California law (St. 1923, p. 517, § 141½, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580).

St. 1923, p. 517, § 141½, as added by St. 1929, p. 1580, provides that automobile guest shall have no right of recovery against owner or driver or person responsible for operation of automobile for injury sustained, except in cases of gross negligence. The amendment to the statute was adopted for the purpose of preventing certain immoral or fraudulent practices, it being claimed that in certain instances the operator of the automobile and the passenger riding with him had entered into collusive agreements for the purpose of compelling the insurance company to pay for damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Guy D. Loranger, an infant, by Annette Lambert, his guardian ad litem, against Hubert J. Nadeau. From the judgment, defendant appeals.

Reversed.

B. P. Gibbs, of Los Angeles, and Barry J. Colding, Theodore Hale, and Carroll B. Crawford, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Vincent W. Hallinan, Dan Malloy, and James J. Roach, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J.

Prior to the summer and autumn of 1929, the defendant had been residing in San Francisco. He was assisting his father in the latter's business. In the early part of the year, the defendant, his mother and sister entered the automobile owned by the defendant and went to Montreal on a visit. When they started to return, the plaintiff joined them as a guest, and the party started for California. They had arrived in the state of Oklahoma and at about half past four in the afternoon of November 15, 1929, while pursuing their journey west, an accident happened. At that time, the defendant was driving the automobile and the plaintiff was seated at his right. They were traveling along the right-hand side of the highway, which at that point was running down hill toward a gully where the highway turned to the left and then started up hill. At a point one hundred feet or more from the gully, another automobile, which was immediately ahead, slowed down or stopped. The defendant feared that he would hit that automobile and, therefore, pulled to the left. As he did so, another automobile approaching from the opposite direction came into view and came forward at a high rate of speed. Before the defendant could stop his car, the two cars met in a head-on collision. In that collision, the plaintiff was injured, and after he recovered he commenced this action against the defendant to recover damages. In his complaint he pleaded the fact of the date and place of the accident, and he also alleged: "* * * That said defendant H. J. Nadeau so carelessly and negligently operated and drove said automobile as to cause the same to collide and strike with great force and violence the automobile being driven and operated by said first Doe. * * *" Plaintiff's complaint contains no allegation purporting to plead the laws of Oklahoma.

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

1 P.(2d)—66½

*For subsequent opinion see 10 P.2d 63.

[1-3] The defendant appeared and filed a demurrer in which, among other things, he claimed that the complaint did not state facts sufficient, and also that the trial court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. He cites section 141 $\frac{1}{4}$  of the California Vehicle Act (St. 1929, p. 1580). That section provides: "Any person who as a guest accepts a ride in any vehicle, moving upon any of the public highways of the State of California, and while so riding as such guest receives or sustains an injury, shall have no right of recovery against the owner or driver or person responsible for the operation of such vehicle. \* \* \* Nothing in this section contained shall be construed as relieving the owner or driver or person responsible for the operation of a vehicle from liability for injury to or death of such guest proximately resulting from the \* \* \* gross negligence of such owner, driver or person responsible for the operation of such vehicle. \* \* \*" Thereupon the defendant contends that the complaint did not state facts sufficient, because it did not show on its face that the accident was brought about by defendant's gross negligence. The point is without merit, because the complaint showed on its face that the accident occurred in Oklahoma, and it is settled that the substantive law defining one's rights with reference to torts is to be found in the laws of the state where the alleged tort occurs. 12 C. J. 452. The claim that the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter rests on the fact that the accident occurred in Oklahoma and the contention that the action should be tried in that state. However, a tort is a transitory action, and, under certain circumstances, may be tried in any court which obtains jurisdiction of the parties. Panama Electric Ry. Co. v. Moyers (C. C. A.) 249 F. 19, 20. The defendant contends that the plaintiff should have pleaded the law of Oklahoma, and in this connection he makes a number of points, all of which are but different methods of expressing the same contention. It was formerly the law that courts would not take judicial notice of the laws of other states or courts. 1 Chitty on Pleading, p. 216. When such was the rule, the law of the sister state should be pleaded and proved like any other fact. Holmes v. Broughton, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 76, 25 Am. Dec. 536. The rule as stated in that case was adopted in this state in an earlier decision. Thompson v. Monrow, 2 Cal. 99, 100, 56 Am. Dec. 318. However, in 1927, our statute was amended (St. 1927, p. 110) and at the present time the courts will take judicial notice of "the laws of the several states of the United States and the interpretation thereof by the highest courts of appellate jurisdiction of such states." Code Civ. Proc. § 1875. It has frequently been held that whenever the courts have the power to take judicial notice of certain facts the party relying thereon need not plead nor prove such facts. French v. Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 607, 80 P. 1031, 69 L. R. A. 556, 2 Ann. Cas. 756. In some of the states it has been the law for many years that courts will take judicial notice of the laws of the sister states. In those particular states, the decisions have uniformly held that it was not necessary to plead or prove the laws of a sister state. 2 Wharton on Conflict of Laws, 1533. Therefore there is no merit in the point regarding the plaintiff's alleged failure to plead the laws of the state of Oklahoma.

[4, 5] Again pointing to section 141 $\frac{1}{4}$  of the California Vehicle Act, the defendant asserts that under the doctrine of comity the courts of this state will not take jurisdiction of a common-law action such as pleaded in plaintiff's complaint, because to do so would operate to give this plaintiff an advantage that our statute has withdrawn from persons injured in the state of California, and will place the defendant, a citizen of this state, in a more disadvantageous position than he would be in had the accident occurred in the state of California. He cites and relies on our decision in the case entitled Hudson v. Von Hamm, 85 Cal. App. 323, 259 P. 374. In that case, the plaintiff pleaded a statute of Hawaii which authorized actions against the parents for torts committed by a minor child. The decision points out that we have no such statute, and that the law of this state on that subject is the common law. In the instant case, the accident occurred in the state of Oklahoma, where the common law obtains. In this state, the law on the subject is contained in section 141 $\frac{1}{4}$  of the California Vehicle Act. That section came into our law by the amendments to the California Vehicle Act which were recently adopted (Stats. 1929, chap. 787, p. 1580). Commencing with 1850, the common law has been the basic law of this state, except as modified by the Constitution and the statutes. The rules of the common law regarding the award of damages to a servant when injured in the course of his employment was abrogated by statute, but at the same time a more just and efficacious remedy was given. Stats. 1913, chap. 176, p. 279. With that single exception we are not aware that any of the common-law remedies have been taken away, except as that has been done by the section 141½ of the California Vehicle Act. One necessarily pauses to ask the reason for that change. The reason, however, is most apparent. From childhood we were taught never to criticize a host who accidentally did us an injury. Since the advent of automobiles, which are comfortable to ride in and which are generally covered vehicles, it is not an insignificant courtesy when the operator offers a gratuitous ride to one who is walking in the hot sun or facing a storm. If, while so riding, an accident occurs, it is the greatest of ingratitude if the passenger harshly criticizes his host either outside or within the courts. It is a matter of common knowledge that nearly every operator carries insurance. It has been claimed in the courts that in certain instances the operator of the automobile and the passenger riding with him have entered into collusive agreements for the purpose of compelling the insurance company to pay for the damages. Such acts were either grievous fraud or tantamount thereto. It is thus perfectly clear that when the Legislature adopted the amendment to the statute it did so for the purpose of preventing certain immoral or fraudulent practices. In Reynolds v. Day, 79 Wash. 499, 140 P. 681, 683, L. R. A. 1916A, 432, the Supreme Court of Washington said: "Under the rule of comity, rights which have accrued by the law of another state or nation are treated as valid everywhere. When the action is transitory and the jurisdiction of the parties can be obtained by service of process, the foreign law, if not contrary to the public policy of the state where the action is brought, nor contrary to abstract justice nor pure morals nor calculated to injure the state or its citizens, will be recognized and enforced. This rule applies alike to actions ex contractu and actions ex delicto. In all such cases, the right to recover is governed by the lex loci and not by the lex fori." (Italics ours.) The expressions italicized run through the books. 2 Wharton on Conflict of Laws, sec. 480b; 22 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 1379-1380; 12 C. J. 439; Loucks v. Standard Oil Co. of New York, 224 N. Y. 99, 120 N. E. 198; Foss v. Richards, 126 Me. 419, 139 A. 313; Strawn Mercantile Co. v. First Natl. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 279 S. W. 473. When the lex loci is contrary to the policy of the lex fori, the courts have ruled each case on liberal rules of interpretation. But there are certain definite bounds. In the case of McManus v. Red Salmon Canning Co., 37 Cal. App. 133, 173 P. 1112, the court was considering a statute in force in Alaska. At page 137 (37 Cal. App. 173 P. 1112, 1114) the court said:

"The creditors and the expenses of administration are to be paid out therefrom, if necessary, the balance going to the heirs, if there are any; and, in default of heirs, the state takes by escheat. We fully agree with counsel for respondent that this right of action, created by section 1185, is contrary to the policy of the laws of California, for our Legislature in creating the action for wrongful death, which was unknown at common law, followed the provisions of Lord Campbell's Act, adopted by Parliament in 1846, and our courts have adopted the construction given that act in Great Britain and in those states which have similar laws, namely: That the action for wrongful death has been created for the benefit of those relatives of the decedent who have the right to look to him for aid and support, and that the damages to be given are limited to the actual pecuniary loss suffered by those relatives by being deprived of such aid.

"Therefore, if appellant's right of action rested on section 1185 alone, we would be compelled to hold that the action could not be maintained, for it would not be in accord with the policy of our laws to make a resident of our state pay damages for the death of decedent where no one was shown to have suffered any pecuniary loss thereby."

But counsel do not cite any authorities and we have found none that in actions either ex delicto or ex contractu, when, as in the instant case, the lex loci is contrary to the moral standards fixed by the lex fori, the courts will take jurisdiction. It follows that the defendant's demurrer should have been sustained.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: NOURSE, P. J.; SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 302

JONES et ux. v. INTERSTATE OIL CORPORATION et al.
Civ. 7696.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 1, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 31, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1931.

1. Action — 6.

Declaratory judgment statute held to support judgment requiring lessee to drill oil well to greater depth or permit receiver to do so, although such depth was in excess of that required by lease (Code Civ. Proc. § 1060).

2. Mines and minerals — 78(1).

Although lessee had drilled oil well to depth required by oil lease, lessee could be required to drill well to greater depth or permit receiver appointed by court to do so, where necessity required deeper well to protect lessor's rights to oil strata discovered after execution of oil lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action for declaratory relief by Jonah Jones and wife against the Interstate Oil Corporation and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Chapman & Chapman, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jonah Jones, Jr., and Harry L. Cohn, both of Long Beach, for respondents.

MURPHY, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for declaratory relief with respect to an oil and gas lease in the Signal Hill territory in Los Angeles county.

At the time of the execution of the lease in question, no oil sand was known nor suspected to exist in that area at a greater depth than between four to five thousand feet, and no oil drilling companies had had the courage at that time to make the necessarily large expenditures incident to prospecting below that level.

The lease in question was executed in February, 1923, and provided, among other things: "The party of the second part (appellants) shall, within five days from date hereof resume operations to complete the oil well now on Lot Eighteen (18) Block 'H,' Signal Hill Tract, and will actually start work on said well within said time, and shall continue said operations diligently, continuously and in good faith until an oil well is brought in and is producing in paying quantities as is provided in section 'Fourth' hereof or until a well has been sunk to a depth of four thousand (4000) feet."

Under the lease the appellants proceeded to drill and brought in a producing well at a depth of approximately 4,700 feet, which well has produced between 50 and 100 barrels of oil per day, which amount, however, is not regarded as a valuable producing oil well in that district.

In 1927 a discovery well had been drilled adjacent to this property to a depth below the sands known or suspected to exist at the time this lease was entered into, and it was found, and it was conceded at the trial of this action, that there existed a far more valuable deposit of oil sands at a depth from 5,200 to 7,000 feet than had ever been known to exist in the upper sands. Immediately after this discovery wells were immediately drilled to penetrate the newly discovered and deeper sands, and at the trial of the action there were actually on production a great number of wells which it was known were draining and depleting the oil from the demised premises from the sands that existed at the newly discovered and lower depths.

Under these circumstances, and without any conflict in the evidence, the court made findings with respect to the pertinent issues involved in this case which reflect the situation with greater clarity than any narration of facts that might be made by us. After reciting the fact of the execution of the lease, description of the property and the parties to the lease, the court found as follows with respect to the pertinent issues of this case:

"It is true that within eleven months last past there has been discovered, and there is now known to exist in said oil field, an oil zone which was at the time of the execution of the aforesaid lease unknown and undiscovered, and in fact was undiscovered and unknown until some eleven months ago, said newly discovered zone lying below a depth of approximately 5200 feet and extending to a known depth of some 7400 feet; it is true that this zone is known to be very productive of petroleum, oil and gas, and a number of wells have been brought to production with an initial flow of 2000 to 4500 barrels per day, and some of said wells have already produced as much as 500,000 barrels of oil since being placed on production.

"It is true that said newly discovered zone underlies the property herein described in the same manner and to the same extent as said zone is found in other sections of said oil fields; it is true that said oil zone lying below the depth of 5200 feet and extending to a known depth of 7400 feet, has been known to exist for some eleven months last past; it is true that plaintiffs made repeated demands upon defendants to drill said zone and produce oil therefrom and that defendants failed and refused and still fail and refuse so to do.

"It is true that there now exists between plaintiffs and defendants an actual controversy regarding the legal rights of the plaintiffs and the legal duties of the defendants respectively with respect to said lease and the premises therein demised and that the plaintiffs contend and allege that the defendants are legally bound by the terms of the lease and by the implied covenants hereto appertaining, to drill to said zone and produce oil therefrom; the Court further finds that the defendants contend that there is no legal obligation requiring the defendants to so drill and contend that the terms of the lease have been fully complied with, and contend they may hold the property under said lease, without developing or producing oil from said 5200 foot to 7400 foot zone, and there is no obligation on their part to attempt so to do, and defendants have failed, neglected and refused, and still fail, neglect and refuse to drill to said deeper sands and yet prevent the plaintiffs from developing the same.

"It is true that the zone from which the defendants are now producing oil lies about 4500 feet below the surface of the land, and the production which the defendants are procuring from said zone is less than 100 barrels of oil per day; it is true that the property hereinabove described is of sufficient area to permit plaintiffs to erect a derrick and drill a well to the deep sand; it is true that the operations of the defendants in producing from said zone lying above 5200 feet, will not be interfered with by allowing plaintiffs to develop and produce oil from the zone lying below 5200 feet.

"It is true that further drilling operations might be carried on without harm or injury to the present production or harm or injury to the present well now producing above 5200 feet below the surface of the land, or in any way detracting from the present or future production of said well.

"It is true that said newly discovered oil zone lying at the depth of 5200 feet to 7400 feet was unknown to the parties to the lease hereinabove referred to at the time of the execution thereof, and it is true that neither of the parties thereto contemplated the drilling of a well to the deep sand at the time of the execution of the lease hereinabove referred to because of the lack of knowledge of its existence.

"It is true that the substantial rights of the plaintiffs are in jeopardy in permitting further delay on the part of the defendants by not drilling into and producing oil from the zone lying between 5200 to 7400 feet; * * * it is true that substantial justice may be done only by declaring that defendant immediately begin an active, bona fide, properly financed drilling program to tap said deeper sand lying at approximately 5200 feet to 7400 feet within ten days from date hereof.

"The Court finds that there is imperative necessity for the immediate drilling of a well to said deeper sands, * * * and any delay in the drilling of said well would act to the irreparable injury of the plaintiffs. * * * The Court finds that a receiver should be appointed herein to act under the following conditions: In the event that the defendants do not within ten days from July 25th, 1928, commence the construction and installation of a heavy rotary rig upon said premises and/or shall not within ten days thereafter spud in and thereafter continuously and diligently drill to completion said well and/or to meet the expense and requirements thereof in the manner herein stated, then, and in that event the Court finds the receiver shall take over the operation and construction of said well for the use and benefit of the plaintiffs yet as an officer of the Court and without interference on the part of the defendants or any person or persons whomsoever."

In conformity with these findings the court entered judgment, ordering, adjudging, and decreeing "that the defendants are required within ten days from the 25th of July, 1928, to commence the construction of a heavy rotary rig adequately capable of drilling to the deeper sands between the depth of 5200 to 7400 feet below the plaintiffs' land, * * * and thereafter continuously and diligently in a minerlike and approved manner drill said well to the depth of said lower sands, being between the depth of 5200 and 7400 feet below the surface of the above described real property. * * * That * * * in the event defendants shall fail, neglect and/or refuse either (a) within ten days from the 25th day of July, 1928, to commence in good faith the construction and installation of a heavy rotary rig upon said premises hereinafter described in an approved manner, (b) and/or within ten days after the commencement of the construction and installation thereof to spud in and/or thereafter to diligently prosecute the construction of said well in the manner hereinbefore stated and/or to equip the same as hereinbefore stated and/or to meet the expenses thereof in the manner hereinbefore stated at the time and in the manner the same shall fall due, then, and in either event, time being the issue of this judgment, (a) the defendants shall be forever precluded from drilling into said deeper sands and be required to forthwith vacate that portion of said premises conveniently necessary for the drilling of a well by the plaintiffs to the deepest sands, (b) plaintiffs are thereupon hereby permitted to go upon said described premises and to sink and bring in a well or wells from the sands below the sands from which the well of defendants is now producing; which said portion thus to be occupied by plaintiffs shall not interfere with the operation of the defendants' well now in operation upon said premises, nor directly detract therefrom, but that said well thus to be drilled by plaintiffs and all its paraphernalia and equipment as well as all production therefrom shall be the sole and exclusive property of the plaintiffs without right, directly or indirectly, of any kind or character on the part of the defendants. That * * * the present well now located on the above described real property and all its paraphernalia and equipment as well as all production therefrom shall remain the sole and exclusive property of the defendants subject to the payment of the outstanding royalties, as well as all conditions and obligations contained in defendants' lease and now imposed upon said well."

To carry out the purpose of this judgment, the court ordered that D. S. Dickinson be appointed receiver to act under the following conditions: That in the event that the defendants should fail to comply with the order and direction of the court as above stated, "then and in that event said Receiver shall take over the operation and construction of said well for the use and benefit of the plaintiffs yet as an officer of this Court and without interference on the part of the defendants or any person or persons whomsoever, and said Receiver to have such other, further and additional powers as may be from time to time granted by this Court. That all expenses and cost of said Receiver shall be borne and paid by the plaintiffs herein."

It may be summarized from the findings and decree: First, appellant, lessee, has the right and it is his duty to forthwith proceed to develop and extricate oil and gas from the sand strata lying between the 5,200 foot and 7,400 foot level; or, second, if he shall fail so to do, then the respondent lessor may proceed to perform that undertaking.

It may be said in passing that this decree can be justified and sustained solely upon the ground that reasonable prudence or any other degree of human foresight could not have foreseen or provided for the conditions that obtained, as a result of the 1927 developments in the lower strata of the oil field.

Respondents base their cause of action upon their contention that there are certain implied covenants in oil and gas leases owing to the fact that oil deposits are of a fluctuating, uncertain, and fugitive nature, lying at unknown depths and uncertain in the quantity, extent and trend of the flow and base their claim to relief upon broad equitable principles peculiarly applicable to the facts and circumstances disclosed in this controversy. The action is based upon the provisions of section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, providing: "Any person interested under a deed, will or other written instrument, or under a contract, or who desires a declaration of his rights or duties with respect to another, or in respect to, in, over or upon property or with respect to the location of the natural channel of a water course, may, in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, bring an action in the superior court for a declaration of his rights and duties in the premises, including a determination of any question of construction or validity arising under such instrument or contract." The section further provides: "He may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief; and the court may make a binding declaration of such rights or duties, whether or not further relief is or could be claimed at the time."

The trial court adopted the theory of the plaintiffs and granted relief as hereinabove set out. Appellants stand upon the strict letter of the terms of the lease in respect to the depth of drilling required by the contract, and claim that they have fully complied with all its terms, and further contend that the relief awarded is beyond and in excess of the power granted by the Code section above quoted. We are unable to agree with either of these contentions.

[1, 2] The clear language of the statute supports the judgment and conclusion of the trial court so far as exercise of its power is involved. The appellants' argument on this phase of the case is largely that of an assertion, rather than a discussion of the terms of the statutory law. In so far as the equitable principles involved are concerned, there appears to be a wealth of authorities to support the conclusion of the trial court.

Our determination with respect to this issue is strongly confirmed at least by implication by the fact that notwithstanding the painstaking and exhaustive brief filed herein by respondents, the appellants have not seen fit to assist the court in its investigation of this rather novel and intricate problem by favoring us with a reply brief.

Under the decree which is necessarily in the alternative, appellants need not expend one dollar in addition to what they have already expended to retain their present interest upon the leasehold, so far as they are willing to develop it, and in this field their equipment or operations will not be disturbed.

The authorities relied upon by appellants and set out in their opening brief are not applicable to the facts of the instant case, a case, in our opinion, which stands practically alone in the strength of the appeal that it makes for equitable adjudication. The case of Becker v. Submarine Oil Co., 55 Cal. App. 698, 204 P. 245, 247, strongly relied upon by the appellants, bears no similarity, either in the facts of the case or the equitable principles involved. Nevertheless in that case the court significantly used this language: "As a net result of consideration of the cases which hold that, in the absence of express and definite stipulation as to the measure of diligence, an implied covenant exists demanding reasonable diligence in the development of the premises leased, it may be fairly said, in determining whether or not other wells should have been drilled, consideration must be given to a number of facts regarded collectively. Some of these are: The result of oil operations on adjacent premises; the extent of the subterranean oil reservoir; also its character and contour as affecting the question of drainage to and from the property in question; market conditions; the quantity and quality of oil thus far produced; the prospects for further production as indicated, and the knowledge possessed by those expert in locating oil bodies; the demands made upon the lessee in the maintenance of the wells already drilled, and his diligence in operating them to secure the greatest possible production. The record contains no information concerning many of these important considerations."

Such is not the situation in the present litigation. Every element enumerated in the above statement is outstandingly and markedly present in the facts established in this litigation. We have no hesitancy in stating that had the facts of the Becker Case measured up to the undisputed facts of this case an entirely different conclusion would have been reached by the appellate court. In the case of Brewster v. Lanyon Zinc Co. (O. C. A.) reported in 140 F. 801, 813, the court had to say of the case of Colgan v. Forest Oil Co., 194 Pa. 234, 45 A. 119, 75 Am. St. Rep. 695, a case cited by appellants, as follows: "With great deference to the able courts which have adopted this view, we think it is not sound. In the absence of some stipulation to that effect, we think an oil and gas lease cannot be said to make the lessee the arbiter of the extent to which, or the diligence with which, the exploration and development shall proceed. The operations contemplated, in the event oil and gas are found in paying quantities, are not to be likened unto a business into which one puts property, money, and labor exclusively his own, the profits and losses in which are of concern only to him, and the conduct of which may be according to his own judgment, however erroneous it may be. By reason of the conditions on which the lease is granted the lessor retains at least a contingent interest in the oil and gas, to the profitable extraction of which the operations are directed. This interest in the subject of the lease, and the fact that the substantial consideration for the grant lies in the provisions for the payment of royalties in kind and in money on the oil and gas extracted, make the extent to which and the diligence with which the operations are prosecuted of immediate concern to the lessor. If they do not proceed with reasonable diligence, and by reason thereof the oil and gas are diminished or exhausted through the operation of wells on adjoining lands, the lessor loses, not only royalties to which he would otherwise be entitled, but also his contingent interest in the oil and gas which thus passes into the control of others. The object of the operations being to obtain a benefit or profit for both lessor and lessee, it seems obvious, in the absence of some stipulation to that effect, that neither is made the arbiter of the extent to which or the diligence with which the operations shall proceed, and that both are bound by the standard of what is reasonable. This is the rule in respect of all other contracts where the time, mode, or quality of performance is not specified, and no reason is perceived why it should not be equally applicable to oil and gas leases. There can, therefore, be a breach of the covenant for the exercise of reasonable diligence, though the lessee be not guilty of fraud or bad faith."

In the case of Acme Oil & Mining Co. v. Williams, decided in 140 Cal. 681, 74 P. 296, 297, the court says: "Covenants may be implied, as well as express; and in oil leases, and others of that particular character, where the consideration for the lease is solely the payment of royalties, there is an implied covenant not only that the wells will be sunk, but that, if oil is produced in paying quantities, they will be diligently operated for the best advantage and benefit of the lessee and lessor. The sole consideration usually moving the lessor in extending oil leases, and the only consideration for the particular lease involved here, was the royalties the lessor would receive from proper and continuous pumping of oil, after it had been developed in paying quantities. These leases are only valuable on development, and are then only valuable to both parties to the extent that the product may be secured and disposed of; and when the only consideration for the lease is the share which the lessor will obtain of what is produced, there is always an implied covenant that diligence will be used toward such production."

It may be stated in passing that, of course, there is no question in the instant litigation but that the full consideration to the lessor is, as it was in the case from which quotation has just been made, the royalties provided in the lease.

In Acme Oil & Mining Co. v. Williams, supra, the court further says: "Hence it is that ever since the discovery of petroleum in this country leases of oil lands, with royalty the lessor on the product, have contained provisions not only for the immediate sinking of wells and their number, but for diligent operation after oil has been struck; and where such leases do not contain express provisions to this effect, and the only consideration for their execution is the share in the product which the lessor, either in kind or as a royalty, is to receive, it is necessarily implied, as of the essence of the contract, that the lessee shall work the wells with reasonable despatch for their mutual advantage. It is not necessary that technical words should be inserted in such a lease in order to raise the condition."

In the Acme Case the court further states: "While the general rule is that forfeitures are discountenanced in law, there are occasions when the only protection a landlord has is through the exercise of this reserved right, and the case at bar presents one of those occasions. If the right of forfeiture could not be exercised under such circumstances, a lessor would be at the mercy of his lessee. His land would be burdened by a lease which, while it could and should be made profitable through the diligence contemplated, would in fact be profitless through neglect. The lessor could not make other arrangements for the development of his property and his interest in the fee in the oil district might consist of a small holding, surrounding which numerous other operators would be successfully working, drawing off the oil to his irreparable injury. These are some of the peculiar circumstances surrounding leases of this character which favor the right of re-entry for condition broken."

In the case of Monarch Oil, Gas & Coal Co. v. Richardson, 124 Ky. 602, 99 S. W. 668, 669, a Kentucky case, the general principle involved in the Acme Case is clearly expressed: "The fluctuating and uncertain character and value of this class of property renders it necessary for the protection of the lessor that the properties leased should be developed as speedily as possible, and the lessee will not be permitted to hold the land for speculative or other purposes an unreasonable length of time for a mere nominal rent, when a royalty on the product is the chief object of the execution of the lease."

In Thornton's Law of Oil and Gas, volume 1, § 58 (a), we find the following with respect to the principles involved in this discussion: "But upon finding oil it is the duty of the lessee to continue to develop the premises. 'A failure to use proper diligence in the production of minerals after discovery, is a breach of a condition subsequent in the ordinary mineral lease, where the obligation to continue production is merely implied, for which breach the lease becomes subject to forfeiture.'" (Citing many cases.)

The same author states, volume 1, § 98: "As has been said elsewhere, there is not only a covenant on the part of the lessee that he will fully develop the leased premises, but that he will do so with diligence. There is also an implied covenant on the part of the lessee that he will put down enough wells to protect the leased premises from being drained by wells on adjacent territory."

In Wilson v. Reserve Gas Co., 78 W. Va. 329, 88 S. E. 1075, 1077, the court says: "The lessee cannot hold the leased land indefinitely without exploring the land and producing oil or gas. There is nothing in the contract to deny the lessors the right to terminate the lease upon reasonable notice. They have not shorn themselves of that power."

We might quote innumerable cases declaring this general equitable principle, but will content ourselves by quoting from Barnsdall v. Boley (C. C.) 119 F. 191, 200, where an oil lessee attempted to stand upon the express provision of the lease, that but one well was to be drilled: "In determining this question he must exercise sound discretion, such as prudent business men would ordinarily exercise in the management of their business; but this discretion, when exercised by him, must be a discretion in good faith, not an arbitrary one upon his part. It must be a discretion based upon the product of the well, which alone can demonstrate whether it is a paying well. Is the lessor to be deprived of his rights in having his property developed when wells may be and are sunk all around his property, because the lessee may claim the right to develop the property when it suits him? Having drilled but one well on the leased premises, and because the lease only provided for one well to be drilled upon it, and failing to further develop the property, it would seem to be the duty of a court of equity to interfere, and redress the rights of a lessor under such circumstances. If the lessee had within the period of five years drilled other wells on the leased premises, and showed a disposition to develop it, a court of equity, under such circumstances, would be justified in holding that such action was a compliance with the terms of the lease."

It follows that the judgment of the superior court should be and is, therefore, affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

115 Cal.App. 363
LIPPMAN v. SUBWAY TERMINAL CORPORATION.
Civ. 6696.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
July 7, 1931.

Rehearing Denied August 4, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 31, 1931.

1. Landlord and tenant ⇨167(7).

Landlord who leases entire premises is not liable for negligent operation thereof by lessee.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇨167(7).

Owner of building, wherein portion of ground floor was leased, held liable for injuries to pedestrian resulting from negligence of subtenant in operating sidewalk freight elevator.

Lease of part of ground floor of building authorized lessee to use sidewalk freight elevator in common with other tenants and occupants of building, but lease provided that elevator "shall be operated by your own employees, at your own risk, on your own responsibility and without liability to this company (lessor)." Lessee sublet portion of leased premises. Elevator, at time pedestrian sustained injuries complained of, was being operated by subtenant. Evidence established that subtenant had permissive use of elevator.

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨169(5).

In pedestrian's action for injuries sustained through operation of sidewalk freight elevator, admitting ordinances relating to guards at opening in sidewalk held error, where ordinance had been complied with.

Ordinances of city, in substance, required opening for sidewalk freight elevator to be protected by metal guards. It was shown that such ordinances had, in substance, been complied with by placing metal guards between upright sides of each wing of trapdoor, which opened against sidewalk traffic and protected opening in each direction.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1052(7).

Error in admitting ordinances relating to guards when using sidewalk freight elevator held not prejudicial, where findings otherwise supported judgment for pedestrian.

Court made finding that injuries sustained by pedestrian were proximate result of negligence of defendant in permitting sidewalk freight elevator and trapdoor to be operated without taking any precaution for safety of pedestrians. Court further found that defendant was negligent in failing to comply with applicable ordinances of city, but in view of preceding finding it was not necessary to support judgment, and therefore immaterial, although not supported by evidence, evidence showing compliance with ordinances.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1052(7).

Error, if any, in admitting ordinance and safety orders of Industrial Accident Commission applicable to sidewalk elevators held not prejudicial, in view of findings otherwise supporting judgment.

Ordinance and elevator safety orders of Industrial Accident Commission were introduced in evidence over the defendant's objections. There was a finding to effect that operation of sidewalk freight elevators was negligent, in that no person was stationed at doors to warn pedestrians that doors were about to open, and in that no precautions whatever were taken to avoid injuries to pedestrian.

6. Appeal and error ⇨1058(1).

Error, if any, in excluding testimony of defendant's expert witness held not prejudicial, where substance thereof was otherwise admitted.

7. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1).

It is province of trial judge to weigh evidence and decide conflict therein.

8. Damages ⇨130(3).

$1,750 for injuries to waitress, including injury to back and left leg which impaired health and necessitated long period of treatment, held not excessive.

Testimony disclosed that accident occurred on April 19, and that plaintiff did not go to work until middle of June, but subsequently had to lay off because of severe pains in her head and back; that she had only been able to work off and on since; that she had severe pains in her head and back and was very nervous; that her health was perfect before accident, and that she had been under the doctor's care for almost two years since.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James W. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by Caroline Lippman against the Subway Terminal Corporation and others. From a judgment against it only in favor of plaintiff, defendant named appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kirtland I. Perky, of Colton, and Ralph W. Eckhardt, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for damages alleged to have been sustained by her in the raising of a sidewalk freight elevator maintained in the basement of a building owned and operated by the corporation. There is no conflict in the evidence as to how the accident occurred, although there is as to the extent of the injuries.

Defendant leased to the Louis K. Liggett Company a portion of the ground floor of its building located on the west side of Hill street between Fourth and Fifth streets in the city of Los Angeles, with right to sublease any portion thereof except that described as "the drugstore space." Concurrently with the ex-execution of said lease, a supplemental agreement was entered into between the parties therein with regard to the use of the sidewalk elevator above mentioned, the material portion of which reads as follows: "In common with other tenants and occupants of the building and this corporation, you are to have free use of the sidewalk freight elevator on Hill street when the same is completed and accepted by us; when used for your purposes the elevator shall be operated by your own employees, at your own risk, on your own responsibility and without liability to this company." Subsequently, the lessee company sublet a portion of the leased premises to the Subway Electric Company. At the top of the elevator shaft, trapdoors were constructed in the sidewalk which were flush with the sidewalk when closed, but which automatically opened with the raising of the elevator. Walking on the sidewalk above, plaintiff stepped on the doors at the time when an employee of said Subway Electric Company was raising the elevator, by reason whereof plaintiff alleges she was caused to fall, resulting in the injuries for which she brought action, naming several defendants. Judgment, however, ran against the defendant Subway Terminal Corporation alone.

Appellant contends: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings and judgment, for the reason that it shows without contradiction that an employee of the Subway Electric Company operated the elevator at the time, for which appellant cannot be held responsible; (2) that the trial court erred in the admission of certain evidence over defendants' objections, and in rejecting evidence offered by defendants; and (3) that the damages awarded are excessive.

Unquestionably, the proximate cause of the accident was the negligent operation of the elevator, and not any defect in its construction.

[1, 2] The elevator was not leased to said Liggett Company, and control of the same was retained by appellant. The latter's engineer had charge of the machinery used in connection with the building, including "one piece of equipment known as the sidewalk elevator on Hill street." The engineer testified that the Subway Electric Company "had space in there and used this elevator." * * * "I have seen them several times." Asked if the Subway Terminal Company ever operated the elevator, the witness said: "No, sir.

"Q. It was operated by the people who were moving the goods up and down? A. Yes, sir." So it would seem not only was the right to sublease a portion of the premises given to the Liggett Company and permission given to said company "in common with other tenants and occupants of the building" to use said elevator, but that its subtenant, an occupant of the building, was using the elevator with the knowledge of the employee of the Subway Terminal Corporation in charge thereof. There would therefore appear to be no question but that such subtenant had permissive use of the elevator at the time of the accident. It also appears that at and prior to the time of the accident appellant kept a sign posted in the elevator reading as follows: "Those using this elevator assume all risk and responsibility in doing so. Be sure you take all necessary measures to protect people using sidewalk above elevator." Under such circumstances, is the owner liable for the negligence of such operator?

An interesting case is that of Bardel v. Standard Oil Company, 218 App. Div. 145, 218 N. Y. S. 36, 37, where the owner had instructed the tenants not to operate the elevator without first notifying the fireman of defendant, who would then station a man on the sidewalk to warn pedestrians, the court saying: "Since the defendant remained in control of the building and the elevator in question, the duty devolved upon it to see that they were operated without negligence. If the defendant had relinquished all control over the elevator, a different question would arise. As long, however, as the defendant chose to remain in control of the elevator, so that the same could be used in common by the tenants, the defendant took with this control the obligation to see that the elevator was operated without negligence, and no arrangement made by the defendant with a third party could relieve it from this obligation. In other words, the defendant turned the elevator over to be operated by the tenants in common, accompanied by directions to operate it in a particular manner with reference to safeguarding the opening in the sidewalk. A disregard of the instructions still left the operation of the elevator within the power of the tenants, pursuant to the permission of the defendant, and made the defendant liable for injuries due to negligent operation with reference to said opening. The duty to uncover the sidewalk with due regard to the safety of pedestrians the defendant could not escape by an attempted delegation, while the elevator at the same time was operated with its permission. * * * The respondent relies on a number of cases which are claimed to absolve it from liability upon the ground that at the time of the accident the defendant was not in actual control of the elevator, since it was being operated by the tenant. The respondent overlooks the fact that the defendant was still in general control, so that its permission to all its tenants to make common use of the elevator would be valid, and that the tenant was operating the elevator through the respondent's permission, though disregarding one of the directions in connection with such operation. The important fact in the case is the retention by the defendant of the control of the elevator for the common use of the tenants. The respondent quotes from Scott v. Curtis, 195 N. Y. 424, 88 N. E.

794, 133 Am. St. Rep. 811, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1147, as follows: 'When the removal of a cover from a coal hole by the owner's permission creates danger to persons passing along a sidewalk the owner is liable for any negligence in failing to see that proper safeguards or warnings are provided to reasonably protect the public from such danger. Weber v. Buffalo Railway Co., 20 App. Div. 292, 47 N. Y. S. 7; Mullins v. Siegel-Cooper Co., 183 N. Y. 129, 75 N. E. 1112.' The respondent italicizes 'by the owner's permission,' apparently with the thought that the case at bar is distinguished, in that the elevator was used without the defendant's permission. It appears, however, that the defendant's permission was present in the case at bar, provided the tenants safeguarded the opening. This duty of safeguarding the opening, however, the defendant, as noted above, could not delegate to the tenant."

The tenant in that case, as in this, opened the elevator shaft without placing a man on guard. It also appears in the Bardel Case that there was a warning bell which was supposed to ring when the elevator was raised, but which was out of repair and did not operate at the time in question. The court does not allude to this claimed defect in its reasoning, but fixes the liability on the broad ground of the retained control. And well it might, as it would seem that a bell under the sidewalk, which rang only as the elevator was raised, was not such a piece of equipment the lack of which could possibly be a proximate cause of the accident, which must have occurred simultaneously with the warning the bell was supposed to give.

Under the authorities, it would seem that it is not so much ownership as control of property that creates legal liability for its negligent use, for where the landlord leases the premises in their entirety he is not liable for the negligent operation thereof by the lessee. Rider v. Clark, 132 Cal. 382, 64 P. 564. The authorities cited seem to support the judgment in this case as well as to show that the conditions imposed by the owner in the permission given to use the elevator, as well as in the notice posted therein, are of no avail so far as avoiding liability to one properly using the sidewalk who is injured by the negligence of an operator using such elevator with the owner's consent. Appellant urges that the evidence shows no such consent, but in our opinion it supports such inference.

[3, 4] (2) Over appellant's objection, the court permitted the plaintiff to introduce ordinance No. 20449, as amended by ordinance No. 31469, both new series, of the city of Los Angeles. Such ordinances, in substance, make it unlawful to construct or maintain any permanent opening in any sidewalk, unless such opening is covered with metal trapdoors, the side or ends of such doors nearest the curb to be not less than four feet from the outer edge thereof, and provided also with metal guards the height of such doors when opened, specifying how such guards shall be constructed. It is also provided by the amendment that it is unlawful "to open any such doors, or to cause or permit the same to be opened or remain open, unless such a metal guard is placed along the edge of and on each side of such opening and so maintained during such time as such door shall remain open; provided, however, that such metal guard need not be placed or maintained along the side of such opening on which goods, wares, merchandise or other articles are being removed from or taken into the space beneath such opening, if a person is stationed on such side of such opening for the purpose of warning passers-by and of preventing accidents," penalties being provided for a violation of such ordinance. It is respondent's theory, apparently, that the ordinance requires placing such metal guards on the four sides of such opening before raising the doors. The trapdoors referred to opened against the sidewalk traffic and protected the opening in those directions, and the owner had two metal guards which were to be used in closing the openings between the upright sides of the two doors. In our opinion, that is all the ordinance requires. It would seem that with the hinged doors in place there could only be two sides of the opening exposed when they are raised, and such doors as the owner had provided in this case, when placed, would be along the edge of and on each side of the opening. The proviso above quoted specifies that on the side of the opening through which goods or other articles "are being removed" such metal guard need not be placed or maintained, if some person be stationed on such side to give warning. In other words, it would seem to be for the purpose of protecting the opening and not to prevent the doors from doing possible injury that the ordinance was adopted; and while it would seem that under such circumstances the ordinance so introduced was not material, we do not see that the error was prejudicial, as the finding of the court was that the injuries sustained by plaintiff were the proximate result of the negligence of appellant "in permitting said sidewalk elevator and said doors to be operated without taking any precautions for the safety of pedestrians," even though it also added "and in failing to see that the provisions of the ordinances of the city of Los Angeles were fulfilled." The evidence in our opinion supports the first part of the finding, which in turn supports the judgment rendered, even though the additional finding is without such support.

[5] Ordinance No. 33512 (new series) and the elevator safety orders of the Industrial Accident Commission of the state were also introduced in evidence over appellant's objection. Section 332 of such ordinance provides, in substance, that every elevator for the carriage of freight or passengers shall be constructed and maintained in accordance with the provisions of such ordinance and in accordance with the elevator safety orders referred to, and the orders in effect at the time provides that "any person, firm or corporation operating a sidewalk elevator must not open the sidewalk doors thereof without first posting a responsible person on the sidewalk at the said doors." The finding of fact made in connection with such ordinance and orders was "that at the time of the accident in question the sidewalk doors were opened without first posting a responsible person on the sidewalk at the said doors." There was also a finding to the effect "that the operation of said elevator by said person last mentioned was negligent in that no person was stationed at said doors to warn pedestrians that said doors were about to open, and in that no precautions whatever were taken to avoid injury to pedestrians"; so it would seem that, regardless of such ordinance and orders and the finding thereon, there is evidence and a finding which support the judgment. Assuming, then, although not deciding, that the orders of the commission are not properly in evidence in this case, we fail to see that any prejudice resulted from the ordinance and orders having been so introduced.

[6] An objection by plaintiff to a question asked by counsel for appellant of an expert witness who had examined plaintiff physically, as to whether such expert saw anything "that would indicate she could not have pursued her vocation as a waitress at that time," was sustained by the court. The next question asked such witness was, "What did you find with reference to whether or not she was in a condition to work?" to which the former replied: "Clinically, I could find no evidence of any condition which could have been disabling," following which were other questions, the answers to which covered all the ground included in the question to which objection was sustained. In view of that fact, we fail to see where any prejudice resulted, even assuming, without deciding, that error was committed.

[7, 8] (3) The plaintiff testified that her back was wrenched and her left leg cut in two places to the bone; that she was in bed two weeks, but did not get out of the house, except once for two months after she was hurt. The accident occurred April 19, and she testified that she went to work the middle of June, but had to lay off on account of severe pains in her head and back; that she had only been able to work off and on since; that she had "severe pains" in her head and back and was "very nervous"; that her health was perfect before the accident and that she had been under the doctor's care for almost two years since and was still under it, "but not for anything besides the result of this accident, so far as I know." Her doctor corroborated her testimony as to the injuries, to a large extent. The testimony of the expert produced by appellant is in sharp conflict with that of plaintiff. It was the province of the trial judge to weigh the evidence and decide such conflict. Having resolved the same in favor of plaintiff, we must give to the latter's case every inference that can reasonably be drawn in support of the judgment. Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos, etc., Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 273, 104 P. 312. Certainly the evidence quoted justifies the inference that plaintiff, as a result of the accident, suffered pains and headaches for a long period of time, to say nothing of her doctor's bill and loss of time. Under the circumstances, we cannot say that the judgment rendered, $1,750 damages and $48.50 costs, is excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

114 Cal.App. 152
TRANSPORT OIL CO. v. BUSH.
 Civ. 4273.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

May 15, 1931.*

1. Mines and minerals ⇨73.

Lessee's covenant to pay taxes on oil, etc., "or other * * * assets of lessee," held not limited to latter's assets.

2. Mines and minerals ⇨55(2).

Deed requiring grantee to comply with federal regulations required payment of taxes on oil, etc., as covenanted in subsequent lease from United States.

The deed required grantee to comply with federal laws and departmental regulations to end that all rights for production of oil, etc., thereunder, "and particularly under" certain prospecting permit and "any oil lease executed * * * pursuant thereto," may be fully observed.

3. Mines and minerals ⇨55(2).

Grantee, required by deed to extract oil at his expense and sell it at highest price obtainable, held not chargeable with expense of cracking emulsion, unless necessary to obtain such price.

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes'

*Dismissed after judgment pursuant to stipulation of parties.

4. Action  $\hookrightarrow$  6.

Statute authorizing actions to construe contracts refers only to written contracts (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060-1062).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1060 provides that "any person interested under a deed, will, or other written instrument, or under a contract," may bring action to have such instrument, contract or deed construed; section 1061 provides that court may refuse to exercise such power when not necessary or proper; and section 1062 preserves other remedies.

5. Mines and minerals  $\hookrightarrow$  55(2).

Deed requiring payments to grantor for oil, without deducting expenses of selling, handling or "otherwise" did not extend parties' rights or duties beyond similar actions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by the Transport Oil Company, a corporation, against George B. Bush, who filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed and remanded.

Philip C. Farman, of Los Angeles, and George B. Bush, in pro. per., for appellant.

Joe Crail, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Mr. Justice PLUMMER delivered the opinion of the court.

This cause is before us upon an appeal by the defendant from a judgment rendered in the trial court, construing and declaring the rights and duties of the parties to this action, as set forth in and dependent upon an instrument of conveyance executed by the defendant and his wife, and delivered to the plaintiff on the 11th day of May, 1923. The last amended complaint, filed by the plaintiff in its action seeking declaratory relief, sets forth that a controversy has arisen and exists between the plaintiff and the defendant relative to the duties of the respective parties to pay whatever taxes are levied upon the properties referred to in the instrument of conveyance just mentioned.

On the part of the plaintiff, it is contended that the respective parties to this action owned certain interests in the property referred to in the instrument of conveyance, and that under the instrument of conveyance each party should pay whatever taxes were assessed thereon, in proportion to their respective interests. On the part of the defendant, it is contended that by reason of certain language contained in an instrument of lease entered into between the United States government and the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff was granted certain rights and privileges relative to the extraction of oil and other minerals from the premises hereinafter described, the plaintiff should pay all of the taxes levied upon the property hereinafter described, irrespective of the interest or ownership of the parties hereto, therein.

By way of cross-complaint, the defendant asked judgment against the plaintiff for and on account of certain charges paid by the defendant to the plaintiff on account of the cleaning of the oil extracted from the premises. On the part of the plaintiff, it is insisted that an oral contract was entered into between the parties relative to the cleaning or preparing of the oil for market in such manner that a much higher price might and could be obtained therefor. The record shows that, after operations had been carried on upon the premises hereinafter described, the oil became charged with a large quantity of water, which water was not free and would not settle or separate from the oil by force of gravity, but existed in the form of an emulsion composed of oil, gas, and water; that in order to separate the oil and crack or break the emulsion, it was necessary to use a combined process of electrical dehydration, and also a strong chemical substance known as "Tret-o-lite." The record shows that the plaintiff expended the money necessary to install the electrical dehydration plant and make necessary preparation for the cracking of the emulsion, so that the gas and water might be separated from the oil. By means of this process of treatment or cleaning of the oil, a much higher price was obtained for the product than could otherwise be had.

On the part of the plaintiff, it is insisted that an oral contract was entered into relative to paying the costs and expenses of treating or cleaning the oil after the installation of the plant just referred to, and that, by reason of the oral contract, all of the parties interested in the product agreed to pay the expenses of the treatment, in proportion to their respective interests, the cost of installation of the plant being all borne by the plaintiff. On the part of the defendant, while admitting that certain payments have been made by him of his proportionate share of the costs and expenses of treating the oil, that the oral contract referred to, if it ever existed, does not now exist, and the defendant asks for the recovery of moneys in the hands of the plaintiff retained as the defendant's proportionate share of the costs and expenses of cracking the emulsion and cleaning the oil.

The complaint sets forth that on the 11th day of May, 1923, the defendant George B. Bush and his wife, Marion W. Bush, by an instrument of conveyance, conveyed to the plaintiff certain real property situate in Kern county, described as follows, to wit: "All of the southeast quarter of Section 4, Township 11 North, Range 23 West, S.B.B.&M., reserving and excepting therefrom, however, in favor of the grantor George Barnard Bush, the title to, and ownership of an undivided 25 per centum (25%) of all oil, gas and other hydro carbon substances in or under the said land, or which may be extracted from, or produced from, or upon said land, and reserving also, the perpetual right and easement in the grantors, and each of them, his, her, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, agents and assigns, to enter upon the whole, or any part of the property conveyed by this instrument, for the purpose of inspecting the same, or any part thereof, or any oil well or gas well or other improvement thereon." The deed also, under certain conditions, reserved to the grantors the right to enter upon the premises and exploit the same for oil production purposes. The conveyance to which we have referred also contained the following paragraphs, which are material to be set forth herein, to wit:

"(b) The grantee, its successors and assigns, shall and will, at the sole cost and expense of the grantee, its successors and assigns, respectively, comply diligently and promptly and fully with all United States laws and departmental rules and regulations of the Federal Government thereunder, to the end that all rights for the development and production of oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances under such laws, rules and regulations, and particularly under prospecting permit Serial No. 033164, United States Land Office, Los Angeles District, California, and under any oil lease executed under or pursuant thereto, or in accordance therewith, may be fully preserved and enjoyed. If the grantee, its successors and assigns, respectively, fail to do or cause to be done all or any of the said acts and things, in this paragraph hereinbefore referred to, within thirty (30) days prior to the time the same are required to be done, then the grantors, and each of them, his, her and their respective executors, administrators, heirs and assigns, shall have the right, in the name of the grantee, its successors and assigns, and at the sole cost and expense of the grantee, its successors and assigns, to do and perform the same, but nothing herein is intended, or shall be construed as requiring the grantors, or either of them, or his, her, or their respective heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, so to do. Provided, further, however, that the doing or performance of such act or thing by the grantors, or either of them, or his, her or their respective executors, administrators, heirs or assigns, shall not relieve the grantee, its successors or assigns, or any of them, from any default hereunder, or from any of the consequences hereunder of any such default.

"(c) The undivided twenty-five per centum of the oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances in or under the said land or which may be extracted from, or produced from or upon said land herein reserved and excepted in favor of George Barnard Bush, shall be extracted and produced by the grantee and its successors in interest in the property hereby conveyed, at the sole cost and expense of the grantee, and its successors in interest in said property respectively, for and on behalf of, and free of expense to said George Barnard Bush, and his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, and shall be diligently sold at all times by the said grantee, and its successors in interest in said land, at the highest price reasonably obtainable therefor, but never less than what is known as and called 'the standard oil market price', prevailing during the month the same is produced, for products of like kind and quality, in the field where the land is situated, and payment therefor, without any deduction for expense of selling, handling or otherwise, shall be made monthly at said price on or before the 23d day of each month for all of said products which may be sold during the preceding calendar month, segregated as follows. * * *

The deed further provided that so much of the production of the oil as should be required to be paid to the United States government should be deducted from the 25 per centum retained by the grantors.

[1] After the execution and delivery of the deed of conveyance by the defendant and his wife to the plaintiff, the plaintiff entered into a lease agreement with the United States government, providing for the payment of five per centum of the gross profits of the oil taken from the premises herein referred to, which lease, among other covenants to be performed by the plaintiff, contained the following: "To pay when due, all taxes lawfully assessed and levied under the laws of the state, upon improvements, oil and gas produced from the lands hereunder, or other rights, property or assets of the lessee."

The controversy arose over the fact that the county of Kern levies and collects taxes upon the oil, minerals, and hydrocarbon products produced from, and contained within, the premises hereinbefore described, as distinct from the surface ownership of the 40-acre tract of land.

The lease executed and delivered by the United States government to the plaintiff authorizing it to extract oil and hydrocarbon substances from the 40 acres of land described makes no reference to the rights or interests of the defendant therein or thereto, but it does contain covenants and conditions necessary to be construed and interpreted in connection with the provisions and conditions of the deed of grant under which the plaintiff is vested with an interest in the oil, minerals, and hydrocarbon products contained in the demised premises. The plaintiff construes the foregoing quoted language from the lease as though it refers only to the assets of the lessee. This, however, we think is an erroneous interpretation. The lease distinctly specifies that the plaintiff is to pay all taxes levied upon oil and gas produced from the premises. All the remainder of the covenant consists of general language relating to such other property rights or assets as might belong to the lessee. In other words, so far as the covenant is concerned affecting the plaintiff, it must be construed as though the language therein contained consisted only of the following: "To pay when due, all taxes lawfully assessed or levied under the laws of the state, upon all oil and gas produced from the lands hereunder." There is no limitation as to the ownership of the oil and gas. It is a direct covenant to pay whatever taxes may be levied upon the product that may be taken from the demised premises. Again, this lease is executed in accordance with the laws of the United States, and the rules and regulations of the federal government.

[2] This brings us back to a consideration of paragraph (b) contained in the deed of conveyance, which reads as follows: "(b) The grantee, its successors and assigns, shall and will, at the sole cost and expense of the grantee, its successors and assigns respectively, comply diligently and promptly and fully with all United States laws and departmental rules and regulations of the federal government thereunder, to the end that all rights for the development and production of oil, gas and other hydro-carbon substances under such laws, rules and regulations, and particularly under Prospecting Permit Serial No. 033164, United States Land Office, Los Angeles District, California, and under any oil lease executed under or pursuant thereto, or in accordance therewith, may be fully observed and enjoyed." The lease to which we have referred, it may be again stated, was executed under and in accordance with the laws of the United States and departmental rules and regulations of the federal government. The rules and regulations of the federal government prescribed that oil leases shall be in a certain form, to wit, in the form executed and delivered to the plaintiff in this action, and that it shall contain certain covenants and conditions to be performed by the lessee, among them being the payment of all taxes levied upon all oil, etc., produced from the leased premises. The condition specified in the paragraph of the grant under which the plaintiff was vested with title provides that the plaintiff shall perform all those conditions at its sole cost and expense. The plaintiff contends that its duty under the lease and the grant to which we have referred binds it only to comply with the rules and regulations, and not to any covenants or conditions contained in the lease. However, it is provided that the lease shall be in a certain form which makes it a part and parcel of the rules and regulations adopted by the federal government, under and by virtue of which the plaintiff is permitted to go upon the premises and extract therefrom oil, gas, and hydro-carbon substances.

Paragraphs B and C of the deed of conveyance relate to entirely different subjects. Everything referred to in paragraph B must be done and performed at the sole cost and expense of the grantee, etc., and from the language found therein, whereby the plaintiff covenants to comply with all the rules and regulations of the federal government which, as we have stated, includes the lease, binds it to do and perform all those acts at his own cost and expense. Paragraph C of the lease has only to do with the expenses of extracting the oil and marketing the same. That a certain percentage of the oil remains the property of the defendant, and upon which he would otherwise be compelled to pay taxes, is wholly immaterial, because in the insertion of paragraph B into the grant of conveyance, it must be held that the parties intended that everything required to be done and performed by the rules and regulations of the federal government, and the covenants and conditions contained in the lease under which the plaintiff would be authorized to enter upon the premises, were fully taken into consideration, and language used which would cover all and every of the conditions, and then it is provided that such acts shall be at the sole cost and expense of the grantee. There is nothing in paragraph B relating to the cost and expense of extracting the oil or of marketing the same. It is expressly directed to the performance of all the acts required to be performed under the rules and regulations of the federal government permit and lease secured from the federal government. Paragraph B of the deed of conveyance requires that the plaintiff shall protect all the rights of the parties in this action secured by the lease, and his rights cannot be protected unless all the conditions of the lease are complied with.

While, as urged by the respondent, no departmental rule or regulation requiring the lessee to pay taxes appears to have been introduced as testimony in this case, there is a covenant in the lease to that effect, and this covenant must have been in contemplation of the parties to this action when the deed of conveyance was executed, and therefore becomes just as binding as though some departmental rule or regulation existed independent ly of the lease requiring the lessee to pay taxes.

We do not need to review the authorities cited by the respondent relative to the duty of every owner of property to pay all taxes levied and assessed thereon, and we can agree with respondent that if the deed of conveyance and the lease to which we have referred did not require the lessee to pay all taxes, then and in that case it would be obligatory upon the defendant to pay whatever taxes might be levied upon his 25 per cent. interest.

[3] It necessarily follows from what we have said that the finding of the court relative to the payment of taxes is unsupported by the evidence, and that the construction given to the agreement by the court is not in accordance with the true intent and meaning thereof. A further question, however, is presented for our consideration in the cross-complaint filed by the defendant and the plaintiff's answer thereto relative to the costs and expenses of cracking the emulsion heretofore referred to in this opinion. The contention of the plaintiff is that an oral agreement was entered into between the parties to the effect that the costs and expenses of cracking the emulsion should be paid by the parties in proportion to their interest in the oil, gas, and hydrocarbon products produced or extracted from the premises. The finding of the court in relation to this question is simply that the market value of the oil with the emulsion therein was and is not nearly so great as when the emulsion is broken and the water and gases removed therefrom. There is no finding of the court to the effect that the breaking of the emulsion was reasonably necessary in order to profitably market the product. Paragraph C of the deed of conveyance provides for the extraction of oil, gas, and other hydrocarbon substances from the premises by the plaintiff at the sole cost and expense of the grantee, etc., and that the product "shall be diligently sold at all times by the said grantee, and its successors in interest in said land, at the highest price reasonably obtainable therefor." No construction can be given to this portion of the deed of conveyance by reason of the absence of any finding of fact as to whether the cracking of the emulsion was reasonably necessary, to the intent and purpose that the highest price reasonably obtainable for the product should or could be obtained. If the cracking of the emulsion is a treatment of the oil reasonably necessary to obtain the highest price which might reasonably be obtained for the product, then and in that event the costs and expenses thereof would necessarily be chargeable to the plaintiff as grantee under the deed of conveyance. Otherwise, it would be an item of expense to be borne by the parties interested in the product.

[4] Here, again, we are confronted with the provisions of section 1060 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing for declaratory judgments. That section, so far as material here, reads, as follows: "Any person interested under a deed, will or other written instrument, or under a contract, or who desires a declaration of his rights or duties with respect to another," etc., may bring an action to have such instrument or contract or deed construed, etc. The question arises, must the contract sought to be construed be in the form of an instrument in writing? Is it within the contemplation of the section that testimony shall be taken to establish an oral contract, and then pronounce judgment construing the same and declaring the intent and purpose of the parties as found in such contract? While the language of the section, literally construed, would include an oral contract, a careful consideration of all the words preceding the word "contract" leads us to the conclusion that the portion of the section quoted and relied upon in this action must be held to refer only to a contract that is in writing, to a contract the terms of which are fixed and definite and not depending upon the oral declarations of witnesses or the memory of the parties as to the language used by them in entering into an agreement. Section 1061, Code of Civil Procedure, reads: "The court may refuse to exercise the power granted by this chapter in any case where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances." Thus, it may be safely stated that whether the Legislature intended to refer to oral contracts by the words used in section 1060, supra, it is evident that the court ought to and should refuse to exercise the power granted under the provisions of section 1060, Code of Civil Procedure, whenever it is necessary, first, to take testimony to prove the existence of an oral contract, and then enter a judgment granting declaratory relief. In all such cases, we have no hesitancy in stating that the proper course is to remit the parties to the remedies provided by law, as provided for in section 1062, Code of Civil Procedure. While the California cases are silent upon the subject, the whole tenor of authorities found in other states is to the effect that declaratory judgments will be refused where, to enter the same, requires a judicial investigation of disputed facts. This has been carried so far in some cases having to do with written instruments, where both questions of fact and construction are involved, that relief will be denied. Thus, in 6 Ruling Case Law Permanent Supplement, page 3957, we find the following: "Declaratory judgments being within the discretion of the court, it may in its discretion refuse a declaration which can only be made after a judicial investigation of disputed facts, especially where the disputed questions of fact will be the subject of judicial investigation in a regular action. For example, the court will not make a declaration as to the construction of a written instrument where both questions of fact and construction are involved, and a decision as to the matter of construction will not settle the controversy."

In the notes found in 68 A. L. R. beginning on page 110, the rule is thus stated: "Ordinarily, a declaratory judgment will be refused where to render same requires a judicial investigation of disputed facts." Citing Newsum v. Interstate Realty Co., 152 Tenn. 302, 278 S. W. 56; also, 12 A. L. R. 72; Ladner v. Siegel, 294 Pa. 368, 144 A. 274. To the same effect are the notes found in 12 A. L. R. beginning on page 72. See, also, as to relief being discretionary, notes in 50 A. L. R. beginning on page 42; also, a long list of annotations contained in 19 A. L. R. beginning on page 1124.

[5] While the respective parties in their briefs have given considerable attention to the meaning of the words "handling or otherwise," found in paragraph C of the deed of conveyance, we do not think that the use of the word "otherwise" extends either the rights or duties of the respective parties any further than to like or similar actions previously specified in said paragraph, and that the interpretation of the word does not call for special consideration herein.

From what we have said, it necessarily follows that the judgment of the trial court should be, and the same is hereby, reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

115 Cal.App. 230

ROSSI v. JEDLICK et al.
Civ. 149.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

June 27, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 24, 1931.

1. Licenses ⇨39.

Contract for preorganization subscription to stock of proposed corporation, made when no permit to sell stock was issued, held valid when made (St. 1917, p. 685, § 25, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1118, § 3).

Plaintiff paid money to promoters of corporation and received receipt reciting that money was paid as preorganization subscription to capital stock in corporation to be organized and that money was to be repaid if party could not agree on conditions whereby corporation was to take over business. At time instrument was executed, no permit to sell stock in proposed corporation had been issued, but subsequently conditional permit was issued providing that stock should be placed in escrow until ordered released by corporation commissioner, which release was never ordered, and stock was never delivered.

2. Licenses ⇨18½.

Corporate Securities Act making subscriptions to stock conditioned on incorporation held to become part of contract for preorganization subscription (St. 1917, p. 685, § 25, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1118, § 3).

3. Licenses ⇨39.

Invalidity of contract for preorganization subscription to corporate stock by promoter's failure to secure permit to sell stock did not affect agreement to return money paid (St. 1917, p. 685, § 25, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1118, § 3).

4. Corporations ⇨82.

Without written agreement to return money paid as preorganization subscription to stock on failure to issue stock, law would imply such agreement (St. 1917, p. 685, § 25, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1118, § 3).

5. Corporations ⇨88.

Plaintiff paying money for preorganization subscription to corporate stock could sue to recover money on breach of contract (St. 1917, p. 685, § 25, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1118, § 3).

6. Contracts ⇨139.

Where class of contracts is prohibited to protect particular parties thereto, adverse parties cannot assert illegality of contract.

7. Licenses ⇨18½.

Inhibitions of Corporate Securities Act are designed to protect purchasers of corporate stock (St. 1917, p. 685, § 25, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1118, § 3).

8. Limitation of actions ⇨66(4).

Where contract for preorganization subscription to corporate stock was legal when made, action to recover money paid, brought shortly after demand and breach, was not barred by limitation.

9. Corporations ⇨88.

Evidence held not to show contract for preorganization subscription to corporate stock was extinguished by subscriber's purchase of interest in business to have been purchased by proposed corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Lloyd E. Griffin, Judge.

Action by D. F. Rossi against A. V. Jedlick and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals.

Affirmed.

Hendee & Rodabaugh, of San Diego, for appellant.

A. T. Procopio, of San Diego, for respondent.

BARNARD, P. J.

This action was brought to recover money paid by the plaintiff to A. V. Jedlick and Harry H. Heim as a preorganization subscription to the capital stock of a corporation. The action was dismissed as to John Doe and the Hawk Company. At the time the money was paid, the defendants gave to the plaintiff the following receipt:

"San Diego, Cal., April 6, 1925.

"Received of D. F. Rossi the sum of three thousand dollars ($3000.00) as a preorganization subscription to the capital stock in a corporation to be organized by the undersigned to be known as the Jedlick-Heim Co., which corporation is to take over the business now being conducted by the undersigned at the southeast corner of Sixth and C Streets, San Diego, California. Should said Rossi and the undersigned be unable to agree upon the terms, price and conditions upon which said corporation is to take over said business or upon any of the other details connected with or arising out of said matters or connected therewith we agree to repay said amount to said Rossi together with interest thereon at the rate of 7% per annum from the date hereof to the date of payment together with any further sum said Rossi may advance in connection with these matters and interest thereon, within 90 days after said Rossi shall have made written demand for the same, which said written demand shall be given us personally.

"A. V. Jedlick
"Harry H. Heim."

At the time this instrument was executed, no permit to sell stock in the proposed corporation had been issued. Plaintiff's subscription for stock was not mentioned in the articles of incorporation, which were later filed under the name of Jedlick-Heim Company. The said Jedlick-Heim Company did not receive its charter until October 1, 1926. Some time later application was made to the commissioner of corporations for permission to issue stock of the corporation in exchange for the business which had been previously conducted by Jedlick and Heim. A conditional permit was issued, which provided that the stock should be placed in escrow until it should be ordered released by the corporation commissioner. Such a release was never ordered, and the stock was never delivered. A number of oral demands were made by the plaintiff for the return of his money, and on October 18, 1928, a written demand therefor was made. Thereafter, this action was brought.

The complaint alleges that Jedlick and Heim are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000 on account of moneys, at the special instance and request of said defendants and pursuant to the written agreement above set forth, paid and advanced to said defendants by the plaintiff. It further alleges the parties to the agreement have been unable to agree upon the terms, price, and conditions upon which the corporation mentioned was to take over the business referred to, and that they have been unable and have not agreed to any of the details in connection therewith. It is then alleged that the plaintiff has elected to declare the said amount due and owing from the defendants, and has made written demand therefor. The defendants answered and the case was tried before the court without a jury.

The court found that the agreement was entered into and the money paid; that the defendants had no permit from the commissioner of corporations to issue or sell stock in the corporation; that the corporation subsequently formed received its charter on October 1, 1926, more than ninety days after the execution of the subscription agreement; that the plaintiff signed the articles of incorporation in which he is named as having subscribed for one share of stock; that on March 11, 1927, a permit was issued by the commissioner of corporations authorizing the issuance of 480 shares of stock in exchange for the assets of a business which had theretofore been carried on by these defendants, but requiring said stock to be placed in escrow until certain conditions were complied with and until it was authorized to be released by the corporation department; that such a release has never been authorized; that the plaintiff has received nothing for his $3,000, other than the written receipt and contract above set forth, and no stock has ever been delivered to the plaintiff; that the parties to the agreement referred to have not been able and have not agreed upon the details connected with the organization of the proposed corporation; and that demand has been made for the return of the money, which demand has been refused. As conclusions of law, the court found that the defendants' promise to deliver the stock in question was void, and also found that the defendants had breached their contract through failure of consideration, and through their failure to repay the plaintiff after demand made. A judgment in favor of the plaintiff followed, from which this appeal is taken.

Appellant's particular contention is that the judgment is in reality based upon a cause of action for money had and received, and that such a cause of action is both outside the allegations of the complaint and barred by the statute of limitations. This contention is based not upon the findings, but upon the first conclusion of law, to the effect that the agreement in question was void because the defendants were at that time prohibited by law from entering into such a subscription contract, and that the payment of the $3,000 was without legal consideration and the defendants held the same for the use and benefit of the plaintiff.

[1] We think this agreement was not void at the time it was entered into. Section 25 of the Corporate Securities Act, as amended in 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 1114, 1118, § 3), provides as follows: "Neither this act nor any provision hereof shall be deemed to prohibit subscriptions for shares of a domestic corporation made prior to the incorporation thereof and set forth in its articles of incorporation; but such subscriptions shall be deemed to have been made and accepted upon the condition that such corporation shall be incorporated within ninety days thereafter and, when incorporated, shall with reasonable diligence apply for and secure from the commissioner a permit authorizing the issue of the shares so subscribed for, in accordance with such subscriptions."

[2-7] Under the terms of this section it was incumbent upon the defendants to set forth this subscription for stock in the articles of incorporation of the corporation subsequently formed, and the subscription was deemed to have been made and accepted upon the condition that incorporation should take place within ninety days, and that the incorporators would thereafter proceed with reasonable diligence to secure a permit for the issuance of the shares thus subscribed for. This section became a part of the contract by operation of law. Any subsequent illegality in the contract arose through the failure of the defendants to carry out the terms imposed by law. Through this failure the defendants breached the contract in an additional respect. The defendants had agreed to return the money in a written agreement which did not outlaw for four years. It was valid when made, and any subsequent invalidity not only arose through the actions of the defendants, but applies only to the transfer of the stock. While their own neglect later made it impossible for the defendants to enforce the subscription for stock as against the plaintiff, their own agreement to return the money paid upon certain conditions was not rendered illegal. In the absence of any written agreement, the law would have implied an agreement to return the money paid. Santa Clara Valley Peat Fuel Co. v. Tuck, 53 Cal. 304. This being so, certainly a written agreement to return the money would not be contrary to law when the entire contract was legal when made, and any subsequent illegality arose through the fault of the defendants. The court found upon sufficient evidence that the contract itself had been breached, and in addition found that the defendants had failed to comply with the provisions of section 25 of the Corporate Securities Act, which were a part of the contract. Under such circumstances, we are of the opinion that the respondent was not barred from bringing an action under the contract to recover the money paid. Where a class of contracts is prohibited for the protection of particular parties thereto, the adverse parties cannot take advantage of the illegality of such contracts. Savings Bank v. Burns, 104 Cal. 473, 38 P. 102. Smith v. Bach, 183 Cal. 259, 191 P. 14. The inhibitions of the Corporate Securities Act are designed for the protection of the purchasers of stock in corporations, and the finest of technicalities should not be indulged in to enable the promoters of such corporations to escape their obligation to the very persons whom the statute was designed to protect.

[8] Even if this action should be construed as one for money had and received, it would not necessarily follow, under the circumstances here existing, that this action was barred by the statute of limitations. In Rose v. Foord, 96 Cal. 152, 30 P. 1114, 1115, certain stock in a certain corporation had been paid for under a written agreement that the same should be delivered. The issuance of the stock was held up by an injunction and after about six years, plaintiff sued for the return of the money paid, in an action for money had and received. The court held that the plaintiff was not confined to damages for breach of his contract, but that he had a right after waiting for a reasonable time, to demand the return of his money, that until such demand was made the retention of the money by the seller was lawful and, therefore, there was no cause of action prior to the demand and the statute had not run. In the case before us, the agreement was legal when made, the defendants did not comply with the statute, and later, the stock, although issued, was held up by the terms of the permit so that it could not be delivered to the plaintiff. While he had the right to demand the return of his money at an earlier date, until he did demand it, the retention of the money by the defendants was lawful. While he waited longer than he was required to wait, as was said in Rose v. Foord, supra, "it does not lie in the mouth of the defendant to say that he waited too long. When he chose to wait no longer, and to demand back his money, he had an undoubted right to receive it." As was said in Richter v. Union Land, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 P. 39, 41: "But the action is not for a breach of the original contract, but upon an obligation growing out of the failure to perform it. The plaintiff was not bound to treat the contract as abandoned on the first breach of it, or on any particular breach, but had his election still to rely upon it. The statute could not begin to run until he made his election to rely no longer upon the contract, and to sue for the money paid to the defendant under it."

The defendants were obligated to return this money both by the contract implied by law and by their express contract. They seek to avoid this liability on the claim that their written contract was void under the statute and that their implied contract was barred by the statute of limitations. While such a result might obtain under some circumstances, we think it is not necessary to so hold under the conditions here existing.

A further consideration is that the bar of the statute of limitations was not pleaded by the defendants. While they seek to explain this by asserting that they took a different view of the complaint, and while they requested permission to amend their answer in that regard after the court's decision had been announced, the situation is not one that requires us to hold that the court abused its discretion.

Appellant asserts that the finding that the details connected with the transaction in question were never agreed upon is not supported by the evidence. The matters pointed out in this connection merely create a conflict in the evidence upon this point. The defendant Heim, after testifying to numerous disagreements, testified that he was finally compelled to leave when the lock on the door was changed to prevent him from entering the premises, and that nothing was definitely agreed upon, prior to his departure.

[9] The only other point raised is that the written agreement above referred to was abandoned and extinguished by mutual consent, and that thereafter a new and distinct agreement was made by the parties, which new agreement was fully performed. It is here contended that at a later date the respondent purchased an interest in the business previously conducted by the defendants, paying therefor the sum mentioned in the written agreement, and that he was in fact one of the partners, irrespective of the forming of the corporation. Not only is this defense not pleaded but it is not supported by the evidence. Nothing appears in the evidence to indicate that the respondent did anything other than assist in the formation of the corporation by signing its articles of incorporation and by attending meetings at which the parties were attempting to arrive at an agreement concerning the details of the transaction. In this connection appellant relies upon certain testimony given by Heim in which he stated that they considered the respondent one of the firm, and that he would have shared in the profits if there had been any; that respondent was supposed to get stock if they incorporated, but until things were settled he would share in the profits. However, Helm also testified that he couldn't remember having talked such a proposition over with the respondent. There is no evidence that such an arrangement was ever agreed to by the respondent, or even mentioned to him. Jedlick testified as follows: "Q. Was he to receive an interest in the business or was he to receive some stock? A. Well, stock, as soon as the corporation is formed, naturally stock."

While we are not in accord with the first conclusion of law set forth by the trial court, we think the judgment is sustained both by the pleadings and the evidence, and that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; JENNINGS, J.

115 Cal.App. 490

SAWYER v. NELSON et ux.

Civ. 406.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 15, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1931.

1. Automobiles ⇨244(11).

Evidence held sufficient to support judgment against driver of automobile colliding at intersection with other car approaching from right (St. 1923, p. 560, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 398, § 15).

2. Automobiles ⇨244(43).

Evidence held not to establish that driver of automobile approaching from right was guilty of contributory negligence in respect to collision at intersection (St. 1923, p. 560, § 131, as amended by St. 1925, p. 398, § 15).

3. Damages ⇨132(6).

$14,000 for injuries consisting of broken right ankle and right femur broken in two places held not excessive.

4. New trial ⇨105.

Newly discovered evidence which was merely cumulative and of impeaching character held not to require new trial.

Newly discovered evidence in action to recover for injuries in automobile collision consisted merely of that of newsboys to effect that taxicab driver who had testified that he witnessed accident did not arrive at scene of collision until five minutes after it happened, as to which other witnesses had already testified, making it apparent that evidence sought to be obtained from newly discovered witnesses was solely impeaching and cumulative.

5. New trial ⇐105.

Newly discovered evidence that is merely impeaching does not furnish any ground for new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by Ralph M. Sawyer against George F. Nelson and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Kenneth J. Murphy, of Los Angeles, and Hugh A. Sanders, of San Diego, for appellants.

Stearns, Luce & Forward and Fred Kunzel, all of San Diego, for respondent.

MARKS, J.

This action grew out of an automobile collision happening about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of December 31, 1927, at the corner of Cedar and Dale streets in the city San Diego. The case was tried before the court without a jury. A judgment was rendered in favor of respondent in the sum of $14,000.

Appellants present various grounds upon which they urge a reversal of the judgment. These may be consolidated under four heads, which may be stated as follows: First, that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment; second, that the evidence shows contributory negligence as a matter of law on the part of respondent; third, that the damages awarded are excessive; and, fourth, that the court erred in denying appellants' motion for a new trial. We will consider the first two grounds together.

As is very frequently the case in actions of this kind, the evidence offered by the respective parties is sharply conflicting. Had the trial court found in favor of appellants, there would have been ample evidence to support such a finding. However, as it found in favor of respondent, it will only be necessary for us to discuss such portions of the record as are most favorable to him.

The evidence discloses that Cedar and Dale streets intersect each other at right angles. Just prior to the accident, respondent was driving a Ford delivery truck south on Dale street approaching its intersection with Cedar street. When he was between thirty and forty feet northerly from the north line of Cedar street he saw Marie J. Nelson on Cedar street at a point between sixty and seventy feet east from the easterly property line of Dale street. She was approaching westerly on Cedar street at a speed of between thirty and thirty-five miles per hour. When he saw the Nelson car approaching the intersection respondent applied his brakes and reduced his speed until he was traveling less than fifteen miles per hour as he reached the northerly line of the intersection. At this time Mrs. Nelson had reached a point about twenty feet from the intersection and had greatly reduced the speed of her automobile. She testified that, "I slowed up so I was almost to a dead stop. Then I started to go across the street." Respondent, seeing the speed of the other automobile so greatly reduced, proceeded on his way across the intersection, believing that Mrs. Nelson was stopping to yield the right of way to him. Instead of stopping, Mrs. Nelson accelerated the speed of her car and entered the intersection. Respondent, seeing that a collision was imminent, swung his automobile to his right and Mrs. Nelson swung her car to her left, its right side coming into contact with the left side of the Ford truck in what is commonly called a "side swipe." The point of the collision was about fifteen feet westerly from the center of the intersection. Both automobiles proceeded toward the south curb line of Cedar street, the front wheels of respondent's truck mounting the curb. The truck turned over on its side throwing respondent over the windshield and onto the pavement, where his right leg was broken in three places.

Respondent entered the intersection first. Mrs. Nelson approached the intersection from his left. Section 131 of the California Vehicle Act (as added by St. 1925, p. 398, § 15), in effect at the time of this accident, provides in part as follows: "When two vehicles approach an intersection of public highways at approximately the same time, the vehicle approaching from the right shall have the right of way, provided such vehicle is traveling at a lawful speed."

[1, 2] A statement of the foregoing facts effectively refutes appellants' contentions that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, and that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. As respondent entered the intersection first at a lawful speed, and as Mrs. Nelson was approaching from his left and had brought her car almost to a standstill twenty feet from the intersection, the question of what an ordinarily prudent person should have done under these circumstances, and the question of her negligence and the contributory negligence of respondent, were questions of fact to be determined by the trial court. It having resolved these questions in favor of respondent, its findings are conclusive and cannot be disturbed by this court.

[3] Appellants next complain that the amount of damages awarded were so excessive that they indicated passion and prejudice and a disregard of the evidence on the part of the trial court. The evidence discloses that respondent's right ankle was badly broken and his right femur broken in two places. He was removed from the place of the accident to a hospital, where his fractures were reduced and a rigid cast was placed upon him extending from his waist to the extremity of his right leg. He was compelled to wear such a cast continually thereafter. He remained in the hospital until June 22, 1928. He returned to the hospital during the month of September, 1928, and again in February, 1929. He was compelled to again return to the hospital in May, 1929, where he remained for six weeks, as the femur had failed to unite. During his last hospital confinement, he was required to undergo a bone-grafting operation. At the time of the trial in August, 1929, he was still in the cast, and the court found that he would be required to wear it for a period of at least four additional months. Respondent faces the possibility, if not the probability, of being required to undergo a second bone-grafting operation which will cost him at least $1,000. His right leg is shortened so that it will be one or more inches shorter than normal during the remainder of his life. It was stipulated at the trial that he had incurred bills for medical attention, hospital care, X-ray and other services as a result of his injuries in the sum of $2,010.60. He also suffered pain from the time of the injury on December 31, 1927, to the time of the trial in August, 1929, and faced the prospect of further suffering over a considerable period of time.

Under the facts of this case, we cannot conclude that the damages awarded were excessive in view of the rule in California, applicable here, which is set forth in the case of Cosey v. Los Angeles Railway Corp., 192 Cal. 265, 219 P. 978, 980, as follows:

"There is a multitude of authorities in this state to the effect that in actions for damages for personal injuries, where the amount of the award is left to the sound discretion of the jury, or of the court, if the case is tried without a jury, the award made in the trial court is conclusive on appeal unless the amount appears to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. * * * 'If a motion for a new trial upon this ground is denied by the trial court, we cannot reverse the judgment unless the amount thereof is "so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury"' (Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 713, 106 P. 83)."

Appellants' motion for a new trial was made upon several grounds, one being newly discovered evidence supported by an affidavit of George F. Nelson. This affidavit fails to disclose that appellant used any great amount of diligence in attempting to discover and produce the witnesses mentioned therein. More than fifteen months elapsed between the filing of the complaint and the trial of the action. During this time appellants knew they were being sued for damages resulting from the injuries to respondent, and they should have been diligent in discovering their witnesses and producing them at the trial. However, we prefer to base our conclusions upon grounds other than their apparent lack of diligence.

[4] Respondent produced Glenn Kennet Rose, a taxi driver, as a witness in his behalf. Rose testified that just prior to the accident he was driving his taxicab south on Dale street about fifty feet in the rear of respondent's truck, and that he witnessed the accident, reaching the place where Mrs. Nelson's automobile and the truck came to rest a few seconds after the collision. According to the affidavit of George F. Nelson, all of the newly discovered witnesses were expected to testify that Rose did not reach the scene of the accident until four or five minutes after it happened. In addition, two of the witnesses, whose names are not disclosed in the affidavit, they being described as newsboys who at the time of the making of the affidavit were residing in New York City, were expected to testify that they arrived at the scene of the collision between one and two minutes after it occurred, and that Rose was not then at the scene of the accident, and, further, that they heard respondent say "That the accident was caused by his going too fast, that he was unable to swerve his car to the left and go behind the defendants' automobile and thus avoid an accident." Appellant Marie J. Nelson and her son Maxwell Nelson both testified to this alleged statement. Both these witnesses, together with a third witness, testified that Rose did not appear at the place of the accident until four or more minutes after the collision. It is immediately apparent that the evidence sought to be obtained from the newly discovered witnesses was solely impeaching and cumulative.

[5] Newly discovered evidence that is merely impeaching, and an impeachment of evidence offered at the trial, does not furnish any ground for the granting of a new trial. Estate of Baird, 198 Cal. 490, 246 P. 324; Waer v. Waer, 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891. The rule is clearly stated in 20 Cal. Jur. 98, as follows:

"Newly discovered evidence designed merely to impeach or contradict the testimony of adverse witnesses, or which has only that effect, is not of a character to warrant a new trial. Nor will a new trial be granted because of the discovery of new evidence which, if produced, would only tend to impair the credibility of the evidence given, or to contradict a witness of the opposing party, or where the only value of newly discovered testimony is as impeaching evidence. Thus a new trial is properly denied where the new evidence consists of a written statement made by one of the principal witnesses for the adverse party which varied in material respects from his testimony subsequently given at the trial.

"Evidence of a statement of a party contradicting a fact he had testified to upon the trial is impeaching and not sufficient to warrant a new trial."

The rule regarding newly discovered cumulative evidence is stated in 20 California Jurisprudence, at page 94, as follows: "Newly discovered evidence which is merely cumulative affords no ground for a new trial, unless it is clear that such evidence, notwithstanding its cumulative character, is of sufficient probative force to render probable a different result upon a retrial of the case, in which event it not only warrants, but may require, an order granting a new trial. In accord with this rule it is clearly not an abuse of discretion to refuse a new trial where the new evidence is merely cumulative." Smith v. Lombard, 201 Cal. 518, 258 P. 55; Parker v. Southern Pacific Co., 204 Cal. 609, 269 P. 622; Robinson v. McKnight, 103 Cal. App. 718, 284 P. 1056.

In the instant case, we cannot conclude that the newly discovered evidence of the two newsboys, which was merely cumulative and impeaching, was of sufficient weight to render probable a different result on a new trial, and accordingly there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court in denying the motion.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 486

ZELLER v. KNAPP et al.

Civ. 6809.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 14, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 13, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1931.

1. Appeal and error §1011(1).

Conflict in evidence precludes contrary ruling on appeal, where findings are supported by some substantial evidence.

2. Attorney and client §127.

Proof of actual fraud as between attorney and client is not requisite to maintenance of action for moneys intrusted to attorney.

3. Attorney and client §123(1).

Relation of attorney and client is confidential in character, and any contract whereby attorney obtains advantage is presumed to have been obtained by undue influence.

4. Money received §1.

Action for money had and received may be maintained whenever equity arises from circumstances of which it appears that one has money which he ought to pay to another.

5. Attorney and client §127.

Evidence warranted recovery of money intrusted to attorney for investment on ground of false misrepresentation respecting business.

6. Appeal and error §996.

Appellate court is not authorized to disturb findings of fact or judgment, where fair and reasonable ground for difference of opinion is presented.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by Bessie Zeller, formerly Bessie Cook, against D. A. Knapp and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals.

Affirmed.

D. A. Knapp and Ewell D. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. S. Goldflam, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, Acting P. J.

The defendants, as alleged trustees for the plaintiff and respondent, were by her paid certain moneys which they agreed to invest in an incorporated trucking business of which they were directors. It was also alleged by the plaintiff that the defendant and appellant D. A. Knapp, an attorney and counselor at law, was at the same time her legal adviser; that he promised large returns upon said investment, the issuance of stock or investment certificates in their names as such trustees, the payment of plaintiff's share of profits each month, and the refund of her principal together with any unpaid accrued interest, upon one year's notice in writing; that the business was not profitable; that its returns were not as represented by appellant; and that no part of the same had been refunded. The defendants admitted receipt of the moneys for investment, denying any misrepresentation as to volume of business or amount of returns, or that D. A. Knapp was then or at any time the plaintiff's attorney, or that either of the defendants acted in any capacity other than as recipients of checks aggregating $6,000 for investment as directed by her. Defendant Knapp affirmatively alleged that "to the end of insuring the success of said investment to plaintiff, this defendant secured stock therein to represent her full pro rata, ever holding the same as her trustee; * * * that this defendant as said trustee has far exceeded the requirements in said trustees' agreement set forth and has done everything humanly possible in the premises to conserve plaintiff's investment and bring realization to plaintiff's hopes therein; that at all times this defendant has been ready to turn over to plaintiff corporate evidence of the holdings of the defendants to and for the benefit of plaintiff according to the terms of said agreement, but plaintiff has never made demand therefor, either in writing or otherwise." Findings of fact and judgment were awarded the plaintiff, and the defendant Knapp appealed from said judgment.

[1] There is a sharp conflict of evidence, direct and circumstantial, from which the trial court found that appellant falsely and with intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff, represented the trucking business as of a large volume and that its proceeds were enormous, and that he made numerous other fraudulent representations. This conflict alone precludes a contrary ruling upon appeal, even though, as argued by appellant, such findings appear to be against a preponderance of the evidence, where they are, as here, supported by some substantial evidence. City and County of San Francisco v. Center, 133 Cal. 673, 66 P. 83. But we think that for other reasons the judgment must be affirmed, and that a more extensive consideration of this phase of the case is therefore unnecessary.

The complaint contained a cause of action for money had and received, and the plaintiff also alleged that appellant acted as her attorney in the matter, which, as already mentioned, was strenuously denied both in the answer and upon the trial. It was testified by respondent and her daughter, and the trial court found, that appellant "arranged all of the terms of the contract between the parties while acting as the attorney for the plaintiff"; that the defendants received from the plaintiff the sum of $6,000, which she paid to Knapp for investment and which he turned over to Hunt; that no stock was issued to the plaintiff; that she received no benefit from the investment; and that she made demand for the return of her money. Specifically, the respondent swore that the appellant not only was a director of the company, but that "he, Mr. Knapp, and Mr. Hunt had taken over this Golden State Transportation Company and that if I would invest some money in it he would get me—have a safe investment for me, and that I would be in on the ground floor and my money would be safe and he would watch it as an attorney for me and be my attorney in the investment of this money. * * * I said, 'Mr. Knapp, of course, I want a safe investment. I don't know anything about these investments. I don't know a thing about them.' He said, 'Well, that is just why I want to look after your money and you do not need to worry about anything of that sort because you know an attorney does not make mistakes.' * * * Mr. Knapp told me what an enormous business this transportation company was carrying on and what big returns I would receive from my money. He said, 'Why, in a short time you will be able to live at the Biltmore Hotel.'"

[2-4] The proof of actual fraud as between attorney and client is not requisite to the maintenance of an action for moneys of the latter which are intrusted to the former in such cases. "The rule is well established that the relation of attorney and client is confidential in character, and that any contract entered into between them while that relation continues, whereby the attorney obtains an advantage from the client, is presumed to have been made by the client under the undue influence of the attorney. Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 440, 91 Am. Dec. 644; Civ. Code, § 2235; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 310, 311; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 390." Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 156 Cal. 510, 105 P. 981, 986. To the same effect are Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 168 Cal. 120, 142 P. 83; Metropolis, etc., Sav. Bank v. Monnier, 169 Cal. 592, 147 P. 265. It has long been established law that whenever an equity arises from the circumstances of which it appears that one has money which he ought to pay to another, an action for money had and received may be maintained. Quimby v. Lyon, 63 Cal. 394; Cox v. Delmas, 99 Cal. 104, 33 P. 836; Black v. Riley, 20 Cal. App. 199, 128 P. 764.

[5, 6] The evidence in this case tends to establish an official and financial interest of appellant in a business which he and his co-defendant had taken over, the solicitation and investment therein of moneys of a client, and admissions by both defendants that there was no profit and that said moneys had not been repaid as agreed. The equities impel an affirmance upon the action for moneys had and received. Arguments upon remaining issues, as we have seen, go to the weight of the evidence, and we are not authorized to disturb findings of fact or a judgment where a fair and reasonable ground for differences of opinion is presented. Lefrooth v. Prentice, 202 Cal. 215, 259 P. 947.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: IRA F. THOMPSON, J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

BROWN v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON CO.***
Civ. 6478.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.
July 21, 1931.

Rehearing Granted Aug. 19, 1931.

1. Negligence ⇨136(14).

Ordinarily, negligence is fact question for jury.

2. Negligence ⇨136(19).

Whether instrumentality is attractive to children, and owner obligated to guard against injuries to trespassing children, is jury question.

3. Appeal and error ⇨866(1).

Court's duty on appeal from judgment of dismissal after sustaining demurrer to complaint in death action is to determine whether legally admitted facts admit of inference that defendant was negligent.

4. Negligence ⇨23(1).

Attractive nuisance doctrine prevails in California.

5. Negligence ⇨121(1).

Negligence of one whose violation of statute directly results in injury to another is conclusively presumed.

6. Electricity ⇨19(2).

Complaint held to state cause of action for death of boy coming into contact with high voltage wire on defendant's pole (Henning's Gen. Laws, Act 1350, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1058).

The complaint alleged that pole was located on public property in immediate neighborhood of children's playground to defendant's knowledge; that climbing spikes were within easy reach of child of deceased's age; that wires at top were uninsulated and contained high voltage of electricity; and that defendant failed to paint cross-arms bright yellow or paint words "high voltage" thereon, as required by statute.

7. Electricity ⇨19(12).

Power company's negligence, proximately contributing to death of boy climbing pole carrying high voltage wires, held for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clair S. Tappaan, Judge.

Action by Harry R. Brown against the Southern California Edison Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

McGee & Sumner and William A. Sumner, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roy V. Reppy and E. W. Cunningham, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal after order sustaining the defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint, which judgment was entered upon refusal of plaintiff to file a third amended complaint.

The minor son of the plaintiff, who is alleged to have been of the age of twelve years and a normal, healthy, active boy of the ordinary capacity and understanding for that age, was injured by a certain high-tension or high-voltage power line, alleged to have carried an electric current of between 600 and 10,000 volts, which injury resulted in his death. It is alleged that this power line was erected and maintained in Los Angeles county, and that the defendant caused wooden poles of a height of about 60 feet to be erected along the northerly curb line of the public street along which the power line was run, said poles carrying heavy uninsulated copper wires attached to wooden cross-arms. The pole where the son of the plaintiff is alleged to have been injured was located in a thickly settled community, in which there resided a large number of boys of about the age of decedent, which boys were accustomed to congregate and play in and around that vicinity. The theory of the complaint apparently was that the erection of such a pole and the fact that the pole contained iron spikes placed alternately on each side, spaced about 18 inches apart, to form steps or a ladder by which to climb the pole, constituted a nuisance on the part of defendant, and was an implied invitation to a child to climb the same.

It was alleged that the lowest step was six feet off the ground on the pole in question, and that the steps reached to the top of the pole or to the cross-arms at or near the top thereof. It was also alleged that the average height at which the spikes or steps started on other poles in said power line was about eight feet instead of six feet as on the particular pole in question. It was further alleged that there was no sign or warning of danger posted upon the pole to indicate that it was dangerous or that it was a high-voltage power line. It was also alleged that Act 1350 of (Henning's) General Laws of California, as amended by the Statutes of 1915, page 1058, provided that in cases where more than 600 volts of electricity are carried on any wire or cable, the cross-arms, or such other appliances as may be used in lieu thereof, to which such wire or cable is attached, must be kept at all times painted a bright yellow color, or on such cross-arms, or other appliances used in lieu thereof, shall be placed signs providing in white letters on a green background, not less than three inches in height, the words "high voltage" on the face and back of each cross-arm. It was further alleged that the defendant carelessly and negligently failed to fence off or guard said pole, and failed to place any sign or other warning of danger on or near said pole; that said defendant carelessly and negligently failed to insulate the wires supported by said pole, and carelessly and negligently conveyed a high-voltage current of electricity through uninsulated wires; failed to comply with the statutory requirements in relation to painting the cross-arms on said pole; failed to paint said cross-arms a bright yellow, and failed to paint on said cross-arms in letters three inches high the words "high voltage," or any words.

It was also alleged in the complaint that the death of the said Fred C. Brown was proximately caused by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint, and that he was killed by the electric current from the pole passing through his body.

The defendant demurred on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action; also on grounds of uncertainty, etc., in the complaint. The appeal herein, as presented by counsel for the respective parties, deals only with the general demurrer; and this court will limit its attention to the matter of sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action.

The demurrer having been sustained, the plaintiff was given ten days within which to amend and, having refused to amend within that time, the court thereupon, upon motion of the attorneys for defendant, dismissed the action and ordered judgment that defendant have and recover its costs.

It will be observed that from the allegations contained in the complaint the particular acts of negligence charged to the defendant are that to the knowledge of the defendant the pole in question was located on public property in the immediate neighborhood of a children's playground where children were accustomed to congregate and play; that the climbing spikes on said pole were within easy reach of a child of the age of twelve years; that the said pole was neither fenced nor otherwise guarded in any way to prevent easy or unobstructed access thereto; that the electric wires of the defendant at the top of said pole were uninsulated and "contained a high voltage of electricity"; and that in violation of statutory requirements the defendant failed to paint the cross-arms of said pole a bright yellow, or to paint thereon in letters "three inches high" the words "high voltage."

[1, 2] The proper application of the term negligence to the conduct of individuals depends upon "the situation and knowledge of the parties and all the attendant circumstances." 19 Cal. Jur. 549. Ordinarily, the question of determining whether the acts of a defendant were negligent is one which rests with the jury; yet where, as on demurrer to the complaint, the facts are undisputed or admitted and are such that but one inference may be drawn therefrom, although it is generally ruled that as a matter of law the trial court is authorized to declare that negligence does not exist (19 Cal. Jur. 725), nevertheless, even in such cases, it has been declared that the ruling by the court can never be a "question of pure law. The real decision of the question by the court is a decision of fact" (Zibbell v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 237, 240, 116 P. 513, 515), and more particularly (with reference to the facts herein), it is for the jury to determine whether an instrumentality is attractive to children, and whether or not the owner is obligated to guard against injuries to trespassing children. 19 Cal. Jur. 627.

[3] In the premises, the duty of this court is primarily to determine whether the legally admitted facts will admit of any inference other than that the defendant was guilty of no negligence; in other words, are the facts such that from a consideration of them by no possibility might reasonable men differ in their conclusions regarding the question of negligence of the defendant?

Considering first what may be termed the ordinary facts regarding which no particular prescribed statutory duty rested on the defendant to take care that no injury resulted to any one, and especially to children, from the instrumentality in question—that is to say, the location of the pole, its height and equipment, its purpose and use, and the condition in which it was maintained—it may be said that the common observance of mankind, and particularly that of judges of courts, is that what might amount to extreme care under one condition of knowledge and one set of circumstances might be gross carelessness with different knowledge and changed circumstances. 19 Cal. Jur. 549. To illustrate: If in a given case it appeared that on the side of a desert road, many miles from human habitation, the defendant herein had erected a pole identical in height and equipment with that here under consideration, probably no jury would have been justified in reaching a conclusion that the defendant was guilty of negligence in so maintaining the pole because some aged woman had fallen therefrom and thereby sustained serious injuries as a result of her having attempted a "pole-sitting" feat on one of the cross-arms of such pole. But manifestly no situation analogous to that just suggested herein obtains. In addition to the alleged knowledge on the part of the defendant that the pole in question was located near a playground where children were accustomed to congregate and play, the defendant also may be presumed to have known of the possible or probable effect which a tall pole, provided with climbing spikes and with cross-arms at its top, would ordinarily have upon small children. Section 1960 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains the declaration of law that "an inference must be founded: 1. On a fact legally proved; and, 2. On such a deduction from that fact as is warranted by a consideration of the usual propensities or passions of men. * * *" It would seem probable that one of the propensities of boys is to climb poles of the character of that here under consideration. It is a well-known fact that children, and especially boys of the approximate age of the son of plaintiff, are much inclined to climb about the joists and rafters of houses under construction, piles of lumber, trees, or anything that is capable of being climbed. For the average boy of the age of twelve years, it is about as natural for him to climb as it is for a creeping babe to attempt to walk; in fact, one of the chief anxieties of fond mothers is regarding the dangers that exist to their children from such former activities. In addition to the fact that a pole equipped as was the pole in question ordinarily would present to a small boy an attractiveness of no small proportions, when in the boy the ever-present characteristic of bravado, or the desire to "show off" to his companions, is taken into consideration, it approaches the certainty of a mathematical demonstration that such a pole, in such a locality, and in such a situation of circumstances as are presented by the allegations in the instant complaint, ordinarily would constitute such a challenge to the agility and the daring of the boy that its consideration could not be ignored, nor its acceptance declined.

[4] In this state, the so-called doctrine regarding "attractive nuisance" has been adopted and consistently followed.

* * * And it has been held in numerous cases to be an act of negligence to leave unguarded and exposed to the observation of little children dangerous and attractive machinery which they would naturally be tempted to go about or upon, and against the danger of which action their immature judgment opposes no warning or defense. [Citing cases.] The rule of course is not to be confined to turntables, but applies to any attractive and dangerous machinery so placed." Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co., 153

Cal. 571, 574, 96 P. 84, 86, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

In Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 176, 181, 118 P. 700, the "attractive nuisance" consisted of a guy wire to an electric light pole which had become detached from its ground fastenings and thereafter from its other end hung parallel to the pole. It was there held (syllabus): "The so-called 'attractive nuisance' doctrine imposes on one who places an attractive but dangerous contrivance in a place frequented by children, knowing or having reason to believe that children will be attracted to it and subjected to injury thereby, the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent injury to them. Such doctrine obtains in this state, and is not confined to cases of turntables."

In that case, the court further ruled (syllabus) that: "It was a question for the jury whether the defendant should reasonably have anticipated that the contrivance was of such a nature that it would naturally attract children of such age to play with it, even to the extent of endeavoring to obtain electric shocks, without any realization of the extent of the danger to which they were exposing themselves. * * *"

But in addition to what has herein been called the ordinary facts of the case, from the allegations of the complaint it appears that the defendant failed to take certain definite statutory precautions to prevent injury from resulting to any person by reason of the conditions existing in the maintenance of the pole and the use to which it was put by defendant; that is to say, the statutory requirements that the cross-arms of said pole be painted a bright yellow, or have painted thereon in letters "three inches high" the words "high voltage," were entirely ignored by the defendant; and that such omission constituted a proximate cause of the injury which resulted in the death of the son of plaintiff.

[5] In the instant case, it is readily perceivable how a compliance by the defendant with the terms of the statute might have prevented the happening of the accident. In these days of free liberal education and rapid advancement of apt pupils in the work of the common school system of this state, it is not unusual to know of boys of twelve years having concluded the grammar school education. At any rate, it would be most unusual to know of a boy of that age who was unable to read and to understand that the words "high voltage" were intended to designate that a very great danger lurked in the vicinity of the place where such a sign was exhibited. And if the words "high voltage" were omitted, it is not improbable that if the alternative of the statutory command had been obeyed, and in compliance therewith the cross-arms of the pole had been painted a bright yellow, the average small boy of the neighborhood in which such a signal was displayed never would have rested until after he had learned of its full significance. But aside from such speculations, it is a universal rule that where injury directly results to the plaintiff from the violation of a statute by the defendant, the negligence of the latter is conclusively presumed as a matter of law. 19 Cal. Jur. 632, and authorities there cited.

[6, 7] Considering as admitted as true the allegations of the complaint herein, it follows that said complaint was not legally subject to the objection that it failed to state a cause of action; in other words, the admitted facts readily admit of the inference that the defendant was guilty of negligence. Furthermore, aside from the feature involved in the alleged violation by the defendant of statutory requirements, the question of whether negligence actually existed, and, if so, whether it contributed proximately to the death of the son of plaintiff, was one regarding which reasonable men might differ one from the other in their respective conclusions, and which should have been submitted to the jury for its determination.

The judgment is reversed.

---

KATZ v. HELBING et al. ***
Civ. 7642.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
July 21, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 20, 1931. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 17, 1931.

1. Municipal corporations ⇨809(1).

Ordinarily, one lawfully placing materials on sidewalk need not take unusual precautions against injury to strangers, but if reasonably prudent man would foresee probable injury, such probability must be guarded against.

2. Negligence ⇨35.

Building owners who knew, or, due to frequency of occurrence, should have known, that boys had access to contractor's lime box and were throwing lime at street cars held liable to injured passenger.

3. Negligence ⇨136(16).

Whether policeman notified contractor or another that boys were throwing contractor's lime at street cars held for jury on conflicting evidence.

4. Witnesses ⇨255(3).

Allowing witness to refresh recollection from statement made five years before trial held not error.

It appeared that witness originally made statement in question when facts contained therein were fresh within his recollection, and that statement was taken down in shorthand and transcribed, but was not presented to witness until two or three weeks before trial, and court allowed statement to be used to refresh witness' recollection only as to certain relevant date which he had already mentioned in his testimony as being approximate time of occurrence involved; and if facts set forth in statement were true, and witness recognized them as true when he read them, length of time between making of statement and reading thereof was immaterial.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1050(1).

Admitting ordinance legalizing materials on sidewalk held not prejudicial to contractor sued by passenger injured when boys threw lime at street cars.

6. Municipal corporations ⇨809(2).

Unauthorizedly placing building materials on sidewalk constitutes nuisance

7. Trial ⇨229, 260(1).

Court need not repeat instructions already given, or give instruction fully covered by others.

8. Negligence ⇨1.

Act not negligent when done may become so because of another's subsequent acts.

9. Negligence ⇨61(1).

Where two wrongdoers contribute to injury by negligent act and omission respectively, negligent act of one will not exculpate other's negligent omission.

10. Negligence ⇨128.

Allowing question whether contractor, sued by passenger injured when boys threw lime at street cars, had warned children to stay away from lime box held proper.

Question was properly allowed, since, under allegations, evidence was competent to show whether contractor had warned children of dangerous character of their acts, or had taken any precautionary or preventive measures.

11. Master and servant ⇨316(1).

Generally independent contractor rather than his employer is responsible for contractor's negligence.

---

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*For subsequent opinion see 10 P.2d 1001.

12. Negligence ⇨16.

When building owner or contractor obtains from proper authorities permit for act which might otherwise be nuisance, permittee contracts to do act lawfully and cannot relieve himself by contracting with another to do permitted act.

13. Principal and agent ⇨177(3).

Independent contractor procuring owners' approval of lime box on sidewalk pursuant to permit obtained by owners held owners' agent to enforce permit; hence, notice to contractor that boys were throwing lime at street cars instituted notice to owners.

14. Negligence ⇨136(16).

Whether building owners obtaining permit authorizing materials on sidewalk knew that boys were unlawfully taking lime from contractor's box thereon and throwing lime at street cars held for jury.

15. Damages ⇨132(14).

$30,000 for loss of eye held excessive and reduced to $16,000.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Fred Katz against William Helbing, Sr., and others, partners doing business under the firm name and style of the Helbing Company, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Modified and affirmed.

See, also, 271 P. 1062.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, for appellant A. G. Isaacs.

Redman, Alexander & Bacon and Herbert Chamberlin, all of San Francisco, for appellants Helbing Co. and members of the copartnership.

Hubbard & Hubbard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARD, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff brought suit to recover damages for the loss of an eye. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $30,000; judgment was entered thereon, and from the judgment the defendants appeal.

Appellants Helbing, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Helbing Company, were general contractors engaged in erecting a building on Sutter street in San Francisco. The Helbing Company owned the parcel of land upon which the building was in course of construction. For convenience and brevity herein, the Helbings and the Helbing Company will be referred to as the "owners." A. J. Isaacs was an independent contractor employed to do certain plaster work in the building. Hereafter he will be referred to as the "plastering contractor."

An ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco prohibited the use of sidewalk, etc., for building materials unless a permit was obtained from the board of public works. The ordinance provided that such material "shall be prevented from being blown or otherwise moved to any portion of the street or from interfering in any way whatever with the carrying on of any business or enjoyment of any property." The owners obtained such a permit. The plastering contractor, with the approval of the owners, constructed and used a lime or plastering box on a portion of the walk and street. On August 25, 1925, the respondent, after work had ceased upon the building for the day, was riding on a Market Street Railway car, which operated upon the tracks on the street in front of the building. Two young boys, approximately of the ages of twelve years, were playing "soldiers of France." In this game, the ammunition used was the lime from the box above referred to. The objective was passing street cars. Respondent was hit in the right eye, which was burned to the extent that its removal was necessary.

[1, 2] An order sustaining a demurrer to an amended complaint was passed upon by the Supreme Court in this case. See Katz v. Helbing, 205 Cal. 629, 271 P. 1062, 62 A. L. R. 825. The law of this case is that ordinarily it is not necessary that a person who lawfully places materials upon a sidewalk should take unusual precaution to guard against injury to strangers. However, if a reasonably prudent man would have foreseen probable injury, it would be necessary to guard against such probability. If the owners well knew that boys had free and open access to the box and were taking lime and throwing it at passing cars, then the defendant owners would be liable. If the frequency of this occurrence was such that a reasonably prudent owner should have known of the action of the boys, then the owners would be liable.

[3, 4] Witness Steaglich, a police officer, appeared on behalf of respondent and testified, in substance, as follows: That on or about the 20th day of August, 1925, a report from the Market Street Railway Company was received by the police department calling attention to the throwing of lime from the box in front of this building, by boys at passing street cars; that the plastering contractor upon the 20th of August was notified of the communication from the railway company and warned by the witness to cover up the box. There is some conflict in the evidence whether it was the defendant plastering contractor, Isaacs, or some one else bearing the same name working under defendant Isaacs, or one Diaz, who was notified by Steaglich. This was a question for the jury to determine. When first called, the witness gave the date of the interview as "some time in the month of August—about the 20th," whereupon he was further examined as to the exact date. About five years prior to the trial, Steaglich made a statement in the presence of respondent and respondent's attorney. This statement was taken down in shorthand and transcribed. Some question was raised relative to the stenographer's presence, but it was clearly proved that the stenographer was in or near the room during the Steaglich visit. The transcribed statement was not presented to Steaglich until two or three weeks before the trial. The court definitely stated that the transcribed statement might be shown to the witness for the limited purpose of refreshing his recollection as to the date of notification. Whereupon the witness testified that the interview at the building was upon the 20th day of August, which was five days prior to the accident. It was an important matter, but in view of the court's ruling limiting the presentation of the statement to refreshing the witness' recollection only as to the date, we think that the defendants were not prejudiced. The interview occurred at a time when the witness had in his possession his original notes made when the witness reported his talk with Isaacs to the police department. From those notes he made a statement which was fresh within his recollection. He testified that the statements then made were true; that the statements were taken down in shorthand, and that when he subsequently read them he knew them to be true. On cross-examination conflicting testimony was given, but there was ample evidence for the court's ruling. The remoteness of time between the making of the statement and the reading of the statement was of no consequence if the facts set forth in the statement were true and he recognized them as true when he read them. This witness had some recollection when he first appeared upon the witness stand. He said it was about the 20th. After reading the statement, he did not select some other date. The statement conformed to his best recollection as given originally upon the stand.

[5-7] The admission of the ordinance in evidence did not prejudice the defendant plastering contractor. If done without authority, a nuisance would necessarily be created. If the ordinance had not been admitted, the jury would undoubtedly have wondered under what legal authority the defendant was occupying the street. The case of Santina v. Tomlinson, 36 Cal. App. 29, 171 P. 437, cited by appellants, was a case wherein the ordinance did not apply to the facts in the case, and the court held that the jury might have concluded that the introduction of the ordinance was an indication that it had been violated. That is not true in this case. Appellant plastering contractor feels aggrieved because the court gave only a few of his many proposed instructions. All of the instructions were properly refused, modified, amended, or given as presented. A court is not bound to repeat instructions already given or to give an instruction fully covered by other instructions. A reading of the instructions discloses that the jury was fairly and dispassionately instructed upon every necessary phase of the case.

[8, 9] Negligence in this case is not predicated upon the mere throwing of caustic lime, but upon the information that the defendants possessed prior to the accident that lime was being extracted and used in a way that might cause injury to persons or property, and that thereafter the defendant reasonably failed to take precautions to protect persons or property. An act not negligent at the time may become so because of subsequent acts of another. Where two or more wrongdoers contribute to an injury, one by a negligent act and the other by a negligent omission, the negligent act of one will not exculpate the other from the negligent omission. The boy witnesses in this case did not have a thorough comprehension of the consequences of their act until the injury occurred. It is true that one boy testified he knew a rock would do more harm than a snowball. They both knew it was wrong to throw anything at a passing car, but they did not know the effect of caustic lime upon the eye. It is contended that the act of the minors was an independent intervening agency. Hale v. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co., 42 Cal. App. 55, 183 P. 280, is cited. This case was considered in Katz v. Helbing, supra. The intervening act in the Hale Case was not to be anticipated, but in this case, after notification by the police department, any injury to person or property should have been anticipated.

[10] It is further contended that the court committed error in permitting the following question to defendant Isaacs: "Q. On the 20th of August, 1925, or at any time after that, did you ever warn children to stay away from this lime box?" In Katz v. Helbing, supra, at page 636 of 205 Cal., 271 P. 1062, 1065, the court said: "Evidence would also be admissible under the foregoing allegations to show whether defendants had warned said children of the dangerous character of their acts and commanded them to desist, * * * or whether any precautionary or preventive measures whatsoever had been taken." The trial court's ruling was correct.

[11-14] The appellant owners contend that the evidence shows no negligence on their part; that the lime was kept and maintained on the street or sidewalk by the plastering contractor for whose negligence his employers are not liable. The general rule is that the employer of an independent contractor is exonerated and responsibility for the negligent acts of an independent contractor must be borne by the independent contractor. There are exceptions to this rule and the exception that we are interested in may be stated as follows: When an owner or contractor obtains from the duly authorized governmental representatives the right to perform an act which might be a nuisance if performed without legal permission, then the permittee contracts with the legal authorities to do the act in conformity with law and to protect the public against injury. Such permittee cannot relieve himself by contracting with another to do the permitted act. Colgrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 224, 36 P. 411, 27 L. R. A. 590; Luce v. Holloway, 156 Cal. 162, 103 P. 886. Appellant owners call our attention to Schmidlin v. Alta Planing Co., 170 Cal. 589, 150 P. 983. That case did not present the features and does not come within the rule laid down in Colgrove v. Smith, supra, and the decision so held. Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 P. 337, is a closer approach to the case at bar. In the last case, an ordinance provided that when any portion of a street was made dangerous a substantial barrier should be placed around the dangerous portion of the street. There is nothing in the decision indicating that a permit was issued or that a permit was required. The owner had entered into several contracts with independent contractors and they, in turn, had entered into further contract. In Green v. Soule, the defendant, on appeal, was one of the contractors and not the owner. The defendant subcontracted the plastering job. The court said, at page 100 of 145 Cal., 78 P. 337, 339: "There was nothing in the contract for the plastering which contemplated or required that the person doing the plastering should place his materials on the street or sidewalk, and therefore it could not be contended that the contract itself was for the creation of an obstruction in the street which would constitute a nuisance." The exception to the rule laid down in Colgrove v. Smith, supra, is not discussed in Green v. Soule. Appellants also cite Frassi v. McDonald, 122 Cal. 400, 55 P. 139, 140, 772, but therein the court said: "* * * These facts do not bring the case within the principles of law laid down in Colgrove v. Smith. * * *" Fitzpatrick v. Donahue Realty Co., 151 Minn. 128, 186 N. W. 141, 36 A. L. R. 20, cited by appellants, is a case in which the lime was not on the street, but in the back yard. In the instant case, the owners consented or approved of the erection and use of the lime box. The owners were responsible under the permission granted for the use of part of the street to see that the material or any part of it was not moved to any other portion of the street and did not interfere with the rights of others. In the actual plastering work performed, Isaacs was an independent contractor, but the contract did not provide for the erection or use of this lime box. The independent contractor obtained the approval of the owners to use the lime box. To this extent he was the agent of the owners to see that the street was used in conformity with the permit and the ordinance. Accordingly, notice to Isaacs was notice to the owners. The owners were also the general contractors of this building, and in that capacity spent much time in or near the building. As the permittees of the right to use the sidewalk, it was a question for the jury to determine if they had knowledge of the misuse of the lime located on the walk and street. The boys testified that they had previously taken lime and used it to throw at passing street cars. Likewise, other boys had played the same or a similar game. In Katz v. Helbing, supra, at page 635 of 205 Cal., 271 P. 1062, 1064, the court said: "We are of the opinion that it must be held that under these allegations proof might be offered showing that the frequency, extent and character of the acts of the small boys were such as to create liability on the part of defendants to plaintiff. In determining the probability of an event happening in the future, its occurrence in the past under similar circumstances is relevant. In cases of this class the courts have stated that the fact that an occurrence has happened in the past is a circumstance to be considered in determining whether it was reasonably to be expected to happen in the future," citing Cole v. German Savings & Loan Society, 124 F. 113, 63 L. R. A. 416, 57 C. C. A. 593.

[15] The final claim presented by appellant owners is that the verdict for $30,000 is excessive, as a matter of law, and they cite in support thereof Maede v. Oakland High School District (Cal. Sup.) 298 P. 987, 990, wherein the award for the loss of an eye by a fifteen year old boy was held excessive and reduced to $16,000. It is true that in that case the verdict of $15,000 for the loss of an eye in Damgaard v. Oakland High School District (Cal. Sup.) 298 P. 983, was used as a basis for the order modifying the award, but the Supreme Court also considered a long list of cases in which the loss of an eye was the single damage to be compensated. The court said: "We now come to the consideration of the question earnestly urged by appellants, which is whether or not the damages as assessed herein are so far excessive and disproportionate to the injuries sustained by respondent, as measured by other awards judicially sanctioned in this and other states of the Union as fair compensation for like injuries, as to require reduction on the ground that they appear 'to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice.' Section 657, subd. 5, Code Civ. Proc. It being impossible to restore a lost member of the body, the law undertakes to do the next best thing humanly possible, in lieu of restoration, which is to compensate the loss with a money consideration. Out of the long experiences of the past, in which all the elements and inconveniences of loss have been considered, weighed, and appraised, a standard, not invariable, it is true, has been adopted by courts of law. The average amount for particular injuries, as fixed by the verdicts rendered by juries and approved by courts, has its place in arriving at the estimate. The compensation assessed in the instant case, compared with a long list of cases in which the loss of an eye was, as here, the single damage to be compensated, so greatly exceeds the amounts of award in the average cases as to justify the claim on the part of the school district and the officers that the verdict of the jury was the result of passion and prejudice." In view of the language just quoted and the facts and circumstances of this case, we feel constrained to modify the judgment by reducing the award from the sum of $30,000 to $16,000, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed as modified.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

---

CALIFORNIA SAVINGS & COMMERCIAL BANK v. McINTOSH et al. ***
Civ. 7591.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 20, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 8, 1931. Hearing
Granted by Supreme Court Sept. 17, 1931.

1. Alteration of Instruments *§*5(1), 17.

Unauthorized alteration of mortgage placing property for first time under mortgage lien held "material alteration" relieving mortgagor of all liability (Civ. Code, § 1700).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Material Alteration," see Words and Phrases.]

2. Alteration of Instruments *§*5(1).

Material alteration of mortgage adding property thereto was not rendered harmless because not in furtherance of fraudulent purpose (Civ. Code, § 1700).

3. Alteration of Instruments *§*29.

Authority to make or consent to alteration in executed contract must plainly appear from evidence, and will not be presumed from relation of principal and agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Guy F. Bush, Judge.

Action by the California Savings & Commercial Bank against Frazier McIntosh, as executor of the will of Harriette E. Wheeler, deceased, and others. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Edgar K. Brown and Leo B. George, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frazier McIntosh, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff was denied all relief against defendant Wheeler in this action to foreclose a mortgage, because her (Wheeler's) consent was not given to a post execution alteration of a mortgage by which some of her property was added to its embrace. We are of the opinion that the unapproved alteration was properly found to have relieved her of all liability under the mortgage.

[1, 2] The lot involved was one of a number deeded to defendant Wheeler's husband and to her codefendant Brown in September, 1923. At the time of the execution of the mortgage, which followed soon after the deed, the northwesterly twelve feet of this one lot had been deeded to a city for some public purpose, so that portion of the lot was omitted from the property included in the mortgage by employing the words, immediately following the reference to the lot, "excepting the northwesterly twelve feet thereof." Some time later, after March 26 of the succeeding year, probably, when the city reconveyed the strip, the mortgagee, plaintiff here, made several changes on the face of the mortgage, among others being the elimination of the words last quoted, which resulted in the mortgage reading as though the whole of the lot were included. This tinkering was done with the approval of defendant Brown, who was potent in plaintiff's councils, and for the purpose of this opinion we are assuming it was done with the consent of defendant Wheeler's husband. It was not done with her consent.

The effect of the unauthorized alteration of an executed contract is declared in section 1700, Civil Code, in these words: "Extinction, Unauthorized Alteration. The intentional destruction, cancellation, or material alteration of a written contract, by a party entitled to any benefit under it, or with his consent, extinguishes all the executory obligations of the contract in his favor, against parties who do not consent to the act." That an alteration which results in placing property for the first time under a mortgage lien is a material one is obvious. Appellant would escape the paralyzing effect of the section by securing a finding that there was no fraud involved here, and the alterations were made to correct a mutual mistake. So far as concerns the change in the mortgage whereby eleven lots were eliminated from its burdens, because included in the mistaken belief that they belonged to the mortgagors, such a finding might be made, but there is no serious contention advanced that the trial court could have found, and it did not find, that the north-westerly twelve feet was originally omitted through error or subsequently included to correct a mistake. The absence of a fraudulent purpose in making the alteration does not cure it of its deadening influence. Section 1700, Civil Code, does not recognize any such limitations, and the cases cited by appellant do not support the conclusion that a material alteration, i. e., "one that works some change in the rights, interests, or obligations of the parties to the writing" (Lasky v. Bew [1913] 22 Cal. App. 393, 134 P. 358, 360), is harmless if not in furtherance of a fraudulent purpose.

[3] The finding that defendant Wheeler did not consent is challenged on the ground that her husband consented and he as her agent thus bound her. The twelve-foot strip in question was community property. Appellant so contends, and the evidence, so far as brought to us, is in harmony with this conclusion. Defendant Wheeler's signature to the mortgage, then, was not an idle act, but was required. Section 172a, Civ. Code. Her husband's agency did not, apparently, include the right to sign for her. At least he did not. Furthermore, authority to make or consent to an alteration in an executed contract must plainly appear from the evidence; it will not be presumed from the relation of principal and agent. Langenberger v. Kroeger (1874) 48 Cal. 147, 17 Am. Rep. 418; Walsh v. Hunt (1898) 120 Cal. 46, 52 P. 115, 39 L. R. A. 697; Dozier v. National Borax Co. (1917) 35 Cal. App. 612, 170 P. 638; Hengehold v. National Creamery & Produce Co. (1922) 60 Cal. App. 79, 212 P. 239. We assume that a finding that defendant's husband was her agent would be supported by the evidence. This does not better appellant's position, however, for there is no evidence that within the scope of the agency he had authority to add property to the mortgage she had executed.

Even if appellant is correct in the other points it presents, the result will not be changed. There may be no evidence supporting the finding that certain representations were made, but a contrary finding would not remove the obstacle to its recovery already discussed. It may be that the evidence does not support the finding that lot 22 was released, but, as the appeal is not from the judgment as it affects defendants Brown, this is an error which, if corrected, would still leave defendant Wheeler entitled to judgment. Appellant argues that the reduction in the interest rate in the note, which the mortgage secured, was not a material alteration. We do not need to determine whether it was or not, for a deficiency judgment against defendant Wheeler was waived, and there can be no recovery on the note in any event.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

---

115 Cal.App. 454
BANK OF AMERICA NAT. TRUST & SAV-INGS ASS'N v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR KERN COUNTY et al.
Civ. 374.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

July 13, 1931.

Rehearing Denied July 27, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1931.

1. Prohibition ⇨1.

Prohibition is proper remedy where trial court has made void order granting motion for new trial.

2. New trial ⇨116(2).

Any notice in writing conveying to losing party that judgment has been entered is sufficient, as respects time to file motion for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 659, 953d).

3. New trial ⇨116(2).

Notice of entry of judgment served on administratrix and attorney was sufficient as notice on administratrix in individual capacity as respected time for notice of intention to move for new trial (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 659, 953d).

4. New trial ⇨119.

Trial court was without jurisdiction to grant motion for new trial, where notice of intention to move therefor was filed after statutory period (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 659, 953d).

Original proceeding for a writ of prohibition by the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association against the Superior Court in and for the County of Kern, and Erwin W. Owen, Presiding Judge of said court, and another.

Writ granted.

Borton & Petrini, of Bakersfield, for petitioner.

A. V. Muller, of San Luis Obispo, and Ray B. Lyon and Alex Webster, both of Paso Robles, for respondents.

MARKS, J.

This is an original petition filed in this court seeking a writ of prohibition prohibiting respondents from setting for trial and trying a petition for distribution in the estate of Teodora Federico, also known as Teodora F. Valenzuela, deceased, and the contest thereto filed by petitioner as the executor of the last will and testament of Jesus Valenzuela, deceased.

The record before us discloses that Teodora Federico died testate on the 13th day of July, 1927, and that Juanita Aguera was thereafter appointed and qualified as the administratrix with the will annexed of her estate. After the death of Teodora Federico, Jesus Valenzuela, who was named as the sole beneficiary in her last will and testament, died testate, and petitioner herein was appointed and qualified as the executor of his last will and testament. Juanita Aguera filed her final account and petitioned for distribution of the estate of Teodora Federico in which petition she sought to have all of the property of the estate distributed to herself as a pretermitted heir, alleging that she was an adopted daughter of Teodora Federico. At the trial of the contest on the petition for distribution, the court found in favor of the contestant and ordered the estate distributed to it as the executor of the last will and testament of Jesus Valenzuela, deceased. The findings of fact and judgment or decree were filed and entered on January 29, 1930. Notice of entry of judgment or decree was served upon Juanita Aguera as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Teodora Federico, deceased, and A. V. Muller and Webster & Lyon, her attorneys, on February 3, 1930. On February 7, 1930, A. V. Muller and Alex Webster, as attorneys for Juanita Aguera as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Teodora Federico, deceased, filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial. This motion was denied on March 17, 1930. On March 21, 1930, Ray B. Lyon, as attorney for Juanita Aguera individually, filed notice of intention to move for a new trial, which motion was granted on May 9, 1930.

It appears from the record that Alex Webster and Ray B. Lyon were at all times material to this action copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Webster & Lyon. In its findings of fact filed on January 29, 1930, the trial court found that Juanita Aguera, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Teodora Federico, was represented upon the trial and hearing on the contest of distribution by A. B. Muller and Webster & Lyon as her attorneys.

In fairness to the Honorable Erwin W. Owen, who is named as the respondent judge herein, it should be noted that the trial of the contest and the arguments of both motions for new trial were heard, and the decisions rendered by another judge of the superior court. He is named as respondent for the reason that he is presiding judge of the superior court in and for the county of Kern, and in the capacity of such presiding judge was proceeding to set the contest down for a second trial after the order made granting the motion of Juanita Aguera made in her individual capacity.

[1] It seems to be settled in California that prohibition is a proper remedy to be invoked where the trial court has made a void order granting a motion for a new trial and is attempting to proceed with a second trial. Shepherd v. Superior Court, 54 Cal. App. 673, 202 P. 466; Finkle v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. App. 97, 234 P. 432; United Railroads v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 687, 242 P. 701.

The sole question necessary to be decided on this appeal is whether or not a sufficient notice of the entry of judgment and decree of distribution of January 29, 1930, was served upon Juanita Aguera to start running the ten days within which a notice of motion for a new trial must be filed under the provisions of section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The notice of entry of judgment served by petitioner on February 3, 1930, is addressed "to Juanita Aguera, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of the above named deceased and to A. V. Muller and Webster & Lyon, her attorneys." In the petition filed in this court, it is alleged "that on the 3rd day of February, 1930, notice of entry of said judgment of distribution was served by said Bank of Italy National Trust and Savings Association as such Executor upon the said Juanita Aguera, and her said attorneys, a copy of which notice is hereto attached and marked Exhibit 'E' and made a part thereof." The only denial of this allegation in the answer of respondents is as follows: "Deny that on the 3rd day of February, 1930, notice of the entry of judgment of Decree of Distribution given and made in the matter of said estate was served upon the said Juanita Aguera or upon her attorneys, other than in her representative capacity as Administratrix with the will annexed of the Estate of Teodora Federico, deceased, and allege that the only Notice of the Entry of said judgment or decree is the one, a copy of which is attached to Petitioner's Petition herein and marked 'Exhibit E.'" This admits the service of the notice upon Juanita Aguera in her representative capacity and upon her attorneys on February 3, 1930. Her notice of intention to move for a new trial made in her individual capacity was filed forty days after the service of the notice of the entry of judgment. To give the court jurisdiction to entertain the motion, the notice of intention to move for a new trial must be filed within ten days after receiving written notice of the entry of judgment. Sec. 659, Code Civ. Proc.; section 953d, Code Civ. Proc.; Neale v. Morrow, 174 Cal. 49, 161 P. 1165; Prothero v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 439, 238 P. 357.

[2] Other than the requirement now existing that the notice of entry of judgment be in writing, no particular form of the notice is prescribed by law. Section 659, Code Civ. Proc.; section 953d, Code Civ. Proc.; Waddingham v. Tubbs, 95 Cal. 249, 30 P. 527. We conclude, therefore, that any notice in writing which will convey to a losing party that the judgment has been entered is sufficient in California.

In the case of Scott v. Glenn, 97 Cal. 513, 32 P. 573, 574, the plaintiff commenced an action to recover money alleged to have been received by the defendant for the use and benefit of the plaintiff's assignors. The defendant filed his answer and also a cross-complaint making the plaintiff and his assignors cross-defendants and praying affirmative relief against them. The cross-defendants filed their answers denying many of the allegations of the cross-complaint. After a trial by the court, it rendered judgment that the plaintiff take nothing by his suit, and gave the cross-complainant the relief demanded in his cross-complaint. The judgment was filed on September 17, 1891. On the following day the attorney for the defendant and cross-complainant served upon the attorney for the plaintiff and cross-defendants the following notice: "To the plaintiff, and Messrs. T. P. Ryan and G. B. Graham, attorneys of record: You will take notice that the court has rendered its decision and findings and judgment, and defendant's memorandum of costs have been this day filed in the above-entitled action. Dated September 17, 1891. J. P. Meux, Attorney for G. R. G. Glenn." It will be noticed that the cross-defendants were not named nor mentioned in this notice of entry of judgment. Their attorney, however, received a copy of it.

On March 21, 1892, the cross-defendants served and filed a notice of their intention to move for a new trial and argued that, as they had received no notice of the entry of judgment, their notice of intention was filed in time. They argued that as the notice of entry of judgment was addressed to the plaintiff and his attorneys and not to the cross-defendants and their attorneys, they had received no notice of the entry of the judgment. The Supreme Court overruled this contention and held that, as the notice had been delivered to the attorneys for the cross-defendant, it conveyed to them sufficient notice of the entry of judgment even though they were not named therein.

[3] Under the decision in the Scott Case, and in view of the fact that no particular form of notice is required by statute, we have concluded that sufficient notice was served upon Juanita Aguera in her individual capacity to start running the ten days within which she was required to serve her notice of intention to move for a new trial even though she was only designated in her representative capacity in the notice. It is admitted that Ray B. Lyon, who signed and filed her individual notice of intention to move for a new trial was the same Ray B. Lyon that was a member of the firm of Webster & Lyon named in the notice of entry of judgment, and which firm was served with the notice. The notice conveyed the information that the judgment or decree of distribution of January 29, 1930, had been filed and entered. This notice contained all of the information required to be conveyed by section 659, Code of Civil Procedure. The information that a judgment had been entered, which was conveyed by the notice, and not its form nor its salutation or address clause, is the controlling factor in this case. Juanita Aguera cannot be permitted to hide behind the fact that she was only named in this notice in her representative capacity as the attorney who represented her as well as the attorneys who represented her in her representative capacity as administratrix were served with a notice which informed them that the judgment had been entered and which started running the ten days within which time any notice of intention to move for a new trial must be filed.

[4] The notice of intention to move for a new trial filed on behalf of Juanita Aguera individually having been filed too late, and after the time limited by law for the filing of such notice, the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Kern was without jurisdiction to grant such motion. It follows that the order made on May 9, 1930, granting a new trial was without the jurisdiction of the respondent court and is therefore void. Respondents are exceeding their jurisdiction in attempting to again set for trial the issues raised by the petition for distribution and the contest thereto which had been fully decided by the judgment and decree made and entered on January 29, 1930.

It is ordered that respondents be prohibited, and that a writ of prohibition be issued restraining them from setting for trial, or trying, the issues raised by the petition for distribution and the contest thereto filed by petitioner herein in the matter of the estate of Teodora Federico, also known as Teodora F. Valenzuela, deceased, being Number 4109 in the records of the respondent court.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 501

AMERICAN CONCRETE UNITS CO., Inc., v. NATIONAL STONE-TILE CORPORATION.

Civ. 7550.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

July 17, 1931.

1. Corporations ⇨432(12).

Evidence held not to establish lack of actual authority on part of corporate officers to represent corporation after their formal removal, in execution of note and lease of machinery.

Record disclosed that corporate officers were at a regular meeting of board of directors removed from office, and new officers elected in their stead, but that litigation followed this removal, and although it was ultimately held to be effective, the same officers continued during course of litigation to conduct business and affairs of corporation, with evidence to effect that different factions which were seeking control not only acquiesced and consented to management of corporation by former officers, but specially requested that they so act in order that relationship between corporation and its customers would not be disturbed.

2. Corporations ⇨289.

Corporate officers acting as de facto officers after their removal and pending litigation had full power to bind corporation.

3. Corporations ⇨426(10).

Corporation receiving benefits of transactions through acts of de facto officers is estopped from denying their authority.

4. Corporations ⇨426(10).

Corporation will not be permitted to retain benefits of transaction and at same time question authority of its representatives.

5. Corporations ⇨289.

Title of de facto officers of corporation holding position unchallenged cannot be impeached collaterally.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by the American Concrete Units Company, Incorporated, against the National Stone-Tile Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arthur L. Shannon, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J.

The complaint in this action consists of three counts. The first is based upon a promissory note in the sum of $500; the second and third are based upon an agreed amount of rent due for a certain machine manufactured by plaintiff and delivered to defendant. There is no dispute as to the execution of the note, nor is there any question that plaintiff manufactured the machine and delivered it to defendant. The defense advanced was that the officers and agents of defendant corporation who represented it in the transactions were without authority so to do. The trial court found against this contention and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appeals, and it claims that the evidence does not support the findings in favor of plaintiff and judgment should, therefore, be reversed.

There is no merit in the appeal. There is evidence in the record to sustain the finding of the trial court that the transactions here involved were fully authorized by defendant corporation. Such facts as are necessary for a discussion of the case may be briefly summarized as follows: Prior to February 23, 1928, W. P. Stanton was president and general manager of defendant corporation, and J. T. Voorheis was vice president, assistant general manager, and assistant secretary. On the day last mentioned, at a regular meeting of its board of directors defendant corporation removed them from office and new officers were elected in their place and stead. Litigation followed this removal, but it was ultimately held to be effective. National Stone Tile Corp. v. Voorheis, 93 Cal. App. 738, 270 P. 286. During the course of the litigation Stanton and Voorheis continued to conduct the business and affairs of the corporation, and there is evidence in the record to show that the different factions which were seeking control not only acquiesced and consented to the management of defendant corporation by the former officers, but specially requested that they so act in order that the relationship between the corporation and its customers would not be disturbed. The record further shows that pursuant to this understanding Stanton and Voorheis did, without objection or interference by any one, continue with the sole management until November, 1928, the time when the litigation was terminated. There is also testimony to show that the sum loaned by plaintiff to defendant for which the promissory note was given was used in the ordinary course of business for current expenses by defendant, and that the machine was licensed to licensees of the company for a consideration, a part of which, amounting to the sum of $1,000, was received and retained for the benefit of defendant company.

[1-5] Under all these circumstances it cannot be said that the evidence shows lack of actual authority by Stanton and Voorheis to represent defendant corporation after their formal removal. They were de facto officers and had full power to bind the corporation for the reason that they were permitted to conduct the affairs of the corporation during the period of litigation over its management. Then again, the corporation had received the benefits of the transactions through the acts of such de facto officers and is estopped from denying the authority of the officers. Consumers Salt Co. v. Riggins, 208 Cal. 537, 282 P. 954; Hygienic Health Food Co. v. Grant, 187 Cal. 431, 202 P. 653. A corporation will not be permitted to retain the benefits of a transaction and at the same time question the authority of its representatives. Irwin v. Colburn, 56 Cal. App. 41, 204 P. 551. So long as de facto officers hold their position unchallenged, their title to office cannot be impeached collaterally, and their acts, in so far as third persons are concerned, are valid and binding upon the corporation as though they were officers de jure. 6 Cal. Jur. 1049. Here, as above indicated, the officers whose acts are questioned were not usurpers but, on the contrary, occupied their positions under color of title and exercised the duties thereof with the complete acquiescence if not at the special request of those opposed to them.

Nor is there any merit in the further claim that the evidence shows actual knowledge on the part of plaintiff corporation that Stanton and Voorheis had no authority to act for defendant corporation after February 23, 1928. While there was an attempt on the part of the defendant to show that plaintiff had notice of lack of authority of the deposed officers there was evidence to show that plaintiff's president who dealt with defendant in the transactions, while familiar with the fact that there was internal strife in the defendant corporation over its management, was nevertheless of the opinion that Stanton and Voorheis were defendant's authorized officers and representatives.

Under all the facts and circumstances, we are of the opinion that the evidence is amply sufficient to sustain the conclusion of the trial court that Stanton and Voorheis had full authority to represent defendant corporation and that it was liable for their acts.

Other points urged by appellant are controlled by what we have said and do not require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; PARKER, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 505

PEOPLE v. McCLAIN.

Cr. 2083.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

July 17, 1931.

1. Criminal law ⇨1159(4).

Determination of facts is solely for jury, and verdict showing jury disbelieved defendant's witnesses cannot be disturbed on appeal, provided people's evidence was substantial and sufficiently strong to support verdict.

2. Larceny ⇨64(1).

Possession of stolen property, however soon after crime, is not in itself sufficient to sustain conviction.

3. Larceny ⇨68(3).

Whether defendant's explanation respecting manner in which he acquired possession of stolen property is true is solely for jury.

4. Larceny ⇨55.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of grand theft.

5. Larceny ⇨51(1).

In prosecution for theft of property, including $100 bills, evidence that, after commission of crime, defendant used $100 bill though not specifically identified as part of stolen money held admissible.

Evidence was admissible for purpose of tending to prove possession by defendant of part of stolen property; $100 bills not being in common circulation in community.

6. Criminal law ⇨829(15).

Refused instruction respecting requirements for conviction of grand theft on circumstantial evidence held not covered by given instruction.

Defendant requested instruction that, in order to convict upon evidence of circumstances, it is necessary not only that circumstances concur to show beyond reasonable doubt that crime was committed, but that defendant was one who committed crime, and that circumstances are inconsistent with any other rational conclusion, and that it was not sufficient that circumstances proved coincide with, account for, and therefore render probable theory sought to be established by prosecution, but that they must exclude to moral certainty every other theory but single one of guilt. Court instructed jury that, if they were satisfied to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, they should so find, though certainty was produced by circumstantial evidence, and that law makes no distinction between circumstantial and direct evidence as to required degree of proof, but requires only that jury be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt.

7. Criminal law — 784(7).

Where evidence was entirely circumstantial, refusing instruction that, to convict, defendant's guilt must be shown beyond reasonable doubt and that circumstances must be inconsistent with other rational conclusion, held reversible error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Clarence James McClain was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Reversed.

Guy Lewis and Orville A. Rogers, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Buron Fitts, Dist. Atty., and Tracy Chatfield Becker, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for the People.

HOUSER, J.

Defendant was convicted of the commission of the crime of grand theft. He appeals not only from the judgment, but also from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The first specification of error to which appellant directs attention is that the evidence adduced on the trial of the action was insufficient to support the verdict. In its nature the evidence presented by the prosecution was entirely circumstantial.

[1-4] It appears that a part of the property which was stolen included a trunk, a large number of rare coins, a cigarette lighter, a knife, a rosary, six $100 bills, and many articles of wearing apparel, all of which, with the exception of the six $100 bills, were found either in the immediate personal possession of defendant, or hidden in various locations about the premises occupied by him. It was shown that shortly after the theft was committed defendant removed from his then residence to a different place of abode, at which latter place he used an assumed name; that, although he had a room within which he might have lodged, at one time he slept in an automobile parked on premises used for the sale of secondhand cars; that defendant made contradictory statements regarding the manner in which the cigarette lighter came into his possession; that some of the stolen coins were found at the head of the bed in a room occupied by defendant, others in a "stack" in the yard of the premises, and 197 of such stolen coins were found in a canvas bag concealed under a plank in the same yard; and the rosary, with other stolen articles (not of this theft), was found wrapped in a handkerchief and secreted behind a wash basin in defendant's room. The stolen knife, trunk, and a three-cent United States bill were found in defendant's automobile. Following the theft of the goods and shortly before defendant was arrested, he used a $100 bill in making a part payment on an automobile which he had acquired, which bill defendant claimed he had secured by exchanging for it ten $10 bills, but which defendant's brother testified he had given to defendant for an automobile which he had purchased from him. After defendant was arrested and before he was taken to jail, while standing in a store awaiting the arrival of the police automobile to convey him to prison, he was seen to "fumble" with his left hand in one of the pockets of his trousers. Immediately thereafter "about an inch and a half or two inches of the pocket" was seen protruding from the trousers and a $5 gold piece of date 1806, which was one of the stolen coins, was found under a cash register which was located in front of where defendant had been standing. At that time defendant denied ownership of the coin, or that he had any knowledge concerning it, although at the trial he testified that his brother had given it to him. Summarized, it thus appears that, besides the possession by defendant of the stolen property, the following incriminatory facts were shown to exist: Secretion of the stolen property; different explanations regarding the manner of acquiring the cigarette lighter and $100 bill which are not in harmony one with the other; when arrested, the attempt to get rid of the $5 gold piece; that circumstance which may be termed the flight of defendant; and the fact that at his new place of residence he gave a fictitious name.

The evidence presented in behalf of defendant and which tended to establish his innocence of the offense of which he was charged consisted principally of testimony of himself, his wife, and one disinterested witness to the effect that at all times on the night when the crime was committed defendant was at his home, and consequently could not have participated in the commission of the offense; also a confession by defendant's brother on the trial of the action that it was he and a man known as Joe Carson who committed the crime, and that defendant was in no way connected with its commission. But manifestly the determination of the facts was solely the province of the jury, and if for any one of various reasons it chose to give no credit to the testimony of either or all of the witnesses who testified in behalf of defendant, its conclusion as expressed by its verdict cannot be disturbed by this court, provided that the evidence adduced on behalf of the prosecution was substantial in its nature and of sufficient strength to support the verdict. Necessarily the question whether any set of assumed incriminatory facts in a given case present a situation from which it may be said that they meet the legal requirements as to sufficiency in showing the guilt of a defendant, is one of opinion on which the respective minds of lawyers or judges may differ one from the other. It has long been the rule that possession of stolen property by a defendant, however soon after the crime was committed, is not in itself sufficient evidence upon which to base a verdict of guilt. However, should the defendant make an explanation as to the manner in which he came into possession of such property, the question as to whether he is telling the truth in that regard rests solely with the jury. In the case of People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 614, the stolen property consisted of gold and silver coin amounting to $313, "among which were four $20 gold pieces, an Australian sovereign, and a $3 gold piece, considerably worn." It was proved that the defendant was arrested on the day after the burglary, and that there was found on his person $250.50 in gold and silver coin, amongst which were four $20 gold pieces, an Australian sovereign, and a $3 gold piece. In considering the circumstances connected with the case, in part the court said: "The weight to be given to the testimony was for the jury to decide; but when money is stolen, proof that a part of it, on the following day, was found on the person of another in the vicinity, certainly tends, when not satisfactorily explained, to raise a presumption that he is the guilty party; and if an explanation is attempted by the accused, it is for the jury to judge of its truth and plausibility. The corroborating evidence may be slight, and entitled to but little consideration; nevertheless, the requirements of the statute are fulfilled if there be any corroborating evidence which, of itself, tends to connect the accused with the commission of the offense."

And in People v. Getty, 49 Cal. 581, where "a part of the stolen money consisted of a quantity of Chilean gold coin—half ounces and a Peruvian ounce," it is said: "The possession of money of the same kind as that which was recently stolen is usually of slight, if any, weight as evidence to prove the guilt of the person in whose possession it is found, if money of this kind is in general circulation at that place; but it is of much greater significance when that kind of money is rarely seen in circulation at that place; and its value as evidence is further increased when both the money found in possession of the accused and that which was stolen consists of a combination of pieces of such money, as in this case, of a large number of Chilean half ounces and a single Peruvian ounce. It strongly tends to the identification of the money as the money which was stolen, and thus to connect the defendant with the burglary."

Aside from objections presented by appellant which are hereinafter considered, it would seem clear that, in view of the situation delineated by the circumstances hereinbefore set forth, the jury was authorized to reach the conclusion that defendant was guilty of the commission of the offense of which he was charged. People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 482, 76 P. 232.

[5] Appellant complains of the admission by the trial court, over the objection of defendant of certain evidence relating to the fact that after the crime had been committed, in a transaction regarding the purchase of an automobile, defendant had given as part compensation to the seller thereof a $100 bill. The particular objection by appellant is that the $100 bill paid by defendant was not identified as one of the $100 bills which was a part of the stolen property. However, as is pointed out in the case of People v. Getty, 49 Cal. 581, 583, although the fact that defendant used "money of the same kind as that which was recently stolen" ordinarily would constitute but slight evidence of the guilt of defendant, nevertheless, if such money was of a kind "rarely seen in circulation," the weight to be attached to such evidence is considerably increased, which is a rather clear indication by the court that evidence of the nature of that to which appellant has directed attention was admissible for the purpose of tending to prove possession by defendant of a part of the stolen property. In passing, it may not be amiss to suggest the unlikelihood that any one will contend that $100 bills are now, or in recent years have been, in common circulation in this community.

[6, 7] Appellant presents a further specification to the effect that, to his substantial prejudice, the trial court erred in refusing to give to the jury, at the request of defendant, the following instruction: "In order to convict the defendant upon the evidence of circumstances it is necessary not only that all the circumstances concur to show beyond a reasonable doubt that a crime was committed as alleged in the information, but that the defendant was the one who committed such crime and that they are inconsistent with any other rational conclusion. It is not sufficient that the circumstances prove, coincide with, account for, and therefore render probable the theory sought to be established by the prosecution, but they must exclude to a moral certainty every other theory but the single one of guilt, or the jury must find the defendant not guilty."

On behalf of respondent it is urged that the principle of law involved in such instruction was fairly covered by the trial court in giving to the jury an instruction by which was pointed out the essential difference between direct evidence and circumstantial evidence, which instruction was concluded with the admonition that, "if upon consideration of the whole case you are satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, you should so find, irrespective of whether such certainty has been produced by direct evidence or by circumstantial evidence. The law makes no distinction between circumstantial evidence and direct evidence in the degree of proof required for conviction, but only requires that the jury shall be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence of either the one character or the other, or both."

But it is apparent that the instruction to which respondent refers merely defined circumstantial evidence and thereafter directed attention to the weight to which such evidence was legally entitled. Aside from the broad general indication to the effect that on the consideration by the jury of circumstantial evidence, before it would be authorized to find the defendant guilty the jury must be "satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant," the instruction contains not even a suggestion of the principle of law set forth in the instruction offered by defendant and refused by the trial court. The authorities of this state are unanimous in the declaration of the law that, when the evidence in a case is entirely circumstantial and admits either of a theory of the guilt or of the innocence of the defendant, upon his request therefor, he is entitled to a special instruction embodying the principles set forth in the instruction to which appellant herein has directed attention and of the refusal of which he here complains. People v. Dick, 32 Cal. 213; 8 Cal. Jur. 371, and cases there cited.

In addition to the foregoing authorities, the case of People v. Heuss, 95 Cal. App. 680, 273 P. 583, is particularly pertinent to the question here involved. It there appears that an instruction requested by the defendant and refused by the trial court was practically identical with the instruction here under consideration. However, on the trial of the cited case an instruction was given to the jury that, "in order to warrant a conviction for crime on circumstantial evidence, the circumstances taken together should be of a nature and tendency leading on the whole to a satisfactory conclusion and producing in effect a reasonable and moral certainty that the accused and no one else committed the offense charged, and it is the invariable rule and law that to warrant a conviction upon circumstantial evidence alone, such facts and circumstances must be shown as are consistent with the guilt of the party charged."

A judgment of conviction of the defendant was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal; but, in denying a hearing of the case, the Supreme Court used the following language: "In denying the petition for a hearing herein, we withhold our approval of the action of the trial court refusing to give the instruction, or its equivalent, requested by defendant to the effect that circumstantial evidence, in order to justify a conviction, must not only be consistent with the guilt of the defendant, but 'inconsistent with any other rational conclusion.' The portion included in quotation marks, or its equivalent, was omitted from the instruction. Said instruction was legally sufficient in all respects as far as it went, but it fell short in not including the well-approved and frequently announced statement of the law that the evidence adduced must not only be consistent with guilt, but 'inconsistent with innocence,' in order to justify a verdict of guilty."

From a consideration of the foregoing authorities, it is clear that the trial court was in error in failing to give to the jury the instruction requested by defendant.

From the fact that before reaching a verdict of defendant's guilt the jury considered the evidence for a period of seven and one-half hours, it well may be questioned whether, if the jury had had the benefit of such refused instruction, it would not have brought in a verdict of acquittal, or at least that a disagreement by the jury would have resulted. At any rate, it is impossible for this court to judicially declare that in the circumstances defendant was not prejudicially affected in his substantial rights in the premises.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

I concur: CONREY, P. J.

---

115 Cal.App. 496
PEOPLE v. ROBERTS.
 Cr. 2071.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 16, 1931.

1. Criminal law §444.

Lease identified by owner held properly admitted in prosecution for unlawful possession and operation of still and apparatus for manufacture of liquor.

Testimony was introduced upon the trial to effect that defendant and his brother rented premises in which still and apparatus were found and agreed to accept them as residence for year, and in corroboration thereof, a document was introduced, which owner identified as lease, and which was signed with fictitious name which owner swore they had given him as true name.

2. Intoxicating liquors §236(19).

Evidence respecting abandonment of premises held not such as to prevent conviction for possession and operation of still and apparatus for manufacture of liquor.

3. Criminal law §351(3).

Evidence of defendant's flight from owner of premises after discovery of still was admissible in prosecution for possession and operation of still and other apparatus.

Evidence was to effect that owner of premises, after discovery of still and apparatus and after defendant had abandoned premises, thereafter encountered defendant on public street in automobile and spoke to him, calling to him to stop, but that defendant avoided him, and although followed at high speed over public streets, finally escaped.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. Rey Schauer, Judge.

Floyd Roberts was convicted for unlawful possession and operation of a still and other apparatus designed and used for the manufacture of liquor, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Newton J. Kendall, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J.

Upon an information charging unlawful possession and operation of a still and other apparatus designed and used for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor by Ed Roberts and Floyd Roberts, they were found guilty by a jury, and the latter appealed from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for new trial.

On or about July 12, 1930, one Stirdivant, the owner of premises in Los Angeles county here in controversy, was summoned by a peace officer whom he accompanied to the scene. Upon investigation it was discovered that the walls and plumbing had been mutilated and destroyed, a large whisky still, piping, and vats had been installed, and alcohol and mash in quantities were found about the apparatus, which had so recently been in use that it had not cooled. It is conceded that in March appellant and his brother had rented the premises, and that he and his family took possession of the same. On the date first mentioned officers found in the house groceries, foodstuffs, clothing, and other articles of a woman and of a child, and the kitchen stove was still warm; but the occupants had departed, and so far as the record might indicate, they did not thereafter return. Thereafter, between the date of the search and July 26, 1930, while Stirdivant and his family were driving between the cities of Santa Monica and Ocean Park, each of the defendants was encountered on the public streets, in an automobile with other persons. Stirdivant spoke to them, particularly calling to appellant to stop, but the latter avoided him, and although followed by Stirdivant at high speed over the streets of Santa Monica, and finally to Santa Monica canyon, he escaped and the pursuit was abandoned.

[1] Upon the trial it was testified that when the two brothers called at Stirdivant's home and rented the premises in question both agreed to accept them as a residence for one year, that one or the other executed a lease, and that the first and last months' rent was paid. In corroboration of this evidence a document was introduced, which the owner identified as the lease, and which was signed in the fictitious name of "Rhodes Brothers," which he swore they had given him as their true name. Objection here that it was error of the trial court to receive the same in evidence without further identification and proof of its genuineness and due execution as in a civil suit based thereon, or, as in a criminal prosecution in the absence of its connection in any manner with the defendant, is without merit. The prosecuting witness testified positively that he saw the instrument signed, and that he signed it himself. To the question: "I show you a document here, and ask you if that is the lease you speak of," he replied: "Yes, sir; it was Rhodes, instead of Roberts."

[2] Equally untenable is the contention that appellant and his brother had abandoned the premises and left them to another prior to the search, and that there was insufficient evidence to justify the order denying a new trial. Photographs of appellant and his family, and numerous other evidences of recent occupancy of the premises, were found in the house, and it lay with the jury under the instructions given to determine whether all of the evidence before them was consistent or inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that of guilt.

[3] Strenuous objections to the evidence of appellant's evasion and escape from Stirdivant at Santa Monica under the circumstances stated were made, and it is also insisted that failure to instruct the jury upon the rule as to flight from the scene of a crime by one knowing that he had been charged therewith, was prejudicial error. It is readily apparent that authorities relied upon in this respect are not persuasive. In People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 117 P. 176, evidence of flight from mob violence, when explained by the defendant, presented to the jury a question of veracity of the witnesses, rather than an evidence of guilt. In People v. Brecker, 20 Cal. App. 205, 127 P. 666, the introduction of a letter explaining the defendant's reason for leaving lodgings where no crime had been committed was held nonprejudicial. However, in such as the instant case evidence of the conduct and general demeanor of the defendant after the offense, is admissible. People v. Welsh, 63 Cal. 167; People v. Hawkins, 127 Cal. 372, 59 P. 697. While the denial of a requested proper instruction, in the event of a showing of flight as legally defined, may constitute error, neither the foundation nor request for such an instruction is presented in this case for consideration.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

115 Cal.App. 521

KOFFMAN et al. v. DEKOCH et al.
Civ. 6584.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

July 17, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 14, 1931.

Sales  $\hookrightarrow$  405.

Buyer of crude oil, subject to another sale contract specifying minimum gravity test, held not entitled to damages for seller's refusal to deliver oil.

Although second contract for purchase of crude oil did not require as high gravity test nor as low percentage of water, sand, or other foreign substance, the production as it came from the well was not subject of either contract, not being of sufficient gravity, so that either buyer had right to refuse delivery, whereupon seller installed a dehydrating machine, the process of which caused water particles to migrate and coalesce and thus settle out more readily, and, after installation thereof, the first buyer requested delivery of oil thus treated under its contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by M. A. Koffman and another against William G. Dekoch and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Culbert L. Olson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bauer, Wright & Macdonald and Harold H. Coyle, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J.

This is an appeal from the judgment entered in favor of the defendants. The litigation rose out of the following situation. On November 9th, the predecessor in interest of the respondents entered into a contract with the Standard Oil Company for the sale of oil which the former was producing from a well in the Signal Hill field. The material provisions of that contract read as follows: "The first party (respondents' predecessor) hereby sells and agrees to deliver to the second party during the period of five years from the date hereof, unless this contract is sooner terminated as herein provided the total amount of Crude Petroleum Oil, subject to the maximum limit herein set forth, of a gravity of not less than fourteen degrees A. P. I., at a temperature of sixty (60) degrees Fahrenheit, produced by the first party from its property situate in the Signal Hill Oil Field (here follows legal description)."

"The first party agrees that it will operate its property and wells in good faith and with reasonable diligence and endeavor to deliver the maximum monthly quantity expressed herein during the period of this contract."

"Oil considered as a delivery under this contract must be free from water, sand and other foreign substance, as ascertained from the 'Gasoline Test' by means of the centrifugal machine, but should said test fail to prove the existence in said oil of more than three (3) per cent. of water, sand and other foreign substance, the second party will accept the oil and make deduction for all water, sand and other foreign substances determined by the test hereinbefore mentioned. * * *"

"If at any time oil offered for delivery hereunder shall be of a lower gravity than the minimum gravity hereinbefore specified, second party, at its option may accept said oil and pay for said oil at the lowest price at that time effective hereunder, or if at any time oil offered for delivery hereunder shall contain more than Three (3) per cent. of water, sand or other foreign substances, as determined by said test, * * * but no such acceptance shall be deemed a waiver of second party's right at any time thereafter to require deliveries hereunder strictly in accordance with the conditions herein specified. * * *"

Some time prior to June 28, 1924, the well of defendants' predecessor in interest produced oil containing considerably more than 3 per cent. of water and foreign substance, and for that reason the Standard Oil Company refused to accept it under the contract. On November 20, 1925, the plaintiff M. A. Koffman entered into a contract with defendants' predecessor, subject, however, as it is agreed, to the Standard Oil contract, the material portions of which read as follows:

"[T]he party of the first part (defendants' predecessor) hereby agrees to sell and deliver to the party of the second part, and the party of the second part hereby agrees to purchase and receive from the party of the first part, during a period of three (3) years commencing November 20, 1925, ending November 20, 1928, and during each and every calendar month thereafter until cancelled by a six months written notice of cancellation by either party to the other, the total amount of Crude Petroleum Oil, subject to the maximum limits hereinafter set forth, of a gravity not less than fourteen (14) degrees Beaume at a temperature of sixty (60) degrees Fahrenheit, produced by first party from (here follows description)."

"Deduction shall be made from the gross quantities of oil apparently contained in any delivery of oil for all sand, water, emulsion, and other foreign substances contained in said oil, based upon a centrifugal test made as follows (here follows description of centrifugal test of a sample of oil)."

The contract provides that second party shall pay "the price as publicly offered by the Standard Oil Company of California, at dates of delivery during the life of this contract to other producers in the Signal Hill Field for oil of like gravity and quality as the oil delivered hereunder; and whenever and as often as the prices offered by said Standard Oil Company at any time during the period of this contract to such other producers in the Signal Hill Field for oils of like gravity and quality as the oil delivered hereunder shall advance or decline. * * *"

Deliveries were made to the plaintiffs under the contract until March 1, 1927, and during this time the gravity of the production from the well was considerably under the required 14 degrees, and in fact less than 10. Prior to March 1, 1927, the output contained 60 per cent. to 65 per cent. water, and had been turned into settling tanks, and, after some of the water had descended to the bottom, was drained off. However, during February of that year, the defendants' predecessor installed a dehydrating machine, the process of which consists in steam heating the crude product under pressure to reduce its viscosity, whereupon a current of electricity is passed through it (also under pressure), which charge it is said causes the water particles to migrate and coalesce and thus settle out more readily.

After the dehydrator was installed, the Standard Oil Company said it wanted the oil thus treated and from which the water was removed, under its contract. Consequently, defendants' predecessor refused to deliver to plaintiffs, who brought this action to recover damages for the refusal.

The contention of appellants may be fairly stated in this language, that the respondents (we shall use that designation hereafter to identify defendants' predecessor as well as the defendants themselves, who we may presume, for the purpose hereof, assumed the liability) had no right to eliminate the water, sand, and other foreign substances by passing it through the dehydrating plant. We have been to considerable pains to set forth the material portions of the two contracts, because taken together they demonstrate the untenable nature of the argument of appellants. The two are very much alike, and it is apparent therefrom that there was no enforceable contract for oil of a gravity under 14 degrees Beaume. It is also to be noted that both contracts made deductions for water, sand, and other foreign substances, even though it were sufficient as to its gravity. Therefore, before the oil was saleable, some process had to be made use of to reduce the water content. In view of the fact that the production as it came from the well was not the subject of either contract, i. e., was not of sufficient gravity, we entertain no doubt that respondents were entitled to make use of the most efficient method possible to make it a saleable product, and one to be sold at the smallest deduction for foreign substances. The view we entertain makes further discussion unnecessary.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

115 Cal.App. 466
RHEA v. THOMSON.
Civ. 710.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 13, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 10, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 10, 1931.

1. Husband and wife ⇨264.

Evidence held sufficient to support finding that property, title of which was taken in name of wife, was her separate property (Civ. Code, § 164).

2. Husband and wife ⇨264.

Trusts ⇨89(1).

Evidence supported finding that undivided half interest in property taken in name of husband was separate property of wife during her lifetime, and that title was taken in trust for her (Civ. Code, § 164).

3. Husband and wife Ⓒ262(1).

All presumptions are in favor of conveyances to wife (Civ. Code, § 164).

4. Husband and wife Ⓒ262(1).

Conveyances to wife are presumed to have been made for consideration paid by wife (Civ. Code, § 164).

5. Husband and wife Ⓒ262(1).

Presumption in case of conveyance to wife for consideration paid by husband is that property was intended as gift to wife as her separate property (Civ. Code, § 164).

6. Husband and wife Ⓒ262(2).

Burden of showing that conveyance to wife was not intended as gift as separate property is on those claiming under husband (Civ. Code, § 164).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action by Emma J. Rhea, as special administratrix of the estate of Dora Thomson, deceased, against F. D. Thomson, as administrator of the estate of Morton W. Thomson, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Charles J. Kelly, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newton Van Why, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LAMBERSON, Justice pro tem.

The respondent, who is plaintiff herein, is special administratrix of the estate of Dora Thomson, deceased, who, in 1884, in the state of Illinois, was married to Morton W. Thomson, of whose estate the defendant and appellant is the administrator.

Dora Thomson inherited certain property from her father, from which she realized in 1910 the sum of about $21,060. About the year 1913 she realized by inheritance from the estate of her mother the sum of about $8,200. All of the proceeds were, in each instance, deposited in a bank to the account and in the name of her husband. Dora Thomson did not, during the years the couple lived in Illinois, have any bank account, and the only testimony in regard to her having an account is to the effect that about 1925, while the couple were residing in California, they planned to have a joint account upon which she could draw checks. The husband and wife had a small dwelling in Illinois, which was their home, and there is testimony to the effect that the husband had a small amount of real property at the time of marriage. He was a carpenter during the greater part of their years of residence in Illinois, and engaged at times in other occupations, but his income was, at all times during their married life, very modest. There is some testimony in the record that he, at one time, sold a piece of property in Illinois for the sum of $3,500, but the circumstances surrounding the sale are not clear. While they were still residents of Illinois, they invested in land in Canada and lived there temporarily. In 1913 the couple moved to California, and in February, 1916, there was purchased and conveyed to Dora Thomson, lot 1 in block 5 of West Adams and Jefferson street tract in the city of Los Angeles. Early in 1917 Dora Thomson, by deed, in which her husband joined, conveyed the Jefferson tract property to Myron W. Smith, and Smith and his wife, in exchange therefor, deeded to the husband of Dora Thomson and to P. W. Thomson, his brother, 10 acres of land in Riverside county. Dora Thomson died in March, 1926, and her husband a few months later.

Appellant claims that the title to the Riverside property is in himself as administrator of the estate of Morton W. Thomson. The purpose of the action is to quiet the title of respondent as special administratrix of the estate of Dora Thomson, deceased, to said property.

The trial court found, in substance, that an undivided one-half interest in the Riverside property was the separate property of Dora Thomson in her lifetime; that it was bought and paid for with property which was the separate property of Dora Thomson, and title was taken by her husband in trust for said Dora Thomson; that the real property described was purchased by Morton W. Thomson, the husband, by exchanging the real property, which stood in the name of Dora Thomson, and which, at the time, was her separate property, and title thereto was taken in the name of the husband in trust for and for the benefit of said Dora Thomson; that said Dora Thomson relied upon the fidelity of her husband, and believed that he would hold title to the real property in trust for her; that no consideration ever passed from Morton W. Thomson to his wife for said real property, and said Morton W. Thomson had no beneficial interest therein, but the entire consideration therefor was paid by Dora Thomson. Judgment was rendered in favor of respondent as to this particular parcel of land, which judgment decreed that the appellant as administrator, be required to execute a deed conveying title to an undivided one-half interest to respondent as administratrix. From the judgment this appeal has been taken upon a bill of exceptions and upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support any of the findings of the trial court.

[1,2] The evidence is sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court that the property in the city of Los Angeles was the separate property of Dora Thomson. This conclusion is also supported by the provisions of section 164 of the Civil Code, which specifies that, whenever any real property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title was to be vested in her as her separate property. This presumption was not controverted, and the force of the evidence which it supported was not overcome or met by any evidence offered by appellant. The status of the title to the Los Angeles city property, as determined by the trial court, must therefore be taken to be an established fact in the case. The evidence was also conclusive that the sole consideration for the exchange of the Riverside property was the Los Angeles city property, which had been for a considerable time before the date of the exchange, and was at that time the separate property of Dora Thomson. Section 853 of the Civil Code provides that, when a transfer of real property is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by or for another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by or for whom such payment is made.

A similar situation appeared in the case of Shaw v. Bernal, 163 Cal. 262, 124 P. 1012, 1015. In that case it was established that a piece of property was purchased in 1897 with funds received by a married woman from her brother. The deed to the property was made to the wife. The husband, who was a machinist, and who attended to all of the business of his wife, including the collection of rentals, sold the property so acquired, and with the proceeds purchased other property, the deed to which was executed to himself and wife as grantees. After her death, the husband claimed that the property was community property. The court, in discussing the questions involved, said: "There was nothing in the evidence to require a conclusion that Mrs. Shaw had ever done more in relation to the money derived from the sale of her lot 6 in block 250 than to intrust it to the custody and control of her husband. As in Title Insurance Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 483, 111 P. 364, 'the relation of the parties and their conduct with respect to her money justified the court in preferring the inference that the understanding was that he was to act as trustee for her in the management and disposition of it.' It is well settled that 'if a husband purchase lands with the separate estate of his wife in his hands, * * * or money put into his hands to invest for his wife, and take the title in his own name, a trust results to the wife' (1 Perry on Trusts, § 127), in the absence of a clear understanding to the contrary, had at the time of the purchase. (Id. § 140). See, also, 3 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 1049; Heinrich v. Heinrich, 2 Cal. App. 479, 483, 84 P. 326. It was substantially said in Title Insurance Co. v. Ingersoll, 153 Cal. 1, 5, 94 P. 94, that it is well settled that the mere acquirement of the possession of a wife's separate property by the husband, and his subsequent management and control of the same, all with her consent, do not show any intent on the part of the wife to make a gift of the property to the husband or to change its status from separate to community property, that the presumption in such a case is that the property continues to be the separate property of the wife and that the husband holds it in trust for her, and that under such circumstances it devolves on the trustee claiming a gift or change in the status of the property to show the same."

In the instant case the testimony is plain that over a long period of years the decedents, aside from the possible sale of a piece of property in Illinois for the sum of $3,500, had no considerable amount of property except that which was inherited by the wife; that they were aided to a considerable degree by her father before his death; that the income of the husband was very small; that the wife placed in his hands all of the money received by her, and the same was deposited to the husband's account; that from the Los Angeles city property she received a small monthly rental before its sale, which rental was treated as hers, and of the lack of which she complained after the acquisition of the Riverside property.

[3-6] In this state all presumptions are in favor of conveyances to the wife. They are presumed to have been made for a consideration paid by the wife, or, if it be conceded that the consideration was paid by the husband, it will be presumed that the property was intended as a gift to the wife as her separate property. The burden is upon those claiming under the husband's right to show the contrary. Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 646, 77 P. 657. Where the presumption is not controverted, the court is bound to find in accordance with the presumption. Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 P. 308.

"It is the settled rule that the fact of the receipt by the husband of his wife's money presumptively makes him her debtor and imposes upon him the legal duty of returning it to her, and no affirmative proof is required on the part of the wife to show that the husband received the money as a loan, and not as a gift. To the contrary, the burden is upon the husband, or his heirs claiming the money, to show circumstances entitling him, or them, to retain the same. White v. Warren, 120 Cal. 322, 49 P. 129, 52 P. 723; Wormley's Estate, 137 Pa. 101, 20 A. 621; Stickney v. Stickney, 131 U. S. 227, 33 L. Ed. 136, 9 S.

Ct. 677; see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes." McKay v. McKay, 184 Cal. 742, 195 P. 385, 386.

We are of the opinion that the findings of the court are fully supported by the evidence, and that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; MARKS, J.

115 Cal.App. 559

PEOPLE v. COLDWELL.

Cr. 36.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 21, 1931.

1. Homicide ☞250.

Evidence held to justify conviction of manslaughter.

2. Criminal law ☞1186(4).

Instruction to determine whether defendant be guilty or not guilty of offense charged or guilty of lesser degree of crime within such offense held not reversible error, in view of other instructions (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Jury was fully instructed on degrees of homicide, circumstances reducing offense from murder to manslaughter, and self-defense, and that verdict might be either guilty of murder in first degree, guilty of murder in first degree with punishment at life imprisonment, guilty of murder in second degree, guilty of manslaughter, or not guilty.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Adam Coldwell was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Fred Duffy, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is prosecuted by appellant from a judgment against him pursuant to his conviction of the crime of manslaughter and from an order denying his motion for new trial.

Appellant was informed against by the district attorney of San Bernardino county. The information charged that on the 14th day of April, 1930, appellant did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought kill and murder Florencio Carillo, a human being. He entered his plea of not guilty. A trial by jury resulted in his conviction of the crime of manslaughter. His motion for a new trial was denied, and he was ordered committed to the state prison at San Quentin for the term prescribed by law. A stay of execution was granted pending appeal.

[1] It appears from the evidence that on the afternoon of April 14, 1930, the deceased, accompanied by John Garcia and Juan Provenencia, were walking along a street near a reservoir in East Highland in San Bernardino county, talking and joking with each other. Near this reservoir stood an old Ford car which was used for pumping. As they came near this Ford, deceased picked up a rock and threw it in the direction of the Ford. The rock did not hit the Ford but went into the reservoir. Appellant was passing by at this time and told him not to throw any rocks at his Ford, that he used it to pump water. John Garcia asked appellant to show him where the rock hit the Ford, and defendant replied, "Well, it's all right; I am just telling you that, not to throw any rocks at that Ford." After this the deceased and his two companions continued their walk along the same street, later returning and again meeting appellant. The witness John Garcia asked appellant if he had any beer for sale, and he replied that he did not.

Deceased and his two companions then left appellant, and they did not encounter each other again until in the evening about 8:30 o'clock, when they met in a pool room in East Highland. Neither of deceased's companions saw appellant in the place until they heard him command the deceased to take his hands out of his pockets. At this time the deceased was leaning against a pool table with his hands in his pockets. When the witness Provenencia heard this command, he turned and saw appellant with a revolver in his hand. Appellant repeated the command, and, stepping toward the deceased, pulled the gun and shot him.

From the testimony of the prosecution's witnesses it does not appear that any argument or discussion of any kind preceded the shooting. Furthermore, it appears from the testimony of the witness Provenencia that the deceased did not understand the English language, and we may assume, therefore, that he did not understand the command made by appellant. Provenencia further testified that the deceased was not armed nor did he have any words with the appellant, and that neither he nor the other companion, Garcia, had any words with appellant. This testimony is corroborated in full by the witness John Garcia.

The testimony of these witnesses is further corroborated by that of J. H. Hernandez, proprietor of the pool room, who testified that the first thing that attracted his attention in the direction of appellant and deceased was appellant's command to the deceased to take his hands out of his pockets or he would kill him. When he heard this he looked up and saw appellant, with a revolver in his hand, take a few steps toward deceased, command him again to take his hands out of his pockets, and then fire. He further testified that the deceased was not doing anything at this time. This testimony was corroborated by the witness Elpidio Ochoa, who was an employee at the pool room.

The defense interposed was that the deceased approached appellant in a threatening manner and had two billiard balls in his hands, which were in his pockets. Appellant testified that he only attempted to strike the deceased with the revolver instead of shooting him, and did not intend to kill him.

This evidence we believe is clear and at least certainly justifies the verdict of the jury in finding the defendant guilty of manslaughter.

[2] Appellant designates several grounds for a reversal of the judgment. The only argument advanced is in support of the fifth ground, to wit, that the court erred in giving the following instruction:

"The offense with which the defendant is charged is murder, a felony, committed as follows: That said Adam Coldwell, on or about the 14th day of April, 1930, in the said County of San Bernardino, State of California, did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously, and with malice aforethought, kill and murder one Florencio Carillo, a human being.

"It is the duty of the jury to determine from all of the evidence offered in the trial whether the defendant be guilty or not guilty of the offense charged or guilty of any lesser degree of crime contained within the offense charged in the information."

It appears from the instruction above quoted that, after this was presented to the court, the court interlined the word "guilty" in the last portion thereof. Because of this added word or interlineation appellant contends that the interpretation to be placed upon this instruction is that it was a direction to the jury to find appellant guilty of one of the lesser or included offenses in the charge of murder, if they were unable to convict him of murder in the first degree. The instruction as modified was not as clear as it should have been made, but, in substance, it told the jury that it was their duty to determine from all the evidence offered whether the defendant be guilty of murder as charged, or guilty, or not guilty of any of the lesser degree of crimes contained within the charge in the information. Particularly is this so when we consider this instruction in connection with the rest of the charge. Such a construction is one which we believe the jury, as reasonable persons, placed upon this instruction. The jury was fully instructed on the degrees of homicide and circumstances which would reduce the offense from murder to manslaughter and when the right of self-defense existed in connection therewith. The jury was instructed as to the forms of verdict as follows:

"In this case your verdict may be in either of the following forms:

"I. We, the jury in the above entitled action, find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree; or

"II. We, the jury in the above entitled action, find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and fix his punishment at life imprisonment; or

"III. We, the jury in the above entitled action, find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree; or

"IV. We, the jury in the above entitled action, find the defendant guilty of manslaughter; or

"V. We, the jury in the above entitled action, find the defendant not guilty.

"In either case, let your verdict be reduced to writing and signed by your foreman before returning into open court."

When the foregoing instruction is considered in connection with the instruction complained of, there can be no question but that the jury understood the court's statement to them as to the different types of verdicts they could render. Under these circumstances we see no reversible error in the given instruction. The error complained of is harmless, and should be disregarded, under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of the state of California.

The judgment and order of the trial court denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; JENNINGS, J.

118 Cal.App.(Supp.) 777

HICKS v. FRAZER.

C. A. 731.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

July 16, 1931.

1. Principal and agent ⇨136(2).

Agent may bind himself personally on principal's contract.

2. Principal and agent ⇨184(2).

Where third party elects to take agent as debtor in place of named principal, principal is not liable on contract.

3. Contracts ⇨124.

Election campaign printing indebtedness created in excess of statutory limits held void, notwithstanding printing matter was furnished only on personal credit of candidate's campaign manager, since it was nevertheless furnished "on behalf of" candidate (St. 1907, p. 672, § 3).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "On Behalf of," see Words and Phrases.]

Appeal from Municipal Court of Los Angeles; W. D. McConnell, Judge.

Action by E. G. Hicks against Guernsey Frazer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Harold Ide Cruzan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Loton Wells, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, Acting P. J.

The evidence clearly shows that the defendant was campaign manager for Jack Bean, a candidate at the general election of 1928 for the office of supervisor of Los Angeles county, and in that capacity ordered from plaintiff printing to be used and which was used in the Jack Bean campaign. Plaintiff was fully informed as to this situation and the intended use of the printing. Plaintiff furnished on this order printing for which the total bill was $1,653.37, of which $1,000 remains unpaid. All of these facts appear without conflict.

By the provisions of section 3 of the Purity of Elections Law (Stats. 1907, pp. 671, 672) "no sum shall be paid and no expense shall be incurred, directly or indirectly, by or on behalf of a candidate, whether before, during, or after an election, on account of or in respect of the conduct and management of an election at which he is a candidate, in excess of the maximum amount following, that is to say: if the term of the office for which the person is a candidate be * * * for more than three years, and not more than four years, twenty percentum of the amount of one year's salary of the office." The salary of the office of supervisor is $5,000 per year, and the term is four years. The allowable expenditure of a candidate for the office is, therefore, $1,000, and this amount was exceeded by plaintiff's bill alone, regardless of other expenditures. The indebtedness to plaintiff was incurred in violation of the law, and for that reason it is void and affords no basis for an action (Mathewson v. Bean [Cal. App.] 300 P. 56), unless it is saved from such condemnation by certain other facts to which plaintiff's president testified.

In substance, these facts are that when the witness went to the Bean campaign headquarters, at defendant's request, and received from defendant an order for printing, he informed defendant that the account would have to be with him personally, and that plaintiff was not interested in doing any campaign printing unless the price was paid in advance, to which defendant replied that he would guarantee the bill; that the witness then stated that a guarantee was not what he wanted, but the printing must be sold to defendant personally and not to the Jack Bean campaign; that defendant agreed to this, and that the charges were made accordingly. These facts do not alter the application of the Purity of Elections Law to the case. The controlling words of the statute in this respect limit the expense which may be incurred "by or on behalf of a candidate." A substantially identical statute exists in Wisconsin, construing which the Supreme Court of that state said, in State v. Kohler, 200 Wis. 518, 228 N. W. 895, 69 A. L. R. 348, 372: "In the act, particularly that part relating to the amount which may be spent and the filing of accounts, the phrase, 'by and on his behalf,' is used. There is no difficulty in understanding what is meant by the term 'by'; the phrase 'on his behalf,' when it refers to a candidate, means by someone who acts for him in the sense that an agent acts for and on behalf of his principal. The authority may be expressed or implied but it must exist; otherwise the disbursement is not made on behalf of the person sought to be charged. Even after a person has announced or declared himself a candidate for a public office, the statute makes no limitation upon the disbursements made by citizens who may, upon their own initiative and on their own behalf, support the candidacy of any person of their choice. Such voluntary support may be given by an individual or by a group of individuals. Persons so engaging in political activities are required to make no account thereof unless and until the total exceeds $50."

Our Supreme Court apparently took the same view of our statute in Bradley v. Clark, 133 Cal. 196, 202, 65 P. 395, where they said: "The findings of the court negative the contention of appellant that the expenditures made for carriages and for banners by Booth, a friend of Clark, were made by him as agent of Clark, and consequently chargeable against Clark, under the law."

This case involved the Purity of Elections Act of 1893, which was substantially the same in its language and purpose as the act now in force, but contained other provisions not found in the present act. The particular provision involved in that case was that requiring a candidate to file a statement of expenses incurred by him or by any person "on my behalf."

[1-3] Giving the words "by or on behalf of a candidate" the meaning ascribed to them in these cases, that is, that they relate only to expenses incurred by the candidate in person or by persons who are acting as his agents, they are directly applicable to this case. Defendant was the agent of Bean and unquestionably ordered the printing in question in that capacity, that is, "on behalf of" Bean. This view of the case is not changed by the fact that plaintiff chose to rely only on the personal credit of defendant. We are aware of the rules that an agent may bind himself personally on a contract made for his principal, and, if he does so, the contract may ordinarily be enforced against him (See 1 Cal. Jur. 820 et seq.), and that where the principal is known to the third party at the time of the contract, and such third party elects to take the agent as his debtor in place of the principal, the principal is not liable on the contract (Pacific, etc., Inc., v. Seeber, 205 Cal. 690, 696, 272 P. 579; Koeberle v. Friganza, 66 Cal. App. 323, 329, 226 P. 35). But even in such a case the contract is one made "on behalf of" the principal, so that the agent is entitled to reimbursement from the principal for anything which the agent is required to pay upon it, unless to his knowledge the contract is illegal. 2 Corpus Juris 793-798 and cases cited; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Central Ry. Co., 6 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 202, 55 P. 777; Gardner v. Kinney, 60 Or. 292, 117 P. 971; Dow v. Worthen, 37 Vt. 108. Hence if this transaction is legal as between plaintiff and defendant, defendant may recover from Bean the amount of the judgment herein, the latter may lawfully pay an indebtedness which the statute says he may not incur, and a plain and easy way is opened for evasion of the law. We do not think it may be so evaded. The plaintiff's attempt to escape the condemnation of the statute by merely stipulating that its contract is with the agent alone can have no more success than the similar conduct of the traditional ostrich, which is said to believe itself hidden when its head only is covered. We are not required in this case to say whether a different conclusion could be reached if plaintiff had been ignorant of defendant's agency and of the intended use of the articles supplied.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial, with costs of appeal to appellant.

I concur: YANKWICH, Judge pro tem.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

IN VOLUME

2 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

---

213 Cal. 145
MCGILLYCUDDY v. LOS VERJELS LAND & WATER CO.
S. F. 13462.

Supreme Court of California.
July 16, 1931.

1. Work and labor ⇨10.

Where contract to issue corporation manager stock as compensation for services was rendered impossible when Railroad Commission decided stock might not be issued, implied contract arose to pay reasonable value of services.

2. Work and labor ⇨10.

Where services are performed for consideration which turns out to be impossible of performance or unenforceable, implied contract arises to pay reasonable value of services.

3. Limitation of actions ⇨148(1).

Resolution of board of directors that manager's salary authorized at previous directors' meeting was proper held to revive obligation barred by statute of limitations.

4. Corporations ⇨308(3).

Directors' resolution revived obligation of original contract respecting compensation for manager's services and was not merely conditional promise to pay in stock.

The resolution was, in substance, that it was understood and agreed by directors that the stock salary of $200 per month, authorized to be paid manager at directors' meeting of certain date, was proper and continued up to certain date, and was thereby acknowledged as debt due manager, payable in stock of corporation at par value.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by V. T. McGillicuddy against the Los Verjels Land & Water Company. From the judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

---

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Evan J. Hughes and Jas. D. Meredith, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Orville C. Pratt, Jr., of San Francisco, and George F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondent.

LANGDON, J.

This is an action to recover compensation for services performed by plaintiff. The essential facts are few and not disputed. On June 16, 1913, by resolution of the board of directors of defendant corporation, plaintiff, the president of said corporation, was appointed general manager, his compensation to be treasury stock of the par value of $200 per month. He rendered the services called for in the contract, but the railroad commission denied the application of the corporation to issue the said stock, and none was ever received by him. On August 25, 1920, a resolution was passed at a directors' meeting, terminating the original provision for compensation, and placing plaintiff on a salary of $25 per month. On December 11, 1924, another resolution was passed, reaffirming the resolution of August 25, 1920, and acknowledging liability to plaintiff under the resolution of June 16, 1913. Plaintiff continued to perform until April 25, 1925. No compensation was ever received by him. This action was commenced on December 11, 1926. The trial court found that the reasonable value of plaintiff's services over the various periods covered by the agreements was $7,800 and accordingly gave judgment for him in that sum. Defendant appeals, contending that the contract to pay compensation in stock was unenforceable because illegal, and that any claim for the reasonable value of the services rendered was barred by the statute of limitations.

[1, 2] The first proposition may be briefly disposed of. It is true, of course, that defendant corporation, being a public utility, could not issue stock without the permission of the railroad commission (Public Utilities Act, § 52, Deering's General Laws 1923, Act 6386, p. 2724), and a contract for the issuance of such stock without a permit would be unenforceable. But the contract involved herein has no such object, as we view it. It is an agreement for the performance of certain services, the consideration being specified as stock of a certain value. The record shows that when the contract was made both plaintiff and the directors believed that the stock could be issued. The agreement, therefore, is quite distinct from a "contract to purchase stock" to be issued without a permit, where the object of the contract—purchase of the stock—is in violation of the law. Here the object—performance of personal services—was legal, and the payment of the specified compensation was rendered impossible by the decision of the railroad commission that the stock might not be issued. In such a case, it certainly does not follow that defendant corporation, having received the benefit of full performance by plaintiff, may entirely escape liability. It cannot, of course, be required to issue the stock. But where services are performed for a consideration which turns out to be impossible of performance or unenforceable, an implied contract arises to pay the reasonable value of the services. See 3 Williston on Contracts, 3351, § 1972.

[3] The other contention of defendant is that the claim of plaintiff is either wholly or partly barred by the statute of limitations and that no acknowledgment of the obligation has been made, sufficient to toll the statute or revive the debt. A brief review of the facts shows that this is wholly untenable. The contract was made on June 16, 1913, by resolution of the board of directors. This contract was apparently terminated on August 25, 1920. The right of action based upon it was subsequently barred by the statute of limitations. However, on December 11, 1924, the following resolution was passed: "It is understood and agreed by the directors that the stock salary of two hundred dollars per month, par value, authorized to be paid Manager McGillycuddy at the Directors Meeting of June 13th, 1913, was proper and continued up to September 1st, 1920, and is hereby acknowledged as a debt due Manager McGillycuddy, payable in stock of the Los Verjels Land and Water Company at par value." Another resolution passed at the same meeting reaffirmed the resolution of August 25, 1920, in which it was specified that plaintiff receive $25 per month for his services after that time. The effect of these resolutions was to revive the barred obligation. They fully meet the test laid down in Clunin v. First Federal Trust Co., 189 Cal. 248, 207 P. 1009. Suit having been commenced within two years after they were adopted, it is unnecessary to consider whether the four-year statute applying to written contracts, or the two-year statute applying to obligations not evidenced by a writing, governs the present action.

[4] Defendant finds fault with the first resolution of December 11, 1924, claiming that it was merely a conditional promise to pay in stock, and not in money. Properly construed, however, the resolution is an acknowledgment of a debt, and, more specifically, an acknowledgment of the obligations incurred under the contract of June 13, 1913. The effect of the acknowledgment cannot be defeated on the theory that it only admits the obligation to pay in stock, any more than the obligation under the original contract can be wholly defeated because of the stock provision. We think that this acknowledgment revived the obligation of the original contract, whatever it was; and, as we have seen, it was the obligation to pay the reasonable value of the services rendered, when the stock provision became impossible to perform.

It is also contended by defendant that there are variances between the allegations of the complaint, the findings, and the proof. We have examined the record and are satisfied that the proof sufficiently supports the findings.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; PRESTON, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J.

213 Cal. 131

O'HARA et al. v. GRAND LODGE, INDEPENDENT ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Sac. 4484.

Supreme Court of California.

July 14, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ☞1011(1).

Matters determined in trial court on conflicting evidence cannot be considered on appeal.

2. Charities ☞50.

Finding that plaintiff corporation did not hold charitable trust property in trust for defendant corporation which acquired property for orphans' home, and subsequently sold property to plaintiff subject to the trust, held supported.

3. Trusts ☞345.

Where settlor parted with entire interest in trust property for valuable consideration, subject to trust, settlor had no standing in court, except as relator, to compel proper execution of trust or to claim interest in property.

4. Charities ☞37.

When method for carrying out charitable trust provided for in trust instrument becomes impossible, court may empower trustee to carry out general charitable purpose in different manner.

5. Charities ☞31.

In determining whether there has been expressed general charitable intent, trust instrument is construed most strongly against trustor.

6. Charities ☞32.

Where it is determined that trustor had general charitable purpose, court presumes trustor did not desire trust to fail.

7. Charities ☞11.

Circumstances surrounding creation of trust for orphans' home held sufficient to indicate general charitable intent to benefit orphans.

8. Charities ☞37.

Where means of carrying out trustor's general charitable intent to benefit orphans through creating and maintaining orphans' home had become reasonably impossible, court could permit trustees to carry out general intent by selling property and using fund for some cognate purpose.

9. Charities ☞48(2).

Statute rendering transfer in contravention of trust void held inapplicable to sale of orphanage property, where transfer was for purpose of carrying out trust (Civ. Code, § 870).

10. Trusts ☞189.

Where court would have ordered sale of trust property on proper application, court will not cause sale arranged by trustee to be undone.

11. Abatement and revival ☞8(2), 9.

Pendency of prior actions held not to have effect of abating action, where pleading disclosed that prior actions involved different parties and issues.

12. Trusts ☞194.

Decree directing sale of trust property should direct disposition of proceeds of sale.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by Russell F. O'Hara and another against the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars of the State of California. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Modified and, as so modified, affirmed.

F. W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. H. Sooy, of San Francisco, and H. A. Frank, of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This action was brought by O'Hara, the purchaser of certain described real property in Solano county, and by the Good Templars Home for Orphans, the seller of that land, as plaintiffs, against the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars of the State of California, as defendant, for the purpose of securing a decree of the superior court confirming the sale, and a determination that defendant corporation has no interest in the real property involved.

The complaint alleges, in part, that the plaintiff corporation is a California corporation, organized in December, 1897; that about that date such corporation became the owner, as trustee, of part of the lands herein involved; that the purpose of such trust was to acquire a tract of land and operate thereon an orphanage; that on the 13th day of June, 1919, the Home for Orphans, conducted by plaintiff corporation under the terms of the trust, was closed and abandoned; that said home was abandoned for the reason that the plaintiff corporation was unable to acquire or secure sufficient sums of money properly to or at all conduct a home for orphans thereon; that the buildings of the orphanage had become so obsolete that rebuilding and remodeling had become necessary, at an expense which was prohibitive to plaintiff corporation; that for five years next preceding the closing of the orphanage very few orphans had applied for admission to the institution, until, in 1919, only two full and two half orphans were being cared for therein; that there was no longer any need for an orphans' home such as plaintiff corporation had been conducting; that the real property held by plaintiff corporation under the terms of the trust did not, when taken with the other assets and property of such corporation, yield a sufficient income to carry on or conduct the home; that the real property involved at the time of sale was of the reasonable value of $17,000; that after the closing of said home in 1919, the income from said property did not amount to the gross sum of $2,000, from which sum all expenses had to be paid.

It is further alleged that, prior to January 14, 1927, it had become apparent to plaintiff corporation that it could not then or in the future conduct an orphans' home; that on that date the plaintiff corporation duly authorized a sale of the property to certain parties by the names of D. Brosnahan and Carlos B. Rookwood, in accordance with certain terms and conditions set forth in the deed; that, on February 29, 1928, the grantees in said deed did convey and sell to plaintiff Russell F. O'Hara, by quitclaim deed, the interest of said grantees in the real property involved herein; that defendant corporation has objected to the sale of said property and has claimed an interest therein adverse to the interests of plaintiffs; that the claim of defendant is without foundation; that plaintiff O'Hara has paid to plaintiff corporation, as and for the purchase price of said property, the sum of $8,500 in cash, and has given his promissory note in a like sum, which note draws interest at the rate of 7 per cent., and which note is secured by a first mortgage on the property; that the sale to plaintiff O'Hara was made in good faith and for the best interests of the trust.

In the prayer of their complaint, plaintiffs ask that the sale be confirmed; that the defendant corporation be decreed to have no interest in the land; and for other and further relief.

The deed from plaintiff corporation to Brosnahan and Rookwood is attached to the complaint as an exhibit. Among other things, the deed provides that, in addition to the payment of $17,000, the purchasers will pay "all expenses in connection with said transfer, including court expenses and pending litigation * * * it being understood, however, that said sale shall be made subject to confirmation by the Superior Court of Solano County, California, and that the purchaser or purchasers shall pay all costs of transfer, including any court expenses and expenses of litigation pending or that may be hereafter commenced, necessary to perfect title to said property, or to procure the transfer of a good title to the purchaser or purchasers."

Defendant, in its answer, alleges that it was first organized as an unincorporated association September 9, 1850, and that it was incorporated October 4, 1876; admits that the orphans' home was closed in 1919, but denies that it was closed for the reasons alleged in the complaint, and alleges that said home was closed because of its mismanagement by plaintiff corporation.

As a separate defense, defendant corporation alleges that all during its existence said corporation has been engaged in the performance and the carrying out of its purposes, one of which was to erect, maintain, and endow an orphans' home near Vallejo; that defendant corporation is the parent and grand lodge and that plaintiff corporation is a subordinate lodge; that the movement for the erection and maintenance of the orphans' home was first started in 1867 by levying a tax of one dollar per member on all members of the lodge; that sufficient money was so collected by that means and by donations to purchase a site for such purposes; that a site for said orphans' home was purchased with the funds so collected, such site being the lands herein involved; that the title to said lands was taken in the names of three trustees (defendant not then being incorporated), who thereafter held the property in trust for defendant; that, in 1868, defendant subdivided part of the lands herein involved, twenty acres of the same being specially set apart for the sole purpose of a site for said home, the remainder to be sold, the proceeds to be used to construct the orphanage, and to maintain the same; that, for the purpose of carrying out this plan, defendant incorporated a sales corporation known as the Orphans' Homestead Association, and caused the trustees to convey all of the real property to said corporation; that said Orphans' Homestead Association, on December 30, 1868, deeded the twenty acres reserved for the orphanage to certain named trustees, under the terms of an express trust expressed in the deed of conveyance to said trustees, and which trust is pleaded in hæc verba, and which, among other things, provided that said trustees held the property in trust for defendant "for the purpose of a site for an Orphans' Home and its necessary appurtenances, and for the perpetual maintenance of said Orphans' Home and the support and education of its inmates and for no other purpose"; the remaining portions of said lands (about 152 acres) were subdivided and sold by the Orphans' Homestead Association, all funds thus received being placed in a trust fund for the erection and maintenance of an orphans' home; that the purchasers reconveyed the land back to this corporation for trust purposes; that, in 1871, the trustees conveyed the title to the 20 acres back to defendant; that for the greater convenience and better protection of all of said land, and for the purpose of better carrying out the provisions of the trust, defendant caused to be incorporated plaintiff corporation; that, thereupon, defendant conveyed to plaintiff corporation all of the property herein involved, said plaintiff corporation agreeing to live up to and abide by the terms and conditions of the trust; that at all times this defendant has been and still is ready, able, and willing to carry out and perform the trust, but that plaintiff corporation refuses to permit defendant so to do, and has attempted to sell said property in violation of the trust; that, prior to this attempted sale, both plaintiffs had full and actual knowledge of all the terms and conditions of said trust.

It is further alleged that this action must abate, for the reason that on February 4, 1925, this defendant commenced an action against plaintiff corporation in the superior court of Solano county, in which action this defendant has claimed the sole ownership of the entire estate and property involved herein; that a notice of lis pendens was filed; that said action is still pending; that plaintiffs knew this fact; that the subject matter of the two actions is identical.

It is also alleged that this action must abate because of the fact that there is now pending another action commenced in 1927 by defendant against plaintiff corporation and others in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, wherein this defendant has asked for a decree canceling the conveyances set forth in plaintiff's complaint, for an accounting, and for a decree terminating the trusts and for a reconveyance of the properties.

After a trial before the court without a jury, the court caused a judgment to be entered in favor of plaintiffs. The trial court found that the history of the acquisition of the property and its several transfers were substantially as set forth in the answer; that the plaintiff corporation held the property as trustee "for the sole purpose of locating and establishing an Orphans' Home thereon," and "to forever maintain an Orphans' Home," and "to have and to hold for the sole purpose of a site for an Orphans' Home and its necessary appurtenances and for the perpetual maintenance of an Orphans' Home and the support and education of its inmates, and for no other purpose"; that the home had been abandoned in 1919 for the reasons set forth in the complaint; that the reasonable value of the property was $17,000; that the circumstances leading up to the sale of the property to Brosnahan and Rookwood, and its subsequent transfer to O'Hara, were substantially as set forth in the complaint; that "the sale of the said land to plaintiff O'Hara and his assigns was made in good faith, and for the best interests of the trust of plaintiff corporation"; that it is not true that plaintiff corporation's only claim to the real property involved was as trustee for defendant corporation; that it is not true that plaintiff corporation was incorporated by defendant corporation for the sole purpose of greater convenience in carrying out the trust, but that plaintiff corporation was incorporated so that it might take over the land and pay a consideration therefor, and that the consideration to be paid and that was paid was that plaintiff corporation should pay certain debts of defendant corporation amounting to $10,000; that it is not true that defendant corporation is ready, able, or willing to perform the trust; that defendant corporation, since 1898, has been gradually shrinking in size and membership, so that, in 1919, it had less than 600 members and a total income of less than $1,000; that defendant corporation is financially unable and without means to operate the Orphans' Home; that defendant knew of the closing of the home in 1919 and made no objection thereto; that "it is true that the objects of the trust had become and were impossible prior to the said 13th day of June, 1919."

As its conclusions of law, the trial court held:

1. That defendant is estopped to question the validity of the right of plaintiff corporation to have closed the home in 1919, and is estopped to deny the right of plaintiff corporation to the full control and right to control the lands herein involved, by reason of defendant's laches and delay in objecting thereto.

2. That the sale of the land to plaintiff O'Hara should be and is affirmed.

3. That defendant corporation is hereby decreed to have no right, title, or interest in and to the real property.

From the judgment entered in accordance with the above findings and conclusions, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] At the trial defendant sought to show that plaintiff corporation was a mere subsidiary of defendant, and no more than an agent or trustee for defendant corporation, and that it had mismanaged the trust. These matters were thoroughly gone into on the trial, and, on conflicting testimony, found adversely to appellant, and, for that reason, cannot be considered on appeal.

[2] There can be no doubt of the correctness of the trial court's finding that plaintiff corporation did not hold the property in trust for defendant. The evidence tended to show that defendant corporation, during its period of prosperity, acquired the land herein involved in trust for the purpose of establishing and maintaining an orphans' home thereon; that, faced with the decrease in its membership and consequent loss of income, it sold the lands to plaintiff corporation, subject to the trust, for the sum of $10,000; that in this deed of conveyance no reversionary interest was retained by defendant. The trust for an orphans' home was undoubtedly a charitable trust, it having been collaterally so held in Re Estate of Upham, 127 Cal. 90, 59 P. 315. Defendant was not even the donor or creator of this trust, in the ordinary sense, having secured the money with which the land was purchased by a levy on the members of the lodge and by donations, and thereupon became trustee for those donating the money.

[3] However, even if defendant be treated as the creator of this trust, it does not appear what standing it has in this action to claim any interest in the real property. Defendant parted with its entire interest in the property for a valuable consideration, subject to the trust, and retained no reversionary interest therein. Under such circumstances, it has no standing in a court of equity, except as a relator, to attempt to compel the proper execution of the trust, or to claim any interest in the trust property. The law is well settled that when property has become fully vested in trustees for a valid charitable purpose, neither the creator of the trust nor his heirs or assigns have any standing in court in a proceeding to compel the proper execution of the trust, except as relators. Perry on Trusts (7th Ed.) p. 1255, § 732-A. In Clark v. Oliver, 91 Va. 421, 22 S. E. 175, at page 176, the rule is stated as follows: "The contributors to this fund parted with their interest in it, and when it was paid their control over it ceased. They are not described as persons belonging to the class intended to be benefited by the application of the fund. The money was devoted to a charitable use. As we have said, the whole interest of the donors was divested. There remained in them no scintilla of right. How, then, can they be heard in a court of equity with respect to the disposition of it? There is no such thing as a resulting trust with respect to a charity. Where a fund has been devoted to a charity, which, if the charity fails, will go to others, those persons having hostile interests may, of course, assert any claim they may have in the subject, and show that the charitable use has for any cause failed and become inoperative and void; but, where the donor has effectually passed out of himself all interest in the fund devoted to a charity, neither he nor those claiming under him, have any standing in a court of equity as to its disposition and control."

In other words, the only person who can object to the disposition of the trust property is one having some definite interest in the property—he must be a trustee, or a cestui, or have some reversionary interest in the trust property. In the instant case, there is more than sufficient evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that defendant has no right, title or interest in the property. At most, defendant is the creator of the trust, who, for a valuable consideration, has parted with its entire interest in the trust property. Under such circumstances, it would appear that defendant has no standing in court, except as a relator, to object to the disposition of the trust property. In addition to the authorities cited, supra, see Women's Christian Ass'n v. Campbell, 147 Mo. 103, 48 S. W. 960, 967; Petition of Burnham, 74 N. H. 492, 69 A. 720, 721; MacKenzie v. Trustees of Presbytery of Jersey City, 67 N. J. Eq. 652, 61 A. 1027, 1038, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227.

[4-6] Assuming, however, that defendant corporation could object to the confirmation of the sale, and that, therefore, the validity of the trial court's order is involved on this appeal, we are of the opinion that the trial court properly confirmed the sale of the trust property. Appellant seems to be of the opinion that confirmation of the sale will result in the termination of the trust. Such is not the fact. This proceeding is merely a step in carrying out the general purpose of the trust, the particular means specified in the trust instrument having failed. The law has long been well settled that the trial court, sitting as an equity court, has the power, when the method for carrying out a charitable trust provided for in the trust instrument has become inadequate or impossible, to empower the trustees to carry out the general charitable purpose in another or different fashion. In the instant case, the creator of the trust specified that the trust should be carried out by the maintaining of an orphans' home, but that method of carrying out the general charitable purpose of aiding and assisting orphans and half orphans has become reasonably impossible of performance, due to a change in conditions not foreseen at the time of the creation of the trust. In such a case, it becomes the duty of the equity court to construe the trust instrument in view of all the circumstances, and, if a general charitable purpose be ascertained, to apply the trust fund to the carrying out of that general purpose, even though so to do requires a change in the method or means specified in the trust instrument. This doctrine, frequently referred to as the cy pres doctrine, is in reality a mere matter of construction. In determining whether there has been expressed a general charitable intent, the trust instrument is always construed most strongly against the trustor, for the reason that the courts favor charities. Once it has been determined that the creator of the trust had a general charitable purpose, the courts will presume that the creator of the trust did not desire the trust to fail. Examples of the application of the doctrine are numerous. A leading case in this country, reviewing the early authorities, is Jackson v. Phillips, 14 Allen (Mass.) 539, in which case there was involved a bequest to trustees to be expended in a specified fashion to create a sentiment for the abolishment of negro slavery in the United States. After slavery had been abolished, the court found a general charitable purpose for the benefit of the negro race, and applied the funds for the purpose, as nearly as possible, of carrying out that intention. See, also, Perry on Trusts (7th Ed.) p. 1233, § 724 et seq. The doctrine has repeatedly been recognized in California. See 5 Cal. Jur. 15, § 10.

[7, 8] In the present case the facts and circumstances surrounding the creation of this trust were more than sufficient to indicate a general charitable intent to benefit orphans. The proceedings of the meetings of the Grand Lodge, the manner in which the money was collected, the absence of a reversionary clause in the trust deed, all indicate a general charitable intent to benefit orphans. It is true that it was specified in the trust instrument that this purpose should be accomplished by the creation and maintenance of an orphans' home, but that means of carrying out the intention of the creator of the trust has become reasonably impossible, because of changed conditions not foreseen at the time of the creation of the trust. Under such circumstances, it is the clear duty of the equity courts to permit the trustees to carry out the general trust purpose by selling the land, and using the fund thus acquired for some cognate purpose.

[9] Appellant complains that the sale of the land, under the conditions here existing, comes directly within the terms of section 870 of the Civil Code, which provides: "Where a trust in relation to real property is expressed in the instrument creating the estate every transfer or other act of the trustees, in contravention of the trust, is absolutely void."

This section has no application to the facts of this case. The sale here involved is not "in contravention of the trust," but, for the purpose of carrying out the terms of the trust, and making it effectual in a manner different from that originally contemplated, but within the presumed intention of the creator of the trust, as determined under the principles discussed, supra. In Aleman v. Wensinger, 40 Cal. 288, a particular property had been donated for church purposes, and was found to be unsuited therefor. The court ordered a sale, in order that suitable property might be purchased, stating at page 292 of 40 Cal.: "The principal purpose intended by the donors was to provide 'a Roman Catholic Church for the German Congregation of the City of San Francisco.' As a means to this end the lot on Sutter street, near Montgomery, was selected, and at the time of the selection it was suitable or at least not inappropriate for that purpose. Subsequent events, not then anticipated, and therefore not expressly provided for by the donors, have already practically defeated the scheme of the original donation. Hotels and business houses and places of public resort have grown up in close proximity to the property. A variety of circumstances, the results of the unforeseen growth of a populous city beyond and around the premises have, as found by the Court below, rendered this lot 'unsuitable as a site for an edifice for religious worship.' These circumstances have, at the same time, greatly enhanced its value in the market, and it appears that a sum can be obtained for it which will be sufficient, after paying off the indebtedness of the church, to purchase a suitable lot in the city and erect thereon an edifice proper for the accomplishment of the original design of the donation. The Court below directed, under these circumstances, a sale of the premises and a reinvestment of the proceeds of the sale in furtherance of the objects of the trust. We see no error in the general scope of the decree. It cannot be said to have displaced or interfered with the original trust for that, so far as the particular premises are concerned, had already been practically defeated by the circumstances before adverted to. The decree in its effect re-establishes the trust as far as possible, and provides the only means by which the intent of the donors may be executed and carried into substantial effect." The rule therein enunciated was in no way changed by the adoption of section 870 of the Civil Code.

In such cases, the better practice is to petition the equity court for permission to sell the property, before consummating the sale. In the instant case the trustee first sold the property, subject to confirmation, and now seeks approval of the acts performed by it.

[10] The rule is well settled that where an equity court, on proper application, would have ordered a sale, it will not cause a sale to be undone that has been arranged by the trustee, in order that the court itself may order the sale. The principle was thus stated in the early case of Newark v. Stockton, 44 N. J. Eq. 179, 14 A. 630, at page 637: "It seems to us plain that, under the conditions presented, the chancellor, if he had been properly applied to, would have been bound to permit the designed transmutation of this property. And, if this be so, then the injunction should not have been issued; for the court will not enjoin the act of a trustee of a charitable use which itself would have directed to be done had the case been before it. Such a trustee may alienate the trust property, but he will do such act at the peril of his conduct being disapproved of by the court of chancery. On this head, the case of Attorney-General v. South Sea Co., 4 Beav. 453, is an illustration. Eight messages were conveyed to trustees, the rents to be applied, by way of certain charitable uses, for the poor of the parish. The trustees leased these properties for 99 years to the South Sea Company, and this was complained of as a breach of trust. But Lord Langdale, defining the power and duty of a trustee of this class, says: 'It is plain that, in ordinary cases, a most important part of this duty is to preserve the property; but it may happen that the purposes of the charity may be best sustained and promoted by alienating the specific property. The law has not forbidden the alienation; and this court, upon various occasions, with a view to promote the permanent interests of charities, has not thought it necessary to preserve the property in specie, but has sanctioned its alienation.' And after remarking that the trustees may do, at their own risk, what the court would have done under the circumstances, and deeming the alienation made by the trustees, on the whole, beneficial, he dismissed the bill. This, we think, should have been the course in the present case. The chancellor, even on the theory adopted by him that this charity was not subject to legislative control, should not have enjoined the municipal authorities from doing the act contemplated by them, inasmuch as, if the case had been before him, he would have been constrained, by the force of a principle of equity that is not open to question, to have directed the doing of this same act."

See, also, City of Tacoma v. Tacoma Cemetery, 28 Wash. 238, 68 P. 723.

[11] The pendency of the two actions pleaded in defendant's answer could not have the effect of abating this action, for the reason that it appears from the face of defendant's pleading that in those actions the parties and issues are different from those here involved.

[12] It is usual in decrees ordering or directing sales of trust property to direct the disposition of the proceeds of the sale. It was not done in this case, the parties stating in open court that a receiver had been appointed in the San Francisco action heretofore mentioned, and that the money received from the sale would be paid over to him until it was determined in that action how such proceeds should be disposed of. For the protection of all concerned, this should have been part of the judgment in this case. It is, therefore, ordered that all proceeds from the sale of this land be held by plaintiff corporation or turned over to the receiver in the San Francisco action, to be held by him or it in trust until that court, or some other court, in a proper action, orders its disposition.

As thus modified, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

213 Cal. 256

LEIS v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.
S. F. 13947.

Supreme Court of California.
July 30, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ⇨842(7).

Where evidence was undisputed and indisputable, trial court's findings and conclusions amounted to mere conclusions of law, and as such were proper subject of review upon appeal.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨662.

Court erred in holding that jurisdiction over area to be occupied by civic center, including streets within area, lay within exclusive control of board of park commissioners.

The city charter limited jurisdiction of board of park commissioners to that of control over parks, squares, grounds surrounding public buildings and public pleasure grounds, but gave them no jurisdiction or control over public streets; jurisdiction and control over public streets, including acquisition, opening, closing and improvement thereof, being by terms of charter intrusted exclusively to board of supervisors and board of public works.

3. Dedication ⇨44.

In suit to enjoin erection of structure along street, evidence showed city, by resolutions of board of supervisors and by course of action and conduct of officials, had accomplished dedication of street in lands acquired by city for civic center.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 1176(3).

Where evidence submitted was sufficient to show dedication contrary to trial court's holding, and evidence erroneously excluded was but cumulative thereof, trial court would be directed to enter judgment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Frank W. Leis against the City and County of San Francisco and others. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed, with direction.

Joseph G. De Forest, Tobin & Tobin, and Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Palmer, all of San Francisco (Charles A. Shurtleff, Hugh Henry Brown, and Walter Shelton, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Henry Heidelberg, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This action was commenced by the plaintiff to obtain an injunction aimed to prevent the defendant city and county of San Francisco and its officials from carrying into effect the provisions of a certain resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of said municipality on December 12, 1927, and approved by the mayor thereof on December 23, 1927, directing the board of public works thereof to proceed with the erection of a certain structure along and upon the southerly line of Fulton street opposite and adjacent to the property of the plaintiff, and which would have the effect of preventing ingress into and egress from his said property into and upon Fulton street. The contention of the plaintiff, as set forth in his complaint, is that Fulton street throughout the entire width of 160 feet thereof lying between Leavenworth street and the intersection thereof with Market street is a public street, upon which his property, situate at and westerly for some distance from said intersection and along the southerly line of said Fulton street, abuts, giving him the right of ingress thereto and egress therefrom, which said city by its aforesaid resolution is seeking to obstruct. The city and county of San Francisco by its answer to said complaint denies that the strip of land along and upon which defendant proposes by said resolution to direct the erection of said obstruction is a portion of the public street commonly known as Fulton street, or that the same has ever been declared or dedicated as such by said municipality.

[1] Upon the trial of the cause upon the issue thus presented, the evidence pro and con was practically undisputed, consisting chiefly in the introduction and offer to introduce of a considerable amount of documentary evidence, derived in the main from the official records of said municipality, and having particular reference to the establishment of the so-called civic center therein, and in the course thereof of the extension and opening of that broad avenue or esplanade looking westerly from Market street to the park, which forms the center of said so-called civic center and occupies the square immediately in front of the new city hall. The evidence thus adduced before the trial court being, as to the essential features thereof, undisputed and indisputable, the findings and conclusions of the trial court thereon amounted to merely conclusions of law, and, as such, the proper subject of review upon this appeal. The question as to what shall be required to constitute the dedication of a street by a municipality for public uses as such has not been made the subject of either Code or other statutory definition in this state, although dedication as a method by which the public may acquire a highway is recognized in section 2618 of the Political Code, and although there are certain acts of the Legislature providing a method for the exchange of lands for street purposes, for the opening of new streets thereon, and for the abandonment and closing of property theretofore in use as public streets. Stats. 1911, p. 1346. The result of this absence of definite provisions from the statutory law of this state having relation to the subject of dedication of public streets is that the question as to whether such dedication of a specific area within a municipality has or has not been accomplished depends upon the application of the principles of the common law, and upon the action of the courts in determining from the official charters, resolutions, ordinances, acts, and conduct of said municipality whether the area claimed to have become and to constitute and be a public street has in point of fact and law been dedicated as such. Smith v. City of San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 463, 30 P. 591; Wilcoxon v. City of San Luis Obispo, 101 Cal. 508, 35 P. 988; 9 Cal. Jur., p. 4; 18 C. J. 38, 41, 42; People v. Marin County, 103 Cal. 223, 37 P. 203, 26 L. R. A. 659; McQuillin, Mun. Corp., vol. 4, p. 474; People v. Beaudry, 91 Cal. 213, 27 P. 610.

The evidence in this case, in so far as the trial court permitted its introduction, purports to contain and exemplify the official purpose of the municipality to dedicate the entire 160 feet width of Fulton street from its intersection with Larkin street and abutment thereat upon the said civic center park eastwardly to the intersection of Fulton street with Market street as a public street. If the evidence thus educed establishes that purpose, and if the evidence sought to be introduced on behalf of the plaintiff was and is germane to such purpose, it follows necessarily that the trial court was not only in error in the exclusion of such offered evidence, but was also in error in reaching the legal conclusion from the admitted evidence that the dedication of said area as a public street had not been accomplished. We shall, therefore, proceed to a review of such evidence and to a determination of the relevancy, effect, and conclusiveness thereof in determining whether the trial court was in error in rendering and entering its judgment in favor of the defendant upon the evidence presented before it, and was also in error in refusing to permit the presentation of certain evidence offered in support of the plaintiff's contention.

Prior to the date and disastrous effect of the earthquake and fire of the year 1906, the city and county of San Francisco had no civic center, unless the space then occupied by the old city hall and bounded in part by Hyde and McAllister streets and by what was then known as City Hall avenue, which extended in a southwesterly direction from the southerly intersection of McAllister street with Leavenworth street to or adjacent to what was then known as Marshall Square, might be called such civic center. When the old city hall and its adjacent buildings were destroyed by such earthquake, and fire and when the work of rehabilitation of the devastated city had been fairly entered upon, the public-spirited people of San Francisco, including its then officials and charter makers, began to formulate plans for the establishment of a civic center in the vicinity of where the old city hall had been and in the district bounded by Market and Franklin streets and by Golden Gate avenue. By the terms of the amendment to the charter of said municipality, adopted by its people in the year 1912 and approved by the Legislature on March 28, 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 1602), the board of supervisors thereof were authorized to acquire lands within the above-defined area for the purpose of establishing a civic center. In order to accomplish such purpose, the board of supervisors was thereby given ample powers to acquire such lands and to make such exchanges of lands as might be required to carry out the very definite purposes provided for in the aforesaid amendment to the charter. Upon the adoption thereof, the board of supervisors proceeded in various ways to carry into effect the purposes of such amendment. One of the earliest steps taken in that direction consisted in the official closing of certain portions of City Hall avenue, which had theretofore extended transversely across the area to be thus acquired for and devoted to the declared purpose of a civic center, and in order to effectuate the closure of the portion of said avenue thus to be abandoned, and to effectuate such exchanges of the abandoned area with the owners of property theretofore abutting thereon as were made necessary by such closure, certain portions of what was formerly known as Marshall Square were also abandoned by similar processes and through the enactment of formal resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors and by certain exchanges of such lands through the execution of mutual deeds, in conformity with the terms of said resolutions. It is to be noted, however, in this connection, that the portion of City Hall avenue which traversed the area now occupied by the open space lying between Hyde street and the intersection with Market street which, according to the plaintiff's contention has been dedicated as to the entire width thereof as a public street, was not at any time closed or abandoned as such by the board of supervisors in the course of acquiring such lands as had theretofore been owned by private persons, in order to accomplish an opening of the esplanade which has come to be known as Fulton street, and which has been designated as such in the numerous plats, maps, and plans of the so-called civic center, which have from time to time been made either under the direct authority of the board of supervisors or under the implied authority and completed action of such subordinate bodies as the board of public works of said municipality in carrying forward to their present state of completion the charter plans for the formation and occupancy as a civic center of the foregoing area as defined by the terms of said charter. It is also to be noted as having an important bearing upon the decision of the trial court that the foregoing area designated and to be improved as a civic center, prior to the formulation of the plans for the acquisition and devotion thereof to such purpose, had been intersected by several long-established public thoroughfares, such as Hyde, Larkin, Grove, Hayes, and Polk streets, and Van Ness avenue. Fulton street had formerly extended from Golden Gate Park eastwardly as far as Larkin street. In the formulation of the plans for the civic center and in the course of the erection thereon of the new city hall and the establishment of the civic center park in its present location, it was necessary that the portion of Fulton street lying within said area should be closed; but since the plans for the civic center as thus formulated embraced the opening of a broad esplanade extending from the point on Larkin street where Fulton street had formerly stopped eastwardly and parallel with McAllister street and with Grove street to Market street, the area to be thus occupied thereby apparently took on the name of Fulton street in the further plans and in the execution thereof on the part of the board of supervisors and the board of public works pursuant to the creation of such esplanade. The foregoing fact, as above stated, has an important bearing upon the correctness of the conclusions and judgment of the trial court, since it is made to appear therefrom that a considerable portion of the so-called civic center area was either formerly occupied by the said public streets or was to be occupied by and devoted to such public street purposes in the consummation of the civic center plan.

[2] As to such public streets and thoroughfares, whether existent or in contemplation, and in the course of being acquired for use as such streets and thoroughfares, it may not be argued successfully that the control over such street areas was ever by the charter of said city, or otherwise, invested in the board of park commissioners of said municipality. The charter itself in providing for the creation and powers of such board of park commissioners expressly limits the jurisdiction thereof to that of control over parks, squares, grounds surrounding public buildings and public pleasure grounds when acquired by said city and county, but gives them no jurisdiction or control over public streets. See City Charter, art. XIV, § 1. On the other hand, jurisdiction and control over each and all of the public streets, lanes, and thoroughfares of said municipality, including the acquisition, opening, closing, and improvement thereof, are by the terms of said charter intrusted exclusively to the board of supervisors and to its subordinate body, the board of public works. See Charter, art. II, chap. 2. In so far, therefore, as the trial court undertook to hold that jurisdiction over the area occupied or to be occupied by the civic center of said municipality lay within the exclusive control of its board of park commissioners, including jurisdiction and control over such of the public streets thereof as lay within said area or as might be opened, improved, occupied, and dedicated to public uses as such, the trial court was in error not only in its conclusions based upon such evidence, as was admitted during the course of the trial bearing upon the opening and devotion to the uses of a public street of that portion of Fulton street, so called, lying adjacent to and in the vicinity of plaintiff's said property, but was also in error in the exclusion of certain offered evidence on the plaintiff's behalf materially affecting the question of the dedication of the Fulton street area to the uses of a public thoroughfare, and to the particular use of such area by the plaintiff herein for the purpose of ingress to and egress from his afore-said property.

The particular acts and courses of official action and conduct on the part of the board of supervisors and its executive arm, the board of public works, upon which the plaintiff relies in proof of the dedication of the entire area of Fulton street, so-called, to such public uses, may be conveniently stated in narrative form as follows:

Following the adoption of the provisions of the charter having reference to the acquisition of a civic center above referred to, a period of public discussion ensued respecting its plan or form and the number and architecture of the public structures which were to occupy its area. A commission of well-known architects was presently constituted to bring order out of this informal agitation and discussion, and to report a civic center plan. After careful investigation, this commission, in the early part of the year 1912, made its report, accompanied with an elaborate plat or sketch showing the detailed plan of the area to be acquired for the purposes of a civic center, which report, being adopted by the board of supervisors, has since constituted the official plan and general design of said area. The plat or sketch accompanying this report purported to be a sort of bird's-eye view of the civic center as it was to be. It disclosed three essential features of the plan. These were, first, the location of the new city hall; second, the parked area in front of this proposed structure embraced within Polk, McAllister, Larkin, and Grove streets; third, a broad avenue or esplanade extending easterly from a point upon Larkin street about midway between McAllister and Grove streets, and parallel with these, intercepting Market street at Leavenworth street and intended to constitute the main entrance into the civic center proper and to furnish the vista of its chief architectural feature, the city hall. This avenue, being projected along the more limited lines of what would have been originally Fulton street, had the same extended beyond Larkin street, was indicated upon said plat or sketch as an extension thereof, and was designated thereon by the name of "Fulton Street." There was in this sketch a good deal that was fanciful, such, for example, as the location of certain other public buildings and suggested ornamentations which have not been followed in the later development of the area, but have remained substantially unchanged. Following the adoption of the architects' report, the board of supervisors, on April 1, 1912, adopted a resolution directing the city attorney to institute a large number of condemnation suits against the owners of such private properties as were required to be taken in order to carry into effect the civic center plan. These suits were presently begun, but with one exception were never prosecuted to judgment, for reasons which will presently appear. On March 13, 1913, the board of supervisors adopted a resolution having relation to the closing and abandonment of such portions of the former public street known as "City Hall avenue," which resolution by its terms provided for the extension of Fulton street, from its former terminus at Larkin street to Market street at its junction with Leavenworth street, and its descriptions as to the portions of City Hall avenue to be abandoned contemplated only the closure of such portions thereof as would lie outside of the lines of the proposed extension of Fulton street. In order to carry into execution the foregoing resolution, a number of official plats or maps were prepared by the city engineer's office showing the properties to be condemned, the portions of City Hall avenue to be abandoned, and also showing the portions thereof which would be embraced within the extension lines of said proposed extension of Fulton street to Market street. A number of these maps or plats were either presented or offered in evidence by plaintiff in his main case. In each and all of these the outline of the so-called Fulton street is depicted, showing it to be of the width of 160 feet, and of the extent above indicated. One of the most significant of these maps or plats was that prepared in November, 1913, in pursuance of a resolution of the board of supervisors and duly recorded as an official map of said municipality and upon which Fulton street is delineated as of a width of 160 feet, extending from the parked area on Larkin street to its intersection with the junction of Market and Leavenworth streets. There were also prepared by the city engineer's office several particular plats intended to show those portions of the properties of private owners formerly abutting upon City Hall avenue which were to be condemned, or, in the event of an arrangement to that effect, exchanged for parts of such avenue which were to be abandoned in order that the portions of properties of said private owners which remained to them might have a frontage upon Fulton street. These all show said street as of the width and extent above designated. At the inception of the trial of this cause, the plaintiff produced a map or plat which purported to show with precise detail the situation eastwardly from Larkin street to be effectuated by the condemnation proceedings and by the closure of City Hall avenue with the properties of each private owner designated in the relation of each to said abandoned avenue and to the new or extended Fulton street, which is delineated thereon as of the full width of 160 feet extending to Market street. This map or plat was admitted in evidence without objection, and was used throughout the trial as concededly a correct delineation of the matters set forth upon the face thereof. The condemnation suits and the proceedings for the closure of Fulton street dragged their combined courses through several years, due to a very commendable effort on the part of the public officials and the private property owners to come together upon a basis of agreement which would avoid the necessity of a prolonged and compulsory legal procedure applicable to each individual case. The result was a series of compromises between the municipality and the affected owners of these private properties, which finally took form in a succession of resolutions adopted by the board of supervisors authorizing the execution or acceptance of deeds on the part of each of these owners of such affected private holdings within the civic center area as were to be acquired for public structures or as were to abut upon "Fulton Street." In certain of these resolutions, and of the deeds which passed pursuant to their direction, the properties specifically designated in each as to come within public ownership were stated as being acquired for "Civic Center purposes." It is ingeniously argued by the respondents herein that these words convey the meaning that such properties were to be, in common with the parked areas of the civic center plan, under the exclusive control of the board of park commissioners, and not of either the board of supervisors or the board of public works. There is, however, no merit in this contention, since, as we have already seen, those portions of the civic center area which constitute public streets are, by the terms of the charter provisions above referred to, under the control exclusively of the board of supervisors, acting through its executive arm, the board of public works. In several of these resolutions and conveyances, however, and, of greater significance, in certain of those directly transferring to the municipality property which would come within the projected lines of Fulton street, the properties thus to be acquired are expressly stated as being so acquired "for street purposes." In the course of these negotiations, lasting through a series of years, the property rights of the municipality and of the owners of private property within the affected area were at length so far adjusted as to permit the opening of Fulton street to the full width of 160 feet between Larkin and Hyde streets; and accordingly we find the board of supervisors, by formal resolution adopted on October 17, 1919, declaring Fulton street, between Larkin and Hyde streets, "to the width of 160 feet to be a public street to be known as Fulton street." Following the official action thus taken, negotiations with those property owners whose holdings lay to the eastward of Hyde street proceeded to the point of individual settlements of the same sort as those accomplished to the westward or Hyde street, and, in a number of these transactions consummated by formal resolutions and the passage of deeds, the object to be attained was declared to be that of the "opening of Fulton and Leavenworth streets into Market street." In the year 1925, these negotiations had been practically completed, and Fulton street was thrown open to public use, and since that time down to the present it has been, to all apparent intents and purposes, and for all the usual uses thereof, an open public street. In order to such uses the usual incidents of public streets, such as street lights, sewers, paving, sidewalks, and street signs were installed. By the latter of these, the new avenue at each intersection and at its point of junction with Market street was designated as "Fulton Street." These various details were carried into effect by or under the direction of the board of public works without express direction from the board of supervisors, but with its apparent sanction, since the cost thereof in each instance was paid out of funds provided by said board. In the year 1925, the city engineer caused to be prepared and filed what purports to be an official map of the area within and adjacent to the civic center, upon which Fulton street to the full width and length thereof is depicted under that name as a public street. In that same year the board of supervisors by formal resolution or ordinance ordered "the improvement of intersection of Fulton street, Leavenworth street and Market street," and authorized and directed the board of public works to enter into a contract for such improvement. In conformity with such direction, the board of public works by formal resolution entered into contracts with one Clarence B. Eaton for the making and completion of this proposed improvement, and the work having been completed in conformity therewith, the cost of the same was ordered paid by the board of supervisors. At an even earlier date, the board of public works had undertaken to lay a sidewalk along the southerly side of Fulton street, between Hyde and Market streets, adjacent to the property lines of the private owners whose properties, including that of the plaintiff herein, abutted upon that portion of the newly opened avenue; and, while it does not appear that the board of supervisors by precedent formal action authorized the laying of said sidewalk, it does appear that, when the same was laid, the cost thereof was paid out of public funds provided by said board.

In the year 1924, the plaintiff herein had purchased from the heirs or successors of the estate of Forbes the property described in his complaint herein as lying at the southerly junction of Market and Fulton streets and extending for a distance of 116.297 feet along the southerly line of the latter street. Prior to his purchase of said property, official permits had been granted by the board of supervisors to the former owners thereof for the erection of the buildings upon said property to abut, as to the rear thereof, upon Fulton street, and such structures had, pursuant thereto, been erected having certain designated entrances and exits to and from Fulton street. These were used by plaintiff for convenient access to and egress from his said buildings upon Fulton street for the several years, without objection up to the date of the adoption by the board of supervisors of the resolution of December, 1927, directing the board of public works to proceed with the erection of some sort of structure along the southerly line of Fulton street immediately adjacent to plaintiff's said property line, and which, if constructed, would prevent his further use of Fulton street as a means of ingress to and egress from his said property.

[3] Upon the trial of the cause, however, it was conceded by counsel for the respondents that said resolution was a mere gesture intended to provoke the present action, and that all that was really intended by the respondents was the assertion or preservation of a claim of right upon the part of the municipality to construct at some future time some form of ornamentation of the entrance into said avenue, thus far designated as Fulton street, as would conform with certain suggestions made originally by the board of architects looking to the beautification of the entrance to said avenue. We are unable to find, however, from the evidence adduced herein, that this suggested ornamentation has ever assumed such definite form or substance as would constitute an actual interference with the rights of property ownerships at the junction of Market and Fulton streets as would amount to a limitation upon the completed dedication of the area occupied by said avenue for the general uses of a public street. We do not hold, however, that in conformity with such uses the municipality may not provide for such ornamentation of this broad avenue, as for example by way of fountains, parked areas, or even ornamental entrances as will tend to its beautification and to that of the civic center, of which it forms a very essential feature, without materially interfering with, but rather ministering to, its uses as a broad and beautiful avenue or esplanade. The offending resolution of the board of supervisors which provoked the present action went obviously much further than any such innocuous intention, and amounted to a material interference with the rights of this plaintiff and other abutting property owners to the use of said avenue, provided it had become by dedication, as to all of its width and length, a public street. We have no hesitation in holding from the evidence embraced in the record herein, only a portion of which we have herein undertaken to review, that the city and county of San Francisco by the official resolutions of its board of supervisors and by the consistent course of action and conduct on the part of its duly authorized officials, acting in conformity and consistency therewith, has accomplished the dedication of Fulton street eastwardly from Larkin to Market street as a public street.

[4] We are satisfied that the evidence which the trial court admitted without objection was sufficient to show such intended dedication, and that the evidence which the trial court erroneously excluded was but cumulative in proof of the fact of such dedication. This being so, there is no necessity of returning this cause for the purpose of a new trial, or for any other purpose than that of a direction to the trial court to make and enter its conclusions of law in conformity with the established and practically undisputed facts of this case, and, having done so, to make and enter its judgment in the plaintiff's favor in conformity with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion.

The present judgment, with such direction, is reversed.

---

213 Cal. 175

BERNHARD v. WARING et al.

S. F. 13444.

Supreme Court of California.

July 23, 1931.

1. Judgment ⇨461(5).

Although many of allegations attacking all persons judgment on ground of extrinsic fraud were made upon information and belief, facts and circumstances as pleaded held to give rise to inferences sufficient to support attack (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78, as amended).

2. Judgment ⇨443(1).

Fraudulent omission to post copy of summons in all persons action on premises would constitute "extrinsic fraud" (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78, as amended).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Extrinsic or Collateral Fraud," see Words and Phrases.]

3. Judgment ⇨443(1).

Successor in interest of claimant to property could contest all persons judgment fraudulently procured while predecessor held title.

4. Judgment ⇨443(1).

Payment of taxes for single year held not sufficient notice of procurement of all persons judgment accomplished by fraudulent practices, where adverse claimant paid taxes for other years (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 78, as amended).

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action by Oscar Bernhard against Charles A. Waring and others, in which Annie S. McGinerty filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

H. M. Anthony, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Raymond D. Williamson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J.

Appeal from a decree quieting title of respondent, Annie S. McGinerty, cross-complainant in an action brought by appellant to quiet his title to lot No. 3, block 11, as per map of the property of City Land Association, filed for record August 24, 1870, in books C and D of maps, page 11, in the office of the recorder of the city and county of San Francisco. The situs of said lot is in the locality of the Ingleside race track and it has, together with its companion, lot 4, a frontage on Garfield street. Said lots are each 25x100 feet and were held and regarded as one piece or parcel until the present controversy arose as to the ownership of lot No. 3. Said lots were, on August 20, 1870, conveyed by a grant, bargain, and sale deed, according to the map of said City Land Association, by F. L. A. Pioche and L. L. Robinson to George T. Schulz, father of respondent, Annie S. McGinerty, and George F. Schulz. On April 4, 1899, George T. Schulz conveyed said lots by gift deed to his wife, Margaret Schulz. On February 28, 1906, Margaret Schulz conveyed said lots to her son, George F. Schulz. On October 14, 1913, George F. Schulz, by a grant, bargain, and sale deed, conveyed said lots to his sister, Annie S. McGinerty, respondent herein. Said George T. Schulz died within a period of five months thereafter.

Appellant asserts ownership of title by virtue of a judgment procured by George R. Woods v. All Persons, and entered in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, August 20, 1913, as provided by "an act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of the loss or destruction of public records." Chapter 59, p. 78, Stats. 1906 (Ex. Sess.), and Stats. amendatory thereof.

In the presentation of his case appellant offered in evidence the judgment roll and papers in the case of Woods v. All Persons etc., and also a deed from George R. Woods to E. R. Zion, dated August 25, 1914, and a deed from E. R. Zion and Clarice D. Zion to Oscar Bernhard, appellant herein, dated October 16, 1924.

By her second amended answer respondent denied appellant's asserted claim to title and pleaded her deraignment of title as above set out. She further alleges that the basis of the claim of appellant has its only foundation in the fact that said lot No. 3 was erroneously and falsely included in the inventory of the estate of one McCann and was listed in said estate as of no value and was distributed as the property of said estate to Rose J. Shevlin and Catherine McCann, presumably heirs of said decedent McCann, and that on December 27, 1912, said Rose J. Shevlin and Catherine McCann deeded said lot to George R. Woods—appellant's source of title—and that said Woods, well knowing that he had received no title or interest in or to said lot by said deed, nevertheless instituted, four days thereafter, to wit, December 31, 1912, said all persons action; that with the purpose of making less likely the chance of George F. Schulz, who was named in said complaint as a known owner and claimant of an interest in said lot, discovering the design and purpose of said Woods to obtain without his knowledge said lot No. 3, he (Woods) included approximately fifty or more other lots, pieces, and parcels of land in said complaint and in the accompanying affidavit required by law. Said answer further alleges that said George F. Schulz was a person well known to said Woods as a resident of the city and county of San Francisco and could have been personally served in the city of his residence, but said Woods purposely and deliberately failed, omitted, and refused to serve said George F. Schulz with summons, complaint, or affidavit, and said Schulz had no knowledge of the pendency of said action or of Woods' claim of title to said property; that the residence of said George F. Schulz was correctly listed in the city directory of said city of San Francisco in said year 1912, and that he and his father's family had been the owners of and in actual possession of said lot since 1870 continuously to the day of suit, and that he was well known to the neighboring landowners as the owner of said lot, and that his presence could have been easily ascertained by reasonable inquiry; that the plaintiff in said all persons action did not post or cause to be posted a copy of the summons on said premises or lot No. 3, and that neither said George F. Schulz nor respondent herein had any knowledge of the asserted claim of appellant or his predecessors to any interest in said lot until the instant suit was brought and summons served therein.

It is further averred that respondent and her predecessors in interest have paid all taxes and assessments laid upon said lot No. 3, and that appellant has never offered to refund any of the moneys so paid on account of taxes and assessments; that respondent's predecessor erected a building on said lot and actually resided thereon for several years without objection on the part of appellant, his predecessor in interest, or any one whomsoever.

Appellant demurred to the second amended cross-complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to his said action, and on the further ground that said second amended answer and cross-complaint were barred by the provisions of section 338, subdivision 4, Code of Civil Procedure.

The complaint in the instant case was not filed by appellant until December 1, 1924, more than eleven years after the entry of the all persons decree, and summons did not issue thereon presumably until some time thereafter, as the record shows that the respondent filed her answer August 31, 1925. Appellant's chief point for reversal is that respondent did not raise the issue of fraud in the procurement of the judgment in said all persons action until approximately twelve years after said decree was signed, as shown by her cross-complaint herein. A further ground of objection is that the allegations of fraud are predicated upon information and belief, the rule being that it is not sufficient to allege fraud or its elements upon information and belief unless the facts upon which the belief is founded are stated in the pleading. Another ground of objection urged by appellant is that the title to said lot No. 3 stood in the name of George F. Schulz, respondent's grantor, at the time said all persons decree was signed and the conveyance to respondent was not made until approximately two months thereafter, and therefore, she not being a party to the suit in which said decree was granted, none of her rights were affected thereby.

[1] At the time said lots were deeded to George F. Schulz by his mother, to wit, February 28, 1906, they were unfenced and unimproved. In fact, the district in which they were situate was an outlying, unimproved portion of the city of San Francisco. Following the fire of 1906, said Schulz built a small board house or "shack," as it was called, 22x24 feet on lot 4, and dug a well on lot 3, and inclosed the whole area with a cheaply constructed fence. He actually resided on said lots for a period of several years, the year of his removal being somewhat uncertain, but it was not earlier than 1908. The fence having become dilapidated, he latterly caused it to be removed. Said small house or shack constructed by George F. Schulz was sold by respondent in 1918 to a neighboring landowner and subsequently removed by the purchaser from said premises. The judgment is attacked on the ground of extrinsic fraud, and, while many of the allegations are made upon information and belief, the facts and circumstances as pleaded give rise to inferences which are sufficient to support a pleading sounding in fraud. Respondent's immediate predecessor in interest, a brother, lived only about five months after the decree was signed, and of course his testimony was not available in an action involving his ownership of said lots brought by an adversary claimant ten years after the passing of two important events, to wit, the execution of respondent's deed by George F. Schulz and his death. Moreover, the ownership of the lots in controversy originated in the father of claimant some forty-three years before the title to one of said lots was questioned by the all persons proceeding, while the title to the companion lot was not challenged at all. It is not explained in the case why lot No. 4 was not also included in said action, as both are held by the same tenure.

[2] As a matter of family history, said lots, beginning with the ancestor, have passed from father to mother, and thence to son, and finally to daughter, as if in obedience to the law of succession, and remained, so far as proprietorship was exercised by any one, under the control of the successive members of the ancestor's family through a period of more than fifty years. The evidence addressed to the issue of fraud could only come from the living member of the family in support of and in amplification of such facts as were known to her and third parties, which were corroborated by independent facts and circumstances sufficiently persuasive to sustain the decree rendered in her favor. But aside from anything here said as to the allegations and proof based on information and belief, the case being one of extrinsic fraud is proved by documentary record evidence. No claim is made that George F. Schulz was personally served with process of any kind. Respondent in attacking the all persons judgment offered evidence tending to show that no copy of the summons was posted on the premises. Said record did not contain an affidavit that summons had been posted as required by law, whereupon appellant applied to the court for relief and the court ordered that the affidavit of posting of Herbert S. Marron, dated the 23d day of June, 1926, be filed nunc pro tunc as of the date February 20, 1913. Respondent produced several persons who resided upon nearby lots, one of whom took more than a casual interest in the Schulz lots, all of whom testified that at no time during the period covered by the affidavit did they or any of them observe a notice, copy of summons, or paper of any kind posted upon the Schulz lots. Their opportunity for observation and the likelihood of being attracted by such a notice, had any been posted, was sufficient to convince the trial court that none was posted. There is nothing so inherently improbable in their testimony in the light of the situation described by said witnesses as would justify a reviewing court in minimizing or discrediting their testimony. If the omission to post a copy of the summons was fraudulent, as alleged in the complaint and found by the trial court, such willful omission would constitute extrinsic fraud. McGuinness v. Superior Court, 196 Cal. 222, 237 P. 42, 40 A. L. R. 1110, and cases therein cited.

[3] The other major ground upon which appellant rests his appeal is the doctrine that "no person will be permitted to proceed in equity against a judgment or decree to which he was not a party, and which did not at its rendition affect any of his rights. If the parties to an adjudication are satisfied with it, no outside persons will be permitted to intermeddle with it, at law or equity. * * * So an assignment of a bare right to file a bill in equity for a fraud committed upon the assignor will be held void, as contrary to public policy, and as savoring of the character of maintenance." Whitney v. Kelley, 94 Cal. 146, 29 P. 624, 625, 15 L. R. A. 813, 28 Am. St. Rep. 106.

It cannot be presumed that a party who had no notice that a suit had been filed and a judgment obtained against him would be satisfied with such an iniquitous and inequitable proceeding. If the judgment was fraudulently obtained against George F. Schulz, his deed was valid and his successor in interest would be in a position to maintain her action. We deem it unnecessary to discuss assignments of interest which are designed merely to give the assignee a "bare" or "naked" right to file a bill in equity, but rather make reference to that class of assignments in which the "assignors 'have some substantial possession, and some capability of personal judgment, and not a mere naked right to overset a legal instrument or to maintain a suit.'" Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 P. 303, 304; Kemp v. Enemark, 194 Cal. 748, 230 P. 441.

[4] In the instant case the respondent produced tax receipts beginning with the year 1908 and continuing to the year of trial—1928—except for the year 1921. No claim is made that all taxes levied prior to 1908 were paid by any person other than respondent's predecessors in interest. Receipts were also introduced showing all payments accruing on account of a district improvement known as the Twin Peaks ridge tunnel assessment, beginning with the year 1914, and ending November 25, 1922, were paid by respondent, and also an assessment for the opening of Byxbee street. The taxes on lot No. 3 were paid in 1921 by E. R. Zion, Woods' successor, under the all persons judgment and appellant's grantor herein. Zion was present in court, but did not testify in the case. Respondent called at the tax collector's office to pay the taxes assessed against her lots for that year and was informed by the collector that the taxes on lot No. 3 had been paid by said Zion. Shen then paid the taxes on lot No.

4, and sought Zion, whom she found in the city hall. Zion refused to give her reasonable satisfaction in connection with the transaction and did not assert that he had paid the taxes on said sole lot. He did claim to be the owner. Respondent offered to reimburse him on account of said payment and was willing and able at all times thereafter to do so. It is evident that neither Zion nor Woods nor the appellant herein had unshaken faith in the righteousness of the all persons judgment, for none either thereafter or before had paid any taxes or discharged any assessments levied on said lot 3 or had done a single act indicative of a proprietor's right. It is clear that the respondent was somewhat perplexed as to Zion's attitude, as shown by her statement that she hardly understood him. The payment of taxes for the year 1921 was not sufficient alone to constitute notice as to the procurement of a judgment accomplished by fraudulent practices.

Upon the foregoing state of the record, it would be a harsh rule that would permit one voluntary payment of taxes, in the light of the history of the transaction as above narrated, to interrupt the peaceable enjoyment of said real property by the respondent. She has at no time abandoned her claim of ownership, which is supported by the equities of the case.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; PRESTON, J.; CURTIS, J.

115 Cal.App. 539

PEOPLE v. GOLTRA.

Cr. 46.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 17, 1931.

1. Criminal law ⇨422(6).

In robbery prosecution, statements constituting virtual admission of guilt by participant in robbery, not made in defendant's presence, held inadmissible.

2. Criminal law ⇨412(3).

Statement of defendant, charged with robbery, that he had no gun at his own home, afterwards proven false, held admissible on behalf of prosecution.

3. Criminal law ⇨407(1).

Accusations in defendant's presence, denied by him, held inadmissible.

4. Criminal law ⇨304(2).

It is general knowledge that "rogues gallery" pictures in sheriff's office are taken of prisoners arrested for commission of crime.

5. Criminal law ⇨444.

Admitting "rogues gallery" picture of defendant, not identified at trial, though allegedly identified before trial but not in defendant's presence, held improper.

No witness appeared at trial identifying picture as being that of defendant, but there was testimony that third person, participating in robbery with which defendant was charged, had identified picture as that of defendant, and that defendant was told of such identification, but was not shown picture.

6. Criminal law ⇨369(1).

In robbery prosecution admitting testimony disclosing criminal proceeding pending against defendant but not connected with present proceeding held prejudicial error.

7. Criminal law ⇨419, 420(1).

Deputy sheriff's testimony that investigation disclosed that records of railroad failed to show that named person worked for railroad held inadmissible as hearsay.

Officer should not have been allowed to testify as to what railroad's officers, who were available as witnesses and whose records were open for inspection, told him, either in form of a direct statement, or that his investigation, based upon contents of records and conversations, showed that named person had not been employed by railroad where defendant claimed he was employed.

8. Criminal law ⇨1186(4).

Court being unable to determine whether defendant would have been convicted notwithstanding errors of trial court, constitutional provision against reversal for technical error could not support conviction (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

Evan Goltra was convicted of robbery in the first degree, and he appeals.

Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Thomas Wade Cochran, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John D. Richer, Dep. Atty. Gen., W. Earl Redwine, Dist. Atty. for Riverside County, of Riverside, and Harry Amstutz, Dep. Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, for the State.

MARKS, J.

Appellant was convicted of the crime of robbery in the first degree. From the judgment pronounced upon him and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, he has prosecuted this appeal.

The information filed by the district attorney of Riverside county charged appellant with the crime of robbery accomplished by means of force or fear on the 29th day of December, 1930, and alleged a previous conviction of a felony. Appellant went to trial on his plea of guilty to the prior conviction, and of not guilty to the offense charged.

The evidence shows that Charles E. Ives was in charge of a one-man car of the Pacific Electric Company operating in the city of Riverside on December 29, 1930. Shortly before 8 o'clock on the evening in question, Ives reached the southern terminal of his run near Jurupa avenue in the city of Riverside. He alighted from his car and proceeded to change his trolley for the return trip. While doing this, he observed two men walking toward him. When he had reached the rear of the car and was attempting to place the trolley upon the wire, one of the men thrust something hard like a piece of iron into his back and told him to raise his hands and keep them up. This man went through his pockets and took a purse containing $7.45 from the rear pocket in his trousers, and three silver half-dollars from a side coat pocket. Ives did not see this man during the robbery. The other man, whom Ives identified at the trial as Carl Thompson, came up in front of him and attempted to get the money out of the changer which he carried on a belt around his waist. He was not able to open it, and abandoned the attempt. The two men told Ives to make connections with his trolley, get in his car, and run it back to the center of the city of Riverside rapidly without looking back. He promptly complied with this demand. After he had proceeded about 150 feet toward the business center of Riverside, he saw an automobile approaching from the rear. As it went by, Ives saw a man leaning out over the right door looking back toward the street car. After going about 100 or 150 feet ahead of the street car, the automobile was slowed down and traveled alongside for some distance. The man who had leaned from the automobile was identified by Ives as the appellant.

The city of Colton is distant from Riverside about seven or eight miles. Appellant Carl Thompson and an unidentified third person were seen in the restaurant in Colton a few minutes before 10 o'clock on the evening in question. They alighted from an automobile parked near the restaurant door, which they left with its engine running and its lights illuminated. Thompson and appellant registered under assumed names at a rooming house in Colton about 12 o'clock that same night.

Appellant was arrested in the city of Los Angeles on January 26, 1931. He was taken to the office of the sheriff of Los Angeles county, where several conversations took place. The foregoing evidence, together with the inferences drawn from these conversations furnish the evidence upon which the jury returned its verdict of guilty.

Appellant denied that he committed the crime or had any connection therewith. He testified that he spent the entire day and night of December 29, 1930, at his home in the city of Los Angeles with his wife, his three minor children, and for about three hours in the evening between 7 and 10 o'clock with two friends, a Mr. and Mrs. Miller, with whom he and his wife visited and played cards. Appellant's testimony in this regard was corroborated by Mrs. Goltra and by Mr. and Mrs. Miller.

Appellant presents twenty-five specifications of error upon which he relies for the reversal of the judgment and the order denying his motion for new trial. As many of these specifications relate to the same errors occurring in the testimony of various witnesses, it will be unnecessary to consider all of them.

[1] He first complains of the admission in evidence of a conversation between Carl Thompson and Ives which occurred at about five o'clock in the evening of January 24, 1931, during which appellant was not present. It appears in the record as follows:

"Q. Just state what you saw and what you did and the conversation. A. I went down to the jail.

"Q. All right. A. The city jail in Riverside, or the county jail, I guess it was.

"Q. The county jail? A. The county jail. And I walked in and saw the jailer, and asked him if they had brought—

"The Court: You can't relate any conversation. Just state what you did. A. I stepped up to the jailer and asked to see—

"Mr. Cochran: I object to what he asked him.

"Q. (By Mr. Amstutz, continuing) Just confine yourself, Mr. Ives, to what you did, and what you said, or what was said, in the presence of Mr. Thompson.

"Mr. Cochran: I object to that question as calling for hearsay; it is certainly not admissible unless the defendant Goltra was present.

"The Court: Overruled. Read the question. (Last question read by reporter as follows: 'Q. Just confine yourself, Mr. Ives, to what you did, and what you said, or what was said in the presence of Mr. Thompson.') A. I went into the lobby and sat down behind the door in a chair, and waited for officers Scott and Crane to bring the prisoner in. And I waited there for possibly a half hour or more, and I saw them then coming up the steps to the jail. They came in through the door, and Mr. Scott was on the right of Mr. Thompson and Mr. Crane was on the left. They saw me sitting there back of the door, and they turned Mr. Thompson around facing me, and Mr. Scott says—Officer Scott asked Mr. Thompson—

“Mr. Cochran: Just a moment, please. May I interrupt? Now it is very evident what is being called for here and what is to be related is inadmissible, and calling for the statements of another person made not in the presence of the defendant Goltra. I respectfully ask the court to refer to page 1 of my trial brief, which has set forth the cases right down to the present time, that any admission of any statements of an alleged codefendant made outside of the presence of the defendant on trial, are purely inadmissible and are hearsay.

“Mr. Amstutz: I think this goes to the identification.

“The Court: Overruled.

“Mr. Cochran: May it be restricted to the identification of this man Thompson?

“The Court: I can't tell. You may make a motion to strike. Read the question. (Last question read by reporter as follows: ‘Q. Just confine yourself, Mr. Ives, to what you did, and what you said, or what was said in the presence of Mr. Thompson.’) A. (Continuing): If he had ever seen this man before, pointing at me as I sat there in the county jail. Mr. Thompson, he spoke up and identified me. I sat there for a few minutes. I then asked him the question why he held me up, and he said ‘Because they were broke.’ I then asked him what part he took in the hold-up.”

The conclusion that this conversation was inadmissible in evidence against appellant is supported by the cases of People v. Gonzales, 136 Cal. 666, 69 P. 487, and People v. Mathew, 194 Cal. 273, 228 P. 424. While the admission of this testimony was error, its prejudice does not appear until it is considered in connection with the testimony of Deputy Sheriff Joseph B. Kelley, a portion of which is hereinafter quoted. It should be borne in mind that Thompson, in the foregoing conversation, virtually admitted that he was one of the men who participated in the robbery of Ives.

The next testimony to which we need to direct our attention is a portion of that of Joseph B. Kelley:

“Q. Now, when did you have a conversation with the defendant Goltra in connection with this case? A. He was immediately taken into the office of Capt. Stensland, of the Robbery Squad, Sheriff's office. At this time—

“Q. Who else was there, officer, anybody? A. Capt. Stensland, Deputy Sheriff Williams of Los Angeles, Deputy Sheriff Crane of Riverside, Officer Scott of Riverside, and Officer Smith of the Pacific Electric and Mr. Fish of the Pacific Electric. Goltra at this time asked me what it was all about; and I stated to him that he was wanted for robbery and suspicion of murder in Riverside. At this time he stated to me, he stated, ‘You are all wet.’ At this time—a little while later, maybe about three or four minutes later, Mr. Thompson was brought into the office of Capt. Stensland and was asked was this the man, and he stated, ‘Yes, that is the man.’

“Q. Meaning who? A. Meaning Goltra. Goltra was the man seated at the end of the table nearest the hallway.

“Q. Anything further said to the defendant Goltra at this time about Mr. Thompson? A. Not at that time.

“Q. State what further conversation you had with the defendant Goltra? A. After Thompson left the room Goltra was asked whether he knew Thompson or not, and he said, ‘No, I have never seen him; I don't know him.’ And then, did Thompson ever see him? And he said, no, he had never saw him. We asked him if he had a gun at his house, and he said, ‘No.’ And I spoke up and I asked him positively, I said, ‘Evan, are you positive you have not got no gun in the house?’ He said, ‘Mr. Kelley, I certainly am absolutely positive there is no gun in my house.’ The men, or Inspector Scott of Riverside, and Deputy Sheriff Williams and Monteleon and Mr. McDermott and Officer Smith of the Pacific Electric, left to search Mr. Goltra's house. I was not there. In the meantime Attorney Cochran came into the office and requested to see defendant Goltra, and I brought him into the room, and Mr. Cochran asked him, he said, ‘What is all this about?’ And I stated to Mr. Cochran that he was wanted in Riverside for robbery and suspicion of murder; and he said it was a very serious proposition; that he knew no physical abuse would come to Mr. Goltra, and knew very well he was going to be thoroughly questioned. Mr. Cochran then stated to Mr. Goltra that he would see him the following day, and Mr. Cochran left. After Mr. Cochran left, I stated to Goltra, I said, ‘You are in an awful jamb,’ and I said, ‘If you can give us any explanation,’ I said ‘I have got nothing against you, and if you can give us a proper explanation that this man Thompson is lying,’ I said, ‘I will go to the bat for you.’ I asked him then, ‘How do you explain, Mr. Goltra’—or ‘Evan,’ I called him,—‘Evan, how can you explain that this man Thompson can pick your picture out of 18 men, and you claim you never saw him.' He said, 'I can't explain it.'

"Mr. Cochran: I am going to ask that that previous answer and question, or question and answer be stricken from the record.

"The Court: What is the purpose of the objection?

"Mr. Cochran: It is an accusatory statement, immediately and promptly denied by the defendant. His reaction to it was that of any innocent man.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Q. Have you those pictures, Officer? A. Yes, sir (producing pictures). I stated to him at that time that there was first, 12 pictures shown to him, and Thompson stated none of them were Goltra. I stated, then, that I personally brought in—I went to the record room and picked six more pictures, among which was the defendant Evan Goltra, Charles Goltra and Raymond Goltra, and three other pictures, and laid them on the table, face up, and warned Thompson not to look on the back, as the names was on the back of them. Thompson goes up, and I told Evan, immediately picked out the picture.

"Q. Have you the picture that he picked out? A. Yes, sir, I have (producing picture).

"Q. This is the photograph that was there? A. The identical photograph picked out by Mr. Thompson.

"Mr. Amstutz: We offer that photograph into evidence.

"Mr. Cochran: We object to that; no proper foundation laid, and no showing it was shown to the defendant Goltra at all. Nothing but a conversation about something which was alleged to have taken place between Thompson and the officer at another time, and would be calling for hearsay, and is inadmissible.

"The Court: Did you show that picture to Goltra, Officer? A. No.

"Q. But you did tell him— A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Amstutz: And what did he say, when you told him?

"Mr. Cochran: I would like to have the court's ruling on the objection.

"The Court: It will be admitted as People's 3, State's Exhibit 3.

"Mr. Cochran: I don't know whether this particular fact is clear. I would like to restate, briefly, this fact; The picture was not shown to the defendant Goltra at all.

"The Court: I understand that.

"Mr. Cochran: Merely a conversation had with him, in which the officer stated, at another time and place, some one identified his picture. Now, this picture is offered in evidence as having been shown to someone else outside of the presence of the defendant Goltra.

"The Court: To prove his identification. Yes, I understand.

"Mr. Amstutz: As soon as the Court marks that, I would like to show it to the jury. (Picture shown to the jury)

"Q. Now, Officer Kelley, what else was said on that occasion,—anything? A. I asked Mr. Goltra if he could explain how it was that Thompson could tell us the exact street and corner where the street car turned, to get off—to go to his home, if he did not know him; and he said, no, he could not; could not make any explanation.

"Mr. Cochran: I will make the same motion with respect to that conversation, as previously made.

"The Court: Overruled.

"Q. On the following day what did you do, Officer? A. The following day I procured a court order from department 23; on the following day I took the defendant, Evan Goltra, into department 23, with Judge Doran presiding, and at this time Mr. Cochran was present, and he was surrendered on his bond there for his appearance in court. Judge Doran granted the motion to surrender him; and after this was heard, I procured a court order from Judge Doran to bring the defendant, Evan Goltra, to Riverside for arraignment on the robbery charge."

Officer Kelley further testified as follows:

"Q. On January 26, according to your testimony, I believe, you had a conversation with this defendant? A. I did.

"Q. And at that time was there anything further said concerning the identification of the gun which has been offered in this case, by Mr. Thompson or anyone else? A. Yes, sir. While the officers, or Inspector Scott, Deputy Sheriff Williams and the other officers were over to the house searching for this gun, and in my conversation with the defendant Goltra, I asked him about the gun, and he stated that there was no gun in his house. I told him, I said, 'This fellow Thompson says that the third man in the robbery gave you the gun and that you were supposed to forward the gun to him at Sacramento.' He said, 'No, that is not a fact.' I said, 'Thompson described the gun as an old gun.' He said, 'No, I haven't got no gun.' When the gun was brought back to the Sheriff's office, we showed it to Mr. Goltra. He said, then, 'That is the gun,' maintaining that that was the gun that he got from Gordon. We showed it to Thompson, then, and Thompson said—

"Mr. Cochran: Just a moment. I object to what Thompson said, not in the presence of the defendant Goltra.

"The Court: Was that in the presence of the defendant Goltra? A. No, sir.

"The Court: Sustained.

"Q. (By Mr. Amstutz, resuming): Thompson identified this gun, didn't he?

"Mr. Cochran: The same objection.

"Q. (By Mr. Amstutz, continuing): And the identification was later communicated to the defendant Goltra; is that true?

"Mr. Cochran: That is objected to for the same reason as previously stated,—that it is calling for hearsay and inadmissible evidence.

"The Court: Sustained. I will allow the witness to state what words he used, regarding what Thompson said about the gun when he was talking with Goltra.

"Mr. Amstutz: Very well.

"Q. (By Mr. Amstutz continuing): Have you finished your conversation with Goltra concerning the gun? A. After we went outside into the outer room where Goltra was, and we returned to the room where Goltra was—there is Capt. Stensland's office, and there is a main assembly room of the robbery detail. The night of the 26th, after the gun was brought back, the defendant Goltra was sitting in the captain's office at one end of the table. Thompson was sitting in the assembly room then. After we had shown the gun to Thompson, we returned to the captain's office, and told Goltra that Thompson had stated that that was the gun that the third man in the robbery had given to Goltra. He said no, that it was not; that he got it from Gordon, and that he had returned it to Gordon on the 18th.

"Mr. Cochran: I ask that that particular portion of the conversation be stricken out as accusatory in its nature, and denied by the defendant,—that portion where the witness stated to Goltra that Thompson had said to the witness that that was the gun that was used in the robbery, and that the defendant immediately denied it. I ask that that be stricken out, and the jury instructed to disregard it.

"The Court: Was that the same gun that you related a conversation concerning yesterday as having been found in Goltra's house? A. Yes, sir.

"The Court: Objection overruled.

"Q. That is the conversation, then, is it, concerning the gun on that occasion? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you have any further conversation at that, or at any time, concerning certain whereabouts of the defendant Goltra? A. In my conversation with Goltra I asked him—

"Mr. Cochran: I would like to have the foundation laid a little better for that conversation.

"The Court: All right.

"Q. (By Mr. Amstutz, continuing): Just give the time and place. A. That was on the evening of January 26th.

"Q. Whereabouts? A. A portion of this conversation was between Goltra and myself alone. Another portion of it was in the presence of Capt. Stensland, Mr. Fish, Mr. Smith, and Deputy Sheriff Crane, of Riverside; and occurred about between 7:30 and 8:30 p. m. The conversation was to the effect of how it was that Mr. Thompson could describe—

"Mr. Cochran: I ask that the witness state what was said, and not what the effect of the conversation was. That is a conclusion.

"The Court: Give the language, if you can. A. I will give the language as nearly as possible. I cannot give it word for word, Mr. Cochran.

"Mr. Cochran: All right. A. I said to Goltra, I said, 'Goltra, Thompson tells us that he knows you. He told us that you were on trial in the superior court, awaiting a probationary hearing for a forgery of a check, which was the proceeds of the Oxnard robbery.' I said, 'Besides that, he knows where you live; he can describe to us the corner that you get off to go to your home, the point where the cars turn, and the signal bell stop.' I said, 'If you don't know, never saw him, and he never saw you, how can he tell those things?' He said, 'I don't know.'

"Mr. Cochran: The same objection with respect to that I did a few minutes ago, that it is accusatory in its nature, and was immediately denied by the defendant, and is not admissible, and hearsay.

"Mr. Amstutz: It goes to the question of identity.

"The Court: Motion denied."

Testimony to the same effect elicited from several officers of Riverside and Los Angeles counties is contained in the record and was admitted over the strenuous and persistent objections of appellant. He made repeated motions to strike all of this testimony, which motions were denied by the trial court.

Other testimony of Officer Kelley was as follows:

"Q. In your testimony yesterday something was said about a conversation with the defendant Goltra concerning one Charles Gordon. Is that true? A. That is correct, yes, sir.

"Q. Will you state whether or not you have made any investigation concerning such an individual? A. I did.

"Q. State what investigation you made? A. At the time that Mr. Goltra stated that he had received a gun from Charles Gordon on January 16, and that he had returned it to Mr. Gordon on January 18th, the day before his probationary hearing in the Los Angeles courts, I asked him who Charlie Gordon was, and he told me that he was a brakeman working for the Southern Pacific railroad, working on the San Joaquin division. The day after that, January 28th or 29th, I took the matter up with Mr. Dolan, who is personal record clerk for Mr. T. H. Williams, assistant general manager of the Southern Pacific railroad, and he went over the records and stated—

"Mr. Cochran: I object to what he stated.

"The Court: Yes. A. My investigation disclosed that there was no one working on the Southern Pacific railroad under the name of 'Charles Gordon.'

"Q. No such individual? A. No, sir.

"Q. Had there ever been on the division? A. Not according to the records, no, sir."

Appellant's motion to strike out this testimony was denied at the close of the people's case.

[2] There are certain portions of the foregoing testimony, such as the statements of Goltra that he did not have a gun in his possession at his home, which were afterwards proven false and were admissible in evidence. There are other portions, however, that are inadmissible under any possible hypothesis or theory of the case and are highly prejudicial to appellant.

[3] It is to be observed that appellant flatly denied the foregoing statements that Thompson had identified him as one of the men participating in the robbery, and that the pistol which was found at his house had been given to him by a third person who participated in the robbery and had been used by appellant in committing the offense. The law governing such a situation is clearly stated in 8 California Jurisprudence, at page 101, as follows:

"It is provided in substance in the Code of Civil Procedure that evidence may be given of the act or declaration of another in the presence and within the observation of a defendant and of his conduct in relation thereto. While the contrary has been stated generally in a few cases, it is undoubtedly the California rule that statements of third persons are not admissible in evidence simply because they were made in the presence and hearing of the accused. It is only when there is something in the conduct of the accused in response thereto that it is material to the issue that they are admissible at all, and they are admissible then solely for the purpose of explaining his conduct. In other words, it is only the conduct of the accused that is evidence in such cases.

"If it is proved that the defendant made incriminating statements or admissions, or failed to deny an accusation under circumstances which may be construed as an admission of its truth, or that he failed to act as it might reasonably be expected that an innocent person would act, evidence of the statement is admissible in connection with evidence of his conduct as an admission or declaration made by him. But if the defendant promptly and fully deny the charge, there is no admission on his part to be introduced in evidence."

In People v. Lapara, 181 Cal. 66, 183 P. 545,

547, it was held as follows: "This testimony of the witness Gallagher was objected to, and followed by a motion to strike out upon the ground of its incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality, and upon the further ground that a denial by the defendant of the accusation of guilt rendered the accusation and the conversation which led to it inadmissible for any purpose. It was error to overrule the objection, and likewise error to deny the motion to strike out. 'It is only the guilty conduct or incriminating reply of a defendant in response to an accusation of crime or statements implicating him in its commission that constitute relevant and competent evidence' of that crime. 'Ordinarily, when a defendant, under conditions which fairly afford him an opportunity to reply, stands mute in the face of an accusation of crime, the circumstance of his silence may be taken against him as evidence indicating an admission of guilt. [Citing cases.] But if he promptly and fully deny the charge, the accusatory statements, standing alone, are not in any sense competent evidence of the defendant's guilt (People v. Estrado, 49 Cal. 171; People v. Ah Yute, 54 Cal. 90), and should in such a contingency be excluded from the consideration of the jury. * * * As was said in the case of People v. Teshara, 134 Cal. 542, 66 P. 798, "the court and the district attorney seem to have lost sight of the fact that it is not the accusation but the conduct of the accused that is evidence in such cases, and that the only reason for admitting the accusation is to explain the conduct.'" People v. Ayhens, 16 Cal. App. 618, 117 P. 789. In the Teshara Case, this court declared that the district attorney should not have offered the statement, knowing, as he did, that the accused had not stood silent before the accusation, but had repelled it at the time it was made; and it may not be amiss to reiterate that, for the same reason, the district attorney in the present case should not have offered the accusatory statement complained of."

[4, 5] It appears from the record that the picture which Kelley testified was identified by Thompson as that of appellant was taken from the files in the office of the sheriff of Los Angeles county, which records are commonly known as the "rogues gallery." It is a matter of general knowledge that these pictures are taken of prisoners arrested for the commission of a crime. No witness appearing at the trial identified this picture as being that of appellant. There is also an irresistible inference to be drawn from the testimony that Thompson had identified this picture as that of one who participated in the robbery with him, he having admitted in his conversation with Ives at the county jail of Riverside county that he was one of those who committed the robbery. The question of the admission in evidence of a photograph in the case of People v. Thorp, 104 Cal. App. 379, 285 P. 916, is somewhat similar to the one in the instant case. The judgment in the Thorp case was reversed because of the admission in evidence of a photograph taken from the files of a criminal identification bureau, without it having been identified as that of the defendant by any witness appearing at the trial. The officers producing the picture testified that it had been identified as the picture of Thorp by third persons who were not produced as witnesses.

[6] The testimony of Officer Kelley concerning the proceedings taken before department 23 of the superior court of Los Angeles county discloses that a criminal proceeding was pending against Goltra in that court in which no final judgment had been entered. It went further and showed that appellant was accused in that action of "a forgery of a check which was the proceeds of the Oxnard robbery." This case had not been brought to a conclusion, and, as no judgment had been pronounced, appellant had not been convicted of this felony. This evidence has no place in the record. Its effect on the jury cannot have been otherwise than highly prejudicial.

[7] Kelley's testimony concerning his investigation which disclosed that the records of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company failed to show that Charles Gordon ever worked for such company on the Bakersfield division was hearsay and should not have been admitted. The officers of the railway company were available as witnesses, and their records were open for inspection. Kelley should not have been allowed to testify as to what he was told by these officers either in the form of a direct statement or that his investigation, based upon the contents of the records and the conversations, showed that Gordon had not been employed on the Bakersfield division of the railroad.

[8] It remains for us to determine whether the conviction of appellant can be affirmed under the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. It is true that in a multitude of cases where the evidence of the guilt of the defendant is clear and convincing the courts have sustained convictions where errors occurred in the record. With this constitutional provision in mind, we have examined the entire record and all the evidence to determine whether or not the errors occurring in the trial court resulted in a miscarriage of justice, and have reached a conclusion in accordance with the views expressed in the case of People v. Walker, 69 Cal. App. 475, 231 P. 572, 582, as follows: "We must say under this record that 'we are unable to determine whether appellant would or would not have been convicted but for the errors of the court. * * * Under such circumstances the provisions of section 4½ may not be availed of * * * to support the judgment of conviction.' People v. Irby, 67 Cal. App. 520, 227 P. 920."

It will not be necessary to consider any other errors occurring at the trial of which appellant complains. Many of them are similar to those which we have set forth. The one instruction given to the jury of which appellant complains does not contain a correct statement of the law. However, other instructions given cure the defect and do not render the instruction prejudicially erroneous. It should not be given upon another trial of the case.

The judgment and order denying appellant's motion for a new trial are reversed, and a new trial is ordered.

We concur: BARNARD, P. J.; GRIFFIN, Justice pro tem.

---

116 Cal.App. 59
Ex parte QUITMAN.
Cr. 219.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Aug. 6, 1931.

1. Habeas corpus ☞ 109.

Where petition for habeas corpus was not sworn to and no evidence produced at hearing, commitment by police judge, regular upon its face, held to justify sheriff in detaining prisoner.

2. Habeas corpus ☞ 46.

That prior application for habeas corpus in superior court was denied when defendant was not in custody held not ground for not applying there, after being taken into custody, instead of applying to District Court of Appeal (Supreme and District Courts of Appeal Rule No. 26, § 1).

Application by Charles C. Quitman, on behalf of Luther Branham, for writ of habeas corpus directed to the Sheriff of San Diego County.

Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded to custody of sheriff.

Charles C. Quitman, of San Diego, in pro per.

Thomas Whelan, Dist. Atty., and B. L. Comparet, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, and O. C. Ludwig, City Atty., of Chula Vista, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This application was made in behalf of Luther Branham. The petition alleges that he is unlawfully imprisoned and detained by the sheriff of San Diego county. It is further alleged that he was found guilty of violating section 367d of the Penal Code by the police judge of the city of Chula Vista and by him sentenced to pay a fine of $50, or, in lieu thereof, to be confined twenty days in the county jail of San Diego county. The petition then alleges a claimed irregularity in connection with the arrest of the defendant, a lack of jurisdiction in that court to try the case, and that the defendant was deprived of the full opportunity to present his defense. It is also alleged that a prior application to the superior court of San Diego county for a writ of habeas corpus was denied after a hearing, it being stated that at the time of that application the defendant was not in custody.

The return of the sheriff shows a commitment issued by the judge of the police court of the city of Chula Vista, regular upon its face, setting forth that the defendant, having waived a jury trial, was tried by the court; that he was found guilty, and that judgment was pronounced at the time fixed for sentence.

[1] The petition is not sworn to, and no evidence of any kind was produced at the hearing. The commitment justifies the officer in detaining the defendant, in the absence of any showing of facts rendering the same illegal.

[2] A further consideration is that no reason appears why this application should not have been made to the superior court (rule 26, sec. 1). Even if it be assumed, as alleged in the petition, that a prior application in the superior court was denied at a time when the defendant was not in custody, no reason appears why such a writ was not there applied for after he was taken into custody. For these reasons the application must be denied.

The writ is discharged, and the defendant is remanded to the custody of the sheriff of San Diego county.

115 Cal.App. 612

BANK OF ITALY NAT. TRUST & SAV.
ASS'N v. SPICER.

Civ. 302.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

July 23, 1931.

1. Money received ⇨18(3).

In action to recover money paid for undelivered corporate stock, verdict that transaction was separate deal with defendant who organized corporation held supported.

2. Money received ⇨18(3).

In action to recover money paid for undelivered corporate stock, verdict that buyer was entirely without understanding justifying recovery without rescission held supported (Civ. Code, §§ 38, 39).

3. Election of remedies ⇨7(3).

That buyer of undelivered corporate stock filed claim in bankruptcy proceedings of investment company did not constitute election precluding suit against organizer of corporation to recover money paid, where buyer was entirely without understanding (Civ. Code, § 38).

This was so, as against the organizer's contention that the buyer's transactions were with the investment company which acted as syndicate manager, and that the filing of the claim against the company precluded suit against the organizer.

4. Pleading ⇨248(4).

Amended complaint that defendant agreed to purchase for buyer stock in accordance with original underwriting agreement held not to change cause of action where original complaint alleged that defendant agreed to purchase corporate stock for plaintiff.

5. Pleading ⇨248(4).

Amended complaint alleging buyer's entire lack of understanding held not to change cause of action, where original complaint alleged that buyer was incompetent to transact any business whatsoever.

6. Money received ⇨17(3).

In action to recover money paid for undelivered corporate stock, amended complaint held sufficient to raise issue of mental incapacity of buyer.

The amended complaint contained the allegations that the buyer was a man of advanced years, feeble in mind and body, and, by reason of loss of memory, failing mental powers, and senile dementia, was wholly incompetent to transact any business whatsoever, and was incapable of caring for his property or understanding the nature and effect of his acts, and was entirely without understanding.

7. Pleading ⇨369(1).

Where three causes of action all had reference to same transaction and sought recovery of identical sum, motion to require plaintiff to elect between counts held properly denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, as guardian of Thomas J. McLemore, sometimes known as T. J. McLemore, against R. D. Spicer. After the death of Thomas J. McLemore, the action was continued by the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, as executor of the last will and testament of the deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Wright & McKee and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Ray M. Harris, of San Diego, for respondent.

BARNARD, P. J.

This is an action to recover money paid for certain stock in a corporation, which stock was never delivered. The general situation leading up to the controversy is as follows: Thomas J. McLemore, a business man of large experience and considerable success, came to California for his health in 1919, being then about 68 years old, and settled at Escondido about 35 miles from San Diego. Early in the spring of 1924, he met R. D. Spicer who was vice president of and manager of the San Diego office of Stephens & Co., a firm dealing in investment securities. He developed a very considerable confidence in Mr. Spicer, and made a number of investments through him. In June, 1925, Spicer organized the San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Company, of which he became president. On June 24, 1925, Spicer, McLemore, and a number of others, signed an agreement providing that a corporation should be organized to take over an existing ice business, that Stephens & Co. should receive a certain proportion of the stock for their services in organizing the corporation and acting as "syndicate manager," and that the signers should pay $105 for each unit of five shares of class A and one share of class B stock, the said stock to be paid for within fifteen days after August 14, 1925, upon demand therefor by Stephens & Co. McLemore signed for 500 shares of class A stock and 100 shares of class B stock, agreeing to pay therefor $10,500, and on November 10, 1925, gave his check to Spicer for that amount. Spicer cashed this check and gave to McLemore a receipt acknowledging full payment for the stock. Of the parties signing this subscription agreement, ten received their stock in September, 1925, one in October, 1925, three in January, 1926, one in April, 1926, and one in March, 1927, some months after Stephens & Co. had gone into bankruptcy. McLemore and one other subscriber never received any stock. McLemore was adjudged incompetent in October, 1928, and this action was filed on November 9, 1928, by him through the Bank of Italy National Trust & Savings Association, as his guardian, and after his death continued by his executor.

The original complaint set up three causes of action, and, at the conclusion of the taking of evidence, an amended complaint was filed, with the permission of the court, which also set up three causes of action. In the amended complaint, in the first cause of action, it is alleged that on November 10, 1925, McLemore gave to Spicer his check for $10,500 under Spicer's agreement to obtain for McLemore, in accordance with a prior arrangement known as the "original underwriting agreement," 500 shares of class A stock in the San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Company; that Spicer cashed this check and never delivered or caused to be delivered the stock, nor returned the money; that up to the beginning of the year 1927, Spicer repeatedly assured McLemore that the stock had been obtained for him and would presently be issued to him; that about January, 1926, Spicer wrote McLemore that the stock would be issued and the dividends taken care of; that McLemore believed and relied upon these representations until January, 1927, when he first learned that Spicer had not obtained the stock for him and that it had not been issued in his name, and when for the first time Spicer refused to deliver the stock or return the money; that during all that period the San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Company was issuing its stock and would have issued the 500 shares to McLemore had Spicer paid to the company the $10,500 placed in his hands by McLemore; and that, in fact, Spicer converted the money to his own use. It is further alleged that during that time McLemore was a man of advanced years, feeble in mind and body, and, by reason of loss of memory, failing mental powers, and senile dementia, was, from about the first day of June, 1925, continually until the time of his death, wholly incompetent to transact any business whatsoever and incapable of caring for his property or understanding the nature or effect of his acts, and was entirely without understanding during that period, in the sense that he was incapable of understanding the nature, purpose, or effect of the transactions mentioned, and that during all of that time Spicer knew of such physical and mental condition of McLemore. The prayer is for $10,500 with interest at 7 per cent. from November 10, 1925, less $656.25 dividends on said stock, which it is alleged the defendant caused to be paid to McLemore, notwithstanding the stock had not been issued in his name. The second cause of action repeats most of the matters alleged in the first cause of action, and also alleges that when the $10,500 was paid and when Spicer promised to obtain the stock for McLemore in consideration of such payment, Spicer made such promise with no intention of performing it, but with the intention of cheating and defrauding McLemore, and that McLemore believed the promise and relied thereon to his damage in the same amount. In the third cause of action, the matters alleged in the first cause of action are repeated, and, in addition, it is alleged that Spicer pursued a course of friendly conduct for the purpose of gaining McLemore's confidence; that while McLemore was of an advanced age and Spicer was a man of about 40 years of age, Spicer made a practice of visiting McLemore in Escondido and holding long conversations with him; that on several occasions he invited McLemore to his home, took him out to lunch when he was in San Diego, gave him a visitor's card at a social club in San Diego, gave him expensive books, pretended especially to be his friend and to enjoy his society and company, and pretended a great interest in assisting him in the management of his business; and that such acts of intimacy commenced in 1924 and continued until 1927, when the actual nature of Spicer's acts was discovered. It is further alleged that these attentions on the part of Spicer were carried on in bad faith and with the fraudulent purpose of causing McLemore to intrust him with his business affairs and that, in fact, they had that effect. It is further alleged that on and prior to November 10, 1925, Spicer, with the fraudulent intent to deceive McLemore, represented to him that he would obtain for him on the advanced sale thereof and at a particularly attractive price, the said 500 shares of class A stock; that McLemore was induced thereby to pay Spicer the said $10,500 on said promise to obtain such stock for him; that on or about September 28, 1928, Spicer falsely represented to McLemore that he actually had the stock in his possession, and that on October 30, 1925, he falsely represented to McLemore that he was carrying the stock for McLemore; that these statements were made for the purpose of deceiving and did deceive McLemore; that in reliance on such statements McLemore paid the said Spicer the $10,500 to obtain the delivery of said stock; and that such statements were false, were known to have been false when made, and were willfully made in pursuance of a desire to deceive McLemore. It is further alleged that Spicer did not pay the sum of $10,500 to the San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Company for said stock, and that the various false representations were made both to deceive McLemore and to prevent his recovering from Spicer, either the stock or the money.

In his answer, Spicer admits the receipt of the money, but denies that he agreed to obtain the stock for McLemore. He sets up the subscription agreement of June, 1925, and alleges that McLemore agreed to pay to Stephens & Co. $10,500 within fifteen days after August 14, 1925; that he failed to pay the same within that time; that at his request that sum was advanced by Stephens & Co. and paid to the ice company; that at McLemore's request and to protect Stephens & Co. for such advance, Spicer executed his own note to Stephens & Co.; that thereafter, in pursuance to that arrangement, McLemore paid Spicer the $10,500 and Spicer's note to Stephens & Co. was paid in full. It is further alleged that 100 shares of class B stock were issued and delivered to McLemore, and that the 500 shares of class A stock were fully paid for to the ice company, issued by it, and held by Stephens & Co. as collateral to secure the advance by it of the purchase price of the same, all with McLemore's knowledge and consent. It is alleged that he never promised McLemore to sell the stock to him, to buy it for him, to procure it for him, or to cause it to be delivered to him; that he informed Stephens & Co. and the ice company of the interest of McLemore in the stock, and that the entire transaction was with Stephens & Co. and not with him; and that McLemore received 100 shares of class B stock and also certain interest, and three stock dividends paid by the ice company. It is further alleged that on December 29, 1926, Stephens & Co. was adjudicated a bankrupt, and that thereafter McLemore filed a claim in the bankruptcy proceeding to the effect that the money in question had been paid to Stephens & Co.; that his claim was allowed by the referee in bankruptcy; and that McLemore thereby elected to pursue his remedy against the bankrupt corporation and had no right thereafter to pursue it against Spicer individually. The answer also denied that McLemore was entirely without understanding, and denies all of the allegations as to fraudulent conduct.

The action was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. From the ensuing judgment, this appeal is taken. A large number of points are raised, and the case has been most ably presented by counsel on both sides. To comprehensively treat all of the points raised would make an opinion of undue length, but most of the contentions of appellant may be boiled down to two propositions, which are as follows: (1) That the plaintiff has sued the wrong party, that the appellant was merely a go-between, and that the entire transaction was with Stephens & Co. and not with the appellant personally. (2) That the evidence is not sufficient to show that McLemore was entirely without understanding as contemplated by section 38 of the Civil Code, but that, at the most, he was a person of unsound mind, and, under section 39 of the Civil Code, a recovery could not be had without a rescission and the restoration of what had been received. As appellant says in his brief: "Had the evidence shown the contract with R. D. Spicer as alleged in the pleadings, little difficulty would be encountered if the court was satisfied that McLemore was a person entirely without understanding." These two questions are largely decisive of this appeal, and, both being questions of fact, it will be necessary to further examine the evidence, as to whether it sustains the verdict of the jury.

[1] First taking up the question as to whether the transaction was entirely with Stephens & Co. It is fully apparent from the record that by June, 1925, Spicer had so won the confidence of McLemore that he took his advice on investments, exclusively. Spicer was then promoting the San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Company, of which he became the president. The underwriting agreement of June 24, 1925, did not purport to be an agreement with Stephens & Co., nor did that company sign it. It merely set forth that the parties thereto subscribed for stock in the ice company on terms stated, and that Stephens & Co. should act as syndicate manager and should receive certain stock in payment for their service. It also provided that the subscribers should pay for their stock in cash within fifteen days after August 14, 1925, "upon demand therefor by Stephens & Company." It appears that most of the subscribers received their stock in September, 1925. It appears that no stock was ever issued in the name of McLemore, but that 1,000 shares of class A stock were issued to Stephens & Co. on September 18, 1925, and 2,834 shares were issued to Spicer, although he had subscribed for but 1,500 shares. McLemore did not pay for his stock on August 29, 1925, as provided for in the subscription agreement. Spicer claims that Stephens & Co. advanced the money to pay for McLemore's stock, with others; that the stock was issued and held by Stephens & Co. as security, and that he himself gave to Stephens & Co. his note dated September 26, 1925, for $94,500, covering 4,500 shares of the stock, and that this note was later paid. However, it appears that a large portion of this stock, supposed to have been held by Stephens & Co. as security, was delivered to the various subscribers in September. While Spicer's note to Stephens & Co. was paid in full, there is no record of any payment of $10,500 on this note at any time. The first thing that appears in evidence, after the subscription agreement was signed, is Spicer's letter to McLemore dated September 28, 1925, in which he says he is sending him 100 shares of class B stock, and says: "I'm not using this stock on your note secured by class A stock so I think you better put it in your safety-deposit box." Not only would it appear that this class B stock could not have been issued unless the corresponding class A stock was also issued, in accordance with the subscription agreement, but it also would appear that the stock had been issued and was then being held by Spicer as security on a note given by McLemore. On October 29, 1925, McLemore wrote Spicer that he was sending him a check for $2,892.94 "in payment of my note and interest to date." He also mentioned collateral security on the note, and says Spicer can either send it to him or hand it to him the next time they meet. Spicer replied on October 30, 1925, acknowledging receipt of the money, returning the canceled note, and says:

"This transaction completed your payment on our note arrangement but it has nothing to do with our exchange of collateral. I am simply carrying for you 500 shares of Class A Ice stock with some of your San Diego Oil Products, that I had on a note with you, as collateral.

"As I told you the other day I am carrying the ice stock very comfortably and there is no rush about your taking it up at the end of six months. Probably sometime during the next three or four months you will want to sell some of the ice stock and at that time I will hand back your San Diego Oil Products and close up the transaction."

McLemore wrote Spicer on October 31, 1925, saying, in part, as follows: "I also note that you are carrying 500 Class 'A' Stock in San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Co. for me which I may conclude to sell in the next three or four months. In the meantime you are holding San Diego Oil Products Stock will be returned to me in case I do not sell the Ice Co. Stock."

On January 2, 1926, Spicer wrote McLemore as follows:

"I carried your stock, totaling $10,500, from September 1st to November 10th at 6% amounting to $122.50. You received from the company 7% interest on $12,500, or 500 shares of stock, being a total of $291.67. This $291.67 less the $122.50 makes a total due you of $169.17.

"In the future the stock will be issued and will be taken care of through dividends."

In the meantime, on November 10, 1925, McLemore gave Spicer a check for $10,500 payable to him personally. This was indorsed and cashed by Spicer, and the following receipt given: "Nov. 10, 1925. Received from T. J. McLemore 10500 payment dollars in full for 500 shares Class A stock San Diego Ice & Cold Storage original underwriting. $10,500 (Signed) R. D. Spicer."

It appears that no stock was ever issued to Stephens & Co., which is identified as the McLemore stock. After Stephens & Co. had gone into bankruptcy, McLemore's daughter told Spicer that they had nothing to show for the stock, and Spicer had one of the clerks in the office give her the following letter:

"Mr. T. J. McLemore, Escondido, California.

"Dear Sir: We have today received for your account 500 shares of San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Company A common. (Signed) Stephens & Company by Clark, assistant secretary. Dated August 12, 1926."

That was handed to Miss McLemore by Spicer in February, 1927, Spicer saying: "I have had Mr. Clark write this memorandum for you in the form of a letter and dated it back to the time that the deal took place." If this was correct, it shows that Stephens & Co. did not receive the stock until nine months after McLemore had paid for it. However, the record shows that the only entry in the books of Stephens & Co. was under date of August 12, 1926, and shows that on the same day 500 shares of this class A stock was received from McLemore "as customer's security" and delivered to Spicer as customer's security. It is also significant that the final records of Stephens & Co., when they went into bankruptcy, show an entry on their books to the effect that there were "short" to Spicer 1,000 shares of this class A stock. While counsel argue that these last two items were intended to show that Stephens & Co. were short 500 shares to Spicer and 500 shares short to McLemore, the evidence does not bear out that conclusion. Spicer claimed to have carried the stock for McLemore until it was paid for. He personally collected interest during that period. He received the money personally, and gave a personal receipt for it. He claimed to be holding the stock as security for a note given by McLemore. Nothing whatever appears in the books of Stephens & Co. until nine months after the stock was paid for, and then it appears to have been delivered the same day to Spicer, and the final books show the company short to Spicer. We think that all of the evidence, with the reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, indicate a separate deal with Spicer, and that it cannot be held, as a matter of law, that the entire transaction was with Stephens & Co., and that Spicer acted only as a go-between in handing the McLemore money to Stephens & Co.

[2] The next question is whether the evidence is sufficient to show that McLemore was entirely without understanding. The record contains a great deal of evidence that McLemore had been failing physically and mentally for a number of years prior to this transaction, and unquestionably it appears that McLemore was, at least, a man of unsound mind. Considerable of this evidence is relied upon as showing that he was completely without understanding. His daughter, who tried to assist him in his business, testified to the things done by Spicer while gaining her father's confidence, and the various circumstances showing his growing mental weakness, and then testified that her father was insane on November 10, 1925, for several months prior thereto, and from that time continuously until his death. In giving her reasons for this opinion, she testified that he had changed entirely in regard to his consideration for and treatment of the family; that he looked blank and dull; that he had difficulty in carrying on a connected conversation; that he would say yes to anything anybody wanted him to do; that he could not remember stories while they were being read to him; that during 1925 he would laugh and cry without reason; that when he returned from a trip to Europe, where they took him with the hope of benefit, he could not tell anything about the trip; that she tried to find out about his business, but he was unable to explain things to her; that he would lose control of himself in church; that she could not trust him to go down town alone or to a bank alone, because he would drop important papers; that he could not balance himself and had to be helped in walking; that he went to Spicer's office whenever he went to San Diego; and that, after trying many other things, they called in a specialist in mental diseases in the fall of 1925. McLemore's wife testified to the same effect. Dr. Larzalere testified that he took care of McLemore from 1919 to 1925; that in 1923 and 1924 he was beginning to have senile dementia; that he was then more or less confused and his memory began to fail, and that all of these symptoms increased as time went along; that his condition was more pronounced before he went to Europe in 1924, and that after he returned his condition was worse; that he was unable to hold his urine; that the trouble was not with his bladder but was with the brain control; that in December, 1925, he advised the family to take him to a specialist in mental diseases; and that, in his opinion, McLemore was insane in the fall of 1925. As reasons for this opinion, he gave the following: That he was not able to concentrate or remember; that he could not control his bladder, the trouble being caused by degeneration of the brain; that his general appearance, gait, and facial expression indicated insanity; that he was unable to put on his clothes and couldn't think how to do it; that all of this grew worse in the fall of 1925, caused by a degeneration of the brain; and that he had senile dementia. McLemore's banker testified that his condition in 1924 was most lamentable as compared with his condition in 1919; that after he returned from Europe in the fall of 1924 his condition was much worse; that he saw McLemore frequently; that he kept getting worse during the year following his return from Europe; and that during the summer and fall of 1925 he was insane. As reasons for this opinion, he stated that he had a far-away look in his face; that he was not able to carry on an intelligent conversation; that when he started a sentence he could not complete it; that he could not express himself and would go to sleep while talking or while any one was talking to him; that while in earlier years he had frequently discussed business matters with McLemore, in later years he did not do so because it was distressing to discuss such matters with him; that in the spring of 1924, he advised McLemore not to buy stock in Stephens & Co., and that McLemore replied, "Yes, but they guarantee me 7 per cent"; that he gave him many reasons why he should not buy the stock, but McLemore would only keep repeating the same statement; that he finally gave him up in despair because he was unable to make McLemore understand what he had been telling him (we may insert here that McLemore went ahead and invested $50,000 or $60,000 in stock in Stephens & Co.); and that on another occasion, in 1924, he talked with McLemore about an investment in the Occidental Security Company, a subsidiary company of Stephens & Co., and, in spite of what he told him, on that same day McLemore invested $42,000 in that stock. In addition, he stated he believed McLemore was insane because of his looks, general demeanor, deportment, and method of trying to converse; his inability to carry on an intelligent conversation; his inability to concentrate his mind on any thoughts; the fact that he would frequently start a conversation and be unable to complete it; that he would cry when there was nothing to cry about; and that he would pass his urine in public places and that this did not seem to embarrass him, although he had previously been a most fastidious man.

Dr. Ridley testified that he started to treat McLemore in December, 1926; that he was unable to carry on a conversation, had lost control of his bladder, and was unable to balance himself; and that he was insane from the time he first saw him until his death. As reasons for this opinion, he gave facts similar to those already narrated. H. F. Bloom testified that he had known McLemore since 1918, and that he had been a close friend; that he was insane on November 10, 1925, and from that time until his death; that his face and eyes were expressionless, and that he couldn't concentrate his thoughts or carry on a connected conversation; that he could not balance himself; that after he came back from Europe he was a stricken man; that in the fall of 1925 he appeared to have no opinion; that he would laugh and cry without reason; and that he could not carry on an intelligent conversation during the summer and fall of 1925. H. R. Greaves testified that he had known McLemore for more than fifty years and frequently saw him after 1922; that McLemore was insane from November 10, 1925, and continuously until his death; that the expression of his face was indicative of that condition; also his inability to carry on a connected conversation; that he would laugh and cry without reason; that he apparently had no interest in what was taking place around him; and that during all of the year 1925 he could not recall that he carried on an intelligent conversation on any subject. Dr. Little, a specialist in mental diseases, testified that he examined McLemore on December 1, 1925, and that he was insane at that time. He based his opinion upon the following physical neurological and mental findings from his examination: That owing to a physical condition his brain was not able to function normally; that there was a definite degeneration of the brain cells and of the nutritional carrying system to the brain. He was asked a hypothetical question embodying the evidence up to that time concerning the mental and physical condition of McLemore, and, in reply to said hypothetical question, gave his opinion that a man in that condition was insane. On cross-examination, he testified that McLemore was suffering from dementia of a type that is progressive and not curable; that the mental condition of McLemore had been progressing for many years prior to 1925, but that the change in the brain cells, as the result of the condition, had probably occurred a year or a year and a half before that time; that this dementia had been produced by degeneration in the brain; and that there had been a softening and breaking down of the actual cells in the brain. Two other doctors testified that McLemore was insane in 1926 when they examined him, giving their reasons for the opinion.

Appellant, while admitting that McLemore "had deteriorated considerably mentally," earnestly insists that he was conclusively shown to be not entirely without understanding by the fact that he served as a director of the San Diego Ice & Cold Storage Company and regularly attended directors' meetings, and more especially by certain letters written by McLemore on October 29, 1925, October 31, 1925, November 12, 1925, and May 1, 1926. In reference to the directors' meetings, there was evidence that McLemore appeared childishly flattered by being made a director; that when he attended meetings members of his family brought him to San Diego and Spicer took him by the arm and assisted him to the meetings; and that he took no part in the meetings while there. In reference to the letters, while they do not affirmatively show that he was not capable of understanding the transaction involved, they do show that he did not understand it. There is no evidence that he was not assisted in writing the letters, although he seems to have required assistance in almost everything. Dr. Little, the specialist in mental diseases, was shown these letters and asked whether, taking into consideration his own examination of McLemore on December 1, 1925, and assuming that the facts assumed in the hypothetical question previously asked him existed concerning Thomas J. McLemore, and also assuming that McLemore wrote these letters, whether or not these letters would cause him to change his answers as previously given in the case. To this he answered, "There would be nothing in the information furnished either by the letters or otherwise in the question that would give me any grounds to make a change in the opinion that is expressed at the original inquiry." In connection with the mental condition of McLemore, it is somewhat significant that, although Spicer continued to see him frequently between November 10, 1925, and January, 1927, McLemore never asked him for the stock. While there is some evidence tending to show McLemore was a person of unsound mind but not entirely without understanding, there is other evidence tending to show that he was entirely without the capacity to understand business transactions. After carefully reviewing all of the testimony, we are of the opinion that there is sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of the jury upon that question of fact. Jacks v. Estee, 139 Cal. 507, 73 P. 247.

[3] Appellant next claims that the plaintiff is estopped from prosecuting this action, the deceased having theretofore elected to pursue another remedy. This is based upon the fact that a claim was filed by McLemore in the bankruptcy proceedings of Stephens & Co., and allowed. This claim as filed, was for $28,733.75, and included 500 shares of this class A stock. Assuming that this would have been an election under ordinary circumstances, if McLemore was a person without understanding and without sufficient knowledge and understanding of the facts involved to make an election, none was in fact made, and the circumstances would not constitute an estoppel. A question of fact was here presented, which was submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions by the court. In this connection, McLemore's daughter testified that, in a conversation in Spicer's office after the bankruptcy proceedings were begun, Spicer said he was fixing up the claims for several of the creditors, and offered to prepare her father's claim if he wanted him to; that her father said nothing but yes; that he did not seem to be interested in the matter; and that he picked up a newspaper and looked at it while Spicer was talking. She further testified that the next time they came to the office, her father signed the claim, and Spicer said that a certain attorney was representing some of the creditors, and asked her father if he would like to have him file the claim for him, to which the father replied, "It will be all right." It appears that the claim was left there and Spicer attended to it; that her father did not attend any of the creditor's meetings; and that he took no further interest in the matter. In view of the other evidence as to the condition of McLemore at the time, it could well be held that Spicer was estopped from claiming any benefit from the filing of this claim.

[4, 5] A number of other points are raised which we feel it is unnecessary to discuss at any great length. It is urged that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to file an amended complaint, as this entirely changed the cause of action. It is first claimed that an allegation in the first count of the original complaint, to the effect that the defendant agreed to purchase for and deliver to the plaintiff 500 shares of class A stock in this corporation, was so amended as to allege that the defendant agreed, in accordance with the terms of the original underwriting agreement, to obtain for McLemore 500 shares of class A stock, and that this constituted such a change in the cause of action as could not be justified as an amendment to conform with the proof. This goes to the first proposition discussed in this opinion, and is based upon appellant's theory that the entire transaction was with Stephens & Co. and that the money was paid to him only to reimburse him for what he had already paid out for the benefit of the respondent. As we have pointed out, we think the evidence shows a transaction with Spicer individually. The change was in the form of the allegation only, and not in the essential cause of action. It is also urged that the cause of action was entirely changed, in that the first cause of action alleged that McLemore was incompetent, but not that he was wholly without understanding, while the amendment alleged that he was entirely without understanding. In the original complaint, it was alleged that McLemore, during all of the times alleged, was incompetent to transact any business whatsoever. While this is more fully alleged in the amended complaint, and an entire lack of understanding is there alleged in express terms, no change in the cause of action appears. All three counts of both the original and the amended complaints apply to the same transaction, and apply for the same relief. In our opinion, no error is shown in permitting the amended complaint to be filed. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 P. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53; Lemon v. First National Bank of Pasadena, 191 Cal. 388, 216 P. 620; Sweet v. Hamlothoris, 84 Cal. App. 775, 258 P. 652.

[6] In a number of points it is contended that the complaint is not sufficient to raise the issue of mental incapacity upon the part of McLemore. Such mental incapacity is alleged in each cause of action in both the original and the amended complaints. The complaints are sufficient to show a cause of action for money had and received, based upon an agreement which is alleged to be void due to a lack of understanding on the part of one of the parties. The attacks made upon the complaint are in fact based upon the appellant's idea of what should have been the respondent's theory. In our opinion, both the pleadings and the evidence disclose a case where the defendant had received money, which in good conscience he ought not to be allowed to retain.

[7] It is next urged that the court erred in denying appellant's motion to require the plaintiff to elect between the three counts of the complaint. All three causes of action are for money had and received, and all have reference to the same transaction and seek recovery of the same identical sum. For this reason, the motion was properly denied. Tanforan v. Tanforan, 173 Cal. 270, 159 P. 709; Rand v. Columbian Realty Co., 13 Cal. App. 444, 110 P. 322; Goldwater v. Altman (Cal. App.) 285 P. 734.

Objection is made to the instructions given by the trial court on the ground that they are all argumentative, and many objections are raised to certain portions of individual instructions. Most of these objections are based upon the appellant's theory that it was conclusively established that the entire transaction was with Stephens & Co., and that McLemore was not a person entirely without understanding. The instructions are lengthy, and it would serve no useful purpose to set them out in full, which in itself would answer the objections made to portions thereof. We have carefully examined the instructions and, in our opinion, they exhaustively cover every point raised and submitted to the jury, and we find no error therein justifying a reversal.

The record and briefs in this case are quite voluminous, and it is impracticable in this opinion to thoroughly analyze and discuss each point raised. If we are correct in our view of the main propositions, first herein discussed, the action was fairly tried and correctly submitted to the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: MARKS, J.; JENNINGS, J.

---

---

WEBBER et al. v. JOHNSTON.*

Civ. No. 4322.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 23, 1931.

1. Appeal and error ☞1171(6).

Reversal will not be ordered where appellant is not entitled to more than nominal damages.

2. Damages ☞159(6).

In action for damages for breach of contract to purchase crushed rock, defendant's answer merely "denying each and every, all and singular," allegations contained in complaint, held insufficient to raise issue of damages.

The plaintiff alleged that, had the defendant received and purchased the additional rock at contract price from plaintiff, plaintiff would have derived a profit therefrom in an amount not less than $11,843.10, and the answer that defendant denied "each any every, all and singular," allegations contained in complaint, did not constitute denial that plaintiff would not have made a profit in sum alleged if the defendant had not violated the terms of his contract.

3. Appeal and error ☞192(1).

Questions of insufficiency of pleadings cannot be raised for first time on appeal.

4. Pleading ☞350(1).

Motion for judgment on pleadings held sufficient to call court's attention to insufficiency of defendant's answer to raise issue of damages.

5. Appeal and error ☞1178(8).

Court remanded case to permit defendant to amend answer, although plaintiff would have been entitled to judgment on pleadings if trial court had construed contract as interpreted on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

On petition for rehearing.

Petition denied.

For original opinion, see 300 P. 983.

H. A. Postlethwaite and Samuel W. Gardiner, both of San Francisco, and Daniel V. Marceau, of Stockton, for appellants.

Nutter & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In the opinion, 300 P. 983, heretofore filed in this cause we stated that only one question really was presented for consideration, to wit, the quantity of crushed rock called for by the agreement entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant. In the opinion we stated, among other things, that the plaintiff was entitled to at least nominal damages. It should have read, "damages in a considerable sum," if the contract had been construed as we were constrained to hold.

[1, 2] It is true, as contended by respondent, that reversals will not be ordered where the appellant is not entitled to more than nominal damages. What we stated was based upon the allegations of the complaint and the admissions in the answer. Upon petition for rehearing, the question of damages is again presented. In our opinion, we stated that the judgment could only be upheld on the theory that the respondent was not bound to take any particular quantity of crushed rock, and that the pleadings really did not present any other question, and that, if the contract was binding upon the defendant, the pleadings practically admitted damages in a considerable sum. This is shown by paragraph 9 of the first cause of action found in plaintiff's second amended complaint and the defendant's answer thereto. We quote both paragraphs in full, showing that, if the contract was a binding obligation, there is no sufficient denial, or, rather, no denial that the plaintiff was damaged in a considerable sum. Paragraph 9 of plaintiff's second amended complaint reads as follows: "That it would not have cost plaintiff to produce and deliver said remaining 14409.1 cubic yards of said crushed rock, according to his said contract and agreement with defendants, more than the sum of Ten Thousand Five Hundred ($10,500.00) dollars over and above the expenditures heretofore necessarily made in acquiring, establishing and erecting in place said rock crushing plant and in acquiring the right to quarry said rock; that by the terms of said contract defendants promised and agreed to pay for said rock the sum of Twenty-two Thousand Three Hundred thirty-four and 10/100 ($22,334.10) dollars and to pay the whole of said sum on or before the 20th day of June, 1929, being one month next succeeding the date of completion of said work and improvements; that had defendants received and purchased said additional 14409.1 cubic yards of rock at said contract price from plaintiff, plaintiff would have derived a profit therefrom in an amount not less than $11,843.10."

---

☞For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

The respondent's answer to the above allegation found in the complaint is in these words: "Answering the allegations of paragraph 9 of the first cause of action, defendants deny each and every, all and singular, the allegations therein contained." It will thus be seen that there is no denial that the plaintiff was damaged in any sum less than the particular item mentioned of $11,843.10, nor is there any denial that he would not have made a profit in such sum if the respondent had not violated the terms of his contract. That such an answer does not raise an issue on the question of damages is amply sustained. In 21 California Jurisprudence, 154, the insufficiency of such a denial to raise an issue as to damages is thus stated: "A denial which is in the form of a negative pregnant, that is, a negative implying an affirmative, is insufficient. A denial that plaintiff suffered damage, or a denial of indebtedness, in the precise sum alleged, involves a negative pregnant and admits the damage or indebtedness, as the case may be, in any lesser amount. This is likewise true of a denial of the alleged value of property. An answer which admits the due execution and delivery of a note but denies that the alleged copy set forth in the complaint is a correct copy involves a negative pregnant in that it virtually admits the execution and delivery of a note for the amount for which the pleaded note calls. The following are likewise negatives pregnant: A denial of the doing of an act on the day alleged, of the existence and character of the particular consideration alleged, and that plaintiff duly kept and performed all the terms and conditions of a contract." Likewise, in 8 California Jurisprudence, p. 894, we find the following: "A denial that the plaintiff has suffered damages in the exact sum claimed by him, is insufficient to create an issue, and upon such a state of pleadings, no proof of damages is required." Again, as said in Huston v. T. & C. C. T. R. Co., 45 Cal. 550: "No proof of damages was required, as no issue is made upon that point. A denial that the plaintiff has suffered damage in the exact sum claimed by him is insufficient." In Johnson v. Vance, 86 Cal. 110, 24 P. 862, 863, a similar ruling was had, where it is said: "It is contended that the judgment for $1,500 cannot be sustained, because it was for unliquidated damages, and no proofs were taken as to the amount which should be allowed. But there was no issue as to the damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, and no proofs upon the subject were therefore required. It has been so held in this state from the earliest times." Hartman v. Williams, 4 Cal. 254; Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. 29; Dimick v. Campbell, 31 Cal. 239; Huston v. Twin & City Creek Turnpike Road Co., 45 Cal. 550. See, also, the recent case of Beetson v. Hollywood, etc., Club (Cal. App.) 293 P. 821, and the cases cited on page 824, to the effect that such a pleading does not tender an issue on the question of damages.

[3, 4] Respondent urges that questions as to the insufficiency of the pleadings cannot be raised for the first time upon appeal. This we conceive to be the law, but the record before us shows that the appellant brought this question to the attention of the trial court and moved for judgment on the pleadings. We quote from the minutes of the court, of September 20, 1930, in this cause, to wit: "This cause came on regularly for hearing this day, as per continuance, upon plaintiff's motion to correct the record, motion to vacate the judgment, and for judgment, notwithstanding the verdict upon the pleadings, and the motion for new trial." Likewise the record shows the following action of the trial court upon the plaintiff's motions (we quote from the minutes): "The motions filed in said cause, having been heretofore argued by counsel and submitted, the court this day denied said motions, to-wit: motion to correct record, motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the motion for a new trial."

[5] From what we have said it is evident that more than nominal damages are involved in this action, and while, had the trial court accepted the contract as we have found it to be, the plaintiff would have been entitled to judgment upon the pleadings, we think that the damages, if any, to which the plaintiff is entitled, can only be determined in accordance with the terms of the contract as we have construed the same to exist. For that purpose the respondent will be permitted, within such reasonable time as the trial court may allow, to amend his answer, if so advised, to tender said issue to the court.

Other questions have been presented and considered, such as defendant's technical objection that proof was not made that plaintiff was ready and willing to deliver additional crushed rock, but, as the defendant's answer is in the following words, to-wit: "Defendants admit that they refused to accept, receive or pay for any more crushed rock for plaintiff," it does not appear to us that any of such objections are of vital importance, and therefore need not be further mentioned herein.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

---

115 Cal.App. 754

ASSOCIATED INDEMNITY CORPORATION
v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 7473.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Aug. 3, 1931.

Master and servant ☞367.

Newsboy held not "employee," entitled to compensation, of newspaper publisher not having right to control time, place, or manner of his work.

Newsboy was permitted to sell the publisher's newspaper as a "side issue" to his work as newsboy for another newspaper publisher to whose exclusive and complete control he was subject, and for this purpose papers were delivered to him daily by the district manager, which he sold for 5 cents each, retaining 2 cents for profit and paying the district manager 3 cents for each paper sold or not returned. The newspaper publisher did not have the right at any time to control the time, place, or the manner in which the work was to be done, though it reserved the right to refuse to deliver more papers to him for sale if his services were not satisfactory.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions of "Employee," see Words and Phrases.]

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by John Louis Du Grosse, employee, opposed by the San Francisco Chronicle and another, employers, and the Associated Indemnity Corporation and another, insurance carriers. To review an award of compensation by the Industrial Accident Commission, the named insurance company brings certiorari.

Award annulled in part.

Daniel W. Burbank, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

The petitioner is the insurance carrier of the San Francisco Chronicle, a daily newspaper. The state compensation insurance fund is the insurance carrier of the San Francisco Examiner. John L. Du Grosse was employed by the Examiner to sell its newspapers on a designated street corner in the city and county of San Francisco. At the same time he was engaged in selling copies of the San Francisco Chronicle. While so employed he suffered an injury for which he was compensated by an award of the respondent commission which found both newspapers equally liable as his employers. The award against the carrier of the Examiner has become final and, under the terms of the compensation act, it would be entitled to contribution against petitioner on account of the award made against the Chronicle. The matter comes before us upon an original proceeding to review that portion of the award adverse to the insurance carrier of the Chronicle.

The facts are practically undisputed. The parties to this proceeding stipulated that John Du Grosse was an employee of the Examiner assigned to sell its papers at the Forest Hill station in the Twin Peaks tunnel, and that he was subject to the exclusive and complete control of the Examiner as to when, where, and by what manner and method his work was to be done. As a "side issue," Du Grosse was permitted to sell the Chronicle, and for this purpose papers were delivered to him daily by the district manager of that paper which he sold for 5 cents each, retained 2 cents for his profit, and paid to the district manager 3 cents for each Chronicle which was sold or not returned. The Chronicle did not have the right at any time to control the time, the place, or the manner in which the work was to be done, though it reserved the right to refuse to deliver more papers to him for sale if his services were not satisfactory.

Under this state of facts the case is controlled by New York Indemnity Co. et al. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 1 P.(2d) 12, 15, where, under a similar state of facts, the Supreme Court held that the relation between the newsboy and the newspaper publisher was not one of master and servant within the purview of the Workmen's Compensation Act, but was more nearly allied to the relation of a sales agent. In that case the Supreme Court, after referring to the reasoning of Hillen v. Industrial Acc. Commission, 199 Cal. 577, 250 P. 570, say: "We are constrained to hold that the limited amount of control which the publishers of these two newspapers undertook to exercise over the newsboys, who daily purchased from their district manager a specified number of copies of their daily issues for a specific sum, payable in cash or at the close of each day's sales, and who undertook the retailing of the same to such customers among the public at large as they were able to attract or procure at a specified place and price fixed by the publishers, would not as a matter of law be sufficient to constitute such newsboys the employees of the publishers of said newspapers so as to entitle them to receive compensation at the hands of the Industrial Accident Commission in the event of injuries received by them in the course of their activities in making or attempting to make individual sales of the copies of said newspapers." This language is applicable in every detail to the instant case.

The award in so far as it relates to the insurance carrier of the San Francisco Chronicle is annulled.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.;
SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 769

ASSOCIATED INDEMNITY CORPORATION, Petitioner, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al., Respondents.
Civ. 7488.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Aug. 3, 1931.

Application for certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for injuries.

Daniel W. Burbank, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

This is an original proceeding in certiorari to review an award of respondent in favor of Earl Joy and adverse to the respective insurance carriers of the San Francisco Examiner and the San Francisco Chronicle. The petitioner herein, as the insurance carrier of the Chronicle, attacks that portion of the award adverse to it.

In so far as this petition is concerned the facts are the same as those in Associated Indemnity Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Com. (Cal. App.) 2 P.(2d) 51.

For the reasons therein given the portion of the award relating to the petitioner is annulled.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

115 Cal.App. 770
ASSOCIATED INDEMNITY CORPORATION, Petitioner, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al., Respondents.
Civ. 7569.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Aug. 3, 1931.

Application for certiorari to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation for injuries.

Daniel W. Burbank, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, P. J.

This is an original proceeding in certiorari to review an award of respondent in favor of Frank Healy and adverse to the respective insurance carriers of the San Francisco Examiner and the San Francisco Chronicle. The nature of the proceeding and the material facts are the same as in case (Cal. App.) 2 P.(2d) 51.

For the reasons therein given the portion of the award relating to the petitioner, as the insurance carrier of the San Francisco Chronicle, is annulled.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; SPENCE, J.

A. L. JAMESON & CO. v. REDFIELD.***
Civ. 6708.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
July 24, 1931.

Rehearing Granted Aug. 21, 1931.

1. Frauds, statute of § 82.

Contract for sale of corporate stock of value in excess of $200 is within statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 4).

2. Frauds, statute of § 116(3, 4).

Broker, not having received written authority or delivery of stock, held without authority to bind customer in making "short sale" and buying other stock to cover up (Civ. Code, § 2309, and § 1624, subd. 4).

Customer of broker orally directed employee of latter to make sale of certain corporate stock. Employee was not given any stock or any written order for the sale. Number of shares of stock were subsequently purchased by employee of broker without any written authority. Furthermore, there was no finding that transaction in question had been completed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Samuel R. Blake, Judge.

Action by A. L. Jameson & Co. against L. V. Redfield. Judgment for the plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

Culbert L. Olson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Moote & Longeroft, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff, a corporation, filed its complaint against defendant for a sum of money alleged to be due it as a stockbroker, stated in three separate counts upon the first of which the court made its finding in plaintiff's favor. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant has appealed.

The ledger sheets showing the alleged book account upon which the complaint is based were filed as an exhibit by plaintiff. They show a great number of transactions, running into a large sum of money. Excepting for a few minor items only three were questioned by defendant. One of these involved the "short" sale by plaintiff, acting as broker for defendant, of 100 shares of Rio Grande stock for $44.75 per share, and another was the purchase of 100 shares of the same stock, in the same capacity, to cover said "short" sale.

The "short" sale of the stock mentioned is apparently the reason for quite a substantial part of defendant's loss as shown by the account. Defendant admitted an indebtedness of $3,565.80 outside of that, however, and alleged in his cross-complaint and answer that he tendered said sum to plaintiff and demanded a return of certain stock which he had deposited with the latter of the alleged value of $6,925.25, which tender was refused. He further alleged that plaintiff had converted said stock to its own use, and claimed the alleged value thereof as damages. The alleged unauthorized sale of said collateral was the third point of error in the account, as claimed by defendant. Appellant raises other points which we do not find it necessary to pass on here inasmuch as a good deal of the controversy between the parties grew out of the purchase and sale of the stock referred to.

Mr. Fastnow, an employee of plaintiff, testifying in regard to the sale in question, said that he was called off the floor of the exchange about noontime by defendant, who "asked me the price on Rio Grande, and I looked at the board and told him, and he says 'sell 100 shares'"; that defendant did not tell him at the time whether it was to be a margin or cash sale, but that he took out "a sale card and wrote down his order," went onto the floor of the exchange, and executed it. The witness also testified that defendant did not give him any stock to sell or any written sell order, and the order which was introduced in evidence does not show the signature of defendant. Defendant's testimony is in sharp conflict with that of the plaintiff as to whether any such thing happened, but that is a matter in which we are not interested on this appeal. An objection was made to the introduction of such evidence as well as a motion to strike on the ground that no stock was delivered and "no memorandum in writing" was proved, which objection was overruled and the motion denied. Appellant urges that the trial court must have been of the opinion that section 2309 of the Civil Code does not apply to a sale by a stockbroker coming within the amount prescribed by subdivision 4 of section 1624 of the same Code. Respondent admits that the sale in question was within the meaning of said section and subdivision, but urges that it does not apply here, as the transactions were completed. There is no finding by the court that the transactions were completed, and from the remark of the trial judge after the arguments were closed, viz., "as to the statute of frauds, I don't think this stock transaction comes within the statute, as set out," we are forced to the conclusion that the court was of the opinion that the statute did not apply.

[1, 2] Assuming that when the "short" sale of Rio Grande stock was made on August

Sth the stock was actually delivered by the broker to the seller, although appellant did not deliver any to the broker to sell, still we fail to see how that was a completed sale so far as appellant is concerned. The selling price of the stock, $4,452, was credited to appellant in his account; but we assume that such credit was not available to him until he first delivered 100 shares of Rio Grande stock to respondent or paid the amount so credited in some way. And as the amount is more than $200, we are of the opinion that under section 2309, Civil Code, its authority to make such sale not being in writing, respondent could not bind appellant by a mere bookkeeping entry to a sale that was not authorized by law, even if as between the broker and the purchaser the stock was actually delivered. It was not appellant's stock that was delivered. The section last cited provides: "An oral authorization is sufficient for any purpose, except that an authority to enter into a contract required by law to be in writing can only be given by an instrument in writing." That a contract for the sale of shares of stock of a value in excess of $200 is within the statute of frauds there seems to be no question. Mayer v. Child, 47 Cal. 142; Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 P. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87. Under section 2309, therefore, the broker's authority to make such sale can only be given by an instrument in writing. The authority proved being only verbal, it did not authorize respondent to bind appellant in such sale, in our opinion. The same is true as to the alleged purchase of 100 shares of such stock on September 14. The memorandum of the advice of such purchase, sent by respondent to appellant, specified that such stock was bought on that day for $9,400, but the ledger sheet shows no charge against respondent of any such amount, although the item of stock is set out under that date. On the 19th of September, when the account was closed credit is given appellant for the sale of the stock deposited by him to secure his account, but no credit, that we can find, is given for any of the stock purchased on September 14, and good bookkeeping would seem to require some showing to that effect, if stock was actually bought and sold.

We see no difference in principle between an action to recover for stock furnished by a plaintiff in an unauthorized sale executed by him with a third person and an action by such third person on a contract for the purchase or sale of such stock against the defendant as an undisclosed principal, as was the case of Cooke v. Newmark Grain Co., 54 Cal. App. 283, 201 P. 615, where the court says: "The contract sued on in this case involved a consideration of more than $5,000. The defendant has not accepted or received any of the property alleged to have been sold to him, nor was any part of the purchase price paid. There is no evidence of any written authority given to the alleged agents to make the contract in question." And we may well say here, as was said there, that we may assume that the evidence would be sufficient to sustain a finding "if an oral authorization of the agency were legally sufficient for the purpose, although it may be noted that the fact of such oral authorization is warmly disputed by the defendant, which wholly disclaims that it authorized the contract in any manner whatever."

Inasmuch as in our opinion the evidence shows no written authority for respondent to make the sales questioned, and no payment of the purchase price or any part thereof or the delivery of any stock by defendant, the judgment is contrary to the evidence.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

115 Cal.App. 575

ARGUE v. MONTE REGIO CORPORATION

et al.

Civ. 6825.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

July 22, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 21, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 17, 1931.

1. Evidence ⚡158(28).

Oral evidence of persons having personal knowledge is best evidence of items of account not resulting from written contract.

2. Account, action on ⚡7.

Open account for legal services held against corporation, though charged to president as such, where corporation's name appeared in account and evidence showed resolution authorizing creation of bonded indebtedness, and that attorneys were employed to do preliminary legal work.

3. Corporations ⚡407(2).

Corporation's resolution, authorizing creation of bonded indebtedness, held impliedly to authorize president to employ counsel.

4. Account, action on ⚡7.

Admitting account as open book account, although principal item was entered months after services "lumped" together in item were rendered, held not error, absent objection.

Such entry, in absence of objection, would go to weight to be given to account as well as its credibility as evidence, rather than to plain fact of whether or not it was open book account, since it still remained book account, regardless of fact that entry was not made until some time after matter charged accrued, or regardless of fact that many matters had been lumped together in one item.

5. Appeal and error ⇨1064(1).

Book account being unquestioned, and only issue being whether services were performed for defendant or third party, instruction submitting question whether services were performed for and in behalf, and at request "or with consent" of defendant, held not prejudicial.

Account was introduced without objection and remained unquestioned by evidence to the end, except as to whom work was done for, was not questioned by requested instruction, and was challenged on appeal only by reason of manner of its compilation.

6. Appeal and error ⇨882(12).

Though instruction in action on account was more applicable to assumption, defendant could not complain; defendant's requested instruction being substantially similar.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fletcher Bowron, Judge.

Action by J. C. Argue against the Monte Regio Corporation and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, named defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

R. J. Welch, Jr., of San Jose, for appellant.

Faries & Williamson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ARCHBALD, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff, assignee of a copartnership, filed his complaint on August 14, 1928, stating two causes of action against defendant corporation and others, the first for an indebtedness of $1,000 on an open book account for legal services rendered by plaintiff's assignor, and the second an account stated for the same services and amount. The defendant Monte Regio Corporation filed its answer, and the case was tried against such defendant alone on the issues raised by said complaint and answer. The second cause of action was expressly abandoned by plaintiff during the course of the trial. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for said sum of $1,000, and from the judgment entered thereon the answering defendant has appealed.

Appellant urges (1) that there is no evidence to establish an open book account, and (2) that the court erred in its instructions to the jury.

[1] The book account consisted of three items. Two items under the dates January 21 and May 8, 1926, aggregated $3.10, one representing the cost of a telegram and the other notary public fees. The third item, under date February 10, 1927, is for "services rendered in connection with proposal to create a bonded indebtedness, preparation of Articles of Incorporation Monterey Golf Club and numerous conferences in connection therewith," and opposite such explanation, on the debit side of the ledger, is the entry "$1000." The account was charged to "Romie C. Jacks, President of the Monte Regio Corporation, Monterey, California." The witness during the giving of whose testimony the account was introduced in evidence was one of plaintiff's assignors. He frankly stated that the last item was dictated by him on the date it bears. Prior to the introduction of said account plaintiff had examined the president of the defendant corporation under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as well as another of plaintiff's assignors, relative to the services rendered for the corporation; as he had a right to do, "the oral evidence of persons having personal knowledge of the transactions" being "the best evidence of the items" where they are not the result of a written contract, as they were not here. Cowdery v. McChesney, 124 Cal. 363, 365, 57 P. 221; Edwards v. California S. P. Corporation, 104 Cal. App. 715, 720, 286 P. 733. All of the testimony regarding the account is found in less than 3 of the 351 pages of the reporter's transcript on appeal. Appellant made no objection to the introduction of the account nor to any of its items, nor was the statute of limitations pleaded as a defense.

The charging part of the complaint, so far as material, is: "That within four years last past * * * the defendants * * * became indebted in the sum of One Thousand Dollars ($1000.00) to said copartnership, on an open book account for services rendered as attorneys at law to said defendants, and each of them, and at the special instance and request of and for the benefit of the defendants and each of them." The answer of defendant Monte Regio Corporation to said charge is as follows: "Denies that within four years last past or at any other time or at all * * * this defendant became indebted in the sum of One Thousand ($1000) Dollars, or any other sum or amount, to said copartnership, on an open book account for services rendered by said copartnership as attorney at law for this defendant, or in any other manner whatsoever, either at the special instance and/or request of and/or for the benefit of the said defendants and each of them or otherwise or in any manner or at all." It was defendant's theory throughout the trial, and evidence was offered tending to show, that the services rendered were for the benefit of John S. Mitchell Company, a corporation for which plaintiff's assignors were attorneys, which company had contracted to float a bond issue to be secured by the properties of defendant corporation, to enable the latter to do some necessary financing.

[2, 3] 1. Appellant contends that the account proved was not against the defendant corporation, but against Romie C. Jacks, its president, and cites as authority the case of Wright v. Loaiza, 177 Cal. 605, 171 P. 311, in which case the account introduced did not disclose the defendant's name in any form and it was attempted to charge the sister of the man in whose name the account appeared, after two years (the then period of limitation) had expired. It was there held that the action could not be maintained against the sister, although she had authorized her brother to incur the indebtedness represented, for the reason that the open book account was not a charge against her, and her authorization being oral it could not be proved under the circumstances. We think the case of The Furlow Pressed Brick Co. v. Balboa Land & Water Co., 186 Cal. 754, 200 P. 625, is more applicable here. There the defendant, a partnership, was held liable on an account charged to one of the partners. The court said in that regard, on page 765 of 186 Cal., 200 P. 625, 630: "The only question involved here is whether the account in question is an open book account upon which the statute of limitations does not run for four years against the other partners where the partnership account is inadvertently, or as a matter of convenience, charged to one partner only. The reasons leading to the decision in Wright v. Loaiza, supra, as to the proof by parol of an agency to enter into the account do not apply. Here the fact of partnership may be readily proven and the circumstances showing the nature of the indebtedness are readily susceptible of proof and do not usually depend solely upon parol evidence as to the nature of the transaction. It was clearly proper to show that the indebtedness was a partnership one, and the fact that it was charged on the plaintiff's books to one of the partners was sufficient to constitute it a book account within the meaning of our Code." In the instant case the name of the corporation appears in the account, and the evidence shows that the corporation passed a resolution authorizing the creation of a bonded indebtedness and that plaintiff's assignors were employed to attend to the legal work preliminary thereto. The work was done for the defendant corporation, and the president thereof would seem to be impliedly authorized by such resolution to carry it into effect by employing counsel for the company for that purpose. Woods Lumber Co. v. Moore, 183 Cal. 497, 191 P. 905, 11 A. L. R. 549. See, also, Goodrich v. Drew, 10 Vt. 137.

[4] Appellant also urges that one essential of an open book account is that the items be entered contemporaneously with the transactions to which the same relate. There would seem to be no question but that the item complained of here was not so entered, nor indeed for several months after the services "lumped" together in the item were rendered. However, the same defect could be urged against any such charge, even if entered on the day following the rendition of the last services. There is no question as to the law on this point where objection is made to the introduction of such an account. In the case of Chandler v. Robinett, 21 Cal. App. 333, 131 P. 891, relied on by appellant, it was held that the lower court erred in admitting such an account in evidence "over the objection of defendant." It would seem, though, in the absence of an objection, that such an entry would go to the weight to be given to the account as well as its credibility as evidence, rather than to the fact of whether or not it is an open book account. It still remains a book account regardless of the fact that an entry was not made until some time after the matter charged accrued, or regardless of the fact that many matters have been lumped together in one item. In the case of Baumgardner v. Burnham, 10 W. N. Cas. (Pa.) 445, the question came before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in a case where an account was introduced in an action of assumpsit, to prove the amount of repairs made on an engine. The labor items, which were a large part of the cost, were all "lump" charges. A general objection to the introduction of the book was made and overruled. No evidence was introduced by plaintiff other than the account and the testimony of the bookkeeper connected with such introduction. The defendant offered no evidence. On appeal the court in affirming the judgment for the amount of the account said: "Had the objection in the Court below been specially to the lumping charges for labor, it would have been error to have admitted them. But the objection was to the books generally, and improper entries are not sufficient to exclude the whole, in which there were many entries entirely regular. Had the whole been rejected, the Court could not have been convicted of error, for though the admission of the particular items was not objected to, still they were offered with the others, and if any part of an offer be inadmissible, the rejection cannot be assigned for error. But where the evidence was admitted, there the record must show affirmatively that the inadmissible part was specially objected to, and brought to the notice of the Judge. We think the reasoning there applies equally here, where no objection either to the account as a whole or to the objectionable item was made, and even though the account consists of only three items, two of which though not objectionable were for a small amount only and the objectionable item was practically the amount sued for. That case was referred to in Corr v. Sellers, 100 Pa. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 370, where in mentioning the cases the court said: "In Baumgardner v. Burnham, 10 W. N. [Cas. (Pa.)] 445, it is again held that lumping charges for labor are not admissible where specially objected thereto. In that case the error was cured by reason of the objection not having been so made." In the present case we are of the opinion that there was no error, because no objection was made.

As was said in the case of Levine v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 66 Minn. 138, 68 N. W. 855, 858, "the mere existence of some errors, in the absence of anything showing that they were the result of fraud, would not necessarily render the books incompetent, although it would undoubtedly affect their credibility." Speaking of the requirement that an entry should be made contemporaneously with the transaction to which it relates, the court in Redlich v. Bauerlee, 98 Ill. 134, 38 Am. Rep. 87, said: "It suffices if it be within a reasonable time, so that it may appear to have taken place while the memory of the fact was recent, or the source from which a knowledge of it was derived is unimpaired." In this case the witnesses testified and many exhibits were introduced as to the work done, and it would seem that the charge made was very reasonable, considering everything that was testified to, and that the delay of eight months in recording the item resulted in diminishing the charge rather than otherwise.

[5, 6] 2. Appellant requested no instruction relating to the book account, nor was any given by the court. At plaintiff's request the following instruction was given to the jury: "I instruct you that if you find that the law firm of Faries and Williamson performed legal services for the defendant, Monte Regio Corporation, at the instance and request of said defendant, or with their consent, and if you further find that such legal services are of the reasonable value of One Thousand Dollars ($1000.00) you will bring in a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of One Thousand Dollars ($1000.00)." The following instruction, with the exception of the words italicized, was given at the request of appellant: "You are hereby instructed that unless you find by preponderance of the evidence submitted that the plaintiff's assignors performed services for and in behalf of the defendant corporation and at the request or with the consent of said defendant corporation, you will find for the defendant, Monte Regio Corporation." It appears from the record that the latter instruction was modified by the court by inserting therein the words italicized. Appellant contends that in view of the fact that the services rendered by plaintiff's assignors were admittedly performed with the consent of the defendant corporation—and it was the contention of the latter "that while it consented to the performance of such services it did so upon the belief and the understanding and agreement that the attorneys were acting for and on behalf of the Mitchell Company in doing this preliminary work"—the use of the words "or with the consent" in said two instructions told the jury in effect that if the services were performed "with the consent of the defendant then the verdict should be for the plaintiff, without regard to the fact that the complaint alleged, and to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff the jury should also have found, that the open book account charged to the defendant, with all essentials, actually existed." Both instructions would seem to harmonize better with an action of assumpsit than one based upon an open book account, but inasmuch as the account was introduced without objection, and remained unquestioned by the evidence to the end, except as to whom the work was done for, and is only challenged on appeal by reason of the manner of its compilation, it would seem that in the face of defendant's theory of its lack of liability to the plaintiff's assignors the issue raised by the evidence as to whether the services were performed for the defendant or for the Mitchell Company was the only question before the jury. If the jury decided that the services were performed "for the defendant" and at its instance and request, or with its consent, and also found such services to be of the reasonable value of $1,000, then their verdict should be for the plaintiff; otherwise for the defendant. Such seems to be the essence of both instructions quoted, and in view of the fact that the book account was not questioned by defendant, either by objection or requested instruction, we fail to see where it was prejudiced by either instruction. Both leave the question of whether or not the employment was "for or on behalf of defendant" to the jury, and that was the question presented for decision by both parties. Even though both instructions seem more applicable to an action of assumpsit, in view of the fact that the one requested by defendant is substantially similar to that of plaintiff's in that regard, we do not see how appellant can complain. Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Hudson, 182 Cal. 48, 51, 186 P. 772.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, P. J.; IRA E. THOMPSON, J.

115 Cal.App. 651

FALL v. LINCOLN MORTGAGE CO.

Civ. 4289.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

July 27, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 26, 1931. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 24, 1931.1. Limitation of actions ⇨199(1).

When defendant pleads limitations, non-suit should be granted, if evidence shows that plaintiff's action is barred.

2. Limitation of actions ⇨28(1).

Action for money had and received must ordinarily be commenced within two years after money is received (Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1).

3. Limitation of actions ⇨66(15).

Demand necessary to commencement of suit must be made within reasonable time, which is time provided in statute for barring action.

4. Limitation of actions ⇨28(2).

Action commenced in 1927 for money had and received in 1923 for stock subscription, return of which plaintiff did not demand until 1927, although he knew of basis for demand in 1923, held barred (Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1).

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Lucius M. Fall against the Lincoln Mortgage Company. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Fall & Fall, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fickeisen & Richardson and J. E. Haley, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem.

This is an action for money had and received. Defendant answered denying the allegations of the complaint and setting up the provisions of sections 337, subd. 1, 338, subd. 4, and 339, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure in bar of the plaintiff's cause of action.

At the close of plaintiff's evidence defendant moved for a nonsuit, which the court did not pass upon until after defendant had produced his evidence and after the evidence of both plaintiff and defendant was all in. Thereupon the court granted the motion for a nonsuit and rendered judgment in favor of defendant. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed.

In December, 1922, the corporation commissioner issued a permit to respondent to sell a certain number of its shares of capital stock and this action grew out of a subscription by appellant for 2,000 shares of the preferred and common stock so authorized to be sold.

The contention of appellant is that he has the right to recover the money for which he sues upon two grounds: (1) Failure of consideration in that respondent failed to advance the price of units as agreed; (2) Because of the violation of the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act, which rendered the sale of the stock void. And he claims that the trial court erred in granting the motion for a nonsuit for the reason that there was substantial evidence to support his case.

H. J. Mallen & Co. was the fiscal agent of respondent and was handling the sale of the said stock for respondent, and one S. L. Vance was a salesman employed by it to sell the said stock.

Plaintiff testified that Vance called at his residence, where he was confined by illness, and represented to him that the first issue of respondent's said stock was being sold at $12.50 a unit, a unit consisting of one share of preferred stock valued at $10 and one share of common stock valued at $2.50; that the said stock was selling rapidly, and that the first issue was almost exhausted, and that as soon as the first issue was sold another issue would be put on sale, and then the common stock would sell for $5 per share; that as a matter of fact, as appellant learned later, the permit authorizing the sale of this stock did not place any separate value on the said common stock, but authorized the sale of said stock in units at $12.50 per unit, a unit of said stock consisted of 1 share each of preferred and common stock. Nor did the new issue of said stock, for which a permit was granted in April, 1923, place any separate value on said common stock, nor authorize it to be sold for $5 per share nor in any other way except as a unit in conjunction with one share of said preferred stock for $12.50 per unit; that upon and after said new issue of stock the said common stock was not worth $5 per share.

The permit, under which this stock was sold to appellant, provides that the shares of stock shall be sold for cash, or upon payments of not less than 25 per cent. in cash and the balance in not more than fifteen monthly payments; that the applicant shall agree with the purchaser of each share authorized; that no share shall be sold outside of the state of California on terms more favorable to any subscriber or purchaser thereof than the terms upon which said shares are authorized to be sold, and that a true copy of the permit shall be exhibited and delivered to each prospective purchaser before his subscription shall be taken or any sale made to him.

The evidence of appellant is to the effect that none of these requirements of the permit were complied with, and that therefore, under the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, § 673 as amended), the sale of the stock to him was void. Respondent, at the time when the subscription for stock was made, to wit, March 31, 1923, was engaged in the business of loaning money on real estate. An application for a loan of $6,250 was made to it by appellant and wife and a note dated April 4, 1923, for this amount, secured by a deed of trust and executed by appellant and wife to respondent, was placed in escrow by appellant with the Los Angeles Title & Insurance Company on April 4, 1923.

On this same date appellant and wife joined in a letter to said Los Angeles Title & Insurance Company, in which they stated: "We have given a trust deed and a promissory note to the Lincoln Mortgage Company for $6,250. This will be placed in escrow with you. When escrow is completed you are hereby instructed to deliver the entire amount of $6,250 direct to H. J. Mallen & Company, Inc., Merritt Building this city." On April 6, 1923, respondent deposited in escrow with the Los Angeles Title & Trust Company its check for $6,250. On April 13, 1923, H. J. Mallen & Co. directed the escrow holder to pay the $6,250 to S. L. Vance. On April 18, 1923, the subscription of appellant for the 2,000 shares of stock was received by respondent, together with cash amounting to $6,250, being the initial payment of 25 per cent. on the purchase price of said stock.

While the appellant testified that the note and deed of trust were accepted by Vance in payment for the 25 per cent. of the purchase price of said stock, and that at no time had any money been paid to him, the uncontradicted evidence is to the effect that he placed the note and deed of trust in escrow with instructions to the escrow holder to pay the $6,250 to H. J. Mallen & Co., and they in turn directed payment of same to be made to Vance, and after this payment was made to Vance the subscription of appellant for the 2,000 shares of stock, with a cash payment thereon of $6,250, was deposited with respondent and accepted by it.

One of the grounds for the motion for nonsuit was that appellant was barred by limitation.

[1] When the defendant pleads the statute of limitations a motion for a nonsuit should be granted if the evidence shows that plaintiff's cause of action is barred. Carter v. Cauty, 181 Cal. 749, 186 P. 346; Patterson v. Doe, 130 Cal. 333, 62 P. 569; Bass v. Hueter, 205 Cal. 284, 270 P. 958.

[2, 3] Ordinarily an action for money had and received must be commenced within two years after the money is received. Section

339, subd. 1, Code Civ. Proc.; County of San Luis Obispo v. Farnum, 108 Cal. 567, 41 P. 447. The money was received by respondent between the 13th and 20th of April, 1923. This action was commenced by filing the complaint on December 6, 1927. On April 2, 1927, appellant made demand on respondent for return of said money and as ground for that demand stated that he was induced to purchase the said stock upon promises made by respondent and its agents that the price of the units would be increased to $15 per unit on the second issue and sale of the stock, but that respondent had failed to carry out said promise. Where a demand is necessary to be made before suit can be commenced, it must be made within a reasonable time, which is uniformly held to be a period coincident with that provided in the statute for barring the action. 17 Cal. Jur. 623; Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 P. 899; Vickrey v. Maier, 164 Cal. 384, 129 P. 273.

[4] It is admitted by appellant that within thirty days after making his subscription for the purchase of said stock he knew that the second issue of respondent's stock had not advanced the price of the common stock nor of the unit, and that respondent had not complied with its alleged promise that upon such new issue the units would be worth $15. Appellant testified that he was an attorney at law and had been practicing his profession for the past forty years. Such being the case, he must have been fully conversant with his rights relating to this transaction, and must have known that he was sleeping upon these rights when he waited four and a half years before commencing his action. In bringing this action he has proceeded upon the theory that the money sued for was received by respondent when the note was paid on December 17, 1925, but as a matter of fact the undisputed evidence is that respondent received the money through its agent, Vance, in April, 1923.

In the case of Bannister v. Los Angeles Railway Corporation, 203 Cal. 427, 264 P. 756, 757, Mr. Justice Richards said: "The rule governing the power and propriety on the part of the trial judge in the matter of granting a nonsuit at the conclusion of the whole testimony in the case is clearly and correctly stated in the Matter of Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147 [155 P. 631], wherein it is declared to be the rule that the right of the court to direct a verdict and the right of the court to grant a nonsuit at the conclusion of the evidence in the case are absolutely the same, and that the court may grant such a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such verdict were given."

A review of the undisputed evidence in this case clearly shows that appellant's cause of action is barred by limitation.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: PRESTON, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

119 Cal.App.(Supp.) 770

PEOPLE v. WOLIN.

Cr. A. 681.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Aug. 3, 1931.

1. Food ☞14.

Sale of adulterated fluid extract of ginger to agent of state board of health, who announced his authority and desire to take sample, held not criminal offense (St. 1907, p. 230, § 1; p. 232, §§ 9, 11; Pen. Code, § 26, subd. 6).

2. Food ☞20(5).

One cannot be convicted of keeping adulterated ginger for sale under complaint charging that he did "hold out for sale" such ginger (St. 1907, p. 230, § 1).

Phrase "hold out for sale" is not equivalent of "keep for sale," but means only "offer for sale."

3. Indictment and information ☞171.

Conviction of one offense cannot be upheld on proof of commission of another distinct offense.

Appeal from Municipal Court of Los Angeles; Ellis A. Eagan, Judge.

J. Wolin was convicted of selling and offering for sale adulterated fluid extract of ginger, and he appeals.

Reversed and remanded.

Leo V. Silverstein, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles P. Johnson, City Prosecutor, Joe W. Matherly, and John L. Bland, Deputy City Prosecutors, all of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, Acting P. J.

[1] The complaint charges that defendant did "sell and offer for sale and hold out for sale and offer to deliver" adulterated fluid extract of ginger. The statute (St. 1907, p.

230, § 1) makes it unlawful to "sell or offer for sale, or keep for sale," any adulterated drug, and so defines "drug" as to include fluid extract of ginger. There is no such offense as "holding out for sale," nor (except in case of imported drugs, which is not the charge here) any such offense as "offering to deliver." The conviction must therefore rest for support on the charge of selling and offering for sale. No offer is shown by the evidence. The sale proved was one made to an agent of the state board of health, who announced his authority to defendant, and stated that he wished to take officially a sample of the ginger. Thereupon defendant delivered to the agent four bottles of the ginger, for which the agent paid him $1.

We do not regard such a transaction as a violation of the statute. Section 9 provides that any agent of the state board of health shall have the right to purchase any drug suspected of being adulterated, or, if a sale be refused, to take samples thereof; and section 11 makes it a misdemeanor for any person to refuse to sell such a sample to such an agent. We cannot ascribe to the Legislature an intention to punish as a crime an act the refusal to do which is also made criminal; and yet an affirmation of this conviction must rest on such a construction of the statute. In Ohio a similar statute relating to oleomargarine was apparently so construed in State v. Rippeth, 71 Ohio St. 85, 72 N. E. 298. The point is not mentioned at all in the majority opinion, but, as appears from the dissenting opinion of Crew, J., it was necessarily involved in the case. We are in accord with the reasoning of this dissenting opinion, and refer to it for a fuller expression of our views. We quote from it as follows:

"Such furnishing and delivery" (of a sample for analysis) "was, by force of the provisions of section 4200-7, made compulsory, and such furnishing would not, therefore, in legal intendment amount to or constitute a sale, inasmuch as in such transaction one of the essential elements of the contract of sale is wanting, viz: the voluntary assent of the seller. * * * The statute having made the furnishing of a sample, for the purpose of analysis, obligatory and compulsory, a furnishing for such purpose is not a crime, and cannot rightfully be made a predicate for the criminal prosecution of the person so furnishing said sample. * * * The legislature is without right to make unlawful and criminal the doing of the very thing which by positive enactment it commands and enjoins to be done. A construction that gives to this statute such an effect and produces such a result, offends against reason and good conscience, renders the statute invalid, and should therefore not be adopted."

In Lansing v. State, 73 Neb. 124, 127, 102 N. W. 254, a similar statute concerning the sale of adulterated milk was considered, and, while the court there held that the evidence did not show a sale under the compulsory provisions (section 4) of the statute, it said: "There is no doubt that, if the sale was made in pursuance of section 4 of the act, the defendant could not be prosecuted for a sale which he was compelled by law to make."

The case appears also to be at least within the spirit of subdivision 6 of section 26 of the Penal Code, which relieves from criminal responsibility "persons who committed the act or made the omission charged through misfortune or by accident, when it appears that there was no evil design, intention, or culpable negligence." Certainly the defendant, acting under legal compulsion, could have had no evil design, intention, or culpable negligence, and it is not going far, if at all, beyond the facts to say that he made the sale by misfortune.

[2, 3] Under the circumstances of this case perhaps the defendant might properly have been convicted on a charge of keeping the adulterated ginger for sale; but no such charge was made against him. The phrase "hold out for sale," used in the complaint, is not the equivalent of "keep for sale," but can mean, when applied to such a subject-matter, nothing other than "offer for sale." See definitions of "hold out" in both Webster's Dictionary and the Standard Dictionary. A conviction of one offense cannot be upheld on proof of the commission of some other distinct offense. People v. Mitchell, 74 Cal. App. 164, 169, 240 P. 36.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

I concur: YANKWICH, Judge pro tem.

WINTHROP v. STATE INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

L. A. 12758.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 8, 1931.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 31, 1931.

1. Master and servant ☞405(4).

Evidence held to show that twisting of pedicle of employee's ovarian tumor was caused by fall in course of employment (St. 1917, p. 833, § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911; St. 1917, p. 877, § 69).

2. Master and servant ☞378.

Employee's failure to attribute severe abdominal pains to fall, which caused twisting of pedicle of ovarian tumor, held not to preclude recovery of compensation (St. 1917, p. 833, § 3, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1919, p. 911).

SHENK, J., WASTE, C. J., and LANGDON, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Proceeding for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Fannette Winthrop, employee, opposed by the Wetherby Kayser Shoe Company, employer, and the Associated Indemnity Corporation, insurer. To review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation, claimant brings certiorari.

Order annulled.

Rehearing denied; WASTE, C. J., and SHENK and LANGDON, JJ., dissenting.

Goldman & Lieberman, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edward O. Allen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J.

This is a proceeding to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission denying compensation to the petitioner, Fannette Winthrop, on the ground that the disability complained of was not caused by the injury suffered by said petitioner in the course of her employment by respondent Wetherby Kayser Shoe Company.

Petitioner, a woman thirty years of age, was employed as a hosiery clerk in a shoe store operated by respondent Wetherby Kayser Company in the city of Los Angeles. While waiting on a customer she climbed upon a stool to reach merchandise on a shelf. The stool tipped and she fell backwards onto the floor. Some uncertainty exists as to the date of the fall. Petitioner fixed it as January 13, 1930, in her application for compensation, and upon the hearing before the commission she testified that it occurred on January 13 or 14. She admitted, however, that she was not positive as to the exact date. Her lack of a more certain recollection is explainable as due to the circumstance that she did not for a time attribute her disabilities to the fall. The employer, in a report to its insurance carrier, which was introduced as an exhibit, stated that the fall took place between January 2 and 5. There is no other evidence as to said dates being correct. Petitioner testified that she was sure it could not have been as early as January 2.

A fellow employee assisted petitioner to rise, and she finished waiting on her customer, although she felt dazed after the fall. She continued to work until January 18. On January 25 she called her personal physician; on January 27 she was taken to the hospital, suffering acute pain in the lower abdominal region, and on January 31 she was operated on and a large ovarian tumor and her left ovary were removed. At the time she left work she did not know the exact cause of her illness. She did not then attribute it to the fall, and made no demand upon her employer for compensation or medical treatment. The operation revealed that the pedicle or stem by which the tumor was attached to the tissues of the body had become twisted in two places, thereby cutting off the blood supply to the tumor and causing a gangrenous condition, with extreme toxicity, which rendered imperative an immediate operation to save the life of petitioner. It is conceded by the commission that the highly toxic condition and the acute symptoms of pain and distress which immediately preceded the operation resulted from the twisting of the pedicle of the tumor. The question to be determined is whether the twisting of the pedicle was produced by the fall, or, as the commission impliedly held, was a natural development which took place as the tumor grew in size. If the result of the fall, petitioner is entitled to compensation under section 3, subdivision 4, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, which provides: "In case of aggravation of any disease existing prior to such injury, compensation shall be allowed only for such proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of such prior disease as may reasonably be attributed to the injury." Stats. 1917, p. 833, as amended by Stats. 1919, p. 911.

[1] The evidence, in addition to the testimony of petitioner, consists of letters from physicians which were introduced in the case as exhibits. The petitioner's personal physician, Dr. Segall, and two physicians called in consultation upon her case, all of whom were present at or assisted in performing the operation, gave it as their opinion that the fall produced the twisting of the pedicle of the tumor. On the other hand, Dr. Bond, who examined petitioner on March 27, almost two months after the operation, at the request of the employer, and Dr. Boller, acting for the employer's insurance carrier, were of the view that the fall did not cause the twisting. Dr. Jones, medical umpire for the commission, who expressed the same opinion, stated in his letter report that as an ovarian tumor increases in size it slips out of the pelvis into the abdominal cavity, and that due to the contour of the rim of the pelvis the pedicle may become twisted, causing a strangulation of the tumor. But neither the letter of Dr. Jones nor those of the other medical men holding to the same view denied that a fall could produce a twisting of the pedicle. Rather, we think, all recognize a fall as a factor capable of producing such a result, but were of the view that it was not indicated to be the cause in the case herein, for the reason that the severe pain and other symptoms did not develop sufficiently soon after the fall.

The reports of the physicians upon whom the commission relied were not based upon a first-hand observation of petitioner's symptoms. She herself testified at the hearing before the commission that she felt ill "right along after the fall," and seemed to get worse and worse; that she stayed until the Saturday after the fall to enable her employer to get some one to take her place; that she had intermittent abdominal pains between the time of the fall and the time she quit work; that the first bad attack took place about a couple of days after the fall; that she used every atom of strength she had to "stick it through" until Saturday night; and that thereafter the pains became excruciating. The hospital report of her condition between January 27 and 31, preceding the operation, also indicates a condition of intense abdominal pain, fever, and delirium. The soreness of her abdominal region hindered the doctors from making a complete examination, and it was not until after they had operated that they were able to make an exact diagnosis. In view of the fact that the symptoms were produced by a gangrenous condition due to the cutting off of the blood supply to the tumor, her distress must of necessity have been less at the inception of the condition than after gangrene had poisoned the system.

The uncontradicted evidence shows that symptoms of which petitioner was free at the time of the fall began to develop almost immediately thereafter, becoming increasingly acute until the operation was performed. All medical experts whose reports appear recognize expressly or impliedly that a fall may cause twisting of the pedicle of a tumor. Those who observed petitioner's symptoms within a short time after the fall were of the view that the fall was the cause. Those who held to the contrary view did not see her until after the operation, and based their opinions largely on the premise that the pre-operative symptoms did not appear sufficiently soon to indicate a connection. While neither the cause of the twisting of the pedicle nor the time it occurred is capable of exact demonstration, the physicians who attended petitioner and physically observed the position and condition of the tumor and contiguous organs and tissues were in a better position to judge the length of time the condition had been developing than were those whose calculations were based upon related facts. The case does not present a true conflict of evidence. The opinions of the doctors who were of the view that the fall did not produce the twisting of the pedicle, as stated in their letter reports, were based on the theory that severe symptoms did not appear until some time after the fall. The evidence, on the other hand, shows that petitioner suffered severe abdominal pains almost immediately thereafter, although her condition naturally became aggravated as time elapsed. Said opinions, being based on a state of facts not shown by the record to exist, are not in conflict with the opinions of the doctors whose statements were based on the facts actually shown to exist by the evidence of petitioner and the doctors who attended her.

